Verse 19. There came thither certain Jews from Antioch] Those were, no doubt, the same who had raised up persecution against Paul and Barnabas, at Iconium and Antioch, before: they followed the apostles with implacable malice; and what they could not do themselves they endeavoured to do by others, whose minds they first perverted, and then irritated to deeds of fell purpose.

And having stoned Paul] Alas! of what real worth is popular fame? How uncertain, and how unworthy to be courted! When the Lycaonians saw the miracles that Paul did, they said he was the god Mercury: when the persecuting Jews came, they persuaded them that he was an impostor; and then they endeavoured to stone him to death.

Supposing he had been dead.] They did not leave stoning him till they had the fullest evidence that he was dead; and so, most probably, he was.

Verse 20. The disciples stood round about him] No doubt in earnest prayer, entreating the author of life that his soul might again return to its battered tenement.

He rose up] Miraculously restored, not only to life, but to perfect soundness; so that he was able to walk into the city, that his persecutors might see the mighty power of God in his restoration, and the faith of the young converts be confirmed in the truth and goodness of God.

Verse 21. Preached the gospel to that city] Derbe, a city in the same province. See on ver. 6.

They returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium] Behold the courage of these Christian men! They returned to do their Master's work in the very places in which they had been so grievously persecuted, and where one of them had been apparently stoned to death!

Verse 22. Confirming the souls of the disciples] The word disciple signifies literally a scholar. The Church of Christ was a school, in which Christ himself was chief master; and his apostles, subordinate teachers. After having been initiated in the principles of the heavenly doctrine, they needed line upon line, and precept upon precept, in order that they might be confirmed and established in the truth.

Verse 23. When they had ordained them elders] Elder seems to be here the name of an office. These were all young or new converts, and yet among them the apostles constitute elders. They appointed persons the most experienced, and the most advanced in the divine life, to watch over and instruct the rest. But what is the meaning of the word which we translate ordained? The word ordain we use in an ecclesiastical sense, and signify by it the appointment of a person to an office in the church, by the imposition of the hands of those who are rulers in the church. But this word cheirotonia signifies the holding up or stretching out the hand, as approving of the choice of any person to a particular work: whereas cheirothesia signifies the imposition of hands. I believe the simple truth to be this, that in ancient times the people chose by the cheirotonia (lifting up of hands) their spiritual pastor; and the rulers of the church, whether apostles or others, appointed that person to 21 And when they had preached the gospel to that city, ^a and ^b had taught many, they returned again to Lystra, and to Iconium and Antioch, 22 Confirming the souls of the disciples, and ^c exhorting them to continue in the faith; and that ^d we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God.

23 And when they had ^e ordained them elders in every church, and had prayed with fasting, they ^f commended them to the Lord, on whom they believed.

his office by the cheirothesia or imposition of hands; and perhaps each of these was thought to be equally necessary: the church agreeing in the election of the person; and the rulers of the church appointing, by imposition of hands, the person thus elected.

And had prayed with fasting] This was to implore God's special assistance; as they well knew that, without his influence, even their appointment could avail nothing.

Verse 25. They went down into Attalia] This was a seaport town in Pamphylia.

Verse 26. And thence sailed to Antioch] This was Antioch in Syria.

Whence they had been recommended—for the work which they fulfilled.] It was from this Antioch they had been sent 24 And after they had passed throughout Pisidia, they came to Pamphylia.

25 And when they had preached the word in Perga, they went down into Attalia:

27 And when they were come, and had gathered the church together, ^c they rehearsed all that God had done with them, and how he had ^d opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles.

28 And there they abode long time with the disciples.

to preach the gospel to the heathen in Asia Minor, see chap. xiii. 1, 2.

Verse 28. And there they abode long time] How long the apostles tarried here we cannot tell; but we hear no more of them till the council of Jerusalem, mentioned in the following chapter, which is generally supposed to have been held in the year 51 of our Lord; and, if the transactions of this chapter took place in A.D. 46, as chronologers think, then there are five whole years of St. Paul's ministry, and that of other apostles, which St. Luke passes by in perfect silence.

God does not choose to have all the labours and sufferings of his servants recorded. Their recompence is in heaven; and it is enough that God knows their work, who alone can reward it. In many cases, the silence of Scripture is not less instructive than its most pointed communications.

CHAPTER XV.

Certain teachers from Judea insist on the necessity of the converted Gentiles being circumcised, 1. Paul and Barnabas are sent to Jerusalem to consult the apostles on this subject, 2. They come to Jerusalem, and inform the apostles of the conversion of the Gentiles; and of the trouble which certain Pharisees had occasioned concerning circumcision, 3-5. The apostles having assembled to consider the question, Peter delivers his opinion, 6-11. Barnabas and Paul relate their success among the Gentiles, 12. James delivers his judgment, 13-21. The apostles and elders agree to what he proposes, and send Judas and Silas with Paul and Barnabas to the converted Gentiles, 22; and send an epistle containing their decree to the churches of Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia, 23-29. Paul and his company return, and read the epistle to the brethren at Antioch, which produces great joy; and Judas and Silas preach to them, 30-32. Judas returns to Jerusalem, but Silas continues with Paul and Barnabas, teaching and preaching, 33-35. Paul proposes to Barnabas to visit the churches where they had preached; and, on the latter determining to take John Mark with them, Paul refuses, 36-38. They disagree; and Barnabas, taking John Mark, sails to Cyprus, 39. And Paul, taking Silas, goes through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches, 40, 41.

AND certain men which came down from Judea taught the brethren, and said, ^a Except ye be circumcised ^b after the manner of Moses, ye cannot be saved.

2 When therefore Paul and Barnabas had no

Verse 1. Except ye be circumcised, &c.] The persons who taught this doctrine appear to have been converts to Christianity; but, supposing that the Christian religion was intended to perfect the Mosaic, and not to supersede it, they insisted on the necessity of circumcision, because, by that, a man was made debtor to the whole law, to observe all its rites and ceremonies.

Ye cannot be saved.] Ye can neither enjoy God's blessing in time, nor his glory in time.

^a Gen. xviii. 10. Lev. xii. 8.—^b Gal. ii. 1.—^c Rom. xv. 24. 1 Cor. xvi. 6, 11.

Verse 2. No small dissension and disputation] This was one of the first controversies in the Christian Church; but, though the difference of sentiment was considerable, it led to no breach of Christian charity nor fellowship among themselves.

And certain other of them] If this be the journey to which St. Paul alludes, Gal. ii. 1-5, then he had Titus with him; and how many others went from the Church of Antioch we cannot tell.

church, they passed through Phœnice and Samaria, 'declaring the conversion of the Gentiles: and they caused great joy unto all the brethren.'

4 And when they were come to Jerusalem, they were received of the church, and of the apostles and elders; and ^b they declared all things that God had done with them.

5 But there ^a rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees which believed, saying, 'That it was needful to circumcise them, and to command them to keep the law of Moses.

6 And the apostles and elders came together for to consider of this matter.

7 And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, 'Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago, God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.

8 And God, 'which knoweth the hearts, bare them witness, ^a giving them the Holy Ghost, even as he did unto us;

Verse 8. Being brought on their way by the church] That is, the members of the church provided them with all necessities for their journey; for it does not appear that they had any property of their own.

Declaring the conversion of the Gentiles] Much stress is laid on this; it was a miracle of God's mercy that the Gentiles should be received into the church of God; and they had now the fullest proof that the thing was likely to become general.

Verse 4. They were received of the church] The whole body of Christian believers.

The apostles] Either the whole or part of the twelve; though we read of none but John, Peter, and James. See Gal. ii. 9.

And elders] Those who were officers in the church, under the apostles.

They declared] To this council they gave a succinct account of the great work which God had wrought by them among the Gentiles.

Verse 5. But there rose up certain of the sect of the Pharisees] This verse appears to be part of the declaration made by Paul and Barnabas to this council. [This view has many opponents.]

Verse 6. The apostles and elders came together] This was the first council ever held in the Christian church; and we find that it was composed of the apostles and elders simply.

Verse 7. When there had been much disputing] Though the apostles and elders were under the inspiration of the Almighty, and could by this inspiration have immediately determined the question, yet it was highly necessary that the objecting party should be permitted to come forward and allege their reasons for the doctrine they preached; and that these reasons should be fairly met by argument, and the thing proved to be useless in itself, inexpedient in the present case, and unsupported by any express authority from God, and serving no purpose to the Gentiles, who in their uncircumcised state, by believing in Christ Jesus, had been made partakers of the Holy Ghost.

Peter rose up, and said] The apostles, like judges, after hearing counsel on both sides, proceed to give judgment on the case.

A good while ago] From the days of old: a phrase which simply signifies some years ago; and, if he here refers to the conversion of Cornelius (see chap. x), he must mean about ten years before this time; but it is more likely that he refers to that time when Christ gave him the keys of the kingdom of heaven, that he might open the door of faith to the Gentiles.

God made choice among us] That is, he chose me to be the first apostle of the Gentiles.

Verse 8. Bare them witness] Considered them as proper or fit to receive the gospel of Christ.

Verse 9. Put no difference between us and them] Giving them the Holy Spirit, though uncircumcised, just as he had 9 ^b And put no difference between us and them, 'purifying their hearts by faith.

10 Now therefore why tempt ye God, 'to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?

11 But ^a we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.

12 Then all the multitude kept silence, and gave audience to Barnabas and Paul, declaring what miracles and wonders God had ^b wrought among the Gentiles by them.

13 And after they had held their peace, ^a James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me:

14 ^a Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name.

15 And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written,

16 ^a After this I will return, and will build again given it to us who were circumcised: an evident proof that, in the judgment of God, circumcision was no preparation to receive the gospel of Christ.

Verse 10. Now therefore why tempt ye God] Why will ye provoke him to displeasure by doing what he evidently designs shall not be done?

A yoke—which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?] This does not refer to the moral law—that was of eternal obligation—but to the ritual law, which, through the multitude of its sacrifices, ordinances, &c., was exceedingly burthensome to the Jewish people.

Verse 11. Through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved] There is but one way of salvation for Jews and Gentiles, the grace, mercy, or favour coming by and through the Lord Jesus, the Christ; this is now fully opened to the Gentiles: and we believe we shall be saved in the same way.

Verse 12. All the multitude kept silence] The strong facts stated by St. Peter could not be controverted.

Gave audience to Barnabas and Paul] Peter stated facts: Paul and Barnabas confirmed the statement.

Verse 13. James answered] He was evidently president of the council, and is generally called Bishop of Jerusalem. The rest either argued on the subject, or gave their opinion; James alone pronounced the definitive sentence. Had Peter been prince and head of the apostles, and of the church, he would have appeared here in the character of judge, not of mere counsellor or disputant. From this very circumstance there is the most demonstrative evidence that Peter was no Pope, and that the right of his pretended successor is a nonentity.

Verse 14. Simeon hath declared] James does not give him even the title which he received from our Lord at the time in which he is supposed to have been made head of the church, and vicar of Christ upon earth; so that, it is evident, James did not understand our Lord as giving Peter any such pre-eminence; and, therefore, he does not even call him Peter, but simply Simeon.

Verse 15. And to this agree the words of the prophets] Peter had asserted the fact of the conversion of the Gentiles; and James shows that that fact was the fulfilment of declarations made by the prophets.

Verse 16. After this I will return, and will build again, &c.] These two verses, 16th and 17th, are quoted from Amos ix. 11, 12, nearly as they now stand in the best editions of the Septuagint, and evidently taken from that version, which differs considerably from the Hebrew text.

Verse 17. That the residue of men might seek] Instead of this, the Hebrew has, that they may possess the remnant of Edom. Now it is evident that, in the copy from which the Seventy translated, they found yidreshu, they might seek, instead of yirshu, they may possess; and they found adam, man, or men, instead of Edom, the Idumeans.

Verse 18. Known unto God are all his works from the be- the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up:

17 That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things.

18 Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world.

19 Wherefore ^amy sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles ^bare turned to God:

20 But that we write unto them, that they abstain ^cfrom pollutions of idols, and ^dfrom fornication, and ^efrom things strangled, ^fand from blood.

21 For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, ^gbeing read in the synagogues every sabbath-day.

22 Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church, to send chosen men of their own company to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas; namely, Judas surnamed ^hBarsabas, and Silas, chief men among the brethren:

23 And they wrote letters by them after this manner; the apostles, and elders, and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch, and Syria, and Cilicia:

24 Forasmuch as we have heard, that ⁱcertain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law: to whom we gave no such commandment:

25 It seemed good unto us, being assembled with one accord, to send chosen men unto you with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, 26 ^jMen that have hazarded their lives for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

27 We have sent therefore Judas and Silas, who shall also tell you the same things by ^kmouth.

28 For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us, to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things;

29 ^lThat ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and ^mfrom blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: from which if ye keep yourselves, ye shall do well. Fare ye well.

30 So when they were dismissed, they came to Antioch: and when they had gathered the multitude together, they delivered the epistle:

31 Which when they had read, they rejoiced for the ⁿconsolation.

32 And Judas and Silas, being prophets also themselves, ^oexhorted the brethren with many words, and confirmed them.

33 And after they had tarried there a space, they gunning] As if he had said, This is not a new counsel of God: he had purposed, from the time he called the Israelites, to make the Gentiles partakers of the same grace and mercy; and ultimately to destroy those rites and ceremonies which separated them from each other.

The whole of this verse is very dubious: the principal part of it is omitted by the most ancient MSS.

Verse 19. Wherefore my sentence is] Wherefore I judge. There is an authority here that does not appear in the speech of St. Peter; and this authority was felt and bowed to by all the council; and the decree proposed by St. James adopted.

Verse 20. But that we write unto them] Four things are here prohibited: by the first, POLLUTIONS OF IDOLS, or, as it is in ver. 29, meats offered to idols, not only all idolatry was forbidden, but eating things offered in sacrifice to idols, knowing that they were thus offered, and joining with idolaters in their sacred feasts, which were always an incentive either to idolatry itself, or to the impure acts generally attendant on such festivals.

By the second, FORNICATION, all uncleanness of every kind was prohibited; for the word not only means fornication, but adultery, incestuous mixtures, and especially the prostitution which was so common at the idol temples.

By the third, THINGS STRANGLED, we are to understand the flesh of those animals which were strangled for the purpose of keeping the blood in the body, as such animals were esteemed a greater delicacy.

By the fourth, BLOOD, we are to understand, not only the thing itself, for the reasons assigned in the note on Gen ix. 4; but also all cruelty, manslaughter, murder, &c., as some of the ancient fathers have understood it.

Verse 21. Moses of old time hath in every city] By the reading of the law in the synagogues every sabbath-day, they were kept in remembrance of those institutions which the Gentiles, who had not the law, could not know. Therefore, James thought that a letter to the converted Gentiles would be sufficient, as the converted Jews had already ample instruction on these points.

Verse 22. Then pleased it the apostles and elders, with the whole church] James determined what ought to be done; and the whole assembly resolved how that should be done.

Chosen men of their own company] Judas and Silas are sent to corroborate by their oral testimony what was contained in the letters sent from the council.

Verse 23. Send greeting unto the brethren] The word greeting is in the original to be well, to be safe; a very usual form in Greek epistles.

Verse 24. Certain which went out from us] So the persons who produced these doubtful disputations at Antioch, &c., had gone out from the apostles at Jerusalem, and were of that church.

To whom we gave no such commandment] As, therefore, they went out from that church, they should have taught nothing which was not owned and taught by it; much less should they have taught in opposition to it.

Verse 26. Men that have hazarded their lives] This was a high character of Paul and Barnabas: they had already suffered much in the cause of Christ, and were intent on the same work, notwithstanding the increasing dangers in the way.

Verse 28. For it seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us] The whole council had not under his direction; had consulted under his influence: and gave forth their decree from his especial inspiration.

Necessary things] They were necessary, howsoever burthensome they might appear; and necessary, not only for the time, place, or occasion, but for all times, all places, and all occasions.

Verse 29. Ye shall do well.] And who can do any of these forbidden things, and keep either a guiltless or a tender conscience?

Fare—well.] An old English form of expressing good wishes and good will. Like to that other form of sound words, God be with you! corrupted now into good bye to ye! And of the same meaning with adieu! & à Dieu to God! that is, I commend you to God. All these terms savour not only of good will, or benevolence, but also of piety.

Verse 32. Judas and Silas, being prophets] That is, being teachers in the church. This signification of the word prophet we have often already seen.

Exhorted the brethren] To abide steadily attached to God, and to each other, in peace, love, and unity.

And confirmed them.] In the blessed truths they had already received.

Verse 33. They were let go] That is, both had liberty to depart; but Silas chose to stay a little longer with the brethren.

Verse 34. Notwithstanding it pleased Silas, &c.] This verse does not appear to have been originally in the text.

Verse 36. Let us go—and visit our brethren in every city] He saw it was necessary to water the seed he had planted; for these were young converts, surrounded with impiety, were let * go in peace from the brethren unto the apostles.

34 Notwithstanding it pleased Silas to abide there still.

35 ^b Paul also and Barnabas continued in Antioch, teaching and preaching the word of the Lord, with many others also.

36 And some days after, Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren * in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

37 And Barnabas determined to take with them ^d John, whose surname was Mark.

*1 Cor. xvi. 11. Heb. xi. 31.—^b Ch. xiii. 1.—^c Ch. xli. 4, 13, 14, 51. xiv. 1, 6, 24, 25.—^d Ch. xii. 12, 25. xiii. 5. Col. iv. 10. 2 opposition, and superstition, and had few advantages among themselves.

Verse 37. Barnabas determined to take with them John] John Mark was his sister's son; and natural affection might have led him to the partiality here mentioned.

Verse 38. But Paul thought not good to take him with them] On this subject, see the note on chap. xiii. 13.

Verse 39. The contention was so sharp between them] For all this sentence there is only in the Greek text: there was therefore a paroxysm, an incitement, a stirring up; there was a sharp contention. But does this imply anger or ill-will on either side? Certainly not. Should any man say there was sin in this contention between Paul and Barnabas, I answer, there is no evidence of this in the text. Should he say the word paroxysm denotes this, I answer, it does not. And the verb is often used in a good sense. And such persons forget that this is the very form used by the apostle himself, Heb. x. 24; which these objectors would be highly displeased with me, were I to translate, Let us consider one another to an angry contention of love and good works.

38 But Paul thought not good to take him with them, * who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39 And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;

40 And Paul chose Silas, and departed, * being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.

41 And he went through Syria and Cilicia, * confirming the churches.

Tim. iv. 11. Philem. 24.—^a Ch. xiii. 13.—^f Ch. xiv. 26.—^g Ch. xvi. 5.

From these examples, it appears that the word is used to signify incitement of any kind; it is taken to express a strong excitement to the love of God and man, and to the fruits by which such love can be best proved; and, in the case before us, there was certainly nothing contrary to this pure principle in either of those heavenly men.

Verse 40. Being recommended—unto the grace of God.] There is no proof that the church did not recommend Barnabas to the grace of God, as well as Paul; but, as St. Luke had for the present dropped the story of Barnabas, and was now going on with that of Paul and Silas, he begins it at this point, viz., his being recommended by the brethren to the grace of God; and then goes on to tell of his progress in Syria, Derbe, Lystra, &c. &c.

Verse 41. Confirming the churches.] This was the object of his journey: they were young converts, and had need of establishment; and there is no doubt that, by showing them the decision made at the late council of Jerusalem, their faith was greatly strengthened, their hope confirmed, and their love increased.

CHAPTER XVI

Paul, coming to Derbe and Lystra, meets with Timothy, the son of a Jewess by a Greek father, whom he circumcises, and takes with him into his work, 1-3. As they pass through the different cities, they deliver the apostles' decrees to the churches; and they are established in the faith, and daily increase in numbers, 4, 5. They travel through Phrygia, Galatia, Mysia, and to Troas, 6-8. Where Paul has a vision, relative to his preaching in Macedonia, 9, 10. Leaving Troas, he sails to Samothracia and Neapolis, and comes to Philippi in Macedonia, 11, 12. Lydia, a seller of purple, receives the apostles' teaching; and she and her family are baptized, 13-15. A young woman, with a spirit of divination, dispossessed by St. Paul, 16-18. Her masters, finding their gain by her soothsaying gone, make an attack upon Paul and Silas, drag them before the magistrates, who command them to be beaten, thrust into the closest prison, and their feet made fast in the stocks, 19-24. Paul and Silas singing praises at midnight, the prison doors are miraculously opened, and all the bonds of the prisoners loosed, 25-26. The keeper being alarmed, supposing that the prisoners were fled, is about to kill himself, but is prevented by Paul, 27, 28. He inquires the way of salvation, believes, and he and his whole family are baptised, 29-34. The next morning the magistrates order the apostles to be dismissed, 35, 36. Paul pleads his privilege as a Roman, and accuses the magistrates of injustice, who, being alarmed, come themselves to the prison, deliver them, and beg them to depart from the city, 37-39. They leave the prison, enter into the house of Lydia, comfort the brethren, and depart, 40.

THEN came he to ^aDerbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, ^bnamed Timotheus, ^cthe son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

2 Which ^dwas well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

3 Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and ^etook and circumcised him because of the Jews which were in those quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4 And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, ^fthat were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5 And ^gso were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

6 Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia, Verse 1. A certain disciple] This Timothy was the same person to whom St. Paul wrote those two noble epistles which are still extant. His mother's name was Eunice, as we learn from 2 Tim. i. 5. What his father's name was we know not.

Verse 2. Which was well reported of] These words are spoken of Timothy, and not of his father.

Verse 3. Took and circumcised him] For this simple reason, that the Jews would neither have heard him preach, nor would have had any connexion with him, had he been otherwise. The circumcision of Timothy was a merely prudential regulation; one rendered imperiously necessary by the circumstances in which they were then placed; and, as it was done merely in reference to this, Timothy was laid under no necessity to observe the Mosaic ritual; nor could it prejudice his spiritual state, because he did not do it in order to seek justification by the law, for this he had before, through the faith of Christ. In Gal. ii. 3-5, we read that Paul refused to circumcise Titus, who was a Greek, and his parents Gentiles, notwithstanding the entreaties of some zealous Judaizing Christians, as their object was to bring him under the yoke of the law: here the case was widely different, and the necessity of the measure indisputable.

Verse 5. And so were the churches established] The disputes at Antioch, relative to circumcision, had no doubt spread far and wide among other churches, and unhinged many. The decrees of the apostles came in good time, and prevented further mischief: the people, saved from uncertainty, became established in the faith; and the church had a daily accession of converted souls.

Verse 6. Were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia] The Asia mentioned here could not be Asia Minor in general, but it was what was called Proconsular Asia, which included only Ionia, Æolia, and Lydia.

Verse 7. But the Spirit suffered them not] God saw that that was not the most proper time to preach the word at Bithynia; as he willed them to go immediately to Macedonia, the people there being ripe for the word of life.

Verse 8. Came down to Troas] The Troad, or part of Phrygia Minor in which the celebrated city of Troy was formerly situated.

Verse 9. A vision appeared to Paul in the night] Whether this was in a dream, or whether a representation made to the senses of the apostle, we cannot tell.

Verse 10. We endeavoured to go into Macedonia] This is the first place in which the historian St. Luke refers to himself: we endeavoured, &c. And from this it has been supposed that he joined the company of Paul for the first time at Troas.

Assuredly gathering] Drawing an inference from the vision that had appeared.

That the Lord had called us for to preach] That is, they inferred that they were called to preach the gospel in Macedonia, from what the vision had said, come over and help us: the help meaning, preach to us the gospel.

7 After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia; but the Spirit suffered them not.

8 And they passing by Mysia ^acame down to Troas.

9 And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: There stood a ^bman of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavoured to go ^cinto Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

11 Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis.

12 And from thence to ^dPhilippi, which is ^ethe chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the ^fsabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made;

—^aCh. xv. 41.—^b2 Cor. ii. 12. 2 Tim. iv. 13.—^cCh. x. 30.—^d2 Cor. ii. 13.—^ePhil. i. 1.—^fOr, the first.—^gGr. Sabbath-day.

Verse 11. Loosing from Troas] Setting sail from this place.

With a straight course to Samothracia] This was an island of the Ægean Sea, contiguous to Thrace, and hence called Samothracia, or the Thracian Samos. It is about twenty miles in circumference, and is now called Saman-drachi by the Turks, who are its present masters.

And the next day to Neapolis] There were many cities of this name; but this was a sea-port town of Macedonia, a few miles eastward of Philippi. Neapolis signifies the new city.

Verse 12. And from thence to Philippi] This was a town of Macedonia, in the territory of the Edones, on the confines of Thrace, situated on the side of a steep eminence. It took its name from Philip II. king of Macedon. It was to the church in this city that St. Paul wrote the epistle that still goes under their name.

The chief city of that part of Macedonia] This passage has greatly puzzled both critics and commentators; Philippi not being the chief city of Macedonia. When Emilius conquered Macedonia, he divided it into four parts and he called the country that lay between the rivers Strymon and Nessus, the first part, making Amphipolis its chief city. [The translation suggested by Alford solves the difficulty: The first Macedonian city of the district.]

And a colony] That is, a colony of Rome; for it appears that a colony was planted here by Julius Cæsar, and afterwards enlarged by Augustus; the people, therefore, were considered as freemen of Rome, and, from this, call themselves Romans, ver. 21.

Verse 13. By a river side, where prayer was wont to be made] Where it was said there was a proseucha. The proseucha was a place of prayer, or a place used for worship, where there was no synagogue. It was a large building, uncovered, with seats, as in an amphitheatre. Buildings of this sort the Jews had by the sea-side, and by the sides of rivers.

Spake unto the women] Probably this was before the time of their public worship, and while they were waiting for the assembling of the people in general.

Verse 14. Lydia, a seller of purple] She probably had her name from the province of Lydia, in which the city of Thyatira was situated. The Lydian women have been celebrated for their beautiful purple manufactures.

Which worshipped God] That is, she was a proselyte to the Jewish religion; as were probably all the women that resorted hither.

Verse 15. And she constrained us] She used such entreaties and persuasions that at last they consented to lodge there.

Verse 16. As we went to prayer] Into the proseucha, see on ver. 13, and on Luke vi. 12. The article is added here by several MSS; this makes the place more emphatic; not the act of prayer or praying to God, but the place, the oratory, in which these proselytes assembled for the purpose of praying, reading the law and the prophets, and such like exercises of devotion.

14 And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us : whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

15 And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

16 And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying :

17 The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation.

18 And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee, in the name of Jesus Christ, to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

19 And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place, unto the rulers,

*Luke xxiv. 45.—^bGen. xix. 3. xxxiii. 11. Judg. xix. 21. Luke xxiv. 29. Heb. xiii. 2.—^c1 Sam. xxviii. 7.—^dOr, of Python. —^eCh. xix. 24.—^fSee Maik i. 25, 34.—^gMark xvi. 17.—^hCh. xix.

Possessed with a spirit of divination] Having a spirit of Python, or of Apollo. Python was, according to fable, a huge serpent, that had an oracle at Mount Parnassus, famous for predicting future events : Apollo slew this serpent, and hence he was called Pythius, and became celebrated as the foreteller of future events ; and all those who either could, or pretended to predict future events, were influenced by the spirit of Apollo Pythius.

Brought her masters much gain by soothsaying] By divination, or what we call telling fortunes.

Verse 17. These men are the servants, &c.] But mark the deep design and artifice of this evil spirit : 1. He well knew that the Jewish law abhorred all magic, incantations, magical rites, and dealings with familiar spirits ; he therefore bears what was in itself a true testimony to the apostles, that by it he may destroy their credit, and ruin their usefulness. The Jews, by this testimony, would be led at once to believe that the apostles were in compact with these demons, and that the miracles they wrought were done by the agency of these wicked spirits, and that the whole was the effect of magic ; and this, of course, would harden their hearts against the preaching of the gospel. 2. The GENTILES, finding that their own demon bore testimony to the apostles, would naturally consider that the whole was one system ; that they had nothing to learn, nothing to correct ; and thus the preaching of the apostles must be useless to them. In such a predicament as this, nothing could have saved the credit of the apostles but the casting out of this spirit of divination.

Verse 18. Turned—to the spirit] Not to the woman ; she was only the organ by which the spirit acted.

I command thee, in the name of Jesus] Every circumstance of this case proves it to have been a real possession. Had not St. Luke considered this as a real case of diabolic possession, he has made use of the most improper language he could choose ; language and forms of speech calculated to deceive all his readers, and cause them to believe a lie. But it is impossible that the holy apostle could do so, because he was a good man ; it is not likely he could be deceived by a parcel of charlatans, because he was a wise man ; and it would be absurd to suppose that, while he was under the influence of the Holy Spirit, he could be imposed on by the cunning of even the devil himself.

Verse 19. When her masters saw] It appears she was maintained by some men, who received a certain pay from every person whose fortune she told, or to whom she made any discovery of stolen goods, &c. &c.

The hope of their gains was gone] This hope, viz., the 20 And brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city, 21 And teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.

22 And the multitude rose up together against them : and the magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23 And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailor to keep them safely :

24 Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

25 And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God : and the prisoners heard them.

26 And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken : and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

27 And the keeper of the prison, awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

spirit. So completely was this spirit cast down that the girl could divine no more ; and yet she continued a heathen still, for we do not hear a word of her conversion.

Drew them into the market-place] This was the place of public resort.

Verse 20. Brought them to the magistrates] The commanders of the army, who, very likely, as this city was a Roman colony, possessed the sovereign authority.

Exceedingly trouble our city] They are destroying the public peace, and endangering the public safety.

Verse 21. And teach customs] Religious opinions and religious rites.

Which are not lawful for us to receive] The Romans were very jealous of their national worship.

Verse 22. The multitude rose up together] There was a general outcry against them ; and the magistrates tore off their clothes, and delivered them to the mob, commanding the lictors, or beadles, to beat them with rods. This was the Roman custom of treating criminals.

Verse 23. Laid many stripes upon them] The Jews never gave more than thirty-nine stripes to any criminal ; but the Romans had no law relative to this : they gave as many as they chose ; and the apostles had, undoubtedly, the fullest measure.

Verse 24. The inner prison] Probably what we would call the dungeon ; the darkest and most secure cell.

Made their feet fast in the stocks] This is supposed to mean two large pieces of wood, pierced with holes like our stocks, and fitted to each other, that, when the legs were in, they could not be drawn out. The holes being pierced at different distances, the legs might be separated or divaricated to a great extent, which must produce extreme pain.

Verse 25. At midnight Paul and Silas—sang praises] They prayed, first, for grace to support them, and for pardon and salvation for their persecutors ; and then, secondly, sang praises to God, who had called them to such a state of salvation, and had accounted them worthy to suffer shame for the testimony of Jesus. And, although they were in the inner prison, they sang so loud and so heartily that the prisoners heard them.

Verse 26. There was a great earthquake] Thus God bore a miraculous testimony of approbation to his servants.

Every one's bands were loosed] And yet so eminently did God's providence conduct every thing, that not one of the prisoners made his escape, though the doors were open, and his bolts off!

Verse 27. The keeper of the prison—would have killed himself] Every jailor was made responsible for his prisoner, 28 But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm : for we are all here.

29 Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, 30 And brought them out and said, 'Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

31 And they said, 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.

32 And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

33 And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway.

34 And when he had brought them into his house, 'he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

35 And when it was day, the magistrates sent the serjeants, saying, Let those men go.

* Luke iii. 10. Ch. ii. 37. ix. 6.—* John iii. 16, 36. vi. 47.
1 John v. 10.

under the same penalty to which the prisoner himself was exposed.

Verse 28. Do thyself no harm] As it was now dark, being midnight, St. Paul must have had a divine intimation of what the jailor was going to do.

Verse 29. He called for a light] That he might see how things stood, and whether the words of Paul were true; for on this his personal safety depended.

Came trembling] Terrified by the earthquake, and feeling the danger to which his own life was exposed.

Verse 30. What must I do to be saved?] It is not likely that the jailor referred here to his personal safety. He could not but have known that these apostles had been preaching among the people what they called the doctrine of salvation; and he knew that for expelling a demon they were delivered into his custody: the Spirit of God had now convinced his heart that he was lost, and needed salvation; and therefore his earnest inquiry is how he should obtain it. The answer of the apostles to the jailor shows that his inquiry was not about his personal safety; as his believing on Jesus Christ could have had no effect upon that, in his present circumstances.

Verse 31. Believe on the Lord Jesus] Receive the religion of Christ, which we preach, and let thy household also receive it, and ye shall be all placed in the sure way to final salvation.

Verse 33. Was baptized, he and all his, straightway] immediately, instantly, at that very time; so that it is by no means likely that there was any immersion in the case; indeed, all the circumstances of the case, the dead of the night, the general agitation, the necessity of dispatch, and the words of the text, all disprove it. It is therefore pretty evident that we have very presumptive proofs; 1. That baptism was administered without immersion, as in the case of the jailor and his family; and 2. That children were also received into the church in this way; for we can scarcely suppose that the whole families of Lydia and the jailor had no children in them; and, if they had, it is not likely that 36 And the keeper of the prison told this saying to Paul, The magistrates have sent to let you go: now therefore depart, and go in peace.

37 But Paul said unto them, They have beaten us openly uncondemned, 'being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out privily? nay, verily; but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

38 And the serjeants told these words unto the magistrates: and they feared, when they heard that they were Romans.

39 And they came and besought them, and brought them out, and 'desired them to depart out of the city.

40 And they went out of the prison, 'and entered into the house of Lydia: and when they had seen the brethren, they comforted them, and departed.

* Luke v. 29. xix. 6.—^d Ch. xxii. 25.—* Matt. viii. 34.

they should be omitted; for the Jewish practice was invariably to receive the heathen children with their proselyted parents.

Verse 33. Washed their stripes] He washed from the stripes: i. e., he washed the blood from the wounds; and this would not require putting them into a pool or bath, as some have ridiculously imagined.

Verse 34. He set meat before them] Genuine faith in Christ will always be accompanied with benevolence and humanity, and every fruit that such productions can produce.

Verse 35. And the magistrates sent the serjeants] The original word means the lictors, persons who carried before the consul the fascies, which was a hatchet, round the handle of which was a bundle of rods tied.

Verse 37. They have beaten us openly—being Romans] St. Paul well knew the Roman laws; and on their violation by the magistrates he pleads. The Valerian law forbade any Roman citizen to be bound. The Porcian law forbade any to be beaten with rods. And by the same law the liberty of a Roman citizen was never put in the power of the lictor. The illegality of the proceedings of these magistrates was farther evident in their condemning and punishing them unheard. This was a gross violation of a common maxim in the Roman law.

Let them come themselves and fetch us out.] The apostles were determined that the magistrates should be humbled for their illegal proceedings.

Verse 38. They feared when they heard—they were Romans.] They feared, because the Roman law was so constituted that an insult offered to a citizen was deemed an insult to the whole Roman people.

Verse 40. Entered into the house of Lydia] This was the place of their residence while at Philippi, see ver. 15.

They comforted them, and departed.] The magistrates were sufficiently humbled, and the public at large, hearing of this circumstance, must be satisfied of the innocence of the apostles.

CHAPTER XVII.

Paul and his company, passing through Amphipolis and Appollonia, come to Thessalonica, where they preach the gospel to the Jews, several of whom believe, 1-4. Others raise a mob, and bring Jason, who had received the apostles, before the magistrates, who, having taken bail of him and his companions, dismiss them, 5-9. Paul and Silas are sent away by night unto Berea, where they preach to the Jews, who gladly receive the gospel, 10-12. Certain Jews from Thessalonica, hearing that the Bereans had received the gospel, come thither and raise up a persecution, 13. Paul is sent away by the brethren to Athens, where he preaches to the Jews, 14-17. He is encountered by the Epicureans and Stoics, who bring him to the Areopagus, and desire him to give a full explanation of his doctrine, 18-20. The character of the Athenians, 21. Paul preaches to them, and gives a general view of the essential principles of theology, 22-31. Some mock, some hesitate, and some believe, and, among the latter, Dionysius and Damaris, 32-34.

NOW when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews.

2 And Paul, as his manner was, * want in unto them, and three sabbath-days reasoned with them out of the scriptures,

3 Opening and alledging, ^b that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus, ^c whom I preach unto you, is Christ.

4 ^d And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and ^e Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few.

5 But the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar, and assaulted the house of ^f Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people.

6 And when they found them not, they drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, ^g These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also;

7 Whom Jason hath received: and these all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar, ^h saying that there is another king, one Jesus.

Verse 1. Passed through Amphipolis] This city was the metropolis of the first division of Macedonia, as made by Paulus Æmilius, see the note on chap. xvi. 10. It was built by Cimon, the Athenian general, who sent 10,000 Athenians thither as a colony. It stood in an island in the river Strymon, and had its name of Amphipolis because included between the two grand branches of that river where they empty themselves into the sea, the river on both sides of the city.

Apollonia] This was another city of Macedonia, between Amphipolis and Thessalonica. It does not appear that St. Paul stopped at any of these cities; and they are only mentioned by the historian as places through which the apostles passed on their way to Thessalonica.

Thessalonica] This was a celebrated city of Macedonia, situated on what was called the Thermaic Gulf. It is now in possession of the Turks, and is called Salonichi, which is a mere corruption of the original name.

A synagogue of the Jews.] The synagogue; for the article here must be considered as emphatic, there probably being no other synagogue in any other city in Macedonia.

Verse 2. As his manner was] He constantly offered salvation first to the Jews; and for this purpose attended their sabbath-days' meetings at their synagogues.

Verse 3. Opening and alledging] Proving by citations. His method seems to have been thus: 1. He collected the scriptures that spoke of the Messiah. 2. He applied these to Jesus Christ, showing that in him all these scriptures were fulfilled, and that he was the Saviour of whom they were in expectation. He showed also that the Christ, or Messiah, must needs suffer—that this was predicted, and was an essential mark of the true Messiah. By proving this point, he corrected their false notion of a triumphant Messiah, and thus removed the scandal of the cross.

Verse 4. The devout Greeks] That is, Gentiles who were proselytes to the Jewish religion, so far as to renounce idolatry, and live a moral life, but who probably had not received circumcision.

Verse 5. The Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them] Instead of this sentence, the most correct MSS. and Versions read simply: But the Jews taking, &c., leaving out the words, which believed not, moved with envy.

Certain lewd fellows of the baser sort] The word which we translate the baser sort, is by Hesychius explained, those who transact business in courts of justice. These were probably a low kind of lawyers, what we would call pettifoggers, or attorneys without principle, who gave advice for a trifle, 8 And they troubled the people and the rulers of the city, when they heard these things.

9 And when they had taken security of Jason, and of the other, they let them go.

10 And ⁱ the brethren immediately sent away Paul and Silas by night unto Berea: who, coming thither, went into the synagogue of the Jews.

11 These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and ^j searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so.

12 Therefore many of them believed; also of honourable women which were Greeks, and of men, not a few.

13 But when the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people.

14 ^k And then immediately the brethren sent away Paul to go as it were to the sea: but Silas and Timotheus abode there still.

15 And they that conducted Paul brought him unto Athens: and ^l receiving a commandment unto Silas and Timotheus for to come to him with all speed, they departed.

16 Now while Paul waited for them at Athens,

21.—^m Ch. xvi. 20.—ⁿ Luke xxiii. 2. John xix. 12. 1 Pet. ii. 15.—^o Ch. ix. 25. Ver. 14.—^p Isa. xxxiv. 16. Luke xvi. 29. John v. 39.—^q Matt. x. 23.—^r Ch. xviii. 5.

and fomented disputes and litigations among the people. Gathered a company, and set all the city on an uproar] And, after having made this sedition and disturbance, charged the whole on the peaceable and innocent apostles!

Assaulted the house of Jason] This was the place where the apostles lodged; and therefore his goods were clear spoil, and his person fair game.

Verse 7. These all do contrary to the decrees of Cæsar] Persecutors always strive to affect the lives of the objects of their hatred, by accusing them of sedition, or plots against the state.

That there is another king, one Jesus.] The apostles proclaimed Jesus as king—that is true; but never once insinuated that his kingdom was of this world.

Verse 8. And they troubled the people and the rulers] It is evident that there was no disposition in either the people or the rulers to persecute the apostles.

Verse 9. Taken security] Having taken what was sufficient, or satisfactory. Sufficient for the present, to prove that the apostles were upright, peaceable, and loyal men; and that Jason and his friends were the like, and would be, at any time, forthcoming to answer for their conduct.

Verse 10. Sent away Paul and Silas by night] Fearing some further machinations of the Jews and their associates.

Berea] This was another city of Macedonia, on the same gulf with Thessalonica; and not far from Fella, the birth-place of Alexander the Great.

Verse 11. These were more noble than those in Thessalonica] Were of a better race, extraction, or birth, than those at Thessalonica; but the word refers more to their conduct, as a proof of their better disposition, then to their birth, or any peculiar lineal nobility. It was a maxim among the Jews, that "none was of a noble spirit who did not employ himself in the study of the law."

Verse 12. Therefore many of them believed] From the manner in which they heard, received, and examined the word preached to them, it was not likely they could be deceived.

Of honourable women which were Greeks] Probably mere heathens are meant; and these were some of the chief families in the place.

Verse 14. To go as it were to the sea] This passage is generally understood to mean that the disciples took Paul towards the sea, as if he had intended to embark, and return to Troas, but with the real design to go to Athens. But it is more likely that his conductors, in order to his greater safety, left the public and more frequented road, and took him coastwise to Athens.

* his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city
 * wholly given to idolatry.

17 Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

18 Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountered him. And some said, What wilt thou babble say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods; because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection.

19 And they took him, and brought him unto ^a Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?

20 For thou bringest certain strange things to our Silas and Timotheus abode there still.] To water the seed which Paul had planted.

Verse 15. Brought him unto Athens] This was one of the most celebrated cities in the world, whether we consider its antiquity, its learning, its political consequence, or the valour of its inhabitants. This city, which was the capital of Attica, and the seat of the Grecian empire, was founded by Cecrops, about A.M. 2447, before Christ 1557, and was called by him Cecropia. About thirteen or fourteen hundred years before Christ, in either the reign of Erechtheus, or Erichthonius, it was called Athens, from Athene, a name of Minerva, to whom it was dedicated, and who was always considered the protectress of the city.

Verse 16. He saw the city wholly given to idolatry] Full of idols, as the margin has it, and very properly.

PETRONIUS, who was contemporary with St. Paul, makes Quartailla say of Athens: Our region is so full of deities that you may more frequently meet with a god than a man.

Verse 17. And in the market] I suppose this means some such place as our exchange, where people of business usually met, and where the philosophers conversed and reasoned.

Verse 18. Certain philosophers of the Epicureans] These were the followers of Epicurus, who acknowledged no gods except in name, and absolutely denied that they exercised any government over the world or its inhabitants; they held that the chief good consisted in the gratification of the appetites of sense.

And of the Stoicks] These did not deny the existence of the gods; but they held that all human affairs were governed by fate. Both these sects agreed in denying the resurrection of the body; and the former did not believe in the immortality of the soul.

EPICURUS, the founder of the Epicurean sect, was born at Athens, about A.M. 3603, before Christ 341.

ZENO, the founder of the Stoic sect was born in the isle of Cyprus, about thirty years before Christ.

What wilt thou babble say?] The word which we translate babble, signifies, literally, a collector of seeds, and is the "name of a small bird that lives by picking up seeds on the road." The application of the term to prating, empty, impertinent persons, was natural and easy, and hence it was considered a term of reproach and contempt, and was sometimes used to signify the vilest sort of men.

A setter forth of strange gods] Of strange or foreign demons.

There was a difference, in the heathen theology, between god and demon: the gods were such as were gods by nature: the demons were men who were deified. This distinction seems to have been in the mind of these philosophers when they said that the apostles seemed to be setters forth of strange demons, because they preached unto them Jesus, whom they showed to be a man, suffering and dying, but afterwards raised to the throne of God.

Verse 19. They took him, and brought him unto Areopagus] The Areopagus was a hill not far from the Acropolis, where the supreme court of justice was held; one of the most sacred and reputable courts that had ever existed in the Gentile world. The justice administered in this court was so strict and impartial, that, it was generally allowed, both the plaintiff and defendant departed satisfied with the decision. The place in which the judges sat was uncovered; and they held their sittings by night, to the end that nothing might dis-ears: we would know, therefore, what these things mean.

21 (For all the Athenians, and strangers which were there, spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing.)

22 Then Paul stood in the midst of 'Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious.

23 For as I passed by, and beheld your 'devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you.

24 ^a God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is 'Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; tract their minds from the great business on which they were to decide; and that the sight of the accused might not affect them either with pity or aversion. In reference to this, all pleaders were strictly forbidden to use any means whatever to excite either pity or aversion, or to affect the passions; every thing being confined to simple relation, or statement of facts.

Verse 20. Thou bringest—strange things to our ears] The doctrine of the apostles was different from any they had ever heard: it was wholly spiritual and divine; it was contrary to their customs and manners.

Verse 21. All the Athenians, and strangers which were there] As Athens was renowned for its wisdom and learning, it became a place of public resort for philosophers and students from different parts of the then civilized world. The flux of students was in consequence great; and these, having much leisure time, would necessarily be curious to know what was passing in the world, and would frequently assemble together in places of public resort, to meet with strangers just come to the city; and either, as St. Luke says, to tell or hear some new thing.

Verse 22. Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill] That is, in the midst of the judges who sat in the Areopagus.

Ye are too superstitious] I perceive that in all respects ye are greatly addicted to religious practices; and, as a religious people, you will candidly hear what I have got to say in behalf of that worship which I practise and recommend.

Verse 23. Beheld your devotions] The objects of your worship; the different images of their gods which they held in religious veneration, sacrificial instruments, altars, &c., &c.

TO THE UNKNOWN GOD.] That there was an altar at Athens thus inscribed, we cannot doubt after such a testimony. Several eminent men suppose that this unknown god was the God of the Jews; and as his name Jehovah was considered by the Jews as ineffable, the unknown God may be considered as the anonymous god; the god whose name was not known, and must not be pronounced. That there was such a god acknowledged at Athens we have full proof.

Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship] By this fine turn he eluded the force of that law which made it a capital offence to introduce any new god into the state, and of the breach of which he was charged; and thus he showed that he was bringing neither new god nor new worship among them; but only explaining the worship of one already acknowledged by the state, though not as yet known.

Verse 24. God that made the world, &c.] Though the Epicureans held that the world was not made by God, but was the effect of a fortuitous concourse of atoms, yet this opinion was not popular; and the Stoicks held the contrary. St. Paul assumes, as an acknowledged truth, that there was a God who made the world and all things. That this God could not be confined within temples made with hands, as he was the Lord or governor of heaven and earth. That, by fair consequence, the gods whom they worshipped, which were shut up in their temples, could not be this God; and they must be less than the places in which they were contained. This was a strong, decisive stroke against the whole system of the Grecian idolatry.

Verse 25. Neither is worshipped with men's hands] This is an indirect stroke against making of images, and offering of sacrifices.

25 Neither is worshipped with men's hands, *as though he needed any thing, seeing ^b he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things ;

26 And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth ; and hath determined the times before appointed, and the ^c bounds of their habitation ;

27 ^d That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, * though he be not far from every one of us :

28 For ^e in him we live, and move, and have our being ; * as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring.

29 Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, ^f we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device.

* Ps. i. 8.—Gen. ii. 7. Num. xvi. 22. Job xli. 10. xxvii. 8. xxxiii. 4. Isa. xlii. 5. lvii. 10. Zech. xii. 1.—Deut. xxxii. 8.—Rom. i. 29.—Ch. xiv. 17.—Col. i. 17. Heb. i. 3.—Tit. i. 12.

Giveth—life, and breath, and all things] God gives life, because he is the fountain of it : he gives breath, the faculty of breathing or respiration, by which this life is preserved. But, as much more is necessary to keep the animal machine in a state of repair, God gives all the other things which are requisite for this great and important purpose, that the end for which life was given may be fully answered.

Verse 26 Hath made of one blood] The Athenians had a foolish notion that they were self-produced, and were the aboriginals of mankind.

And hath determined the times before appointed] Instead of the times before appointed, many of the best MSS., with both the Syriac, all the Arabic, the Coptic, Ethiopic, Slavonian, Vulgate, and Itala, read the appointed times ; that is, the times appointed by his providence, in which the several families should go to those countries where his wisdom designed they should dwell.

And the bounds of their habitation] Every nation had its lot thus appointed by God, as truly as the Israelites had the land of Canaan.

Verse 27. That they should seek the Lord] This is a conclusion drawn from the preceding statement.

Feel after him] That they might grope after him, as a person does his way who is blind or blindfolded. The Gentiles, who had not a revelation, must grope after God, as the principle of spiritual life, that they might find him to be a Spirit, and the source of all intellectual happiness ; and the apostle seems to state that none need despair of finding this fountain of goodness, because he is not far from every one of us.

Verse 28. And have our being] And we are : we live in him, move in him, and are in him. Without him we not only can do nothing, but without him we are nothing. We are, i. e., we continue to be, because of his continued, present, all-pervading, and supporting energy.

As certain also of your own poets] Probably he means not only Aratus, in whose poem, entitled Phænomena, the words quoted by St Paul are to be found literatim, but also Cleanthus, in whose Hymn to Jupiter the same words occur. But the sentiment is found in several others, being very common among the more enlightened philosophers.

Verse 29. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, &c.] Seeing, therefore, that we are living and intelligent beings, &c. from whom we have derived that being must be living and intelligent. It is necessary, also, that the object

30 And ^g the times of this ignorance God winked at ; but ^h now commadeth all men every where to repent :

31 Because he hath appointed a day, in the which ⁱ he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained ; whereof he hath ^j given assurance unto all men, in that ^k he hath raised him from the dead.

32 And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked : and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter.

33 So Paul departed from among them.

34 Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed : among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them.

of religious worship should be much more excellent than the worshipper ; but a man is, by innumerable degrees, more excellent than an image made out of gold, silver, or stone : and yet it would be impious to worship a man : how much more so to worship these images as Gods !

Verse 30. The times of this ignorance God winked at] The word which we translate, to wink at, signifies simply to look over ; and seems to be here used in the sense of putting by, not particularly noticing it. So God overlooked or passed by, the times of heathenish ignorance : as he had not given them the talent of Divine Revelation, so he did not require the improvement of that talent ; but now, as he had given them that revelation, he would no longer overlook, or pass by, their ignorance or its fruits.

Verse 31. He hath appointed a day] He has fixed the time in which he will judge the world, though he has not revealed this time to man.

By that man whom he hath ordained] He has also appointed the judge, by whom the inhabitants of the earth are to be tried.

Whereof he hath given assurance] Having given to all this indubitable proof that Jesus Christ shall judge the world, by raising him from the dead.

Verse 32. When they heard of the resurrection, &c.] Paul undoubtedly had not finished his discourse : it is likely that he was about to have proclaimed salvation through Christ crucified ; but, on hearing of the resurrection of the body, the assembly instantly broke up ; the Epicureans mocking, began to laugh ; and the Stoics saying they would take another opportunity to hear him on that subject.

Verse 33. So Paul departed from among them.] He could not be convicted of having done anything contrary to the law.

Verse 34. Certain men clave unto him] Became affectionately united to him, and believed the doctrine he had preached.

Dionysius the Areopagite] There can be no doubt that this man was one of the judges of this great court, but whether the president or otherwise we cannot tell. Humanly speaking, his conversion must have been an acquisition of considerable importance to the Christian religion ; for no person was a judge in the Areopagus who had not borne the office of archon, or chief governor of the city ; and none bore the office of judge in this court who was not of the highest reputation among the people for his intelligence and exemplary conduct.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Paul, leaving Athens, comes to Corinth, meets with Aquila and Priscilla, and labours with them at tent-making, 1-3. He preaches, and proves that Jesus was the Christ, 4, 5. The Jews oppose and blaspheme ; and he purposes to go to the Gentiles, 6. Justus, Crispus, and several of the Corinthians believe, 7, 8. Paul has a vision, by which he is greatly comforted, 9, 10. He continues there a year and six months, 11. Gallio being deputy of Achaia, the Jews make insurrection against Paul, and bring him before the deputy, who dismisses the cause; whereupon the Jews commit a variety of outrages, 12-17. Paul sails to Syria, and from thence to Ephesus, where he preaches, 18-20. He leaves Ephesus—goes to Cæsarea, visits Antioch, Galatia, and Phrygia, 21-23. Account of Apollos and his preaching, 24-28.

AFTER these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;

2 And found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy with his wife Priscilla; (because that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome:) and came unto them.

3 And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought: for by their occupation they were tent-makers.

4 And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.

5 And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ.

6 And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

Verse 1. Paul departed from Athens] How long he staid here, we cannot tell; it is probable it could not be less than three months.

CORINTH was situated on the isthmus that connects Peloponnesus to Attica; and was the capital of all Achaia, or Peloponnesus. It is about 46 miles east of Athens, and 342 S. W. of Constantinople. Its public buildings were very superb; and there the order called the Corinthian Order, in architecture, took its rise.

Verse 2. A certain Jew named Aquila] Some have supposed that this Aquila was the same with the Onkelos, mentioned by the Jews. We have no evidence that this Jew and his wife were at this time converted to the Christian religion. Their conversion was most likely the fruit of St. Paul's lodging with them.

Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome] This edict of the Roman emperor is not mentioned by Josephus; but it is probably the same to which Suetonius refers in his life of Claudius; where he says, "He expelled the Jews from Rome, as they were making continual insurrections, under their leader Chrestus." Who this Chrestus was we cannot tell; probably Suetonius meant Christ; but this I confess does not appear to me likely.

Verse 3. He abode with them and wrought] It was a custom among the Jews, even of such as had a better education than ordinary, which was Paul's case, chap. xii. 3, to learn a trade, that, wherever they were, they might provide for themselves in case of necessity.

There are different opinions concerning what is meant here by the word which we translate tent-maker. Some think it means a maker of those small portable tents, formed of skins, which soldiers and travellers usually carried with them on their journeys; others suppose that these tents were made of linen cloth. Some think that the trade of St. Paul was making hangings or curtains, such as were used at the theatres, others think he was a sort of umbrella-maker; others, a weaver, &c., &c. I have generally preferred the notion of a carpenter, or faber lignarius. Whatever it was, it was an honest, useful calling, and Paul got his bread by it. [It is generally thought that Paul was a maker of tents from the hair cloth of Cilician goats.]

Verse 4. And persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.] Among his converts was Epenetus, the first-fruits of his labour in Achaia, Rom. xvi. 5; and the family of Stephanas was the next; and then Crispus and Caius, or Gaius; all of whom the apostle himself baptized, 1 Cor. i. 14-16.

Verse 5. When Silas and Timotheus were come] It appears that he was greatly rejoiced at the account which Timothy brought of the church at Thessalonica; and it must have been immediately after this that he wrote his 7 And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, one that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

8 And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.

9 Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace:

10 For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city.

11 And he continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

12 And when Gallio was the deputy of Achaia, the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat, first epistle to that church, which is probably the first in order of time, of all his epistles.

Paul was pressed in the spirit] Or, he was constrained by the Spirit of God in an extraordinary manner, to testify to the Jews that Jesus was the Christ. Instead of in the spirit, in the word or doctrine, is the reading of the best MSS. St. Luke seems to have intended to express here something relating to St. Paul which was the consequence of the coming of Silas and Timotheus; and that was rather labouring with them more abundantly in preaching the word than his being pressed in spirit.

Verse 6. When they opposed] Systematically opposing; putting themselves in warlike order against him: so the word implies.

He shook his raiment] This was an action similar to that of shaking the dust off the feet; see on Matt. x. 14. See a parallel act, and its signification, in Neh. v. 13.

Your blood be upon your own heads] That is, ye alone are the cause of the destruction that is coming upon yourselves and upon your country.

I am clean] I am pure or innocent of your death and ruin. I shall labour no more with you; and, from henceforth, shall confine my labours to the Gentiles. St. Paul must refer to the Jews and Gentiles of Corinth particularly; for he preached to the Jews occasionally in other places; see chap. xix. 8, 9; and several were brought to the knowledge of the truth.

Verse 7. And he departed thence] From his former lodging, or that quarter of the city where he had dwelt before with Aquila and Priscilla; and went to lodge with Justus, apparently a proselyte of the gate.

Verse 8. Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue] This person held an office of considerable consequence; and therefore his conversion to Christianity must have been very gallant to the Jews.

Many of the Corinthians] Those to whom the sacred historian refers were probably Gentiles, and were the fruits of the apostle's labours after he had ceased to preach among the Jews.

Verse 9. Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision] It is likely that Paul was at this time much discouraged by the violent opposition of the Jews, and might have been entertaining serious thoughts of ceasing to preach, or leaving Corinth. See 1 Cor. ii. 8.

Verse 10. No man shall set on thee] No man shall be permitted to lay violent hands upon thee.

I have much people in this city.] In this very city: there are many here who have not resisted my Spirit, and are ready to embrace my gospel as soon as thou shalt declare it unto them.

13 Saying, This fellow persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law.

14 And when Paul was now about to open his mouth, Gallio said unto the Jews, 'If it were a matter of wrong or wicked lewdness, O ye Jews, reason would that I should bear with you :

15 But if it be a question of words and names, and of your law, look ye to it ; for I will be no judge of such matters.

16 And he drave them from the judgment-seat.

17 Then all the Greeks took ^b Sosthenes, the chief ruler of the synagogue, and beat him before the judgment-seat. And Gallio cared for none of those things.

18 And Paul after this tarried there yet a good while ; and then took his leave of the brethren, and sailed thence into Syria, and with him Priscilla and Aquila ; having ^c shorn his head in ^d Cenchrea : for he had a vow.

^a Ch. xxiii. 29. xxv. 11, 19.—^b 1 Cor. i. 1.—^c Num. vi. 18. Ch. xxi. 24.—^d Rom. xvi. 1.—^e Ch. xlv. 21. xx. 16.—^f 1 Cor. iv. 19. Heb.

Verse 11. He continued there a year and six months] He was now confident that he was under the especial protection of God, and therefore continued teaching the word, the doctrine of God.

Verse 12. When Gallio was the deputy of Achaia] The Romans comprehended, under the name of Achaia, all that part of Greece which lay between Thessaly and the southernmost coasts of Peloponnesus.

Gallio] This deputy, or proconsul, was eldest brother to the celebrated Lucius Annæus Seneca, the stoic philosopher, preceptor of Nero, and who is so well known among the learned by his works. He, and Annæus Mela his brother, father of the poet Lucan, shared in the disgrace of their brother Seneca ; and by the tyrant Nero, whose early years were so promising, the three brothers were put to death. He was of the sweetest disposition, and affable to all, and beloved by every man. [There is no real authority for the statement as to his death. Jerome says that he was spared by Nero, and that he committed suicide, A.D. 65.]

And brought him to the judgment-seat] They had no power to punish any person in the Roman provinces, and therefore were obliged to bring their complaint before the Roman governor.

Verse 13. Persuadeth men to worship God contrary to the law.] This accusation was very insidious. The Jews had permission by the Romans to worship their own God in their own way : this the law allowed. The Roman worship was also established by the law. The Jews probably intended to accuse Paul of acting contrary to both laws.

Verse 14. If it were a matter of wrong] Of injustice ; any thing contrary to the rights of the subject.

Or wicked lewdness] Destructive mischief. Something by which the subject is grievously wronged ; any crime against society or against the state :

Reason would that I should bear with you] According to reason, or the merit of the case, I should patiently hear you.

Verse 15. But if it be a question of words] Concerning doctrine and names—whether the person called Jesus be the person you call the Messiah. And of your law—any particular nicety concerning that law which is peculiar to yourselves ; Look ye to it—settle the business among yourselves ; the Roman government does not meddle with such matters ; and I will not take upon me to decide in a case that does not concern my office. Had all the rulers of the people in every country acted as this sensible and benevolent Roman, laws against liberty of conscience would not be found to be, as they now are, blots and disgraces on the statute-books of almost all the civilized nations of Europe.

Verse 16. And he drave them from the judgment-seat.] The word which we translate he drave does not signify here any act of violence on the part of Gallio or the Roman officers, but simply an authoritative dismissal.

Verse 17. Then all the Greeks took Sosthenes] As this man is termed the chief ruler of the synagogue, it is probable that he had lately succeeded Crispus in that office, see ver. 8 ; and that he was known either to have embraced Christianity, or to have favoured the cause of St. Paul.

19 And he came to Ephesus, and left them there : but he himself entered into the synagogue, and reasoned with the Jews.

20 When they desired him to tarry longer time with them, he consented not ;

21 But bade them farewell, saying, ' I must by all means keep this feast that cometh in Jerusalem : but I will return again unto you, ' if God will. And he sailed from Ephesus.

22 And when he had landed at Cæsarea, and gone up, and saluted the church, he went down to Antioch.

23 And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of ^a Galatia and Phrygia in order, ^b strengthening all the disciples.

24 ^c And a certain Jew named Apollos, born at Alexandria, an eloquent man, and mighty in the scriptures, came to Ephesus.

25 This man was instructed in the way of the

vi. 3. James iv. 15.—^a Gal. i. 2. iv. 14.—^b Ch. xlv. 22. xv. 32, 41.—^c 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 5, 6. iv. 6. Tit. iii. 13.

But why should the Greeks beat Sosthenes ? I suppose that this outrage was committed by the Jews ; and my reason is this : the Greeks is omitted by two of the oldest and most authentic MSS. in the world. Three MSS., one of the eleventh and two of the thirteenth century, have the Jews ; and it is much more likely that the Jews beat one of their own rulers, through envy at his conversion, than that the Greeks should do so. [The best reading is that which omits both Greeks and Jews. The word all refers to the mob, who handled Sosthenes thus roughly, as being the chief instigator of an unsuccessful prosecution.]

And Gallio cared for none of those things.] And Gallio did not concern himself, did not intermeddle, with any of these things. He, like the rest of the Romans, considered the Jews a most despicable people, and worthy of no regard ; and their present conduct had no tendency to cause him to form a different opinion of them from that which he and his countrymen had previously entertained. It is not very likely, however, that Gallio saw this outrage ; for, though it was before the judgment-seat, it probably did not take place till Gallio had left the court ; and, though he might be told of it, he left the matter to the lictors and would not interfere.

The conduct of Gallio has been, in this case, greatly censured ; and I think with manifest injustice. In the business brought before his tribunal, no man could have followed a more prudent or equitable course. His whole conduct showed that it was his opinion, that the civil magistrate had nothing to do with religious opinions or the concerns of conscience, in matters where the safety of the state was not implicated. He therefore refused to make the subject a matter of legal discussion.

But in consequence of this conduct Gallio has been represented as a man perfectly careless and unconcerned about religion in general ; and therefore has been considered as a proper type, or representative, of even professed Christians, who are not decided in their religious opinions or conduct. But the words, cared for none of those things, are both misunderstood and misapplied : they only mean that he would not intermeddle in a controversy which did not belong to his province. He who preaches on Gallio cared for none of those things, in the way in which the passage has, through mismanagement, been popularly understood, either does not understand it, or he wilfully perverts the meaning.

Verse 18. And Paul—tarried there yet a good while] It could not be unknown that Paul was possessed of the right of Roman citizenship ; and therefore his person was sacred, as long as he did nothing contrary to the laws.

Having shorn his head in Cenchrea] There is nothing in the text that absolutely obliges us to understand this action as belonging to St Paul. It seems to have been the act of Aquila alone ; and therefore both Paul and Priscilla are mentioned before Aquila : and it is natural to refer the vow to the latter. Yet there are certainly some weighty reasons why the vow should be referred to St. Paul, and not to Aquila ; and interpreters are greatly divided on the subject. [The evidence, however, is stronger in favour of the popular interpretation, which refers the vow to Paul.]

Lord; and being 'fervent in the spirit, he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, 'knowing only the baptism of John.

26 And he began to speak boldly in the synagogue: whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them, and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly.

* Rom. xii. 11.—^b Ch. xix. 3.—^c 1 Cor. iii. 6.

Verse 19. He came to Ephesus] EPHESUS was, at the time in which St. Paul visited it, one of the most flourishing cities of Asia Minor. It was situated in that part anciently called Ionian, but now Natolia. It abounded with the most eminent orators, philosophers, &c., in the world; and was adorned with the most splendid buildings. Here was that famous temple of Diana, reputed one of the seven wonders of the world. This city is now under the dominion of the Turks, and is in a state of almost entire ruin.

Verse 21. I must—keep this feast] Most likely the passover, at which he wished to attend for the purpose of seeing many of his friends, and having the most favourable opportunity to preach the gospel to thousands who would attend at Jerusalem on that occasion.

Verse 22. Landed at Cæsarea] This must have been Cæsarea in Palestine.

Gone up] To Jerusalem, though the name is not mentioned: but this is a common form of speech in the Evangelists, Jerusalem being always meant when this expression was used.

Saluted the church] That is, the church at Jerusalem, called emphatically THE CHURCH, because it was the FIRST church—the MOTHER, or APOSTOLIC church: and from it all other Christian churches proceeded: those in Galatia, Philippi, Thessalonica, Corinth, Ephesus, Rome, &c. Therefore, even this last was only a daughter church, when in its poorest state.

Went down to Antioch] That is, Antioch in Syria, as the word is generally to be understood when without addition.

Verse 23. Went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia] Both were provinces of Asia Minor: see on chap. ii. 10.

In order] A word peculiar to St. Luke. It properly signifies, in order, distinctly, particularly.

Verse 24. A certain Jew named Apollos] It is strange that we should find a Jew, not only with a Roman name, as Aquila, an eagle; but with the name of one of the false gods, as Apollo or Apollon in the text. [Apollo is the abbreviation of Apollonius.]

Born at Alexandria] This was a celebrated city of Egypt, built by Alexander the Great, from whom it took its name. It was seated on the Mediterranean Sea, between the Lake Mareotis, and the beautiful harbour formed by the Isle of Pharos, about twelve miles west of the Canopic branch of the Nile, in lat. 31° 10' N. This city was built under the direction of Dinocrates, the celebrated architect of the temple of Diana at Ephesus. Some of the most celebrated schools of antiquity flourished here; and here was the Tower of Pharos, esteemed one of the seven wonders of the world.

An eloquent man] Having strong rhetorical powers: highly cultivated, no doubt, in the Alexandrian schools.

Mighty in the scriptures] Thoroughly acquainted with the law and prophets; and well skilled in the Jewish method of interpreting them.

Verse 25. This man was instructed in the way of the Lord] He was catechized, initiated, in the way, the doctrine of Jesus as the Christ.

Being fervent in the spirit] Being full of zeal to propagate the truth of God, he taught diligently, accurately (so the word should be translated), the things of Christ as far as he could know them through the ministry of John the Baptist; for it appears he knew nothing more of Christ than what John preached.

Verse 26. Took him unto them] It is disgraceful to a man to be ignorant, when he may acquire wisdom; but it is no disgrace to acquire wisdom from the meanest person or thing.

Verse 27. Which had believed through grace] These words may either refer to Apollo, or to the people at Corinth.

Verse 28. He mightily convinced the Jews] He vehemently confuted the Jews; and that publicly, not in private conferences, but in his public preaching: shewing by the scriptures of the Old Testament, which the Jews received as divinely inspired, that Jesus, who had lately appeared among them, and whom they had crucified, was the Christ, the promised Messiah, and that there was salvation in none other; and that they must receive him as the Messiah, in order to escape the wrath to come. This they refused to do; and we know the consequence.

CHAPTER

Paul, coming to Ephesus, finds certain disciples who had not received the gift of the Holy Ghost, knowing only the baptism of John, but receive it through the imposition of his hands, 1-7. He preaches for three months in the synagogues, 8. Many being hardened, he leaves the synagogues, and teaches daily in the school of Tyrannus for two years, 9, 10. He works many miracles, 11, 12. Account of the vagabond exorcist Jews, and the seven sons of Sceva, 13-17. Many are converted, and burn their magical books, 18, 20. Paul purposes to pass through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, and afterwards to Rome; but, having sent Timotheus and Erastus to Macedonia, continues a little longer in Asia, 21, 22. Demetrius, a silversmith of Ephesus, raises an uproar against Paul, which, after some tumultuous proceedings, is appeased by the town-clerk, 23-41.

AND it came to pass, that, while * Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the ^b upper coasts came to Ephesus : and finding certain disciples,

2 He said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, ^c We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.

3 And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, ^d Unto John's baptism.

4 Then said Paul, ^e John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Christ Jesus.

5 When they heard this, they were baptized ^f in the name of the Lord Jesus.

6 And when Paul had ^g laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and ^h they spake with tongues, and prophesied.

7 And all the men were about twelve.

8 ⁱ And he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things ^j concerning the kingdom of God.

9 But ^k when divers were hardened, and believed not, but spake evil ^l of that way before the multitude, he departed from them, and separated the disciples, disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus.

10 And ^m this continued by the space of two years; so that all they which dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks.

11 And ⁿ God wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul;

12 ^o So that from his body were brought unto the sick handkerchiefs or aprons, and the diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.

13 ^p Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, ^q took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus, whom Paul preacheth.

14 And there were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests, which did so.

15 And the evil spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?

16 And the man in whom the evil spirit was, leaped on them, and overcame them, and prevailed against them, so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded.

[Verse 1. Paul having passed through the upper coasts] That is, through those parts of Asia Minor that lay eastward of Ephesus, such as Galatia, Phrygia, and probably Lycania and Lydia; and it is in reference to Ephesus that these are called the upper coasts.

[Verse 2. Have ye received the Holy Ghost] It is likely that these were Asiatic Jews, who, having been at Jerusalem about twenty-six years before this, had heard the preaching of John, and received his baptism, believing in the coming Christ, whom John had proclaimed; but it appears that till this time they had got no farther instruction in the Christian religion. Paul, perceiving this, asked them if they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed? For it was the common privilege of the disciples of Christ to receive, not only the ordinary graces, but also the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit; and thus the disciples of Christ differed from those of John, and of all others.

[We have not so much as heard whether, &c.] They could not mean that they had not heard of the Holy Spirit; for John, in his baptism, announced Christ as about to baptize with the Holy Ghost, Matt. iii. 11, Luke iii. 16; but they simply meant that they had not heard that this Spirit, in his gifts, had been given to or received by any one.

[Verse 4. That they should believe on him which should come after] John baptized them with the baptism of repentance; this was common to all the baptisms administered by the Jews to proselytes; but telling them that they should believe on him who was coming was peculiar to John's baptism.

[Verse 5. When they heard this, &c.] As there is no evidence in the New Testament of persons being rebaptized, unless this be one, many criticisms have been hazarded to prove that these persons were not rebaptized. I see no need of this. To be a Christian, a man must be baptized in the Christian faith: these persons had not been baptized into that faith, and therefore were not Christians: they felt this, and were immediately baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus.

[Verse 6. They spake with tongues, and prophesied.] They received the miraculous gift of different languages; and in those languages they taught to the people the great doctrines of the Christian religion; for this appears to be the meaning of the word prophesied, as it is used above.

[Verse 8. Spake boldly—three months] St. Paul, in every place, made his first offers of salvation to the Jews; and it was only when they rejected it that he turned to the Gentiles; see chap. xviii. 6.

[Disputing and persuading] Holding conversations with them, in order to persuade them of the truth of the doctrine of Christ.

[Verse 9. When divers were hardened] When some of them were hardened; several no doubt felt the power of divine truth, and yielded consent.

[Separated the disciples] He and his converts wholly withdrew from the synagogue, and took a place for themselves; and constantly afterwards held their own meetings at a school-room, which they hired no doubt for the purpose.

[The school of one Tyrannus] It appears that the person in question was a schoolmaster, and that he lent or hired his room to the apostles; and that they preached daily in it to as many, both Jews and Gentiles, as chose to attend.

[Verse 10. All they—in Asia heard the word] Meaning, probably, the Proconsular Asia, for the extent of which see the note on chap. xvi. 6.

[Jews and Greeks] For, although he ceased preaching in the synagogues of the Jews, yet they continued to hear him in the school of Tyrannus. But it is likely that Paul did not confine himself to this place, but went about through the different towns and villages; without which, how could all Asia have heard the word?

[Verse 12. Handkerchiefs or aprons] Probably the sudaria were a sort of handkerchiefs, which, in travelling, were always carried in the hand, for the convenience of wiping the face; and the simikitha were either the sashes or girdles that went about the loins.

[The diseases departed from them, and the evil spirits went out of them.] Here, there is a most evident distinction made between the diseases and the evil spirits; hence they were not one and the same thing.

[Verse 13. Certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists] Certain of the Jews who went about practising exorcisms. Vagabond, has a very bad acceptance among us; but literally, vagabundus signifies a wanderer, one that has no settled place of abode.

[Verse 14. Seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew, and chief of the priests] The original signifies a Jewish high-priest; but it is not probable that any sons, much less seven sons of a Jewish high-priest, should be strolling exorcists: it is therefore likely that the sons of Sceva, a certain priest, as it stands in the Codex Beza, in the true reading. [The reading of the Codex Beza is not confirmed by the best MSS. The word rendered "chief of the priests" is used in an accommodated tense, as indicating the chief of the priests residi-

17 And this was known to all the Jews and Greeks also dwelling at Ephesus; and ^a fear fell on them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was magnified. 18 And many that believed came, and ^b confessed, and shewed their deeds.

19 Many of them also which used curious arts brought their books together, and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver.

20 ^c So mightily grew the word of God, and prevailed.

21 ^d After these things were ended, Paul ^e purposed in the spirit, when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia, to go to Jerusalem, saying, After I have been there, ^f I must also see Rome.

22 So he sent into Macedonia two of ^g them that ministered unto him, Timotheus and ^h Erastus; but he himself stayed in Asia for a season.

23 And ⁱ the same time there arose no small stir about ^j that way.

24 For a certain man named Demetrius, a silversmith, which made silver shrines for Diana, brought ^k no small gain unto the craftsmen;

dent at Ephesus, or the chief of one of the courses.] Magicians among the Jews were termed badley shen, Masters of the Name, that is, the name of Jehovah, by a certain pronunciation of which they believed the most wonderful miracles could be wrought. There were several among them who pretended to this knowledge; and, when they could not deny the miracles of our Lord, they attributed them to his knowledge of the true pronunciation of this most sacred name.

Verse 15. Jesus I know, and Paul I know] In the answer of the demoniac, the verb is varied: I acknowledge Jesus, and am acquainted with Paul; but of whom are ye? [There is little difference between the two verbs.]

Verse 16. And the man in whom the evil spirit was, &c.] Thus we find that one man was more powerful than these seven brothers: so that he stripped them of their upper garments, and beat and wounded the whole.

Verse 17. The name of the Lord Jesus was magnified] Eorcasts or adorations of evil spirits were very frequent in the primitive church: the name of Jesus was that alone which was used. The primitive Fathers speak strong and decisive words concerning the power of this name; and how demons were tormented and expelled by it, not only from individuals, but from the temples themselves. Eorcasts formed a distinct class in the church; hence we read of Presbyters, Deacons, Eorcasts, Lectors, and Doorkeepers. The adoration was commonly used over the Catechumens, before they were admitted to baptism. Gregory of Nazianzen, and Cyril of Jerusalem speak much of this rite.

Verse 19. Which used curious arts] From the use of this word in the Greek writers, we know that it signified magical arts, sorceries, incantations, &c. Ephesus abounded with these.

Brought their books together] The books brought together on this occasion were such as taught the science, manner of formation, use, &c., of the Ephesian characters or charms, which were for a long time famous.

Fifty thousand pieces of silver.] Some think that the word, which we translate piece of silver, means a shekel, as that word is used in Matt. xxvi. 15, where see the note; 50,000 shekels, at 8s., would amount to £7500.

But, as this was a Roman and not a Jewish country, we may rationally suppose that the Jewish coin was not here current; and it is very likely that the sestertius is meant, which was always a silver coin. Allowing this to be the coin intended, the 50,000 sestertii would amount to £403 12s. 11d.

The Vulgate reads fifty thousand denarii, which, at 73d., will amount to £1614 11s. 8. But that which is computed from the sestertius is the most probable amount.

Verse 22. So he sent into Macedonia] He himself continued in Asia some time longer; probably to make collections for the poor saints in Jerusalem. Erastus, mentioned 25 Whom he called together with the workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth.

26 Moreover ye see and hear, that not alone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that they be no gods, which are made with hands:

27 So that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought; but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth.

28 And when they heard these sayings, they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

29 And the whole city was filled with confusion: and having caught ^m Gaius and ⁿ Aristarchus, men of Macedonia, Paul's companions in travel, they rushed with one accord into the theatre.

30 And when Paul would have entered in unto the people, the disciples suffered him not.

here for the first time, appears to have been the chamberlain, either of Ephesus or Corinth; see Rome. xvi. 23. He was one of St. Paul's companions, and is mentioned as being left by the apostle at Corinth, 2 Tim. iv. 20

Verse 23. No small stir about that way.] Concerning the gospel, which the apostles preached.

Verse 24. Silver shrines for Diana] The temple of Diana at Ephesus was deemed one of the seven wonders of the world, and was a most superb building. It appears that the silver shrines mentioned here were small portable representations of this temple, which were bought by strangers as matters of curiosity, and probably of devotion. If we can suppose them to have been exact models of this famous temple, representing the whole exterior of its magnificent workmanship, which is possible, they would be held in high estimation, and probably become a sort of substitute for the temple itself, to worshippers of this goddess who lived in distant parts of Greece. The temple of Diana was raised at the expense of all Asia Minor, and yet was two hundred and twenty years in building, before it was brought to its sum of perfection. It was in length 425 feet, by 220 in breadth; and was beautified by 127 columns, which were made at the expense of so many kings; and was adorned with the most beautiful statues. To procure himself an everlasting fame, Erostratus burned it to the ground the same night on which Alexander the Great was born. It is reported that Alexander offered to make it as magnificent as it was before, provided he might put his name on the front; but this was refused. It was afterwards rebuilt and adorned, but Nero plundered it of all its riches.

Verse 25. By this craft we have our wealth.] The word not only signifies wealth, but also abundance.

Verse 26. This Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people] From the mouth of this heathen, we have, in one sentence, a most pleasing account of the success with which God had blessed the labours of the apostles.

Verse 27. The temple of the great goddess Diana] Because she was the representative of universal nature, she was called, in opposition to Diana the huntress and goddess of chastity, the great goddess Diana; not only worshipped in Asia, but throughout the whole world; both the Greeks and the Romans unanimously conjoining in her worship.

Verse 29. Rushed into the theatre.] The theatres, being very spacious and convenient places, were often used for popular assemblies and public deliberation, especially in matters which regarded the safety of the state.

Verse 31. Certain of the chief of Asia] Some of the Asiarchs. The Asiarchs were those to whom the care and regulation of the public games were entrusted: they were a sort of high-priests, and were always persons of considerable riches and influence.

Verse 32. Some—cried one thing, and some another] This is an admirable description of a tumultuous mob, gathered 31 And certain of the chief of Asia, which were his friends, sent unto him, desiring him that he would not adventure himself into the theatre.

32 Some therefore cried one thing, and some another: for the assembly was confused; and the more part knew not wherefore they were come together.

33 And they drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward. And ^a Alexander ^b beckoned with the hand, and would have made his defence unto the people.

34 But when they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians.

35 And when the town-clerk had appeased the people, he said, Ye men of Ephesus, what man is there that knoweth not how that the city of the Ephesians is ^c a worshipper of the great goddess

Diana, and of the image which fell down from Jupiter?

36 Seeing then that these things cannot be spoken against, ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly.

37 For ye have brought hither these men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess.

38 Wherefore if Demetrius, and the craftsmen which are with him, have a matter against any man, ^d the law is open, and there are deputies: let them implead one another.

39 But if ye inquire any thing concerning other matters, it shall be determined in a ^e lawful assembly.

40 For we are in danger to be called in question ^f for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse.

41 And when he had thus spoken, ^g he dismissed the assembly.

^a 1 Tim. i. 20. ² Tim. iv. 14.—^b Ch. xii. 17.—^c Gr. the temple-keeper.—^d Or, the court-days are kept.

together without law or reason; getting their passions inflamed, and looking for an opportunity to commit outrages, without why or wherefore—principle or object.

For the assembly was confused.] The same word which we translate church; and thus we find that it signifies any assembly, good or bad, lawful or unlawful; and that only the circumstances of the case can determine the precise nature of the assembly to which this word is applied.

Verse 33. They drew Alexander out of the multitude, the Jews putting him forward.] There does not seem any just ground from the text to suppose that this Alexander was a Christian; or that he was about to make an apology for the Christians: it is generally believed that he is the same with Alexander the coppersmith, of whom St. Paul speaks, 2 Tim. iv. 14, and whom, with Philetus, he was obliged to excommunicate, 1 Tim. i. 20. By the Jews putting him forward, we are to understand their earnestness to get him to undertake their defence, and criminate, as much as possible, St. Paul and his companions, and the Christian cause in general; which he would no doubt have done without vindicating the worship of Diana, which, as a Jew, he would not dare to attempt.

Verse 35. When the town-clerk.] Literally, the scribe. Some think that the word recorder would do better here than town-clerk; and indeed it is evident that a magistrate of considerable authority and influence is intended—the mayor or sovereign of the city.

Is a worshipper of the great goddess Diana.] The word neocoros, which we translate worshipper, signified at first, among the ancient Greeks, no more than sweeper of the temple, and answered nearly to our scout; in process of time, the care of the temple was entrusted to this person: at length the neocoroi became persons of great consequence, and were those who offered sacrifices for the life of the emperor. Whole cities took this appellation, as appears on many ancient coins and medals: and Ephesus is supposed to have been the first that assumed that title.

Or, ordinary.—^f Ver. 20, 32. Ps. xxxiv. 19.—^g Job v. 13. Ps. lxxv. 7.

Of the image which fell down from Jupiter?] The original image of the Ephesian Diana was supposed to have descended from heaven; which intimates that it was so old that no person knew either its maker or the time in which it was formed; and it was the interest of the priests to persuade the people that this image had been sent to them as a present from Jupiter himself.

Verse 37. These men—are neither robbers of churches.] Spoilers of sacred places. As his design evidently was to appease and conciliate the people, he fixed first on a most incontrovertible fact: These men have not spoiled your temples; nor is there any evidence that they have even blasphemed your goddess.

Verse 38. If Demetrius—have a matter against any man.] If it be any breach of law, in reference to Demetrius and the artists, the law is open; or, rather, the judges are now sitting: so the words may be understood. [Or, rather, the court days are on.] And there are deputies, proconsuls, appointed to guard the peace of the state, and to support every honest man in his right; let them implead one another; let the one party bring forward his action of assault or trespass, and the other put in his defence: the laws are equal and impartial, and justice will be done to him who is wronged.

Verse 39. But if ye inquire any thing concerning other matters.] In which the safety of the state, or the national worship, is concerned, know that such a matter is not the business of the mob; it must be heard and determined in a lawful assembly, one legally constituted, and properly authorized to hear and determine on the subject.

Verse 40. For we are in danger, &c.] One of the Roman laws made all such commotions of the people capital offences against those who raised them.

Verse 41. He dismissed the assembly.] Another proof that the word which we generally translate church, signifies an assembly of any kind, good or bad, legal or illegal.

CHAPTER XX.

Paul, retires to Macedonia, 1. He goes into Greece, where he tarries three months; and, purposing to sail to Syria, he returns through Macedonia, 2, 3. Several persons accompany him into Asia, and then go before and tarry for him at Troas, 4, 5. Paul and Luke sail from Philippi, and in five days reach Troas, where they meet their brethren from Asia, and abide there seven days, 6. On the first day of the week, the disciples coming together to break bread, Paul preaching to them, and continuing his speech till midnight, a young man of the name of Eutychus, being in a deep sleep, fell from the third loft, and was killed, 7-9. Paul restores him to life, resumes his discourse, and continuing it till day-break, then departs, 10-12. Luke and his companions sail to Assos, whither Paul comes by land, 13. He embarks with them at Assos, comes to Mitylene, 14. Sails thence, and passes by Chios, arrives at Samos, tarries at Trogyllium, and comes to Miletus, 15. Purposing to get as soon as possible to Jerusalem, he sends from Miletus, and calls the elders of the church of Ephesus, to whom he preaches a most affecting sermon, gives them the most solemn exhortations, kneels down and prays with them, takes a very affecting leave of them, and sets sail for Caesarea, in order to go to Jerusalem, 16-38.

AND after the uproar was ceased, Paul called unto him the disciples, and embraced them, and ^adeparted for to go into Macedonia.

2 And when he had gone over those parts, and had given them much exhortation, he came into Greece,

3 And there abode three months. And ^bwhen the Jews laid wait for him, as he was about to sail into Syria, he purposed to return through Macedonia.

4 And there accompanied him into Asia, Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, ^cAristarchus and Secundus; and ^dGaius of Derbe, and ^eTimotheus; and of Asia, ^fTychicus and ^gTrophimus.

5 These going before tarried for us at Troas.

6 And we sailed away from Philippi after ^hthe days of unleavened bread, and came unto them ⁱto Troas in five days; where we abode seven days.

7 And upon ^jthe first day of the week, when the disciples came together ^kto break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight.

Verse 1. After the uproar was ceased] The tumult excited by Demetrius apparently induced Paul to leave Ephesus sooner than he had intended.

Verse 2. He came into Greece] Into Hellas, Greece properly so called, the regions between Thessaly and Propontis, and the country of Achaia.

Verse 3. Abode three months]. Partly, as we may suppose, at Corinth, at Athens, and in Achaia.

When the Jews laid wait for him] Paul had determined to go by sea to Syria, and from thence to Jerusalem. This was the first object of his journey; and this was the readiest road he could take; but, hearing that the Jews had laid wait for him, probably to attack his ship on the voyage, seize his person, sell him for a slave, and take the money which he was carrying to the poor saints at Jerusalem, he resolved to go as much of the journey as he conveniently could, by land.

Verse 4. And there accompanied him] Rather there followed him as far as Asia; for they were not in his company till he set sail from Philippi, and came to them at Troas, in Asia, whither they had gone before, and where they tarried for him ver. 5.

Sopater of Berea] Sopater seems to be the same as Sosipater, whom St. Paul mentions as his kinsman, Rom. xvi. 21.

Aristarchus of Thessalonica] This person occurs in chap. xix. 29, and is mentioned there as a Macedonian. He attended Paul in his journey to Rome, chap. xxvii. 2, and was his fellow-labourer, Philemon, ver. 24, and his fellow-prisoner, Col. iv. 10, 11. Secundus is mentioned no where but in this place.

Gaius of Derbe] This is supposed to be the same who is mentioned chap. xix. 28; but, as Gaius, or Caius, was a very common name, these might have been two distinct persons. [Gaius of Derbe could not have been a man of Macedonia.]

And Timotheus] Of Lystra is added by the Syriac. This was the same person of whom mention is made, chap. xvi. 1, and to whom St. Paul wrote the two Epistles which are still extant; and who was a native of Lystra, as we learn from the above place.

Tychicus] This person was high in the confidence of St. Paul. Ephes. vi. 21, 22; Col. iv. 7, 8; Tit. iii. 12. He seems to have been the most intimate and confidential friend that Paul had.

Trophimus]. He accompanied Paul from Ephesus into 8 And there were many lights ¹in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together.

9 And there sat in a window a certain young man, named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead.

10 And Paul went down, and ²fell on him; and embracing him said, ³ Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him.

11 When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed.

12 And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted.

13 And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul: for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot.

14 And when he met with us at Assos, we took him in, and came to Mitylene.

15 And we sailed thence, and came the next day over against Chios; and the next day we arrived at Greece, as we see here; and from thence to Jerusalem chap. xxi. 29. He had, no doubt, travelled with him on other journeys, for we find, by 2 Tim. iv. 20, that he was obliged to leave him sick at Miletus, being then, as it is likely, on his return to his own kindred at Ephesus.

Verse 5. Tarried for us at Troas]. Troas was a small town in Phrygia Minor, in the province called the Troad; see chap. xvi. 8.

Verse 6. Days of unleavened bread] The seven days of the passover, in which they ate unleavened bread.

To Troas in five days] So long they were making this voyage from Philippi, being obliged to keep always by the coast, and in sight of the land; for the magnetic needle was not yet known.

Verse 7. Upon the first day of the week] What was called the Lord's day, the Christian sabbath, in which they commemorated the resurrection of our Lord; and which, among all Christians, afterwards took the place of the Jewish sabbath.

To break bread] To break eucharistia, the eucharist, as the Syriac has it; intimating, by this, that they were accustomed to receive the holy sacrament on each Lord's day. It is likely that, besides this, they received a common meal together. Some think the agape, or love-feast, is intended.

Continued his speech until midnight]. At what time he began to preach we cannot tell, but we hear when he concluded. But it is likely that a good part of the time was employed in hearing and answering questions.

Verse 8. There sat in a window] This was probably an opening in the wall, to let in light and air, for there was no glazing at that time; and it is likely that Eutychus fell backward through it, down to the ground, on the outside.

Verse 10. And Paul—fell on him] Stretched himself upon him, in the same manner as Elisha did on the Shunamite's son, 2 Kings iv. 33-35.

Verse 11. Had broken bread] Had taken some refreshment in order to their journey.

And talked a long while] Having familiarly conversed, for this is the import of the word.

Verse 13. Sailed unto Assos] Assos was a maritime town of Asia, in the Troad. Strabo and Stephanus place it in Mysia. It was also called Apollonia. The passage by sea to this place was much longer than by land; and therefore St. Paul chose to go by land, while the others went by sea.

Intending to take in Paul] To take him in AGAIN; for it

Samos, and tarried at Trogyllium; and the next day we came to Miletus.

16 For Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia: for ^a he hasted, if it were possible for him, ^b to be at Jerusalem ^c the day of Pentecost.

17 And from Miletus he sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.

18 And when they were come to him, he said unto them, Ye know, ^d from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons,

19 Serving the Lord with all humility of mind, and with many tears, and temptations, which befel me ^e by the lying in wait of the Jews:

20 And how ^f I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have shewed you, and have taught you publicly, and from house to house, 21 ^g Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, ^h repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

appears he had already been aboard that same vessel: probably the same that had carried them from Philippi to Troas, ver. 6.

Verse 14. Came to Mitylene.] This was a sea-port town in the isle of Lesbos.

Verse 15. Over against Chios] This was a very celebrated island between Lesbos and Samos, famous in antiquity for its extraordinary wines.

Arrived at Samos] This was another island of the Ægean Sea, or Archipelago. It does not appear that they landed at Samos: they passed close by it, and anchored at Trogyllium.

Came to Miletus.] A celebrated city in the province of Caria, about twelve or fifteen leagues from Ephesus, according to Calmet. Miletus is famous for being the birth-place of Thales, one of the seven wise men of Greece, and founder of the Ionic sect of philosophers.

Verse 16. To sail by Ephesus] Not to touch there at this time.

To be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost.] That he might have the opportunity of preaching the kingdom of God to multitudes of Jews from different places, who would come up to Jerusalem at that feast.

Verse 17. He sent to Ephesus, and called the elders of the church.] These are called episcopoi, bishops, ver. 28. By the presbyteroi, presbyters or elders, here, we are to understand all that were in authority in the church, whether they were bishops or overseers, or seniors in years, knowledge, and experience. The elders, were probably the first order in the church; an order which was not so properly constituted, but which rose out of the state of things. From these presbyteroi the episcopoi, overseers or superintendents, were selected. Those who were eldest in years, Christian knowledge, and experience, would naturally be preferred to all others, as overseers of the church of Christ.

Verse 20. I kept back nothing] Notwithstanding the dangers to which he was exposed, and the temptations he must have had to suppress those truths that were less acceptable to the unrenowned nature of man, or to the particular prejudices of the Jews and the Gentiles, he fully and faithfully, at all hazards, declared what he terms, ver. 27, the whole counsel of God.

Verse 21. Repentance toward God] As all have sinned against God, so all should humble themselves before him against whom they have sinned; but humiliation is no atonement for sin; therefore repentance is insufficient, unless faith in our Lord Jesus Christ accompany it. Repentance disposes and prepares the soul for *pardon*ing mercy; but can never 24 But ^l none of these things move me; neither count I my life dear unto myself, ^m so that I might finish my course with joy, ⁿ and the ministry, ^o which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

25 And now, behold, ^p I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more.

28 ^t Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost ^u hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, ^v which he hath purchased ^w with his own blood.

be considered as making compensation for past acts of transgression.

Verse 22. I go bound in the spirit] Either meaning the strong influence of the Divine Spirit upon his mind, or the strong propensity in his own will, wish, and desire, to visit Jerusalem. But it appears more consistent with the mind of the apostle, and with that influence under which we find that he constantly acted, to refer it to the influence of the Holy Ghost.

Verse 24. None of these things move me] I consider them as nothing; I value them not a straw; they weigh not with me.

Finish my course with joy] My ministerial function. We have already met with this word in application to the same subject, chap. xiii. 25, where see the note. And the apostle here adds, by way of explanation, even that ministry which I have received of the Lord.

To testify] Earnestly, solemnly, and strenuously to assert, vindicate, and prove the gospel of the grace of God, not only to be in itself what it professes to be, but to be also the power of God for salvation to every one that believes.

Verse 25. Ye all—shall see my face no more.] This probably refers simply to the persons who were now present; concerning whom he might have had a divine intimation, that they should not be found in life when he should come that way again. Or it may refer only to Ephesus and Miletus.

Verse 26. I am pure from the blood of all] If any man, Jew or Gentile, perish in his sins, his blood shall be upon him; he, alone, shall be accessory to his own perdition.

Verse 27. I have not shunned to declare] I have not suppressed or concealed any thing, through fear or favour, that might be beneficial to your souls.

All the counsel of God.] All that God has determined and revealed concerning the salvation of man—the whole doctrine of Christ crucified, with repentance towards God, and faith in Jesus as the Messiah and great atoning Priest.

Verse 28. Made you overseers] Appointed you bishops; for so we translate the original word in most places where it occurs; but overseers, or inspectors, is much more proper.

Feed the church of God] Three readings exist in the MSS. in reference to which critics and commentators have been much divided; viz., the church of God;—of the Lord;—of the Lord and God.

The greater evidence appears to be in favour of feed the church of the Lord, which he has purchased with his own blood; but had not this Lord been God, his blood could have been no purchase for the souls of a lost world. [The

MSS. authority is almost evenly balanced between the two words : but the Pauline usage is in favour of the expression as it stands in our Version.]

Verse 29. After my departing] Referring, most likely, to his death; for few of these evils took place during his life.

Grievous wolves] Persons professing to be teachers; Judaizing Christians, who, instead of feeding the flock, would feed themselves, even to the oppression and ruin of the church.

Verse 30. Also of your own selves, &c.] From out of your own assembly shall men arise, speaking perverse things, teaching for truth what is erroneous in itself, and perverse of the genuine doctrine of Christ crucified.

To draw away disciples] To make schisms or rents in the church, in order to get a party to themselves. How soon the grievous wolves and perverse teachers arose in the churches of Asia Minor, the first chapters of the Apocalypse inform us.

Verse 31. Therefore watch, and remember] Unwatchfulness and forgetfulness are two grand inlets to apostasy.

By the space of three years] The Greek word here does not necessarily mean three whole years: it may be months more or less. In chap. xix. 8 and 19, we have an account of his spending two years and three months among them; probably all that is intended. [This criticism is not very satisfactory. The discrepancy must bear some other solution.]

Verse 32. Which is able to build you up] The foundation have ministered unto my necessities, and to them that were with me.

35 I have shewed you all things, ^ahow that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.

36 And when he had thus spoken, he ^bkneeled down, and prayed with them all.

37 And they all wept sore, and ^cfell on Paul's neck, and kissed him, 38 Sorrowing most of all for the words ^dwhich he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship.

is Jesus Christ; God is the great master-builder; the doctrine of his grace, or mercy, points out the order and manner as well as the extent, &c., of this building.

Verse 33. I have coveted no man's silver, &c.] St. Paul's account of his own disinterestedness is very similar to that given by Samuel of his, 1 Sam. xii. 3-5.

Verse 34. These hands have ministered, &c.] It was neither "sin nor discredit" for the apostle to work to maintain himself, when the circumstances of the church were such that it could not support him. Whatever it may be to the people, it is no cause of reproach to the minister, to be obliged thus to employ himself.

Verse 35. I have showed you all things] In all things. It is more blessed to give than to receive.] Where, or on what occasion, our Lord spake these words we know not, as they do not exist in any of the four Evangelists. But that our Lord did speak them, St. Paul's evidence is quite sufficient to prove.

Verse 36. He kneeled down and prayed] Kneeling is the proper posture of a suppliant, it argues at once both humility and submission; and he who prays to God should endeavour to feel the utmost measures of both.

Verse 37. Fell on Paul's neck] Leaned their heads against his shoulder, and kissed his neck. This was not an unusual custom in the East.

Verse 38. That they should see his face no more.] Such a scene, and its correspondent feelings, are more easily imagined than described.

CHAPTER XXI.

Paul and his company sail from Miletus, and come to Coos, Rhodes, and Patara, 1. Finding a Phœnician ship at Patara, they go on board, sail past Cyprus, and land at Tyre, 2, 3. Here they find disciples, and stay seven days, and are kindly entertained, 4, 5. Having bade the disciples farewell, they take ship and sail to Ptolemais, salute the brethren, stay with them one day, come to Cæsarea, and lodge with Philip, one of the seven deacons, 6-9. Here they tarry a considerable time, and Agabus the prophet foretels Paul's persecution at Jerusalem, 10, 11. The disciples endeavour to dissuade him from going; but he is resolute, and he and his company depart, 12-16. They are kindly received by James and the elders, who advise Paul, because of the Jews, to show his respect for the law of Moses, by purifying himself, with certain others that were under a vow; with which advice he complies, 17-28. Some of the Asiatic Jews, finding him in the temple, raise an insurrection against him, and would have killed him had he not been rescued by the chief captain, who orders him to be bound and carried into the castle, 27-36. Paul requests liberty to address the people, and is permitted, 37-40.

AND it came to pass, that after we were gotten from them, and had launched, * we came with a straight course unto Coos, and the day following unto Rhodes, and from thence unto Patara :

2 And finding a ship sailing over unto Phœnicia, we went aboard, and set forth.

3 Now when we had discovered Cyprus, we left it on the left hand, and sailed unto Syria, and landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlade her burden.

4 And finding disciples, we tarried there seven days : ^b who said to Paul through the Spirit, that he should not go up to Jerusalem.

5 And when we had accomplished those days, we departed and went our way ; and they all brought us on our way, with wives and children, till we were out of the city : and ^c we kneeled down on the shore, and prayed.

6 And when we had taken our leave one of another, we took ship ; and they returned ^d home again.

7 And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day.

8 And the next day we that were of Paul's com-

Verse 1. Came with a straight course] Having had, as is necessarily implied, wind and tide in their favour.

Coos] An island in the Archipelago, or Ægean Sea, one of those called the Sporades. It was the birth-place of Hippocrates, the most eminent of physicians, and Apelles, the most celebrated of painters.

Rhodes] Another island in the same sea, celebrated for its Colossus, which was one of the seven wonders of the world.

Patara] One of the chief sea-port towns of Syria.

Verse 3. There the ship was to unlade her burden.] The freight that she had taken in at Ephesus she was to unlade at Tyre ; to which place she was bound.

Verse 4. Who said to Paul through the Spirit] We cannot understand this as a command from the Holy Spirit not to go up to Jerusalem, else Paul must have been highly criminal to have disobeyed it. Through the Spirit, must either refer to their own great earnestness to dissuade him from taking a journey which they plainly saw would be injurious to him, or, if it refer to the Holy Spirit, it must mean that if he regarded his personal safety, he must not, at this time, go up to Jerusalem. The Spirit foretold Paul's persecutions, but does not appear to have forbidden his journey ; and Paul was persuaded that, in acting as he was about to do, whatever personal risk he ran, he should bring more glory to God, by going to Jerusalem, than by tarrying at Tyre or elsewhere.

Verse 5. When we had accomplished those days] That is, the seven days mentioned in the preceding verse.

And they all brought us on our way, with wives and children] It is not likely that Paul, Silas, Luke, &c., had either wives or children with them ; and it is more natural to suppose that the brethren of Tyre, with their wives and children, are those that are meant.

Kneeled down on the shore, and prayed.] As God fills heaven and earth, so he may be worshipped every where : as well, when circumstances require it, on the sea-shore, as in the temple.

Verse 6. Taken—leave] Having given each other the kiss of peace, as was the constant custom of the Jews and primitive Christians.

They returned home] That is, the men, their wives, and their children.

Verse 7. We came to Ptolemais] This was a sea-port town of Galilee, not far from Mount Carmel, between Tyre and Cæsarea, where the river Belus empties itself into the sea.

Verse 8. Came unto Cæsarea] This was Cæsarea of Palestine, already sufficiently described.

Philip the evangelist] One of the seven deacons, who pany departed, and came unto Cæsarea : and we entered into the house of Philip ^a the evangelist, ^b which was one of the seven ; and abode with him.

9 And the same man had four daughters, virgins, ^c which did prophesy.

10 And as we tarried there many days, there came down from Judea a certain prophet named ^d Agabus.

11 And when he was come unto us, he took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands and feet, and said, Thus saith the Holy Ghost, ^e So shall the Jews at Jerusalem bind the man that owneth this girdle, and shall deliver him into the hands of the Gentiles.

12 And when we heard these things, both we, and they of that place, besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.

13 Then Paul answered, ^f What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart ? for I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.

14 And when he would not be persuaded, we ceased, saying, ^g The will of the Lord be done.

15 And after those days we took up our carriages, and went up to Jerusalem.

16 There went with us also certain of the dis-seems to have settled here after he had baptized the eunuch.

Verse 9. Four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy.] Probably these were no more than teachers in the church : for we have already seen that this is a frequent meaning of the word prophesy.

Verse 11. Took Paul's girdle, and bound his own hands, &c.] This was no doubt a prophet, in the commonly received sense of the term ; and his mode of acting was like that of the ancient prophets, who often accompanied their predictions with significant emblems. Jer. xiii. 4, xxvii. 2, 3, xxviii. 4 ; Isa. xx. ; Ezek. iv. xiii. &c.

Into the hands of the Gentiles.] That is, the Romans, for the Jews had not, properly speaking, the power of life and death.

Verse 12. Besought him not to go up to Jerusalem.] For they all understood the prophecy to be conditional and contingent ; and that it was in Paul's power to turn the scale.

Verse 13. I am ready, not to be bound only] He was resolute and determined ; but was under no constraining necessity.

Verse 15. Took up our carriages] We made ourselves ready ; packed up our things ; got our baggage in order. This is what the text means.

Verse 16. And brought with them one Mnason, &c.] It is not very likely that they would bring a man with them with whom they were to lodge in Jerusalem ; therefore, the text should perhaps be read : There went with us certain of the disciples of Cæsarea, bringing us to one Mnason, with whom we were to lodge.

Verse 18. Went in with us unto James] This was James the less, son of Mary, and cousin to our Lord. He appears to have been bishop of the church in Jerusalem, and perhaps the only apostle who continued in that city.

All the elders were present.] It appears that they had been convened about matters of serious and important moment.

Verse 19. Declared particularly, &c.] He no doubt had heard that they were prejudiced against him.

Verse 20. How many thousands] How many myriads how many times 10,000. This intimates that there had been a most extraordinary and rapid work even among the Jews ; but what is here spoken is not to be confined to the Jews of Jerusalem, but to all that had come from different parts of the land to be present at this Pentecost. [The expression is not perhaps to be taken literally.]

They are all zealous of the law.] The Jewish economy was not yet destroyed ; nor had God as yet signified that the whole of its observances were done away.

Verse 21. Thou teachest—to forsake Moses, &c.] From any thing that appears in the course of this book to the ciples of Cæsarea, and brought with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge.

17 * And when we were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received us gladly.

18 And the day following, Paul went in with us unto James; and all the elders were present.

19 And when he had saluted them, he declared particularly what things God had wrought among the Gentiles ^a by his ministry.

20 And when they heard it, they glorified the Lord, and said unto him, Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all ^a zealous of the law :

21 And they are informed of thee, that thou teachest all the Jews which are among the Gentiles, to forsake Moses, saying that ^a they ought not to circumcise their children, neither to walk after the customs.

22 What is it therefore? the multitude must needs come together : for they will hear that thou art come.

23 Do therefore this that we say to thee : We have four men which have a vow on them ;

24 Them take, and purify thyself with them, and be at charges with them, that they may ^a shave their heads : and all may know that those things, whereof they were informed concerning thee, are nothing ; but that thou thyself also walkest orderly and keepest the law.

^a Ch. xv. 4.—^b Ch. xv. 13. Gal. i. 19. ii. 9.—^c Ch. xv. 4, 12. Rom. xv. 18, 19.—^d Ch. i. 17. xx. 24.—^e Ch. xxii. 3. Rom. x. 2. Gal. i. 14.—^f Gal. ii. 3. v. 1.—^g Num. vi. 2, 13, 18. Ch. xviii. 18.

contrary, this information was incorrect : we do not find Paul preaching thus to the Jews. He told them that Jesus Christ had delivered them from the yoke of the law ; but they had, as yet, liberty to bear that yoke, if they pleased. He had showed them that their ceremonies were useless, but not destructive ; that they were only dangerous, when they depended on them for salvation.

Verse 22. The multitude must needs come together] Whether this refers to a regular convocation of the church, or to a tumult that would infallibly take place when it was heard that the apostle was come, we cannot pretend to say.

Verse 23. We have four men which have a vow] From the shaving of the head, mentioned immediately after, it is evident that the four men in question were under the vow of Nazariteship ; and that the days of their vow were nearly at an end, as they were about to shave their heads ; for, during the time of the Nazariteship, the hair was permitted to grow, and only shaven off at the termination of the vow.

Verse 24. Be at charges with them] Or, rather, be at charges for them : help them to bear the expense of that vow. Eight lambs, four rams, besides oil, flour, &c., were the expenses on this occasion. See the notes on Num. vi.

Thou—walkest orderly, and keepest the law.] Show them, by such means as are now in thy power, that thou art not an enemy to Moses ; that thou dost still consider the law to be holy, and the commandment holy, just, and good. Paul did so, and bore the expenses of those who, from a scruple of conscience, had made a vow, and perhaps were not well able to bear the expense attending it. Had they done this in order to acquire justification through the law, Paul could not have assisted them in any measure with a clear conscience ; but, as he did assist them, it is a proof that they had not taken this vow on them for this purpose. Besides, God had not yet fully shown that the law was abolished, as has already been remarked : he tolerated it till the time that the iniquity of the Jews was filled up ; and then, by the destruction of Jerusalem, he swept every rite and ceremony of the Jewish law away, with the besom of destruction.

Verse 26. To signify the accomplishment, &c.] Declaring the accomplishment, &c. But it is likely that Paul made no offering himself, but was merely at the expense of theirs.

25 As touching the Gentiles which believe, ^a we have written and concluded that they observe no such thing, save only that they keep themselves from things offered to idols, and from blood, and from strangled, and from fornication.

26 Then Paul took the men, and the next day purifying himself with them, ^a entered into the temple, ^b to signify the accomplishment of the days of purification, until that an offering should be offered for every one of them.

27 And when the seven days were almost ended, ^a the Jews which were of Asia, when they saw him in the temple, stirred up all the people, and ^a laid hands on him, 28 Crying out, Men of Israel, help : This is the man, ^a that teacheth all men every where against the people, and the law, and this place : and further brought Greeks also into the temple, and hath polluted this holy place.

29 (For they had seen before with him in the city ^a Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.)

30 And ^a all the city was moved, and the people ran together : and they took Paul, and drew him out of the temple : and forthwith the doors were shut.

31 And as they went about to kill him, tidings came unto the chief-captain of the band, that all Jerusalem was in an uproar.

32 ^a Who immediately took soldiers and centur-

However we may consider this subject it is exceedingly difficult to account for the conduct of James and the elders, and of Paul, on this occasion. There seems to have been something in this transaction which we do not fully understand.

Verse 27. The Jews which were of Asia] These pursued him with the most deliberate and persevering malice in every place.

Verse 28. Brought Greeks also into the temple] Josephus informs us that on the wall which separated the court of the Gentiles from that of the Israelites was an inscription, in Greek and Latin letters, which stated that no stranger was permitted to come within the holy place on pain of death. With such a prohibition as this before his eyes, was it likely that St. Paul would enter into the temple in company with an uncircumcised Greek ? The column refutes itself.

Verse 30. They took Paul] They shut the court of the Gentiles, that they might have the opportunity, unmolested, of killing him in that place ; for the court of the Gentiles was reckoned to be less holy than that of the Israelites.

Verse 31. The chief captain of the band] The Roman tribune, Claudius Lysias, who had a troop of soldiers under him, which lodged in general in the castle of Antonia, which was built at the angle where the northern and western porticoes of the outer court of the temple were joined together.

Verse 32. Ran down unto them] Ran down the stairs to the porticoes mentioned above.

Verse 33. And took him] With great violence, according to chap. xxiv. 7, probably meaning an armed force.

To be bound with two chains] To be bound between two soldiers ; his right hand chained to the left hand of the one, and his left to the right hand of the other.

Verse 36. Away with him.] That is, Kill him ; dispatch him ! for so much this phrase always means in the mouths of a Jewish mob.

Verse 37. Canst thou speak Greek ?] Claudius Lysias was not a Roman ; he had, as himself informs us, purchased his citizenship of Rome with a great sum of money, and it is very likely that he was but imperfectly acquainted with the Latin tongue.

Verse 38. Art not thou that Egyptian, &c.] The history to which Claudius Lysias refers, is taken from Josephus, Ant.

33 Then the chief captain came near, and took him, and * commanded him to be bound with two chains : and demanded who he was, and what he had done.

34 And some cried one thing, some another, among the multitude : and when he could not know the certainty for the tumult, he commanded him to be carried into the castle.

35 And when he came upon the stairs, so it was, that he was borne of the soldiers for the violence of the people.

36 For the multitude of the people followed after, crying, ^b Away with him.

38 * Art not thou that Egyptian, which before these days madest an uproar, and leddest out into the wilderness four thousand men that were murderers ?

39 But Paul said, ^a I am a man which am a Jew of Tarsus, a city in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city : and, I beseech thee, suffer me to speak unto the people.

40 And when he had given him licence, Paul stood on the stairs, and * beckoned with the hand unto the people. And when there was made a great silence, he spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue, saying, the inhabitants, Julius Cæsar endowed them with all the rights and privileges of Roman citizens.

Verse 40. Paul stood on the stairs] Where he was out of the reach of the mob, and was surrounded by the Roman soldiers.

Beckoned with the hand] Waving the hand, which was the sign that he was about to address the people.

He spake unto them in the Hebrew tongue] What was called then the Hebrew, viz. the Chaldeo-Syriac.

CHAPTER XXII.

Paul, in his address to the people, gives an account of his birth and education, 1-3. His prejudices against Christianity, 4, 5. And of his miraculous conversion, and call to the apostleship, 6-21. The Jews, hearing him say that God had sent him to preach the gospel to the Gentiles, become exceedingly outrageous, and clamour for his life, 22-23. The chief captain orders him to be examined by scourging ; but he, pleading his privilege as a Roman citizen, escapes the torture, 24-29. The next day the chief captain brings Paul before the chief priests and their council, 30.

MEN, ^a brethren, and fathers, hear ye my defence, which I make now unto you.

2 (And when they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue to them, they kept the more silence : and he saith,)

Verse 1. Hear ye my defence] This apology of mine ; in this sense the word apology was anciently understood : hence the Apologies of the primitive Fathers, i. e., their defences of the Christian religion.

Verse 2. When they heard that he spake in the Hebrew tongue] He had probably been traduced by the Jews of Asia as a mere Gentile, distinguished only by his virulence against the Jewish religion ; which virulence proceeded from his malice and ignorance.

According to the perfect manner] That is, according to that strict interpretation of the law, and especially the traditions of the elders, for which the Pharisees were remarkable.

Verse 4. I persecuted this way] This doctrine, this way of worshipping God, and arriving at a state of blessedness.

Verse 5. The high-priest doth bear me witness, &c.] He probably referred to the letters of authority which he had received from the high-priest, and the whole estate of the elders, the whole of the presbytery, that is, the Sanhedrin ;

Damascus, to bring them which were there bound unto Jerusalem, for to be punished.

6 And ^a it came to pass, that, as I made my journey, and was come nigh unto Damascus about noon, suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me.

7 And I fell unto the ground, and heard a voice saying unto me, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

8 And I answered, Who art thou, Lord? And he said unto me, I am Jesus of Nazareth, whom thou persecutest.

9 And ^b they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid; but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me.

10 And I said, What shall I do, Lord? And the Lord said unto me, Arise, and go into Damascus; and there it shall be told thee of all things which are appointed for thee to do.

11 And when I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand of them that were with me, I came into Damascus.

12 And ^c one Ananias, a devout man according to the law, ^d having a good report of all the ^e Jews which dwell there, 13 Came unto me, and stood, and said unto me, Brother Saul, receive thy sight. And the same hour I looked up upon him.

14 And he said, 'The God of our fathers ^f hath chosen thee, that thou shouldest know his will, and ^g see ^h that Just One, and ⁱ shouldest hear the voice of his mouth.

15 ^k For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of ^l what thou hast seen and heard.

16 And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be

17 And ^o it came to pass, that, when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance;

18 And ^p saw him saying unto me, 'Make haste, and get thee quickly out of Jerusalem: for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me.

19 And I said, Lord, ^q they know that I imprisoned and ^r beat in every synagogue them that believed on thee:

20 ^s And when the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed, I also was standing by, and ^t consenting unto his death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him.

21 And he said unto me, Depart: ^u for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.

22 And they gave him audience unto this word, and ^v then lifted up their voices, and said, ^w Away with such a fellow from the earth: for it is not fit that ^x he should live.

23 And as they cried out, and cast off ^y their clothes, and threw dust into the air, 24 The chief captain commanded him to be brought into the castle, and bade that he should be examined by scourging; that he might know wherefore they cried so against him.

25 And as they bound him with thongs, Paul said unto the centurion that stood by, ^z Is it lawful for you to scourge a man that is a Roman, and uncondemned?

26 When the centurion heard ^{aa} that, he went and told the chief captain, saying, Take heed what thou doest: for this man is a Roman.

27 Then the chief captain came, and said unto and it is likely that he had those letters to produce. This seal of his against Christianity was an ample proof of his sincerity as a Pharisaical Jew.

Verse 6-18. As I made my journey, &c.] See the whole of this account, considered at large in the notes on chap. ix. 1, &c.

Verse 14. And see that Just One] The Lord Jesus, called the Just One, in opposition to the Jews, who crucified him as a malefactor, see the note on chap. vii. 52.

Verse 15. Thou shalt be his witness unto all] Thou shalt proclaim Christ crucified, both to Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 16. Arise, and be baptized] Take now the profession of Christ's faith most solemnly upon thee, by being baptized in the name of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Wash away thy sins, &c.] Let this washing of thy body represent to thee the washing away of thy sins, and know that this washing away of sin can be received only by invoking the name of the Lord.

Verse 17. When I was come again to Jerusalem] It is likely that he refers to the first journey to Jerusalem, about three years after his conversion, chap. ix. 25, 26, and Gal. i. 18.

I was in a trance] This circumstance is not mentioned anywhere else, unless it be that to which himself refers in 2 Cor. xii. 2-4.

Verse 19. I imprisoned and beat in every synagogue] This shows what an active instrument Saul of Tarsus was, in the hands of this persecuting priesthood, and how very generally the followers of Christ were persecuted, and how difficult it was at this time to profess Christianity.

Verse 20. When the blood of thy martyr Stephen was shed] See on chap. vii. 58, viii. 1. All these things Paul alleged as reasons why he could not expect to be received by the Christians; for how could they suppose that such a persecutor could be converted?

Verse 21. I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles.] This was the particular appointment of St. Paul: he was the Apostle of the Gentiles; for, though he preached frequently to the Jews, yet to preach the gospel to the Gentiles, and to write for the conversion and establishment of the Gentile world, were his peculiar destination.

Verse 22. They gave him audience unto this word] Namely that God had sent him to the Gentiles; they understood the apostle as stating that God had rejected them, and called the Gentiles to be his peculiar people in their place; and this they could not bear.

Away with such a fellow] One who attempted to seduce the people to any strange worship was to be stoned, Deut. xiii. 15.

Verse 23. Cast off their clothes] In order to prepare to stone Paul.

Threw dust into the air] In sign of contempt, and by way of execration. It was also expressive of extraordinary rage and vindictive malice. The apostle, being guarded by the Roman soldiers, was out of the power of the mob; and their throwing dust in the air not only showed their rage, but also their vexation, that they could not get the apostle into their power.

Verse 24. Examined by scourging] The chief captain supposed that Paul must have given them the highest provocation; and therefore he determined to put him to the torture, in order to find out the nature of his crime.

Verse 25. And as they bound him, &c.] They were going to tie him to a post, that they might scourge him.

Is it lawful, &c.] The Roman law absolutely forbade the binding of a Roman citizen.

Verse 26. With a great sum obtained I this freedom.] So it appears that the freedom, even of Rome, might be purchased, and that it was sold at a very high price.

But I was free born.] In chap. xxi. 39, Paul says he was him, Tell me, art thou a Roman? He said, Yea.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Paul defending himself before the high-priest, he commands him to be smitten on the mouth, 1, 2. Paul sharply reproves him, and, being reproached for this by one of the attendants, accounts for his conduct, 3-5. Seeing that the assembly was composed of Pharisees and Sadducees, and that he could expect no justice from his judges, he asserts that it was for his belief in the resurrection that he was called in question, on which the Pharisees declare in his favour, 6-9. A great dissension arises, and the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should be pulled to pieces, brings him into the castle, 10. He is comforted by a dream, 11. More than forty persons conspire his death, 12-15. Paul's sister's son, hearing of it, informs the captain of the guard, 16-22. He sends Paul by night, under a strong escort of horse and foot, to Cæsarea, to Felix, and with him a letter, stating the circumstances of the case, 23-33. They arrive at Cæsarea, and Felix promises him a hearing when his accusers shall come down, 34, 35.

AND Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day.

2 And the high priest, Ananias, commanded them that stood by him to smite him on the mouth.

3 Then said Paul unto him, God shall smite thee, thou whited wall: for sittest thou to judge me after the law, and commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law?

4 And they that stood by said, Revilest thou God's high priest?

Verse 1. I have lived in all good conscience] The apostle means that there was no part of his life in which he acted as a dishonest or hypocritical man; and that he was now as fully determined to maintain his profession of Christianity as he ever was to maintain that of Judaism, previously to his acquaintance with the Christian religion.

Verse 2. The high priest, Ananias] There was a high-priest of this name, who was sent a prisoner to Rome by Quadratus, governor of Syria, to give an account of the part he took in the quarrel between the Jews and the Samaritans: on being examined at Rome, he was found innocent, returned to Jerusalem, and was restored to the high-priesthood.

To smite him on the mouth.] Because he professed to have a good conscience, while believing on Jesus Christ, and propagating his doctrine.

5 Then said Paul, I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest: for it is written, Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.

6 But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question.

7 And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: and the multitude was divided.

hypocrite! who sittest on the seat of judgment, pretending to hear and seriously weigh the defence of an accused person, who must in justice and equity be presumed to be innocent till he is proved to be guilty; and, instead of acting according to the law, commandest me to be smitten contrary to the law, which always has the person of the prisoner under its protection; nor ever suffers any penalty to be inflicted but what is prescribed as the just punishment for the offence.

Verse 5. I wist not, brethren, that he was the high priest] St. Paul did not know that Ananias was high priest; he had been long absent from Jerusalem; political changes were frequent; the high-priesthood was no longer in succession, and was frequently bought and sold; the Romans put down one high priest, and raised up another, as political reasons dictated. It seems very probable that St. Paul, if he ever had known the person of Ananias, had forgotten rection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both.

9 And there arose a great cry: and the scribes that were of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, 'We find no evil in this man: but^b if a spirit or an angel hath spoken to him, 'let us not fight against God.

10 And when there arose a great dissension, the chief captain, fearing lest Paul should have been pulled in pieces of them, commanded the soldiers to go down, and to take him by force from among them, and to bring him into the castle.

11 And 'the night following the Lord stood by him, and said, Be of good cheer, Paul: for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome.

12 And when it was day, 'certain of the Jews banded together, and bound themselves 'under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul.

13 And they were more than forty which had made this conspiracy.

14 And they came to the chief priests and elders, and said, We have bound ourselves under a great curse that we will eat nothing until we have slain Paul.

15 Now therefore, ye, with the council, signify to the chief captain that he bring him down unto you to-morrow, as though ye would inquire something more perfectly concerning him: and we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.

16 And when Paul's sister's son heard of their lying in wait, he went and entered into the castle, and told Paul.

17 Then Paul called one of the centurions unto him, and said, Bring this young man unto the chief captain: for he hath a certain thing to tell him.

18 So he took him, and brought him to the chief captain, and said, Paul the prisoner called me unto him, and prayed me to bring this young man unto thee, who hath something to say unto thee.

19 Then the chief captain took him by the hand, and went with him aside privately, and asked him, What is that thou hast to tell me?

20 And he said, 'the Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldest bring down Paul to-morrow into the council, as though they would inquire somewhat of him more perfectly.

21 But do not thou yield unto them: for there lie in wait for him, of them, more than forty men, which have bound themselves with an oath, that they will neither eat nor drink till they have killed him: and now are they ready, looking for a promise from thee.

22 So the chief captain then let the young man depart, and charged him, See thou tell no man that thou hast shewed these things to me.

23 And he called unto him two centurions, saying, Make ready two hundred soldiers to go to Cæsarea, and horsemen threescore and ten, and spearmen two hundred, at the third hour of the night;

24 And provide them beasts that they may set Paul on, and bring him safe unto Felix the governor.

25 And he wrote a letter after this manner:

26 Claudius Lysias unto the most excellent governor Felix sendeth greeting.

27 ' This man was taken of the Jews, and should him; and as, in a council or meeting of this kind, the presence of the high priest was not indispensably necessary, he did not know that the person who presided was not the sagan, or high priest's deputy, or some other person put into the seat for the time being. [To the many proposed solutions of this difficult passage, Alfrod contributes the suggestion that Paul failed to recognise Ananias through his imperfect sight.]

Thou shalt not speak evil of the ruler of thy people.] If I had known he was the high-priest, I should not have publicly pronounced this execration; for respect is due to his person for the sake of his office.

Verse 6. Of the hope and resurrection] Concerning the hope of the resurrection, and being here redundant; indeed, it is omitted by the Syriac, all the Arabic, and Æthiopic.

Verse 7. And the multitude was divided.] St. Paul, perceiving the assembly to consist of Sadducees and Pharisees, and finding he was not to expect any justice, thought it best to divide the council, by introducing a question on which the Pharisees and Sadducees were at issue.

Verse 8. The Sadducees say that there is no resurrection] See the account of the Pharisees and Sadducees, Matt. iii. 7, and xvi. 1.

Verse 9. The scribes—arose, and strove] He had previously mentioned that Jesus Christ had appeared to him, when on his way to Damascus; and, though they might not be ready to admit the doctrine of Christ's resurrection, yet they could, consistently with their own principles, allow that the soul of Christ might appear to him; and they immediately caught at this, as furnishing a strong proof against the doctrine of the Sadducees, who neither believed in angel nor spirit, while the Pharisees confessed both.

Verse 10. The chief captain—commanded the soldiers to go down] He had a body of soldiers in readiness in the castle of Antonia; and it was from this that he commanded them to come down, for the rescue and preservation of Paul.

Verse 11. Be of good cheer, Paul] It is no wonder if with all these trials and difficulties, St. Paul was much dejected in mind; and especially as he had not any direct intimation from God what the end of the present trials would be: to comfort him and strengthen his faith, God gave him this vision.

So must thou bear witness also at Rome.] This was pleasing intelligence to Paul, who had long desired to see that city, and preach the gospel of Christ there.

Verse 12. That they would neither eat nor drink, &c.] These forty Jews were no doubt of the class of the sicarii mentioned before (similar to those afterwards called assassins, a class of fierce zealots, who took justice into their own hand; and who thought they had a right to dispatch all those who, according to their views, were not orthodox in their religious principles.

Verse 15. And we, or ever he come near, are ready to kill him.] We shall lie in wait, and dispatch him before he can reach the chief captain. The plan was well and deeply laid; and nothing but an especial providence could have saved Paul.

Verse 16. Paul's sister's son] This is all we know of Paul's family. And we know not how this young man got to Jerusalem: the family, no doubt, still resided at Tarsus.

Verse 17. Bring this young man unto the chief captain] Though St. Paul had the most positive assurance from divine authority that he should be preserved, yet he knew that the Divine Providence acts by reasonable and prudent means; and that, if he neglected to use the means in his power, he could not expect God's providence to work in his behalf.

Verse 31. Antipatris.] This place which was anciently called Capharsaba, was rebuilt by Herod the Great, and denominated Antipatris, in honour of his father Antipater. It was situated between Joppa and Cæsarea, on the road from Jerusalem to this latter city. The distance between Jerusalem and Cæsarea was about seventy miles.

Verse 32. On the morrow they left the horsemen] Being 31 Then the soldiers, as it was commanded them, took Paul, and brought him by night to Antipatris.

32 On the morrow they left the horsemen to go with him, and returned to the castle:

now so far from Jerusalem, they considered Paul in a state of safety from the Jews, and that the seventy horse would be a sufficient guard; the four hundred foot, therefore, returned to Jerusalem, and the horse went on to Cæsarea with Paul.

Verse 33. Who] That is, the seventy horsemen mentioned above.

Verse 35. I will hear thee] I will give thee a fair, full, and attentive hearing when thy accusers are come; in whose presence thou shalt be permitted to defend thyself.

In Herod's judgment-hall.] In Herod's Prætorium, so called because it was built by Herod the Great. The Prætorium was the place where the Roman Prætor had his residence: and it is probable that, in or near this place, there was a sort of guard-room, were state-prisoners were kept. Paul was lodged here till his accusers should arrive.

CHAPTER XXIV.

After five days, Ananias the high-priest, the elders, and one Tertullus an orator, come to Cæsarea to accuse Paul,

1. The oration of Tertullus, 2-9. Paul's defence, 10-21. Felix, having heard his defence, proposes to leave the final determination of it till Claudius Lysias should come down; and, in the meantime, orders Paul to be treated with humanity and respect, 22, 23. Felix, and Drusilla his wife, hear Paul concerning the faith of Christ; and Felix is greatly affected, 24-25. On the expectation of obtaining money for his liberation, Felix keeps Paul in prison, 26, and being superseded in the government of Judea by Porcius Festus, in order to please the Jews, he leaves Paul bound, 27.

AND after ^a five days, ^b Ananias the high priest descended with the elders, and with a certain orator named Tertullus, who informed the governor against Paul.

2 And when he was called forth, Tertullus began

* Ch. xxi. 27.

Verse 1. After five days] These days are to be reckoned from the time in which Paul was apprehended at Jerusalem, and twelve days after he had arrived in that city; see ver. 11.

A certain orator named Tertullus] This was probably a Roman proselyte to Judaism; yet he speaks every where as a Jew. Roman orators, advocates, &c., were found in different provinces of the Roman empire; and they, in general, spoke both the Greek and Latin languages; and being well acquainted with the Roman laws and customs, were no doubt very useful.

Verse 2. By thee we enjoy great quietness] As bad a governor as Felix most certainly was, he rendered some services to Judea. The country had long been infested with robbers; a very formidable banditti of this kind, under one to accuse him, saying, Seeing that by thee we enjoy great quietness, and that very worthy deeds are done unto this nation by thy providence,

3 We accept it always, and in all places, most noble Felix, with all thankfulness.

* Ch. xxiii. 2, 30, 35. xxv. 2.

Elisæus, he entirely suppressed. He also suppressed the sedition raised by an Egyptian impostor, who had seduced 80,000 men, see on chap. xxi. 38. He had also quelled a very afflictive disturbance which took place between the Syrians and the Jews of Cæsarea.

Verse 3. We accept it always, and in all places] We have at all times a grateful sense of thy beneficent administration, and we talk of it in all places, not only before thy face, but behind thy back.

Verse 4. Hear us of thy clemency] Give us this farther proof of thy kindness, by hearkening to our present complaint. The whole of this exordium was artful enough, though it was lame. The orator had certainly a very bad cause, of which he endeavoured to make the best.

4 Notwithstanding, that I be not further tedious unto thee, I pray thee that thou wouldest hear us of thy clemency a few words.

5 * For we have found this man a pestilent fellow, and a mover of sedition among all the Jews throughout the world, and a ring-leader of the sect of the Nazarenes:

6 ^b Who also hath gone about to profane the temple: whom we took and would ^c have judged according to our law:

7 ^d But the chief captain Lysias came upon us, and with great violence took him away out of our hands,

8 * Commanding his accusers to come unto thee: by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things, whereof we accuse him.

9 And the Jews also assented, saying that these things were so.

10 Then Paul, after that the governor had beckoned unto him to speak, answered, Forasmuch as I know that thou hast been of many years a judge unto this nation, I do the more cheerfully answer for myself:

11 Because that thou mayest understand, that there are yet but twelve days since I went up to Jerusalem ^e for to worship.

* Luke xxiii. 2. Ch. vi. 13. xvi. 20. xvii. 6. xxi. 28. 1 Pet. ii. 12, 15.—^b Ch. xxi. 28.—^c John xviii. 31.—^d Ch. xxi. 33.—^e Ch. xxiii. 30.—^f A.D. 53, Felix made procurator over Judea. Ver. 17. Ch. xxi. 26.—^g Ch. xxv. 8. xviii. 17.—^h See Amos viii. 14. Ch. ix. 2.

Verse 5. A pestilent fellow] Tertullus did not say that Paul was a pestilent fellow, but he said that he was the very pestilence itself.

A ring-leader] This is a military phrase, and signifies the officer who stands on the right of the first rank; the captain of the front rank of the sect of the Nazarenes.

Verse 6. Hath gone about to profane the temple] This was a heavy charge, if it could have been substantiated, because the Jews were permitted by the Romans to put any person to death who profaned their temple.

Would have judged according to our law] He pretended that they would have tried the case fairly, had not the chief captain taken him violently out of their hands; whereas, had not Lysias interfered, they would have murdered him on the spot.

Verse 7. With great violence] I rather think this means an armed force. Tertullus intimates that Lysias interfered contrary to the law, and brought soldiers to support him in his infringement on their constitution.

Verse 10. Thou hast been of many years a judge] Cumanus and Felix were, for a time, joint governors of Judea; but, after the condemnation of Cumanus, the government fell entirely into the hands of Felix; this was now the sixth or seventh year of his administration, which might be called many years, when the very frequent removals of the governors of the provinces are considered.

The more cheerfully] With a better heart, or courage, because, as thy long residence among us has brought thee to a thorough acquaintance with our customs, I may expect a proper decision in my favour, my cause being perfectly sound.

Verse 11. There are yet but twelve days] This is his reply to their charge of sedition; the improbability of which is shown from the short time he had spent in Jerusalem, nor could a single proof be furnished that he had attempted to seduce any man, or unbind any person from his allegiance by subtle disputations, either in the temple, the synagogues, or the city.

Verse 14. That after the way which they call heresy] The word heresy had no bad meaning among the Jews; it meant simply a religious sect. Why then did they use it by way of degradation to St. Paul? They had already two accredited sects in the land, the Pharisees and Sadducees: the interests of each of these were pretty well balanced, and each had a part in the government, for the council, or sanhedrin, was composed both of Sadducees and Pharisees, 12 * And they neither found me in the temple disputing with any man, neither raising up the people, neither in the synagogues nor in the city:

13 Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me.

14 But this I confess unto thee, that after ^b the way which they call heresy, so worship I the ^c God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in ^d the law and in the prophets:

15 And ^e have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, ^f that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust.

16 And ^g herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offence toward God, and toward men.

17 Now after many years ^h I came to bring alms to my nation, and offerings.

18 * Whereupon certain Jews from Asia found me purified in the temple, neither with multitude, nor with tumult.

19 ⁱ Who ought to have been here before thee, and object, if they had aught against me.

20 Or else let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council,

21 Except it be for this one voice, that I cried

—¹ 2 Tim. i. 3.—² Ch. xxvi. 22. xxviii. 23.—³ Ch. xxiii. 6. xxvi. 6, 7. xxviii. 20.—⁴ Dan. xii. 2. John v. 28, 29.—⁵ Ch. xxiii. 1.—⁶ Ch. xi. 29, 30. xx. 16. Rom. xv. 25. 2 Cor. viii. 4. Gal. ii. 10.—⁷ Ch. xxi. 26, 27. xxvi. 21.—⁸ Ch. xxiii. 30. xxv. 16.

see chap. xxiii. 6. They were afraid that the Christians, whom they called Nazarenes, should form a new sect, and divide the interests of both the preceding; and, on this account, the Christians had both the Pharisees and the Sadducees for their enemies.

Verse 15. And have hope toward God, &c.] I hold nothing different from their belief in reference to a future state; for, if I maintain the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, it is what themselves allow.

Verse 16. And herein do I exercise myself] And this very tenet is a pledge for my good behaviour.

Toward God] In entertaining no opinion contrary to his truth; and in offering no worship contrary to his dignity, purity, and excellence.

Verse 17. Now after many years, &c.] Far from coming to disturb the peace of society, or to injure any person, I have brought ALMS to my nation, the fruits of my own earning and influence among a foreign people, and OFFERINGS to my God and his temple, proving hereby my attachment to my country, and my reverence for the worship of my country's God.

Verse 18. Found me purified in the temple] Regularly performing the religious vow into which I had entered.

Verse 22. And when Felix heard these things] There is considerable difficulty in this verse. Calmet's translation is: Felix, having heard these things, put them off to another time, saying, When I shall have acquired a more accurate knowledge of this sect, and when the tribune Lysias shall have come from Jerusalem, I will judge of your business.

This mode of interpretation is rendered the more likely from the circumstance, that, previously to the coming down of Lysias, Felix had sent for Paul, concerning the faith of Christ; and this he appears to have done, that he might be the better qualified to judge of the business, when it should come again before him. [The real reason of delay is given in verse 26.]

Verse 23. He commanded a centurion to keep Paul] He gave him into the custody of a captain, by whom he was most likely to be well used: and to let him have liberty, he freed him from the chains with which he was bound to the soldiers, his keepers, see on chap. xxi. 33. And that he should forbid none of his acquaintance, of his own people, to furnish him with any of the conveniences and comforts of life, and visit him as often as they pleased. This was an ample proof that Felix found no evil in him; and he would certainly have dismissed him but for selfish reasons.

standing among them, *Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.

22 And when Felix heard these things, having more perfect knowledge of that way, he deferred them, and said, When ^bLysias the chief captain shall come down, I will know the uttermost of your matter.

23 And he commanded a centurion to keep Paul, and to let him have liberty, and ^cthat he should forbid none of his acquaintance to minister or come unto him.

24 And after certain days, when Felix came with his wife Drusilla, which was a Jewess, he sent for

* Ch. xxiii. 6. xxviii. 20. — ^b Ver. 7. — ^c Ch. xxvii. 3. xxviii. 16.

Verse 24. His wife Drusilla] The daughter of Herod Agrippa the Great. She appears, on the whole, to have been a person of indifferent character; though one of the finest women of that age. It is said that she, and a son she had by Felix, were consumed in an eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

Heard him concerning the faith in Christ.] That he might be the more accurately instructed in the doctrines, views, &c., of the Christians.

Verse 25. As he reasoned of righteousness] The principles and requisitions of justice and right, between God and man; and between man and his fellows, in all relations and connexions of life

Temperance] Chastity; self-government or moderation with regard to man's appetites, passions, and propensities of all kinds.

And judgment to come] The day of retribution, in which the unjust, intemperate, and incontinent, must give account of all the deeds done in the body. The discourse of St. Paul was most solemnly and pointedly adapted to the state of the person to whom it was addressed.

Felix trembled] We may hope that Felix felt regret for the iniquities of his life; and that his conscience was neither so seared, nor so hardened, as not to receive and retain some gracious impressions from such a discourse, delivered

Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ.

25 And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season, I will call for thee.

26 He hoped also that ^dmoney should have been given him of Paul, that he might loose him: wherefore he sent for him the oftener, and communed with him.

27 But after two years, Porcius Festus came into Felix' room: and Felix, ^ewilling to shew the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.

^d Exod. xxiii. 8. — ^e Exod. xxiii. 2. Ch. xii. 3. xxv. 9, 14.

by the authority, and accompanied with the influence of, the Spirit of God.

Verse 26. He hoped also that money should have been given him] We may see here the most unprincipled avarice in Felix, united to injustice. Paul had proved before him his innocence of the charges brought against him by the Jews. They had retired in confusion when he had finished his defence. Had Felix been influenced by the common principles of justice, Paul had been immediately discharged; but he detained him in the hope of a ransom. He saw that Paul was a respectable character; that he had opulent friends; that he was at the head of very numerous sect, to whom he was deservedly dear; and he took it, therefore, for granted that a considerable sum of money would be given for his enlargement.

Verse 27. After two years] That is, from the time that Paul came prisoner to Cæsarea.

Porcius Festus] This man was put into the government of Judea about A.D. 60, the sixth or seventh year of Nero.

Willing to shew the Jews a pleasure] As he had not got the money which he expected, he hoped to be able to prevent the complaints of the Jews against his government, by leaving Paul, in some measure, in their hands. But Felix gained nothing by this: the Jews pursued him with their complaints against his administration, even to the throne of the emperor.

CHAPTER XXV.

Porcius Festus being appointed governor of Judea, instead of Felix, the Jews beseech him to have Paul brought up to Jerusalem, that he might be tried there; they lying in wait to kill him on the way, 1-3. Festus refuses, and desires those who could prove any thing against him, to go with him to Cæsarea, 4, 5. Festus, having tarried at Jerusalem about ten days, returns to Cæsarea, and the next day Paul is brought to his trial, and the Jews of Jerusalem bring many groundless charges against him, against which he defends himself, 6-8. In order to please the Jews, Festus asks Paul if he be willing to go up to Jerusalem, and be tried there, 9. Paul refuses, and appeals to Cæsar, and Festus admits the appeal, 10-13. King Agrippa, and Bernice his wife, come to Cæsarea to visit Festus, and are informed by him of the accusations against Paul, his late trial, and his appeal from them to Cæsar, 14-21. Agrippa desires to hear Paul, and a hearing is appointed for the following day, 22. Agrippa, Bernice, the principal officers, and chief men of the city being assembled, Paul is brought forth, 23. Festus opens the business with generally stating the accusations against Paul, his trial on these accusations, the groundless and frivolous nature of the charges, his own conviction of his innocence, and his desire that the matter might be heard by the king himself, that he might have something specifically to write to the emperor, to whom he was about to send Paul, agreeably to his appeal, 24-27.

NOW when Festus was come into the province, after three days he ascended from Cæsarea to Jerusalem.

2 *Then the high-priest and the chief of the Jews informed him against Paul, and besought him,

3 And desired favour against him, that he would send for him to Jerusalem, ^b laying wait in the way to kill him.

4 But Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Cæsarea, and that he himself would depart shortly thither.

5 Let them therefore, said he, which among you are able, go down with me, and accuse this man, * if there be any wickedness in him.

6 And when he had tarried among them ^d more than ten days, he went down unto Cæsarea; and the next day, sitting on the judgment-seat, commanded Paul to be brought.

7 And when he was come, the Jews which came down from Jerusalem stood round about, * and laid many and grievous complaints against Paul, which they could not prove.

8 While he answered for himself, 'Neither against the law of the Jews, neither against the temple, nor yet against Cæsar, have I offended any thing at all.

9 But Festus, * willing to do the Jews a pleasure,

* Ch. xxiv. 1. Ver. 15.—^b Ch. xxiii. 12, 15.—^c Ch. xviii. 14. Ver. 18.—^d Or, as some copies read, no more than eight or ten days.—^e Mark xv. 8. Luke xxiii. 2, 10. Ch. xxiv. 5, 13.—^f Ch. vi. 13.

Verse 1. Now when Festus was come into the province] Felix being removed, Porcius Festus is sent in his place; and having come to Cæsarea, where the Roman governor generally had his residence, after he had tarried three days, he went up to Jerusalem, to acquaint himself with the nature and complexion of the ecclesiastical government of the Jews; no doubt, for the purpose of the better administration of justice among them.

Verse 2. The high-priest informed him against Paul] Their motive is mentioned in the succeeding verse.

Verse 4. Festus answered, that Paul should be kept at Cæsarea] He could have no interest in denying their request. But God had told Paul that he should testify of him at Rome; and he disposed the heart of Festus to act as he did; and thus disappointed the malice of the Jews, and fulfilled his own gracious design.

Verse 5. Let them—which among you are able] Those who have authority; for so is this word often used by good Greek authors, and by Josephus.

Verse 6. When he had tarried—more than ten days] Not more than EIGHT OR ten days, is the reading of several MSS. of great respectability with the Coptic, Armenian, and Vulgate. This is doubtless the genuine reading.

Verse 7. The Jews—laid many and grievous complaints against Paul] They no doubt invented some new charges, such as sedition, treason, &c., in order to render the mind of the governor evil affected towards Paul.

Verse 9. Willing to do the Jews a pleasure] This was merely to please them, and conciliate their esteem; for he knew that, as Paul was a Roman citizen, he could not oblige him to take a new trial at Jerusalem.

Verse 10. I stand at Cæsar's judgment seat] Every procurator represented the person of the emperor in the province over which he presided.

As thou very well knowest.] The record of this trial before Felix was undoubtedly left for the inspection of Festus; for, as he left the prisoner to his successor, he must also leave the charges against him, and the trial which he had undergone.

Verse 11. For if I be an offender] I do not wish to save my life by subtleties; I am before the only competent tribunal; here my business should be ultimately decided.

No man may deliver me unto them.] The words of the apostle are very strong and appropriate. Much of the beauty, however, is lost by not attending to the original words.

answered Paul, and said, 'Wilt thou go up to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these things before me?

10 Then said Paul, I stand at Cæsar's judgment-seat, where I ought to be judged: to the Jews have I done no wrong, as thou very well knowest.

11 'For if I be an offender, or have committed any thing worthy of death, I refuse not to die: but if there be none of those things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. 'I appeal unto Cæsar.

12 Then Festus, when he had conferred with the council, answered, Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar thou shalt go.

13 And after certain days king Agrippa and Bernice came unto Cæsarea to salute Festus.

14 And when they had been there many days, Festus declared Paul's cause unto the king, saying, 'There is a certain man left in bonds by Felix:

15 * About whom, when I was at Jerusalem, the chief priests and the elders of the Jews informed me, desiring to have judgment against him.

16 'To whom I answered, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself, concerning the crime laid against him.

17 Therefore, when they were come hither, ^m with-xxiv. 12. xxviii. 17.—ⁿ Ch. xxiv. 27.—^o Ver. 20.—^p Ver. 25. Ch. xviii. 14. xxiii. 29. xxvi. 31.—^q Ch. xxvi. 32. xviii. 19.—^r Ch. xxiv. 27.—^s Ver. 2, 3.—^t Ver. 4, 5.—^u Ver. 6.

I appeal unto Cæsar.] A freeman of Rome, who had been tried for a crime, and sentence passed on him, had a right to appeal to the emperor, if he conceived the sentence to be unjust; but, even before the sentence was pronounced, he had the privilege of an appeal, in criminal cases, if he conceived that the judge was doing anything contrary to the laws. An appeal to the emperor was highly respected.

Verse 12. Conferred with the council] From this circumstance, we may learn that the appeal of Paul to Cæsar was conditional; else Festus could not have deliberated with his council whether it should be granted; for he had no power to refuse to admit such an appeal.

Hast thou appealed unto Cæsar, &c.] Rather, Thou hast appealed unto Cæsar, and to Cæsar thou shalt go.

Verse 13. King Agrippa] This was the son of Herod Agrippa, who is mentioned, chap. xii. 1. Upon the death of his father's youngest brother, Herod, he succeeded him in the kingdom of Chalcis, by the favour of the emperor Claudius. Afterwards, Claudius removed him from that kingdom to a larger one, giving him the tetrarchy of Philip, which contained Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis. He gave him, likewise, the tetrarchy of Lysanias, and the province which Varus had governed. Nero made a further addition, and gave him four cities, Abila, Julias in Peræa, Taricheæ, and Tiberias in Galilee. This king was strongly attached to the Romans, and did everything in his power to prevent the Jews from rebelling against them; and, when he could not prevail, he united his troops to those of Titus, and assisted in the siege of Jerusalem: he survived the ruin of his country several years.

Bernice, or, as she is sometimes called, Berenice, was sister of this Agrippa, and of the Drusilla mentioned, chap. xxiv. She went to Chalcis, and, on his death, went to live with her brother Agrippa, with whom she was strongly suspected to lead an incestuous life.

Verse 14. Declared Paul's cause unto the king] Festus knew that Agrippa was better acquainted with such matters than he was; and he wished, in some sort, to make him a party in this business.

Verse 15. Desiring to have judgment against him.] Instead of judgment, a word signifying sentence of death is the reading of several MSS. This is evidently the meaning of the place, whichever reading we may prefer.

Verse 16. It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die] TO MAKE A PRESENT OF any man; gratui-out any delay, on the morrow I sat on the judgment-seat, and commanded the man to be brought forth.

18 Against whom, when the accusers stood up, they brought none accusation of such things as I supposed:

• 19 • But had certain questions against him of their own superstition, and of one Jesus, which was dead, whom Paul affirmed to be alive.

20 And because ^b I doubted of such manner of questions, I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged of these matters.

21 But when Paul had appealed to be reserved unto the ^c hearing of Augustus, I commanded him to be kept till I might send him to Cæsar.

22 Then ^d Agrippa said unto Festus, I would also hear the man myself. To-morrow, said he, thou shalt hear him.

23 And on the morrow, when Agrippa was come, and Bernice, with great pomp, and was entered into the place of hearing, with the chief captains, and principal men of the city, at Festus' commandment, Paul was brought forth.

* Ch. xviii. 15. xxiii. 29.—^b Or, I was doubtful how to inquire hereof.—^c Or, judgment.—^d See ch. ix. 15.

24 And Festus said, King Agrippa, and all men which are here present with us, ye see this man, about whom ^a all the multitude of the Jews have dealt with me, both at Jerusalem, and also here, crying, that he ought ^a not to live any longer.

25 But when I found that ^a he had committed nothing worthy of death, ^a and that he himself hath appealed to Augustus, I have determined to send him.

26 Of whom I have no certain thing to write unto my lord. Wherefore, I have brought him forth before you, and specially before thee, O king Agrippa, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write.

27 For it seemeth to me unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not withal to signify the crimes laid against him.

* Ver. 2, 3, 7.—^a Ch. xxi. 22.—^a Ch. xxiii. 9, 29. xxvi. 31.—^b Ver. 11, 12.

tously to give up the life of any man, through favour or caprice.

Before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, &c.] For this righteous procedure the Roman laws were celebrated over the civilised world.

Verse 18. They brought none accusation of such things as I supposed.] It was natural for Festus, at the first view of things, to suppose that Paul must be guilty of some very atrocious crime.

Verse 19. Questions—of their own superstition.] Questions concerning their own religion. Superstition meant something as bad among the Romans as it does among us; and is it likely that Festus, only a procurator, should thus speak to Agrippa, A KING, concerning his own religion? He could not have done so without offering the highest insult.

And of one Jesus, which was dead, &c.] In this way does this poor heathen speak of the death and resurrection of Christ!

Verse 20. I doubted of such manner of questions.] Such as, whether he had broken their law, defiled their temple; or whether this Jesus, who was dead, was again raised to life.

Verse 21. Unto the hearing of Augustus.] To the discrimination of the emperor. For, although the original is usually translated Augustus, and the Roman emperors generally assumed this epithet, which signifies no more than the venerable, the august, yet here it seems to be used merely to express the emperor, without any reference to any of his attributes or titles.

Verse 22. I would also hear the man myself.] A spirit of curiosity, similar to that of Herod, Luke xxiii. 8.

Verse 23. With great pomp.] With much phantasy, great splendour, great parade, superb attendance, or splendid retinue: in this sense the Greek word is used by the best writers.

The place of hearing.] A sort of audience-chamber, in the palace of Festus.

Verse 26. I have no certain thing to write.] Nothing alleged against him has been substantiated.

Unto my lord.] The title Dominus, Lord, both Augustus and Tiberius had absolutely refused; and forbade, even by public edicts, the application of it to themselves. The succeeding emperors were not so modest; they affected the title. Nero, the then emperor, would have it; and Pliny the younger is continually giving it to Trajan in his letters.

Verse 27. For it seemeth to me unreasonable, &c.] He hoped therefore that Agrippa, who was of the Jewish religion, would be able to discern more particularly the merits of this case; and might, after hearing Paul, direct him how to draw up those letters, which, on sending the prisoner, must be transmitted to the emperor.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Paul answers for himself before Agrippa, to whom he pays a true compliment, in order to secure a favourable hearing, 1-3; gives an account of his education from his youth up, 4, 5; shows that the Jews persecuted him for his maintaining the hope of the resurrection, 6-8; states his persecution of the Christians, 9-11; gives an account of his miraculous conversion, 12-15; and of his call to the ministry, 16-18. His obedience to that call, and his success in preaching the doctrine of Christ crucified, 19-23. While he is thus speaking, Festus interrupts him, and declares him to be mad through his abundant learning, 24; which charge he modestly refutes with inimitable address, and appeals to king Agrippa for the truth and correctness of his speech, 25-27. On which, Agrippa confesses himself almost converted to Christianity, 28. Paul's affectionate and elegant address to him on this declaration, 29. The council breaks up, and they all pronounce him innocent, 30-32.

THEN Agrippa said unto Paul, Thou art permitted to speak for thyself. * Then Paul stretched forth the hand, and answered for himself:

2 I think myself happy, king Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day before thee * touching all the things whereof I am accused of the Jews:

3 Especially because I know thee to be expert in all customs and questions which are among the Jews: wherefore I beseech thee to hear me patiently.

5 Which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after * the most straitest sect of our religion I lived a Pharisee.

6 * And now I stand and am judged for the hope of * the promise made of God unto our fathers:

7 Unto which promise * our twelve tribes, instantly serving God * day * and night, * hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews.

8 Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?

9 * I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth.

10 * Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and Verse 1. Then Paul stretched forth the hand] This act, as we have already seen on chap. xxi. 40, was merely to gain attention; it was no rhetorical flourish, nor designed for one.

Verse 2. I think myself happy] As if he had said, This is a peculiarly fortunate circumstance in my favour, that I am called to make my defence before a judge so intelligent, and so well acquainted with the law and customs of our country.

Verse 4. My manner of life, &c.] The apostle means to state that, though born in Tarsus, he had a regular Jewish education, having been sent up to Jerusalem for that purpose.

Verse 5. After the most straitest sect] That is, the Pharisees; who were reputed the strictest in their doctrines, and in their moral practices, of all the sects then among the Jews.

Verse 6. For the hope of the promise] It was the resurrection of all men from the dead which Paul's words signified; and this the Jews had been taught to hope for, by many passages in the Old Testament.

Verse 8. That God should raise the dead?] As Agrippa believed in the true God, and knew that one of his attributes was Omnipotence, he could not believe that the resurrection of the dead was an impossible thing; and to this belief of his the apostle appeals; and the more especially, because the Sadducees denied the doctrine of the resurrection, though they professed to believe in the same God.

Some of the best critics think this verse should be read thus: What! should it be thought a thing incredible with you, if God should raise the dead?

Verse 10. Many of the saints] Paul, before his conversion, was invested with much power: he imprisoned the Christians; punished many in various synagogues; compelled them to blaspheme—to renounce, and, perhaps, to execrate Christ, in order to save their lives; and gave his voice, and exerted all his influence and authority, against them, in order that they might be put to death. [The giving of his voice is regarded by many as the giving of his vote, as a member of the Sanhedrin; it being assumed that Paul belonged to that body.]

Verse 11. Being exceedingly mad against them] Only a madman will persecute another because of his differing from him in religious opinion; and the fiercest persecutor is he who should be deemed the most furious madman.

Unto strange cities.] Places out of the jurisdiction of the many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority * from the chief priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them.

11 * And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities.

12 * Whereupon as I went to Damascus with authority and commission from the chief priests, 13 At mid day, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me.

14 And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking unto me, and saying, in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

15 And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest.

16 But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, * to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee;

17 Delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, * unto whom now I send thee,

18 * To open their eyes, and * to turn them from Jews, such as Damascus, which he immediately mentions.

Verse 12. Whereupon as I went to Damascus] See the whole account of the conversion of Saul of Tarsus explained at large, in the notes on chap. ix. 2, &c.

Verse 16. But rise, &c.] The particulars mentioned here, and in the two following verses, are not given in chap. ix., nor in chap. xxii., where he gives an account of his conversion.

To make thee a minister] An under-rower; that is, one who is under the guidance and authority of another; an assistant or servant. So Paul was to act solely under the authority of Jesus Christ; and tug hard at the oar, in order to bring the vessel, through the tempestuous ocean, to the safe harbour.

And a witness] A martyr. Though this word literally means a witness, yet we apply it only to such persons as have borne testimony to the truth of God at the hazard and expense of their lives.

In the which I will appear] Here Christ gives him to understand that he should have farther communications from himself; and this may refer either to those interpositions of Divine Providence by which he was so often rescued from destruction, or to those encouragements which he received in dreams, visions, trances, &c., or to that general inspiration under which he was enabled to apprehend and reveal the secret things of God for the edification of the church.

Verse 18. To open their eyes] To be the instrument of informing their understanding in the things of God.

To turn them from darkness to light] From heathenism and superstition to the knowledge and worship of the true God.

From the power of Satan unto God] From the authority and domination of Satan; for, as the kingdom of darkness is his kingdom, so those who live in this darkness are under his dominion; and he has authority and right over them.

And inheritance] By remission of sins, i. e., the removal of the guilt and pollution of sin, they become children of God; and, if children, then heirs; for the children of the heavenly family shall alone possess the heavenly estate.

By faith that is in me.] Thus we see that not only this salvation comes through Christ, but that it is to be received by faith; and, consequently, neither by the merit of works, nor by that of suffering.

darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, * that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and ^b inheritance among them which are ^c sanctified by faith that is in me.

19 Whereupon, O king Agrippa, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision :

20 But ^d shewed first unto them of Damascus, and at Jerusalem, and throughout all the coasts of Judea, and then to the Gentiles, that they should repent and turn to God, and do ^e works meet for repentance.

21 For these causes ^f the Jews caught me in the temple, and went about to kill me.

22 Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing both to small and great ; saying none other things than those ^g which the prophets and ^h Moses did say should come :

23 ⁱ That Christ should suffer, and ^j that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and ^k should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles.

24 And as he thus spake for himself, Festus said with a loud voice, Paul, ^l thou art beside thyself ; much learning doth make thee mad.

25 But he said, I am not mad, most noble Festus ; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness.

26 For the king knoweth of these things, before whom also I speak freely : for I am persuaded that ^m none of these things are hidden from him ; for this thing was not done in a corner.

27 King Agrippa, believest thou the prophets ? I know that thou believest.

28 Then Agrippa said unto Paul, Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.

29 And Paul said, ⁿ I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds.

30 And when he had thus spoken, the king rose up, and the governor, and Bernice, and they that sat with them :

31 And when they were gone aside, they talked between themselves, saying, ^o This man doeth nothing worthy of death, or of bonds.

32 Then said Agrippa unto Festus, This man might have been set at liberty, ^p if he had not appealed unto Cæsar.

Verse 19. I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision] The vision was from heaven ; I received it as such, and began to preach the faith which I had before persecuted.

Verse 20. But shewed first unto them of Damascus] He appears to have preached at Damascus, and in the neighbouring parts of Arabia Deserta, for about three years ; and afterwards he went up to Jerusalem. See Gal. i. 17, 18 ; and see the note on chap. ix. 23.

That they should repent] For the meaning of the word repentance, see the note on Matt. iii. 2.

Verse 21. For these causes the Jews went about to kill me] He does not mention the accusation of having defiled the temple, nor of disloyalty to the Roman government ; probably, because his adversaries had abandoned these charges at his preceding trial before Festus.

Verse 22. Having—obtained help of God] According to the gracious promise made to him, see ver. 17.

Verse 23. That Christ should suffer] That the Christ, or Messiah, should suffer. This, though fully revealed in the prophets, the prejudices of the Jews would not permit them to receive : they expected their Messiah to be a glorious secular prince.

That he should be the first that should rise from the dead] That is, that he should be the first who should rise from the dead so as to die no more ; and to give, in his own person, the proof of the resurrection of the human body, no more to return under the empire of death.

And should shew light unto the people] That the Messiah should be the light both of the Jews and Gentiles, the prophets had clearly foretold, see Isa. ix. 1 ; Isa. xlix. 6. With such sayings as these Agrippa was well acquainted, from his education as a Jew.

Verse 24. Paul, thou art beside thyself] “Thou art mad, Paul !” “Thy great learning hath turned thee into a madman.” By the much learning it is likely that Festus meant no more than this, that Paul had got such a vast variety of knowledge, that his brain was overcharged with it : for in this speech, Paul makes no particular show of what we call learning ; for he quotes none of their celebrated authors, as he did on other occasions, see chap. xvii. 28.

Verse 25. I am not mad, most noble Festus] This most sensible, appropriate, and modest answer, was the fullest proof he could give of his sound sense and discretion. ‘The title, most noble, or most excellent, which he gives to Festus, and which belonged simply to his office, shows at once that he was far above indulging any sentiment of anger or displeasure, at Festus, though he had called him a madman ; and it shows farther that, with the strictest conscientiousness, even an apostle may give titles of respect to men in power, which, taken literally, imply much more than the persons deserve to whom they are applied.

Speak forth the words of truth and soberness.] Words of truth and of mental soundness. The very terms used by the apostle would at once convince Festus that he was mistaken.

Verse 26. Before whom also I speak freely] This is a farther judicious apology for himself and his discourse.

This thing was not done in a corner.] The preaching, miracles, passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, were most public and notorious.

Verse 27. Believest thou the prophets ?] The inference from this belief necessarily was : “As thou believest the prophets, and I have proved that the prophets have spoken about Christ, as suffering and triumphing over death, and that all they say of the Messiah has been fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, then thou must acknowledge that my doctrine is true.”

Verse 28. Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.] This declaration was almost the necessary consequence of the apostle’s and Agrippa’s faith. How it could have entered into the mind of any man, who carefully considered the circumstances of the case, to suppose that these words of Agrippa are spoken ironically, is to me unaccountable. Every circumstance in the case proves them to have been the genuine effusion of a heart persuaded of the truth ; and only prevented from fully acknowledging it by secular considerations.

Verse 29. I would to God, &c.] So fully am I persuaded of the infinite excellence of Christianity, and so truly happy am I in possession of it, that I most ardently wish that not only thou, but this whole council, were not only almost, but altogether, such as I am, these CHAINS excepted. His holding up his chain, which was probably now detached from the soldier’s arm, and wrapped about his own, must have made a powerful impression on the minds of his audience.

Indeed, it appears they could bear the scene no longer ; the king was overwhelmed, and rose up instantly, and so did the rest of the council, and went immediately aside : and, after a very short conference among themselves, they unanimously pronounced him innocent ; and his last word, BONDS ! and the action with which it is accompanied, had made such a deep impression upon their hearts that they conclude their judgment, with that very identical word.

Verse 32. Then said Agrippa, &c.] The king himself, who had participated in the strongest emotions on the occasion, feels himself prompted to wish the apostle’s immediate liberation ; but this was now rendered impracticable, because he had appealed to Cæsar ; the appeal was no doubt registered, and the business must now proceed to a full hearing.

CHAPTER XXVII.

It being determined that Paul should be sent to Rome, he is delivered to Julius, a centurion, 1. They embark in a ship of Adramyttium, and come the next day to Sidon, 2, 3. They sail thence, and pass Cyprus, Cilicia, and Pamphylia, and come to Myra, 4, 5. They are transferred there to a ship of Alexandria going to Italy; sail past Onidus, Crete, Salmone, and come to the Fair Havens, 6-8. Paul predicts a disastrous voyage, 9-11. They sail from the Fair Havens, in order to reach Crete, and winter there; but, having a comparatively favourable wind, they sail past Crete, meet with a tempest, and are brought into extreme peril and distress, 12-20. Paul's exhortation and prediction of the loss of the ships, 21-26. After having been tossed about in the Adriatic Sea, for many days, they are at last shipwrecked on the island of Melita; and the whole crew, consisting of two hundred and seventy-six persons, escape safe to land, on broken fragments of the ship, 27-44.

AND when 'it was determined that we should sail into Italy, they delivered Paul, and certain other prisoners unto one named Julius, a centurion of Augustus' band.

2 And entering into a ship of Adramyttium, we launched, meaning to sail by the coasts of Asia; one Aristarchus, a Macedonian of Thessalonica, being with us.

3 And the next day we touched at Sidon. And Julius 'courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself.

4 And when we had launched from thence, we sailed under Cyprus, because the winds were contrary.

5 And when we had sailed over the sea of Cilicia and Pamphylia, we came to Myra, a city of Lycia.

6 And there the centurion found a ship of Alexandria sailing into Italy; and he put us therein.

7 And when we had sailed slowly many days, and scarce were come over against Onidus, the wind not suffering us, we sailed under 'Crete, over against Salmone;

8 And, hardly passing it, came unto a place which is called The Fair Havens; nigh whereunto was the city of Lasea.

* Ch. xxv. 12, 25.—† Ch. xix. 29.—‡ Ch. xiv. 23. xxviii. 16.—§ Or, Candy.—¶ The fast was on the tenth day of the seventh month, Verse 1. We should sail] By this it is evident that St. Luke was with Paul; and it is on this account that he was enabled to give such a circumstantial account of the voyage.

Verse 2. A ship of Adramyttium] There were several places of this name; and in different MSS. the name is variously written. The port in question appears to have been a place in Mysia, in Asia Minor.

Aristarchus, a Macedonian] Luke and Aristarchus were certainly not prisoners at this time, and seem to have gone with St. Paul merely as his companions, through affection to him, and love for the cause of Christianity. How Aristarchus became his fellow-prisoner, as is stated Col. iv. 10, we cannot tell. [Probably the expression in Colossians is only figurative.]

Verse 3. Touched at Sidon.] For some account of this place, see the notes on Matt. xi. 21; and Acts xii. 20.

Julius courteously entreated Paul] It appears that Julius permitted him to go ashore, and visit the Christians which were then at Sidon, without using any extraordinary precautions to prevent his escape. He was probably accompanied with the soldier to whose arm he was chained.

Verse 5. Myra, a city of Lycia.] The name of this city is written variously in the MSS., Myra, Murrha, Smyra, and Smyrna.

Verse 6. A ship of Alexandria] This ship was laden with wheat, which she was carrying from Alexandria to Rome. The Romans imported much corn from Egypt.

Verse 7. Sailed slowly many days] Partly because the wind was contrary, and partly because the vessel was heavy-laden.

Over against Onidus] This was a city or promontory of Asia, opposite to Crete, at one corner of the peninsula of 9 Now when much time was spent, and when sailing was now dangerous, 'because the fast was now already past, Paul admonished them,

10 And said unto them, Sirs, I perceive that this voyage will be with 'hurt and much damage, not only of the lading and ship, but also of our lives.

11 Nevertheless the centurion believed the master and the owner of the ship, more than those things which were spoken by Paul.

12 And because the haven was not commodious to winter in, the more part advised to depart thence also, if by any means they might attain to Phoenice, and there to winter; which is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the south-west and north-west.

13 And when the south wind blew softly, supposing that they had obtained their purpose, loosing thence, they sailed close by Crete.

14 But not long after there 'arose against it a tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.

15 And 'when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, 'we let her drive.

16 And running under a certain island which is called Clauda, we had much work to come by the boat:

17 Which 'when they had taken up, they used

Caria. Some think that this was an island between Crete and a promontory of the same name. [coast of Crete.

Over against Salmone] A promontory on the eastern Verse 8. The Fair Havens] This port still remains, and is known by the same name; it was situated towards the northern extremity of the island.

Was the city of Lasea.] Probably Lysia, near the port of Gortyna, to the eastward.

Verse 9. Sailing was now dangerous, because the fast was now already past] It is generally allowed that the fast mentioned here was that of the great day of atonement which was always celebrated on the tenth day of the seventh month, which would answer to the latter end of our September. As this was about the time of the autumnal equinox, when the Mediterranean Sea was sufficiently tempestuous, we may suppose this feast alone to be intended. To sail after this feast was proverbially dangerous among the ancient Jews.

Verse 10. I perceive that this voyage will be with hurt, &c.] Paul might either have had this intimation from the Spirit of God, or from his own knowledge of the state of this sea after the autumnal equinox, and therefore gave them this prudent warning.

Verse 11. The centurion believed the master] The pilot and owner of the ship, the captain and proprietor. This latter had the command of the ship and the crew; the pilot had the guidance of the vessel along those dangerous coasts, under the direction of the captain; and the centurion had the power to cause them to proceed on their voyage, or to go into port, as he pleased; as he had other state-prisoners on board; and probably the ship itself was freighted for government.

helps, undergirding the ship; and, fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, strake sail, and so were driven.

18 And we being exceedingly tossed with a tempest, the next day they lightened the ship;

19 And the third day we cast out with our own hands the tackling of the ship.

20 And when neither sun nor stars in many days appeared, and no small tempest lay on us, all hope that we should be saved was then taken away.

21 But after long abstinence, Paul stood forth in the midst of them, and said, Sirs, ye should have hearkened unto me, and not have loosed from Crete, and to have gained this harm and loss.

22 And now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship.

23 For there stood by me this night, the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, 24 Saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee.

25 Wherefore, sirs, be of good cheer: for I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me.

26 Howbeit we must be cast upon a certain island.

2 Tim. i. 3.

Verse 12. Might attain to Phœnix] It appears that the Fair Havens were at the eastern end of the island, and they wished to reach Phœnix, which lay further towards the west.

Verse 13. When the south wind blew softly] Though this wind was not very favourable, yet, because it blew softly, they supposed they that might be able to make their passage.

Verse 14. A tempestuous wind, called Euroclydon.] These winds, called now Levanders, and formerly it appears euroclydon, were no determinate winds, blowing always from one point of the compass: euroclydon was probably then, what Levander is now, the name of any tempestuous winds in that sea, blowing from the north-east round by east to the south-east; and therefore St. Luke says, there arose against it (i. e., the vessel) a tempestuous wind called euroclydon; which manner of speaking shows that he no more considered it to be confined to any one particular point of the compass, than our sailors do their Levander.

Verse 15. And when the ship was caught] The ship was violently hurried away from this strong Levander; so that it was impossible for her to face the wind, to turn her prow to it, so as to shake it out, as sailors say.

Verse 16. A certain island—called Clanda] Called also Gaudos; situated at the south-western extremity of the island of Crete.

Verse 17. Undergirding the ship] This method has been used even in modern times. A stout cable is slipped under the vessel at the prow, which they can conduct to any part of the ship's keel; and then fasten the two ends on the deck, to keep the planks from starting: as many rounds as they please may be thus taken about the vessel.

The quicksands] Into the syrtis. There are two famous syrtis, or quicksands, on the African coast; one called the syrtis major, lying near the coast of Cyrene; and the other, the syrtis minor, not far from Tripoli. From the direction in which this vessel was driven, it is not at all likely that they were in danger of drifting on any of these syrtis, as the vessel does not appear to have been driven near the African coast through the whole of her voyage. The apprehension, expressed in ver. 17, is to be taken generally: they were afraid of falling into some shoals, not knowing in what part of the sea they were; for they had seen neither sun nor stars for many days; and they had no compass, and consequently could not tell in what direction they were now driving.

Strake sail] What this means is difficult to say. As to striking or slackening sail, that is entirely out of the question, in such circumstances as they were; when it is evident they could carry no sail at all, and must have gone under 27 But when the fourteenth night was come, as we were driven up and down in Adria, about midnight the shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country;

28 And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms: and when they had gone a little further, they sounded again, and found it fifteen fathoms.

29 Then fearing lest they should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day.

30 And as the shipmen were about to flee out of the ship, when they had let down the boat into the sea, under colour as though they would have cast anchors out of the foreship, 31 Paul said to the centurion and to the soldiers, Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.

32 Then the soldiers cut off the ropes of the boat, and let her fall off.

33 And while the day was coming on, Paul besought them all to take meat, saying, This day is the fourteenth day that ye have tarried and continued fasting, having taken nothing.

34 Wherefore I pray you to take some meat: for this is for your health: for there shall not a hair fall from the head of any of you.

35 And when he had thus spoken, he took bread, bare poles. Passing by a variety of meanings, I suppose cutting away, or by some means letting down the mast, is the action intended to be expressed here; and this would be the most likely means of saving the vessel from foundering.

*Luke i. 45. Rom. iv. 20, 21. 2 Tim. i. 12.—Ch. xxviii. 1.—1 Kings i. 52. Matt. x. 30. Luke xii. 7. xxi. 19.

Verse 18. Lightened the ship] Of what, we know not; but it was probably cumbrous wares, by which the deck was thronged, and which were prejudicial to the due trim of the vessel.

Verse 19. The tackling of the ship.] All superannuated anchors, cables, baggage, &c.

Verse 20. Neither sun nor stars in many days appeared] And consequently they could make no observations; and, having no magnetic needle, could not tell in what direction they were going.

Verse 21. After long abstinence] They had food sufficient to eat, but were discouraged, and so utterly hopeless of life that they had no appetite for food: besides, the storm was so great that it is not likely they could dress any thing.

Have gained this harm and loss.] It seems strange to talk of gaining a loss, but it is a correct rendering of the original, which expresses the idea of acquisition, whether of good or evil.

Verse 23. The—God, whose I am, and whom I serve] This divine communication was intended to give credit to the apostle and to his doctrine; and, in such perilous circumstances, to speak so confidently, when every appearance was against him, argued the fullest persuasion of the truth of what he spoke.

Verse 24. God hath given thee all them that sail with thee] Two hundred and seventy-six souls, saved for the sake of one man!

Verse 26. We must be cast upon a certain island.] The angel which gave him this information did not tell him the name of the island.

Verse 27. Deemed that they drew near to some country] They judged so, either by the smell of land, which those used to the sea can perceive at a considerable distance, or by the agitation of the sea, rippling of the tide, flight of seabirds, &c.

Verse 28. And sounded] Heaving the lead. Twenty fathoms] About forty yards in depth.

Verse 29. Cast four anchors out of the stern] The anchors were cast out of the stern to prevent the vessel from drifting ashore, as they found that, the farther they stood in, the shallower the water grew; therefore they dropped the anchor astern, as even one ship's length might be of much consequence.

Verse 30. The shipmen] The sailors—let down the boat.

and ^a gave thanks to God in presence of them all: and when he had broken it, he began to eat.

36 Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat.

37 And we were in all in the ship two hundred threescore and sixteen ^b souls.

38 And when they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship, and cast out the wheat into the sea.

39 And when it was day, they knew not the land: but they discovered a certain creek with a shore, into the which they were minded, if it were possible, to thrust in the ship.

40 And when they had ^c taken up the anchors, they committed themselves unto the sea, and loosed the rudder bands, and hoised up the mainsail to the wind, and made toward shore.

41 And falling into a place where two seas met, ^d they ran the ship aground; and the forepart stuck fast, and remained unmoveable, but the hinder part was broken with the violence of the waves.

42 And the soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out and escape.

43 But the centurion, willing to save Paul, kept them from their purpose; and commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea, and get to land:

44 And the rest, some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship. And so it came to pass, ^e that they escaped all safe to land.

But with the real design to make for shore, and so leave the prisoners and the passengers to their fate.

Verse 31. Except these abide in the ship, ye cannot be saved.] God, who has promised to save your lives, promises this on the condition that ye make use of every means he has put in your power to help yourselves.

Verse 32. The soldiers cut off the ropes] These were probably the only persons who dared to have opposed the will of the sailors.

Verse 33. This day is the fourteenth day that ye have—continued fasting] Ye have not had one regular meal for these fourteen days past.

Verse 34. A hair fall from the head] A proverbial expression for, ye shall neither lose your lives nor suffer any hurt in your bodies.

Verse 35. Gave thanks to God] Who had provided the food, and preserved their lives and health to partake of it.

Verse 39. They knew not the land] And therefore knew neither the nature of the coast, nor where the proper port lay.

A—creek with a shore] A bay, with a shore; a neck of land perhaps on either side, running out into the sea, and this little bay or gulf between them. [The word shore should rather be a sandy beach.]

Verse 40. Taken up the anchors] Some think the meaning of the word is, they slipped their cables; and so left the anchors in the sea.

Loosed the rudder bands] The bands were some kind of fastenings, by which the rudders were hoisted some way out of the water; for, as they could be of no use in a storm, and, should there come fair weather, the vessel could not do without them, this was a prudent way of securing them from being broken to pieces by the agitation of the waves. These bands being loosed, the rudders would fall down into their proper places, and serve to steer the vessel into the creek which they now had in view.

Hoised up the mainsail] Not the mainsail (which would have been quite improper on such an occasion) but the jib, or triangular sail which is suspended from the foremast to the bowsprit; with this they might hope both to steer and carry in the ship.

Verse 41. Where two seas met] The tide running down from each side of the tongue of land, mentioned in ver. 39, and meeting at the point.

The forepart stuck fast] Got into the sands; and perhaps the shore here was very bold or steep, so that the stem of the vessel might be immersed in the quicksands, which would soon close round it, while the stern, violently agitated with the surge, would soon be broken to pieces.

Verse 42. The soldiers' counsel was to kill the prisoners] We have not many traits in the histories of the most barbarous nations that can be a proper counterpart to this quintessence of humano-demonic cruelty.

Verse 43. Willing to save Paul, &c.] The centurion saw that Paul was not only an innocent, but an extraordinary and divine man; and therefore, for his sake, he prevented the massacre; and, unloosing every man's bonds, he commanded those that could to swim ashore and escape.

Verse 44. And the rest] That could not swim: some on boards, planks, spars, &c., got safe to land; manifestly by an especial providence of God; for how otherwise could the sick, the aged, the terrified, besides the women and children (of which, we may naturally suppose, there were some), though on planks, get safe to shore?

CHAPTER XXVIII.

St. Paul, and the rest of the crew, getting safely ashore, find that the island on which they were shipwrecked is called Melita, 1. They are received with great hospitality by the inhabitants, 2. A viper comes out of the bundle of sticks, laid on the fire, and seizes on Paul's hand, 3. The people, seeing this, suppose him to be a murderer, and thus pursued by divine vengeance, 4. Having shook it off his hand, without receiving any damage, they change their minds, and suppose him to be a god, 5, 6. Publius, the governor of the island, receives them courteously, and Paul miraculously heals his father, who was ill of a fever, &c. 7, 8. He heals several others also, who honour them much, and give them presents, 9, 10. After three months' stay, they embark in a ship of Alexandria, land at Syracuse, stay there three days, sail thence, pass the straits of Rhegium, and land at Puteoli; find some Christians there, tarry seven days, and set forward for Rome, 11-14. They are met at Appii Forum by some Christians, and Paul is greatly encouraged, 15. They come to Rome, and Julius delivers his prisoners to the captain of the guard, who permits Paul to dwell by himself, only attended by the soldier, that kept him, 16. Paul calls the chief Jews together, and states his case to them, 17-20. They desire to hear him concerning the faith of Christ, 21, 22; and, having appointed unto him a day, he expounds to them the kingdom of Christ, 23. Some believe, and some disbelieve; and Paul informs them that, because of their unbelief and disobedience, the salvation of God is sent to the Gentiles, 24-29. Paul dwells two years in his own hired house, preaching the kingdom of God, 30, 31.

AND when they were escaped, then they knew that * the island was called Melita.

2 And the * barbarous people shewed us no little kindness: for they kindled a fire, and received us every one, because of the present rain, and because of the cold.

3 And when Paul had gathered a bundle of sticks, and laid them on the fire, there came a viper out of the heat, * and fastened on his hand.

4 And when the barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand, they said among themselves, No doubt this man is a murderer, whom, though he hath escaped the sea, ⁴ yet vengeance suffereth not to live.

5 And he shook off the beast into the fire, and * felt no harm.

6 Howbeit they looked when he should have swollen, or fallen down dead suddenly: but after they had looked a great while, and saw no harm come to him, they changed their minds, and * said that he was a god.

Verse 1. They knew that the island was called Melita. There were two islands of this name: one in the Adriatic Gulf, or Gulf of Venice, on the coast of Illyricum, and near to Epidaurus; the other in the Mediterranean Sea, between Sicily and Africa, and now called Malta. It is about fifty miles from the coast of Sicily; twenty miles long, and twelve miles in its greatest breadth; and about sixty miles in circumference.

Everything considered, there can be little doubt that this is the Melita, at which St. Paul was wrecked, and not at that other island in the Adriatic, or Venetian Gulf, as high up northward as Illyricum.

Verse 2. The barbarous people] This island was peopled by the Phœnicians, or Carthaginians; and their ancient language was no doubt in use among them at that time, though mingled with some Greek and Latin terms; and this language must have been unintelligible to the Romans and the Greeks. With these, as well as with other nations, it was customary to call those barbarians, whose language they did not understand.

Because of the present rain and—of the cold.] This must have been some time in October; and, when we consider the time of the year, the tempestuousness of the weather, and their escaping to shore on planks, spars, &c., wet of course to the skin, they must have been very cold, and have needed all the kindness that those well-disposed people showed them.

Verse 3. There came a viper out of the heat] We may suppose that there had been fuel laid before on the fire, and that the viper was in this fuel, and that it had been revived by the heat; and, when St. Paul laid his bundle on the fire, the viper was then in a state to lay hold on his hand.

Verse 4. The venomous beast] Though the viper fastened on Paul's hand, it does not appear that it really bit him; but the Maltese supposed that it had, because they saw it fasten on his hand.

Vengeance suffereth not to live.] These heathens had a general knowledge of retributive justice; and they thought that the stinging of the serpent was a proof that Paul was a murderer.

Verse 5. Shook off the beast into the fire, and felt no harm.] This is a presumptive evidence that the viper did not bite St. Paul: it fastened on his hand, but had no power to injure him.

Verse 6. When he should have swollen] When he should have been inflamed: by means of an acrid poison introduced into the blood, it is soon coagulated; and, in consequence, the extremities of the vessels become obstructed, strong inflammation takes place, and all the parts become most painfully swollen.

7 In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the Island, whose name was Publius; who received us, and lodged us three days courteously.

8 And it came to pass, that the father of Publius lay sick of a fever and of a bloody flux: to whom Paul entered in, and * prayed, and ¹ laid his hands on him, and healed him.

9 So when this was done, others also, which had diseases in the island, came, and were healed:

10 Who also honoured us with many ¹ honours; and when we departed they laded us with such things as were necessary.

11 And after three months we departed in ¹ a ship of Alexandria, which had wintered in the isle, whose sign was Castor and Pollux.

12 And landing at Syracuse, we tarried there three days.

13 And from thence we fetched a compass, and came to Rhegium: and after one day the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli:

Ch. xix. 11, 12. 1 Cor. xii. 9, 28.—† Matt. xv. 6. 1 Tim. v. 17.—‡ Ch. xxvii. 6. 1 Cor. viii. 4.

Verse 6. Said that he was a god.] As Hercules was one of the gods of the Phœnicians, and was worshipped under the epithet of the dispeller of evil, they probably thought that Paul was Hercules; and the more so, because Hercules was famous for having destroyed, in his youth, two serpents that attacked him in his cradle.

Verse 7. The chief man of the island] The term, CHIEF, used here by St. Luke, was the ancient title of the governor of this island, as is evident from an inscription found in Malta, which runs thus:

Lucius Catus, son of Quirinus, a Roman knight, CHIEF of the Melitese.

Verse 8. The father of Publius lay sick] Of a fever and dysentery; perhaps a cholera morbus.

Paul—prayed] That God would exert his power; and laid his hands on him, as the means which God ordinarily used to convey the energy of the Holy Spirit, and healed him; God having conveyed the healing power by this means. Nothing less than a miracle could have made an instantaneous cure in such a case; even the heathens saw that it was the hand of God.

Verse 9. Others—which had diseases] Luke was a physician; yet we do not find him engaging in these cures.

Verse 10. Honoured us with many honours] The original word is often used to signify a pecuniary recompence, or present. It seems to be thus used in 1 Tim. v. 17.

Such things as were necessary.] They had before given them many presents, and now they gave them a good sea-stock; all that was necessary for their passage.

Verse 11. After three months] Supposing that they had reached Malta about the end of October, as we have already seen, then it appears that they left it about the end of January, or the beginning of February; and, though in the depth of winter, not the worst time for sailing, even in those seas, the wind being then generally more steady; and, on the whole, the passage more safe.

Whose sign was Castor and Pollux.] This constellation, the same as Gemini, was deemed propitious to mariners; and, as it was customary to have the images of their gods on the head and stern of their ships, we may suppose that this Alexandrian ship had either these on her prow or stern, and that these gave name to the ship.

Verse 12. Landing at Syracuse] In order to go to Rome from Malta, their readiest course was to keep pretty close to the eastern coast of Sicily, in order to pass through the Straits of Rhegium and get into the Tyrrhenian sea.

Syracuse is one of the most famous cities of antiquity: it is the capital of the island of Sicily, and was built about 730 years before the Christian era. It lies 72 miles S. by E. of Messina, and about 112 of Palermo. Long. 15°. 30' W.

14 Where we found brethren, * and were desired to tarry with them seven days: and so we went toward Rome.

15 And from thence, when the brethren heard of us, ^b they came to meet us as far as Appii Forum and The Three Taverns: whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage.

16 And when we came to Rome, the centurion delivered the prisoners to the captain of the guard: but ^c Paul was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him.

17 And it came to pass, ^d that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: and when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, ^e though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet ^f was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans.

18 Who, ^g when they had examined me, would have let me go, because there was no cause of death in me.

Lat. 87° 17'. N. It was the birth-place of the illustrious Archimedes; who, when the city was besieged by the Romans, under Marcellus, about 212 years before Christ, defended the place with his powerful engines against all the valour and power of the assailants.

The city was almost totally destroyed by an earthquake in 1693: its present population amounts to but about 18,000. Christianity, in some form or other, has existed here ever since St. Paul spent the three days in it, mentioned in the text.

Verse 13. We fetched a compass] Whence we coasted about. This will appear evident, when the coast of Sicily is viewed on any correct map, of a tolerably large scale.

Rhegium] A city and promontory in Calabria, in Italy, opposite to Sicily.

The south wind blew] This was the fairest wind they could have from Syracuse, to reach the straits of Rhegium.

The next day to Puteoli] This place, now commonly called Pozzuoli, is an ancient town of Naples in the Terra di Lavoro; and is supposed to have been founded by the Samians, about 470 years before Christ.

Verse 14. Where we found brethren] That is, Christians; for there had been many in Italy converted to the faith of Christ, some considerable time before this, as appears from St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, written some years before this voyage.

We went toward Rome] One of the most celebrated cities in the universe, the capital of Italy, and once of the whole world; situated on the river Tiber. This famous city was founded by Romulus, at the end of the seventh Olympiad, A. M. 8251; of the Flood, 1595; and 753 year, before the Christian Æra. The history of this city must be sought for in works written expressly on the subject, of which there are many.

Verse 15. When the brethren heard of us] By whom the gospel was planted at Rome is not known: it does not appear that any apostle was employed in this work. It was probably carried thither by some of those who were converted to God at the day of Pentecost; for there were then at Jerusalem, not only devout men, proselytes to the Jewish religion, from every nation under heaven, Acts ii. 5, but there were strangers of Rome also, ver. 10. And it is most reasonable to believe, as we know of no other origin, that it was by these Christianity was planted at Rome.

As far as Appii Forum] About 52 miles from Rome; a long way to come on purpose to meet the apostle! The Appii Forum, or Market of Appius was a town on the 22 But we desire to hear of thee what thou thinkest: for as concerning this sect, we know that every where ^c it is spoken against.

23 And when they had appointed him a day, there came many to him into his lodging; ^d to whom he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, ^e both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening.

24 And some ^f believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not.

25 And when they agreed not among themselves, they departed, after that Paul had spoken one word, Well spake the Holy Ghost by Esaias the prophet unto our fathers, Appian way, a road paved from Rome to Campania, by the consul Appius Claudius. It was near the sea, and was a famous resort for sailors, pedlars, &c.

And the Three Taverns] This was another place on the same road, and about 33 miles from Rome.

This place, at first, was probably a place for booths or sheds, tabernæ, three of which were remarkable; other houses became associated with them in process of time, and the whole place denominated Tres Tabernæ, from the three first remarkable booths set up there. It appears to have been a large town in the fourth century, as Optatus mentions Felix a Tribus Tabernis, Felix of the Three Taverns, as one of the Christian bishops.

Thanked God, and took courage] He had longed to see Rome, (See Rom. i. 9-15); and, finding himself brought through so many calamities, and now so near the place that he was met by a part of that church to which, some years before, he had written an epistle, he gave thanks to God, who had preserved him; and took fresh courage in the prospect of bearing there a testimony for his Lord and Master.

Verse 16. The captain of the guard] This word properly means the commander of a camp; but it signifies the prefect, or commander of the pretorian cohorts, or emperor's guards.

With a soldier that kept him] That is, the soldier to whom he was chained, as has been related before, chap. xii. 6.

Verse 17. Paul called the chief of the Jews together] We have already seen, in chap. xvii. 2, that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome; see the note there: but it seems they were permitted to return very soon; and, from this verse, it appears that there were then chiefs, probably of synagogues, dwelling at Rome.

I have committed nothing] Lest they should have heard and received malicious reports against him, he thought it best to state his own case.

Verse 20. For the hope of Israel I am bound, &c.] Both the Messiah and the resurrection might be said to be the hope of Israel; and it is hard to tell which of them is here meant, see chap. xxiii. 6, xxiv. 15, 21, and xxvi. 8.

Verse 21. We neither received letters, &c.] This is very strange, and shows us that the Jews knew their cause to be hopeless, and therefore did not send it forward to Rome. They wished for an opportunity to kill Paul; and, when they were frustrated by his appeal to the emperor, they permitted the business to drop.

Verse 23. To whom he expounded—the kingdom of God] and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

To whom he showed that the reign of the Messiah was to be a spiritual reign; and that Jesus, whom the Jewish rulers had lately crucified, was the true Messiah, who should rule in this spiritual kingdom.

Verse 25. Agreed not among themselves] It seems that a controversy arose between the Jews themselves, in consequence of some believing, and others disbelieving; and the two parties contested together; and, in respect to the unbelieving party, the apostle quoted the following passage from Isa. vi. 9.

Verse 28. The salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles] St. Paul had spoken to this effect twice before, chap. xiii. 46, and chap. xviii. 6, where see the notes; but here he uses a firmer tone, being out of the Jewish territories, and under the protection of the emperor.

They will hear it.] That is, they will obey it.

Verse 29. And had great reasoning among themselves.] The believers contending with the unbelievers; and thus we may suppose that the cause of truth gained ground.

Verse 30. Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house] As a state-prisoner he might have had an apartment in the common prison, but peculiar favour was showed him, and he was permitted to dwell alone with the soldier that guarded him, ver. 16. Finding now an opportunity of preaching the gospel, he hired a house for the purpose, and paid for it, St. Chrysostom observes, by the fruits of his own labour. Here he received all that came unto him, and preached the gospel with glorious success; so that his bonds became the means of spreading the truth, and he became celebrated even in the palace of Nero, Phil. i. 12, 13; and we find that there were several saints, even in Cæsar's household, Phil. iv. 22, which were, no doubt, the fruits of the apostle's ministry.

Verse 31. Preaching the kingdom of God] Showing the spiritual nature of the true church, under the reign of the Messiah.

Those things which concern the Lord] These necessarily include the whole account of his incarnation, preaching in Judea, miracles, persecutions, passion, death, burial, resurrection, ascension, intercession, and his sending down the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. These were the subjects on which the apostle preached for two whole years, during his imprisonment at Rome.

With all confidence] Liberty of speech; perfect freedom to say all he pleased, and when he pleased. He had the fullest toleration from the Roman government to preach as he pleased, and what he pleased; and the unbelieving Jews had no power to prevent him.

PREFACE

EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS

THAT . PAUL was the author of this Epistle, and that it possesses every evidence of authenticity that any work of the kind can possess, or that even the most fastidious scepticism can require, has been most amply proved by Dr. W. Paley, Archdeacon of Carlisle, in his work entitled "Horæ Paulinæ ; or, the Truth of the Scripture History of St. Paul evinced, by a comparison of the Epistles which bear his name, with the Acts of the Apostles, and with one another."

Saul (afterwards called Paul) was born in Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, of Jewish parents, who possessed the right of Roman citizens (see the note on Acts xxii. 28). When young, he was sent to Jerusalem, for the purpose of receiving a Jewish education; he was there put under the tuition of the famous Rabbi Gamaliel, and was incorporated with the sect of the Pharisees, of whose system he imbibed all the pride, self-confidence, and intolerance; and distinguished himself as one of the most inveterate enemies of the Christian cause; but, being converted by a most singular interposition of Divine Providence and grace, he became one of the most zealous promoters and successful defenders of the cause which he had before so inveterately persecuted.

Though this Epistle is directed to the Romans, yet we are not to suppose that Romans, in the proper sense of the word, are meant; but rather those who dwelt at Rome, and composed the Christian Church in that city: that there were among these Romans, properly such, that is, heathens who had been converted to the Christian faith, there can be no doubt; but the principal part of the church in that city seems to have been formed from Jews, sojourners at Rome, and from such as were proselytes to the Jewish religion.

When, or by whom, the gospel was first preached at Rome cannot be ascertained. Those who assert that St. Peter was its founder, can produce no solid reason for the support of their opinion. Had this apostle first preached the gospel in that city, it is not likely that such an event would have been unnoticed in the Acts of the Apostles, where the labours of St. Peter are particularly detailed with those of St. Paul, which indeed form the chief subject of this book. Nor is it likely that the author of this epistle should have made no reference to this circumstance, had it been true. Those who say that this Church was founded by these two apostles conjointly, have still less reason on their side; for it is evident, from chap. i. 8, &c., that St. Paul had never been at Rome previously to his writing this epistle. It is most likely that no apostle was employed in this important work, and that the gospel was first preached there by some of those persons who were converted at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost; for we find, from Acts ii. 10, that there were at Jerusalem strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes; and these, on their return, would naturally declare the wonders they had witnessed, and proclaim that truth by which they themselves had received salvation.

The occasion of writing this epistle may be easily collected from the epistle itself. It appears that St. Paul had been made acquainted with all the circumstances of the Christians at Rome, by Aquila and Priscilla (see chap. xvi. 3), and by other Jews who had been expelled from Rome by the decree of Claudius (mentioned Acts xviii. 2); and, finding that they consisted partly of heathens converted to Christianity, and partly of Jews who had, with many remaining prejudices, believed in Jesus as the true Messiah, and that many contentions arose from the claims of the Gentile converts to equal privileges with the Jews, and from the absolute refusal of the Jews to admit these claims unless the Gentile converts became circumcised, he wrote to adjust and settle these differences.

Concerning the time in which this epistle was written, there is not much difference of opinion: it is most likely that it was written about A.D. 53, when Paul was at Corinth: see chap. xvi. 23, conferred with 1 Cor. i. 14; and Rom. xvi. 1, conferred with 2 Tim. iv. 20. It appears from chap. xvi. 22, that Paul did not write this epistle with his own hand, but used a person called Tertius as his amanuensis; and that it was sent by the hands of Phæbe, a deaconess of the Church of Cenchrea, which was the eastern port on the Isthmus of Corinth.

Of the fourteen epistles attributed to St. Paul (thirteen only of which bear his name), this has been reckoned the first in importance, though certainly not in order of time; for there is every reason to believe that both the epistles to the Thessalonians, that to the Galatians, those to the Corinthians, the first to Timothy, and that to Titus, were all written before the Epistle to the Romans.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

THE ROMANS.

CHAPTER I

St. Paul shows the Romans his divine call to the apostleship, and for what end he was thus called, 1-6. His salutation to the church at Rome, and his commendation of their faith, 7, 8. His earnest desire to see them, that he might impart to them some spiritual gifts, 9-15. His description of the gospel of Christ, 16, 17. The crimes and profligacy of the Gentile world, which called aloud for the judgments of God, 18-32.

Verse 1. Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ] The word which we translate servant, properly means a slave, one who is the entire property of his master. Paul felt that he was not his own, and that his life and powers belonged to his heavenly owner, and that he had no right to dispose of, or employ them, but in the strictest suberviency to the will of his Lord. This is, perhaps, the highest character which any soul of man can attain on this side eternity. A friend of God is high; a son of God is higher; but the servant or, in the above sense, the slave of God is higher than all—in a word, he is a person who feels he has no property in himself, and that God is all and in all.

Called to be an apostle] The word apostle signifies simply a messenger or envoy; one sent on a confidential errand: but here it means an extraordinary messenger; one sent by God himself to deliver the most important message on behalf of his Maker—in a word, one sent by the divine authority to preach the gospel to the nations. The word called, signifies here the same as constituted, and should be joined with apostle, and translated thus: Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, constituted an apostle, &c.

Separated unto the gospel] Set apart and appointed to this work, and to this only; as the Israelites were separated

8 First, I ^p thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that ^q your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.

9 For ^r God is my witness, ^s whom I serve ^t with my spirit in the gospel of his Son, that ^u without ceasing I make mention of you always in my prayers;

10 ^v Making request, if by any means now at length I might have a prosperous journey ^w by the will of God to come unto you.

11 For I long to see you, that ^x I may impart unto you some spiritual gift, to the end ye may be established;

12 That is, that I may be comforted together ^y with you by the ^z mutual faith both of you and me.

13 Now I would not have you ignorant, brethren, that ^{aa} oftentimes I purposed to come unto you, (but ^{bb} was let hitherto,) that I might have some ^{cc} fruit ^{dd} among you also, even as among other Gentiles.

Verse 2. Which he had promised afore] Both in the law and in the prophets God shewed his purpose to introduce into the world a more perfect and glorious state of things.

Verse 4. And declared to be the Son of God] See the note on Acts xiii. 33. The word which we render declared, comes from the root of our word horizon, the line that determines the farthest visible part of the earth, in reference to the heavens. In this place the word signifies such a manifest and complete exhibition of the subject as to render it indubitable.

With power] With a miraculous display of divine energy; for, how could his body be raised again, but by the miraculous energy of God?

According to the spirit of holiness] Some suppose that the spirit of holiness implies the divine nature of Jesus Christ; others his immaculate sanctity, &c. To me it seems that the apostle simply means that the person called Jesus was proved to be the Son of God, the promised Messiah, by the Holy Spirit (called here the spirit of holiness), which he sent down upon his apostles, and not on them only, but on all that believed on his name; by whose influence multitudes were convinced of sin, righteousness, and judgment, and multitudes sanctified unto God; and it was by the peculiar union of this spirit of holiness, that the apostles gave witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, Acts iv. 33. [This interpretation destroys the antithesis between "the flesh" and "the spirit of holiness." The latter is clearly the divine nature of Christ, as in contrast with "the flesh" i. e. his human nature.]

Verse 5. Grace and apostleship] The peculiar influence and the essential qualifications which such an office requires.

For obedience to the faith] That I might proclaim the faith, the gospel of Jesus; and show all nations the necessity of believing in it, in order to their salvation.

Verse 6. The called] To be called by the gospel is to be invited to believe in Christ Jesus, and become his disciples.

Verse 7. Called to be saints] CONSTITUTED saints, for they had already received the gospel grace, and were formed into a Christian church.

Grace to you] 1. The word translated grace, signifies in general favour or benevolence, but especially that favour which is powerful and active, and loads its objects with benefits. Luke i. 30; Luke ii. 40; Acts ii. 47, iv. 33.

2. Hence it is often used for the blessing which it *dispen-*ses; John i. 14; Ib. ver. 16; Acts x. 23; 1 Cor. i. 4; 2 Cor. ix. 8. In this sense the word grace or favour is now generally understood among religious people.

3. It is sometimes taken for the whole of the Christian Religion, as being the grandest possible display of God's favour to a lost, ruined world: and in this sense it appears to be used, John i. 17; Acts xiii. 43; Rom. vi. 14; 2 Cor. i. 12, vi. 1; Gal. i. 6; Col. i. 6; 2 Tim. ii. 1; Tit. ii. 11; &c.

4. It signifies all the blessings and benefits which Christ has purchased, and which he gives to true believers, both in time and eternity. Rom. v. 15 and 17; 1 Cor. xvi. 23; Gal. v. 4.

5. It signifies the apostolic and ministerial office, or the authority to propagate the Christian religion, and the unction or influence by which that office is executed; so in the 5th verse of this chapter, and Rom. xii. 8.

6. It signifies a gift, salary or money collected for the use of the poor. 1 Cor. xvi. 8; 2 Cor. viii. 4.

7. It sometimes signifies merely thanks or thanksgivings—see Luke xvii. 9; Rom. vi. 17; 1 Cor. x. 30.

8. It signifies remuneration, wages, or reward. Luke vi. 32, 33, 34. The word is used in this sense by several Greek writers.

9. It signifies whatever is the means of procuring the favour or kindness of another. 1 Pet. ii. 19, 20.

10. It signifies joy, pleasure, and gratification, which is the meaning of a similar word with which it is often confounded in the New Testament. Philemon 7. In this sense the word is used by the best Greek writers; and in this sense it appears to be used, Cor. i. 15.

And peace] The same as shalom in Hebrew, generally signifying all kinds of blessing, but especially harmony and unity, and the bond of such unity. In the New Testament it signifies—1. Peace, public or private, in the general acceptance of the word, as implying reconciliation and friendship; and to the etymology of the word the apostle seems to allude in Eph. iv. 3; Acts xii. 20.

2. It signifies regularity, good order. 1 Cor. xiv. 33.

3. It signifies the labour or study of preserving peace and concord; and this is supposed to be its meaning, Matt. x. 34; Luke xii. 51; Acts vii. 26; Rom. xiv. 17; 1 Cor. vii. 15; Heb. xii. 14.

4. It signifies the author or procurer of peace and concord. Eph. ii. 14.

5. It signifies the gospel and its blessings. Eph. ii. 17.

6. It signifies all kinds of mental and corporeal happiness, and especially the happiness of Christians. Luke i. 79, xix. 42; 1 Thess. v. 23; John xvi. 33.

7. It signifies good wishes and affectionate prayers. Matt. x. 13; Luke x. 6; John xiv. 27; Acts xv. 33.

8. It signifies praise. Luke ix. 38.

9. It signifies benignity, benevolence, favour. Rom. v. 1; Phil. iv. 7.

Verse 8. Your faith is spoken] Is celebrated, throughout the whole world—through all parts of the Roman dominions: for in this sense we should understand the words, the whole world.

Verse 9. Whom I serve with my spirit] Whom I worship with the profoundest religious reverence; for so the original certainly means: I not only employ all the powers of my body in this service, but all those of my soul; being thoroughly convinced of the absolute truth of the religion I preach.

Verse 10. Making request, &c.] By this we see how earnestly the apostle longed to see Rome.

Verse 11. Some spiritual gift] This probably means some of the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit, which, being given to them, might tend greatly to establish their faith in the gospel of Christ; and it is very likely that such gifts were only conferred by means of apostles. [Probably the expression should be taken in a more general sense.]

Verse 12. That I may be comforted together with you] With great address, he intimates that it will require the conjoint action of their faith as well as his own, to be the means of receiving those blessings from God to which he refers.

Verse 13. But was let hitherto] The word let signifies impediment or hindrance of any kind: but it is likely that the original word refers to a divine prohibition;—he would have visited them long before, but God did not see right to permit him.

Verse 14. I am a debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians] Under obligation to preach the gospel to all people.

Verse 15. I am ready to preach] I have a ready mind.

Verse 16. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ] This text is best illustrated by Isai. xxviii. 16, xlii. 23, quoted by the apostle, chap. x. 11.

It is the power of God unto salvation] The almighty power of God accompanies this preaching to the souls of them that believe; and the consequence is, they are saved; and what but the power of God can save a fallen, sinful soul?

To the Jew first] Not only the Jews have the first offer of this gospel, but they have the greatest need of it; being so deeply fallen, and having sinned against such glorious privileges, they are much more culpable than the Gentiles, who never had the light of a divine revelation.

And also to the Greek] God having put no difference between them; and Jesus Christ having tasted death for EVERY man.

Verse 17. For therein] In the gospel of Christ.

Revealed from faith to faith] Shown to be by faith, and not by the works of any law: for Abraham, the father and founder of the Jewish people, was justified by faith, before even the law was given. And thus the faith of the old covenant led on to the faith of the new covenant, which shows that salvation has been by faith from the call of Abraham to the present time. [Perhaps this difficult expression receives some light from Heb. xii. 2.]

That the word which we translate righteousness in this verse signifies God's method of saving mankind by faith in Christ, in opposition to the ways and means invented by the fancies or prejudices of men, is fully evident from the use of the term in chap. ix. 30, 31.

There are few words in the sacred writings which are taken in a greater variety of acceptations than the word which we generally translate righteousness. Our English word was originally rightwiseness; the righteous man was a person who was allowed to understand the claims of justice and right, and who, knowing them, acted according to their dictates. The Hebrew tsadak, in its ideal meaning, contains the notion of a beam or scales in equipoise, what we call even balance. The Greek word has been derived from a verb signifying to divide; and hence justice, because it is the property of this virtue to divide to each his due. Both the noun and the verb have a great variety of meaning in the New Testament; but they are all reducible to this original idea, acting according to the requisitions of justice or right. It may not be improper to notice some of the chief of these acceptations in this place.

1. The act of distributing to each man his due is the sense of the word, Acts xvii. 31; Rev. xii. 2.

2. It signifies a holy life, as proceeding from piety towards God. Luke i. 75.

3. It signifies benignity, liberality, and particularly almsgiving, as justice and righteousness require us, being only stewards of God's bounty, to share it with the necessitous. Matt. vi. 1; Rom. iii. 5; 2 Cor. ix. 10.

4. It signifies God's method of saving sinners; the way which is agreeable to his righteousness and liberality.

5. It signifies the reward or issue of liberality. 2. Cor. ix. 9.

6. It signifies the whole collection of graces which constitute the complete Christian character. Matt. v. 6; v. 10, 20, vi. 33.

7. It signifies the result of faith in God and submission to his will, exemplified in a holy and useful life. Heb. xi. 7.

8. It signifies an exact observance of religious ordinances and precepts. Phil. iii. 6; Matt. iii. 15.

9. It signifies the favour or pardoning mercy of God Rom. iv. 6.

^c Eph. v. 4.

10. In 2 Cor. v. 21, it is put for righteous: That we might become the righteousness of God.

A few of the leading acceptations of the verb which we translate to justify, may be here properly subjoined, as this verb is so repeatedly used in this epistle.

1. It signifies to declare or pronounce one just or righteous; or, in other words, to declare him to be what he really is. 1 Tim. iii. 16.

2. To esteem a thing properly. Matt. xi. 19.

3. It signifies to approve, praise, and commend. Luke vii. 29; xvi. 15.

4. It is used to clear from all sin. 1 Cor. iv. 4.

5. A judge is said to justify, not only when he condemns and punishes, but also when he defends the cause of the innocent: Matt. xii. 37; Rom. iii. 4.

6. It signifies to set free, to escape from. Acts xiii. 39; Rom. vi. 7.

7. If signifies also to receive one into favour, to pardon sin. Rom. viii. 30; Luke xviii. 14; Rom. iii. 20, iv. 2; 1 Cor. vi. 11; see Jam. ii. 21-25; Rom. iii. 24, 28; v. 1, 9; Gal. ii. 16, 17; iii. 11, 24; v. 4; Tit. iii. 7. [Mr. Wesley's explanation of the term righteousness in this verse is: "The whole benefit of God through Christ for the salvation of a sinner." He also says that the expression sometimes means "God's eternal, essential righteousness and mercy." This meaning Dr. Clarke has not given.]

The just shall live by faith.] This has been understood two ways: 1, that the just or righteous man cannot live a holy and useful life without exercising continual faith in our Lord Jesus. 2. It is contended by some that the words of the original text should be pointed thus: The just by faith, shall live; that is, he alone that is justified by faith shall be saved. This last meaning is probably the true one, as the original text in Hab. ii. 4, speaks of those who believed the declarations of God when the Chaldeans besieged Jerusalem, and, having acted conformably to them, escaped with their lives. [The two senses are substantially identical.]

Verse 18. For the wrath of God is revealed] By the wrath of God, we are not to understand any uneasy passion in the Divine Being; but the displeasure of his righteousness, which is expressed by the punishments inflicted on the ungodly, those who retain not God in their knowledge; and the unrighteous, those whose lives are profligate.

As in the Gospel, the righteousness of God is revealed for the salvation of the ungodly, so is the wrath of God revealed against the workers of iniquity. Those who refuse to be saved in the way revealed by his mercy must be consumed in the way revealed by his justice.

Ungodliness] Probably intended here to express atheism, polytheism, and idolatry of every kind.

Unrighteousness] Every thing contrary to strict morality; all viciousness and profligacy of conduct. [Impiety towards God, injustice towards man. This is the sense of the two expressions.]

Who hold the truth in unrighteousness] Rosenmüller and some others contend that the word does not signify to hold, but to hinder; and that the place should be translated, who through maliciousness hinder the truth; i. e., prevent it from taking hold of their hearts, and from governing their conduct. This is certainly a very usual acceptance of the verb.

Verse 20. The invisible things of him] His invisible perfections are manifested by his visible works.

His eternal power] That all-powerful energy that ever was, and ever will exist.

And Godhead] His acting as God in the government and support of the universe. [Or rather, His Divinity.]

Verse 21. Because that, when they knew God] When they thus acquired a general knowledge of the unity and perfections of the Divine nature, they glorified him not as God—they did not proclaim him to the people, but shut up of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers,

30 Backbiters, haters of God, spiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents,

31 Without understanding, covenant-breakers,

* Or, unsocial—Ch. ii. 2.—Ch. vi. 21.

his glory in their mysteries, and gave the people, in exchange for an incorruptible God, an image made like to corruptible man.

They glorified him not] They did not give him that worship which his perfections required.

Neither were thankful] They manifested no gratitude for the blessings they received from his providence, but became vain in their imaginations, in their reasonings. This certainly refers to the foolish manner in which even the wisest of their philosophers discoursed about the Divine nature, not excepting Socrates, Plato, or Seneca.

Verse 22. Professing themselves to be wise] This is most strikingly true of all the ancient philosophers, whether Greeks or Romans, as their works, which remain, sufficiently testify. The word signifies not merely the professing, but the assumption of the philosophic character.

Verse 23. And changed the glory, &c.] The finest representation of their deities was in the human figure; and on such representative figures, the sculptors spent all their skill; hence the Farnese HERCULES, the VENUS de Medicis, and the APOLLO Belvidere. And when they had formed their gods according to the human shape, they endowed them with human passions.

And to birds] As the eagle of Jupiter among the Romans, and the ibis and hawk among the Egyptians; which were all sacred animals.

Fourfooted beasts] As the apis or white ox among the Egyptians; from which the idolatrous Israelites took their golden calf. The goat, the monkey, and the dog, were also sacred animals among the same people.

Creeping things.] Such as the crocodile and scarabeus, or beetle, among the Egyptians.

Verse 24. God—gave them up, &c.] They had filled up the measure of their iniquities, and God, by permitting them to plunge into all manner of irregularities, thus, by one species of sin, inflicted punishment on another.

Between themselves] Of themselves, of their own free accord; none inciting, none impelling. [This is not critically accurate.]

Verse 25. Changed the truth of God into a lie] In the place of the true worship of God they established idolatry. In various places of Scripture idols are termed lies. Isa. xlv. 20; Jer. x. 14, xiii. 25.

Verse 26. For this cause God gave them up, &c.] Their system of idolatry necessarily produced all kinds of impurity. How could it be otherwise, when the highest objects of their worship were adulterers, fornicators, and prostitutes of the most infamous kind, such as Jupiter, Apollo, Mars, Venus, &c.?

Verse 27. Receiving in themselves that recompence, &c.] Both the women and men, by their unnatural prostitutions, enervated their bodies, so that barrenness prevailed, and those disorders which are necessarily attendant on prostitution and sodomitical practices.

Verse 28. They did not like to retain God] It would, perhaps, be more literal to translate, THEY DID NOT SEARCH to retain God in their knowledge. They did not examine the evidences before them (ver. 19 and 20) of his being and attributes; therefore God gave them over to a REPROBATE mind, to an UNSEARCHING or undiscerning mind; for it is the same word in both places. [The rendering in the text is better.]

Verse 29. Being filled with all unrighteousness] Every vice contrary to justice and righteousness.

Fornication] All commerce between the sexes out of the bounds of lawful marriage.

* without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful.

32 Who, knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them.

* Or, consent with them.—Hos. vii. 3. Ps. i. 18.

Wickedness] Malignity, that which is oppressive to its possessor and to its objects.

Covetousness] The intense love or lust of gain; the determination to be rich; the principle of a dissatisfied and discontented soul.

Maliciousness] What is radically and essentially vicious.

Full of envy] Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness in another.

Murder] Taking away the life of another by any means; mortal hatred; for he that hates his brother in his heart is a murderer.

Debate] Discord, &c. Of this vile passion the Greeks made a goddess.

Deceit] Lying, falsity, prevarication, imposition, &c.

Malignity] Generally interpreted, a malignity of mind, which leads its possessor to put the worst construction on every action; ascribing to the best deeds the worst motives.

Whisperers] Secret detractors; those who, under pretended secrecy, carry about accusations against their neighbours, whether true or false; blasting their reputation by clandestine tittle-tattle.

Verse 30. Backbiters] Those who speak against others; false accusers, slanderers.

Haters of God] All profligate deists are of this class; and it seems to be the finishing part of a diabolic character.

Despightful] Treating with injurious insolence.

Proud] They who are continually exalting themselves and depressing others; magnifying themselves at the expense of their neighbours; and wishing all men to receive their sayings as oracles.

Boasters] Self-assuming, vain-glorious, and arrogant men.

Inventors of evil things] Those who have invented destructive customs, rites, fashions, &c.; such as the different religious ceremonies among the Greeks and Romans—the orgies of Bacchus, the mysteries of Ceres, the lupercales, feasts of the Bona Dea, &c. &c. [The original involves all kinds of villainy.]

Disobedient to parents] Though filial affection was certainly more recommended and cultivated than many other virtues, yet there are many instances on record of the grossest violation of this great branch of the law of nature.

Verse 31. Without understanding] Persons incapable of comprehending what was spoken; destitute of capacity for spiritual things.

Covenant-breakers] Persons who could be bound by no oath, because, properly speaking, they had no God to witness or avenge their misconduct.

Without natural affection] Without that attachment which nature teaches the young of all animals to have to their mothers, and the mothers to have for their young.

Implacable] The word shows a deadly enmity; the highest pitch of an unforgiving spirit; in a word, persons who would not make reconciliation either to God or man.

Unmerciful] Those who were incapable of showing mercy to an enemy, or doing any thing for the necessitous, from the principle of benevolence or commiseration.

Verse 32. Who, knowing the judgment of God] The grand rule of right which God has revealed to every man, the knowledge of which he has, less or more, given to every nation of the world, relative to honouring parents, taking care of their own offspring, keeping their engagements, &c. &c. Through the prevalence of corruption in the heart, this law, though acknowledged, was not obeyed; and the corruption increased so that those were highest in repute who had cast off all restraints of this kind; which argues the very highest pitch of moral depravity.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle shows that the Jew, who condemns the Gentiles, and considers them utterly unworthy of the blessings of the gospel, is inexcusable, because he is guilty of the same crimes; and therefore shall not escape the righteous judgment of God, 1-3. It is an awful thing to despise the goodness and long-suffering of God, which lead to repentance, 4, 5. God, the impartial judge, will render to every man according to his works, 6-11. The Jews and the Gentiles will be judged according to their respective advantages, and disadvantages, 12, 13. In some cases, the Gentiles, who had no law, have shown a better disposition than the Jews, 14-16. The Jews, by their unfaithfulness, have been a stumbling-block to the Gentiles, 17-24. Jewish rites and ceremonies of no advantage, unless productive of change of heart and conduct, 25. The Gentiles, who attend to the small light which they have received from God, are in a better state than the unfaithful Jews, with all their superior religious privileges, 26, 27. What constitutes a real Jew in the sight of God, 28-29.

THEREFORE thou art ^a inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest; ^b for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things.

2 But we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth against them which commit such things.

3 And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?

4 Or despisest thou ^c the riches of his goodness and ^d forbearance and ^e long-suffering; ^f not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?

5 But after thy hardness and impenitent heart ^g treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God;

Verse 1. That judgest] Thou assumest the character of a judge, and in that character condemnest others who are less guilty than thyself.

Verse 2. We are sure that the judgment of God, &c.] God is impartial, and will punish sin whosoever he finds it.

Verse 4. Or despisest thou the riches of his goodness?] Wilt thou render of none effect that marked benevolence of God towards thee which has given so many superior advantages, and that forbearance which has tolerated thy many miscarriages, and that long-suffering which, after repeated provocations, still continues to bear with thee?

Not knowing] Not acknowledging that this goodness of God, leadeth thee to repentance—was designed to accomplish this blessed end; which thy want of consideration and acknowledgment has rendered, hitherto, ineffectual.

Verse 5. But after thy hardness] Occasioned by thy long course of iniquity. And impenitent heart—produced by thy hardness, through which thou art callous to the calls and exhortations of conscience. Treasurest up—continuest to increase thy debt to the divine justice, which will infallibly inflict wrath—punishment, in the day of wrath—the judgment-day, in which he will render to every man according to his works. The word treasure the Hebrew uses to express any kind of store or collection.

The treasure of wrath, in this verse, is opposed to the riches of goodness, in the preceding. As surely as thou despiest, or neglectest to improve, the riches of God's goodness, so surely thou shalt share in the treasures of his wrath. The punishment shall be proportioned to the mercy thou hast abused.

Verse 7. To them, &c.] He will give eternal life to them who, in all the trials and difficulties of the present state, have persevered in well-doing—seeking for and expecting glory, honour, and immortality.

Verse 8. But unto them, &c.] He will manifest his indignation, and inflict wrath—punishment, on all who are contentious—who obstinately dispute against the truth, and obey unrighteousness—who act under the influence of the principle of sin, and not under the influence of the Spirit of God.

Verse 9. Tribulation and anguish] Misery of all descriptions, without the possibility of escape, will this righteous Judge inflict upon every impenitent sinner. The Jew first, as possessing greater privileges, and having abused greater mercies.

Verse 10. But glory, honour, and peace] Every man that worketh good—that lives in a conscientious obedience to the known will of God, whether he be Jew or Gentile, shall have glory, honour, and peace, i. e., eternal blessedness.

Verse 11. For there is no respect of persons with God.] The righteous Judge will not act according to any principle of partiality; the character and conduct alone of the persons shall weigh with him. And as he will judge in that day according to character and conduct, so his judgment will proceed on the ground of the graces, privileges, and blessings which they have received, improved or abused. And as there is no respect of persons with God in judgment, so there can be none in the previous administration of his saving blessings. He that will be condemned for his unrighteousness, will be condemned on the ground that he had sufficient grace afforded him for the salvation of his soul; and his condemnation will rest on the simple principle, that he abused the grace which was sufficient to save him, by acting in opposition to its dictates and influence.

Verse 12. For as many as have sinned without law, &c.] They, viz., the Gentiles, who shall be found to have transgressed against the mere light of nature, or rather, that true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, shall be dealt with according to the inferior dispensation, under which they lived: while those, the Jews, who have sinned against the law—the positive divine revelation granted to them, shall be judged by that law, and punished proportionably.

Verse 13. For not the hearers of the law, &c.] Where God has given a law—a divine revelation—he requires obedience to that law; and only those who have lived according to the light and privileges granted in that revelation, shall be finally acknowledged as fit for the kingdom of God.

Verse 14. For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, &c. Nor does it follow that the Gentiles shall either perish, because they had not a divine revelation ; or their unrighteous conduct pass unpunished, because not having this revelation might be considered an excuse for their sins.

Do by nature the things contained in the law Act according to justice, mercy, temperance and truth, the practice of which the revealed law so powerfully enjoins ; these are a law unto themselves—they are not accountable to any other law, and are not to be judged by any dispensation different from that under which they live.

Verse 15. Which shew the work of the law As if the apostle had said :—And this point, that they have a law and act according to it, is farther proved from their conduct in civil affairs ; and from that correct sense which they have of natural justice in their debates, either in their courts of law, or in their treatises on morality. All these are ample proofs that God has not left them without light ; and that, seeing they have such correct notions of right and wrong, they are accountable to God for their conduct in reference to these notions and principles. [There is probably, also, a reference to the moral processes taking place in the heart.]

Verse 16. In the day when God shall judge And all this shall be further exemplified and proved in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ ; which judgment shall be according to my gospel—according to what I am now laying down before you, relative to the impartiality of God, and his righteous procedure in judging men, not according to their opinions or prejudices, not according to revelations which they never possessed, but according to the various advantages or disadvantages of their political, religious, or domestic situation in life.

Much stress has been laid on the term by nature, in ver. 14, as if the apostle designed to intimate that nature, independently of the influence of divine grace, possessed such principles as were sufficient to guide a man to glory. But certainly the term cannot be so understood here.

Verse 17. Behold, thou art called a Jew The apostle openly argues with the Jew in the most plain and nervous manner ; asserting that his superior knowledge, privileges, and profession, served only to aggravate his condemnation.

And retest in the law The word implies the strongest confidence of safety and security.

est thou not thyself ? thou that preachest a man should not steal, dost thou steal ?

22 Thou that sayest a man should not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery ? thou that abhorrest idols, * dost thou commit sacrilege ?

23 Thou that * makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonourest thou God ?

24 For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you, as it is * written.

25 * For circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law : but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision.

26 Therefore * if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision ?

27 And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfil the law, * judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law ?

28 For * he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly ; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh :

29 But he is a Jew, * which is one inwardly ; and * circumcision is that of the heart, * in the spirit, and not in the letter ; * whose praise is not of men, but of God.

And makest thy boast of God That thou knowest his nature and attributes, which are not known to the Gentiles. The word implies the idea of exulting in any thing, as being a proper object of hope and dependance. [The reference however is to the bigoted and monopolizing spirit of the Jew, who claimed Jehovah as being peculiarly his.]

Verse 18. Knowest his will Hast been favoured with a revelation of his own will, immediately from himself.

The things that are more excellent The things that differ—that revelation which God has given of himself makes the nicest distinction between right and wrong ; between vice and virtue ; showing how ye should walk so as to please God, and, consequently, acquire the most excellent portion that human spirits can have on this side heaven : for all these blessings ye acknowledge to receive from your law, being instructed, being catechised, from your infancy, in the knowledge of divine things.

Verse 19. And art confident, &c. Ye believe that ye are able to teach others, and to be guides and lights to the bewildered, darkened Gentiles, who may become proselytes to your religion.

Verse 20. An instructor of the foolish, &c. Ye believe the Gentiles to be babes and fools when compared with yourselves ; that ye alone possess the only true knowledge ; that ye are the only favourites of heaven ; and that all nations must look up to you as possessing the only form of knowledge, the grand scheme and draught of all true science, of every thing that is worthy to be learned : the system of eternal truth, derived from the law.

Verse 21. Thou therefore That the Jewish priesthood was exceedingly corrupt in the time of the apostle, and long before, is fully evident from the sacred writings and from Josephus.

Verse 25. For circumcision verily profiteth It is a blessing to belong to the church of God and wear the sign of the covenant, provided the terms of the covenant are complied with.

But if thou be a breaker of the law If thou do not observe the conditions of the covenant, the outward sign is both without meaning and without effect.

Verse 26. Therefore if the uncircumcision, &c. If the Gentile be found to act according to the spirit and design of the law, his acting thus uprightly, according to the light which God had afforded him, will be reckoned to him as if he were circumcised, and walked agreeably to the law.

Verse 27. And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature] And shall not the Gentile, who is according to the custom of his country—who is, by birth, not obliged to be circumcised.

If it fulfil the law] If such a person act according to the spirit and design of the law; judge, condemn thee, who, whilst thou dost enjoy the letter, the written law, and bearest in thy body the proof of the circumcision, which it requires, dost transgress that law?

Verse 28. For he is not a Jew] A genuine member of the church of God, who has only an outward profession.

Neither is that circumcision] Circumcision is a rite which represents a spiritual thing, viz., the change and purification of the heart, as may be seen, Jer. iv. 4, 6, 10, ix. 26; Ezek. xlv. 7, 9.

Verse 29. But he is a Jew] A true member of the church of God.

Which is one inwardly] Who has his heart purified, according to what God has uniformly prescribed by his prophets; for circumcision is of the heart, in the spirit, by the Spirit of God, who is the author of all spiritual affections, and holy purposes.

Whose praise is not of men] It has, with great probability, been conjectured that the apostle may here refer to the signification of the name Jew, or Judah, Yehudah, PRAISE, from Yadah, he PRAISED.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle points out the peculiar privileges of the Jews, 1-8. But shows that they, also, as well as the Gentiles, had sinned, and forfeited all right and title to God's especial favour, 9. The corrupt state of all mankind, 10-18. All the world is guilty before God, and none can be justified by the works of the law, 19, 20. God's MERCY in providing redemption for a lost world, by Jesus Christ, 21-26. This excludes boasting on the part both of Jew and Gentile; provides salvation through faith for both; and does not set aside, but establishes, the law, 27-31.

WHAT advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision?

2 Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God.

3 For what if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?

4 God forbid: yea, let God be true, but every man a liar; as it is written, That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged.

5 But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God, what shall we say? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? (I speak as a man.)

6 God forbid: for then how shall God judge the world?

7 For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, why yet am I also judged as a sinner?

8 And not rather, (as we be slanderously reported, and as some affirm that we say,) Let us do evil, that good may come? whose damnation is just.

9 What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved, both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin;

10 As it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one:

11 There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God.

12 They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

13 Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their

As the nine first verses are a dialogue between the apostle and a Jew, I shall prefix the speakers to their respective questions and answers, to make the whole the more intelligible to the reader.

Verse 1. JEW. What advantage then hath the Jew?] As if he had said: You lately allowed (chap. ii. 25) that circumcision verily profited; but if circumcision, or our being in covenant with God, raises us no higher in the divine favour than the Gentiles; wherein lies the superior honour of the Jew?

Verse 2. APOSTLE. Much every way] The Jews, in reference to the means and motives of obedience, enjoy many advantages beyond the Gentiles; and principally, because to them were committed the oracles.

Verse 3. JEW. For what] What then, if some did not believe, &c. If some of the Jewish nations have abused their privileges, shall their wickedness annul the PROMISE which God made to Abraham, that he would, by an everlasting covenant, be a God to him and to his seed after him? Gen. xvii. 7.

Verse 4. APOSTLE. God forbid] Let it not be, far from it, 25. Job viii. 3. xxiv. 17.—^a Ch. v. 20. vi. 1. 15.—^b Gr. charged. Ch. i. 21, &c. ii. 1, &c.—^c Ver. 23. Gal. iii. 28.—^d Ps. xiv. 1, 2, 3. liii. 1.—^e Ps. v. 9. Jer. v. 16.

by no means. We must ever maintain that God is true, and that if, in any case, his promise appear to fail, it is because the condition on which it is given has not been complied with.

Verse 5. JEW. But if our unrighteousness commend the righteousness of God] May we not suppose that our unrighteousness may serve to commend and illustrate the mercy of God in keeping and fulfilling to us the promise which he made to our forefathers?

Verse 6. APOSTLE. God forbid] By no means. God cannot be unjust; were he unjust, he could not be qualified to judge the world, nor inflict that punishment on the unfaithful Jews, to which I refer.

Verse 7. JEW. For if the truth of God, &c.] But to resume my reasoning (see verse 5): If the faithfulness of God in keeping his promise made to our fathers is, through our unfaithfulness, made far more glorious than it otherwise would have been, why should we then be blamed for that which must redound so much to the honour of God.

Verse 8. APOSTLE. And not rather, &c.] And why do you not say, seeing you assume this ground, that in all cases tongues they have used deceit; * the poison of asps is under their lips:

14 * Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness:

15 * Their feet are swift to shed blood:

16 Destruction and misery are in their ways:

17 And the way of peace have they not known:

18 * There is no fear of God before their eyes.

19 Now we know that what things soever * the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that * every mouth may be stopped, and * all the world may become * guilty before God.

20 Therefore, * by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for * by the law is the knowledge of sin.

* Ps. cxi. 8.—* Ps. x. 7.—* Prov. i. 16. Isa. lix. 7, 8.—* Ps. xxxvi. 1.—* John x. 34. xv. 26.—* Job v. 16. Ps. cvii. 42. Ezek. xvi. 63. Ch. i. 20. ii. 1.—* Ver. 9, 23. we should do wickedly, because God, by freely pardoning, can so glorify his own grace? This is a most impious sentiment, but it follows from your reasoning.

Verse 9. Jew. What then? After all, have not we Jews a better claim to the privileges of the kingdom of God than the Gentiles have.

Apostle. No, in no wise. For I have already proved that both Jews and Gentiles are under the guilt of sin; that they are equally unworthy of the blessings of the Messiah's kingdom; and that they must both equally owe their salvation to the mere mercy of God.

Verse 10. As it is written. See Ps. xiv. 1, 2, 3; from which this and the two following verses are taken.

There is none righteous. This is true, not only of the Jews, but of the Gentiles; of every soul of man, considered in his natural and practical state, previously to his receiving the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ. There is no righteous principle in them, and consequently, no righteous act can be expected from them, see on ver. 12.

Verse 12. They are all gone out of the way. They have all diverged from the right way; they have either abandoned or corrupted the worship of God: the Jews, in forsaking the law and the prophets; and the Gentiles, in acting contrary to the law which God had written on their hearts.

They are together become unprofitable. They are useless, good for nothing; or, as the Hebrew has it, they are putrid: he views the whole mass of mankind as slain and thrown together, to putrify in heaps.

There is none that doeth good. If there be no righteousness within, there will be no acts of goodness without.

Verse 13. Their throat is an open sepulchre. This and all the following verses to the end of the 18th are found in the Septuagint, but not in the Hebrew text.

Their throat is an open sepulchre.—By their malicious and wicked words they bury, as it were, the reputation of all men. The whole of this verse appears to belong to their habit of lying, defamation, slandering, &c., by which they wounded, blasted, and poisoned the reputation of others.

Verse 14. Whose mouth is full of cursing, &c. They never speak but in profane oaths, blasphemies, and malice.

Verse 15. Their feet are swift to shed blood. They make use of every means in their power to destroy the reputation and lives of the innocent.

Verse 16. Destruction and misery are in their ways. Destruction is their work, and misery to themselves and to the objects of their malice is the consequence of their impious and murderous conduct.

Verse 17. And the way of peace have they not known. They neither have peace in themselves, nor do they suffer others to live in quiet: they are brooders and fomenters of discord.

Verse 18. There is no fear of God before their eyes. This completes their bad character; they are downright atheists, at least practically such. They fear not God's judgments, although his eye is upon them in their evil ways. There is not one article of what is charged against the Jews and Gentiles here that may not be found justified by the histories of both, in the most ample manner.

Verse 19. What things soever the law saith. Either the term law must here mean the Jewish writings in general, or that rule of moral conduct which God had given to both Jews and Gentiles: to the former in their own scriptures; to the latter in that law written in their hearts by his own Spirit, and acknowledged in their written codes, and in their pleadings in every civil case.

Verse 20. Therefore by the deeds of the law. On the score of obedience to this moral law, there shall no flesh, no human being, be justified; none can be accepted in the sight of God. And why? Because by the law is the knowledge of sin: it is that which ascertains what sin is; shows how men have deviated from its righteous demands; and sentences them to death because they have broken it.

Verse 21. But now the righteousness of God. God's method of saving sinners is now shown, by the Gospel, to be through his own mere mercy, by Christ Jesus; without the law—without any right or claim which might result from obedience to the law.

Verse 22. Even the righteousness of God. That method of saving sinners which is not of works, but by faith in Christ Jesus; and it is not restrained to any particular people, as the law and its privileges were, but is unto all mankind in its intention and offer, and becomes effectual to them that believe.

Verse 23. For all have sinned. And consequently are equally helpless and guilty.

And come short of the glory of God. These words have been variously translated. The simple meaning seems to be this: that all have sinned, and none can enjoy God's glory but they that are holy; consequently both Jews and Gentiles have failed in their endeavours to attain it, as, by the works of any law, no human being can be justified.

Verse 24. Through the redemption. The ransom price, which is in the sacrifice of Christ Jesus. The original properly means the price laid down for the redemption of a captive. It here means the liberation purchased by the blood-shedding of Christ. Eph. i. 17, see also Col. i. 4.

Verse 25. Whom God hath set forth. Appointed and published to be a propitiation, the mercy-seat, or place of atonement; because the blood of the sacrifice was sprinkled on and before that, in order to obtain remission of sin, punishment, &c.

Through faith in his blood. This shows what we are to understand both by the redemption, and the propitiation; viz. that they refer to the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ, as the atonement made, and the price paid down, for the redemption of the souls of men.

To declare his righteousness. For the manifestation of his righteousness; his mercy in saving sinners, by sending Jesus Christ to make an atonement for them.

Verse 26. To declare, I say, at this time. To manifest now, by the dispensation of the gospel, his righteousness, his infinite mercy; and to manifest it in such a way that he might still appear to be the just God, and yet the justifier, the pardoner, of him who believeth in Jesus.

Hitherto, from the ninth verse, the apostle had gone on without interruption, proving that Jew and Gentile were in a state of guilt and condemnation, and that they could be saved only by the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. The ness : that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus.

27 * Where is boasting then ? It is excluded. By what law ? of works ? Nay, but by the law of faith.

28 Therefore we conclude ^b that a man is justified by faith, without the deeds of the law.

29 Is he the God of the Jews only ? is he not also

* Ch. ii. 17, 23. iv. 2. 1 Cor. i. 29, 31. Eph. ii. 9.— Acts xiii. 38, 39. Ver. 20, 21, 22. Ch. viii. 5. Gal. ii. 16.

Jew, finding his boasted privileges all at stake; interrupts him and asks :

Verse 27. Jew. Where is boasting then ? This glorying of ours. Have we nothing in which we can trust for our acceptance with God ?

APOSTLE. It is excluded. It is shut out ; the door of heaven is shut against every thing of this kind.

Jew. By what law ? By what rule, doctrine, or reason is it shut out ? by the law of works ?

APOSTLE. Nay. Not by the law of works ; glorying is not cut off or shut out by that ; it stands in full force as the rule of life ; but you have sinned and need pardon. The law of works grants no pardon, it requires obedience, and threatens the disobedient with death. But all glorying in the expectation of salvation, through your own obedience, is excluded by the law : the doctrine of faith, faith alone, in the mercy of God, through the propitiation made by the blood of Jesus (ver. 25), is that by which you can be justified, pardoned, and taken into the divine favour.

Verse 28. Therefore we conclude, &c.] We prove by fair, rational consequence that a man—any man is justified—has his sins blotted out, and is received into the divine favour, by faith in Christ's blood, without the deeds of the law, which never could afford, either to Jew or Gentile, a ground for justification ; because both have sinned against the law which God has given them ; and, consequently forfeited all right of the Gentiles ? Yes, of the Gentiles also :

30 Seeing ^c it is one God, which shall justify the circumcision by faith, and uncircumcision through faith.

31 Do we then ^d make void the law through faith ? God forbid : yea, we establish the law.

* Ch. x. 12, 13. Gal. iii. 8, 20, 28.—^d Matt. v. 17, 18. Gal. iii. 19, 23, 24.

and title to the blessings which the obedient might claim.

Verse 29. Is he the God of the Jews only ? Is not God the maker, preserver, and redeemer, also of the Gentiles ? All have equally sinned ; and there is no reason, if God be disposed to show mercy at all, that he should prefer the one to the other.

Verse 30. Seeing it is one God.] This has been rendered, Seeing God is one. It however makes little difference in the sense : the apostle's meaning most evidently is, it is one and the same God who made both Jews and Gentiles, who shall justify. It is fanciful to suppose that the apostle has one meaning when he says, BY faith, and a different meaning when he says, THROUGH faith. Both the prepositions are to be understood in precisely the same sense.

Verse 31. Do we then make void the law through faith ?] 1. By law here we may understand the whole of the Mosaic law, in its rites and ceremonies ; of which Jesus Christ was the subject and the end. All the law had respect to him, and the doctrine of faith in Christ Jesus established the very claims and demands of that law, by showing that all was accomplished in the passion and death of Christ ; for without shedding of blood, the law would allow of no remission. 2. We may understand, also, the moral law, that which relates to the regulation of the manners or conduct of men. This law also was established by the doctrine of salvation by faith ; because this faith works by love, and love is the principle of obedience.

CHAPTER IV.

Abraham was justified by faith, and not by the works of the law ; for his faith was imputed to him for righteousness, 1-5. David also bears testimony to the same doctrine, 6-8. Abraham, the father of the Jewish race, was justified by faith, even before he was circumcised ; therefore salvation must be of the Gentiles as well as the Jews, 9-12. And the promise that all the nations of the earth should be blessed in him, was made to him while he was in an uncircumcised state ; and, therefore, if salvation were of the Jews alone, the law that was given after the promise, would make the promise of no effect, 13-17. Description of Abraham's faith, and its effects, 18-22. This account is left on record for our salvation, that we might believe on Christ, who was delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification, 23-25.

WHAT shall we then say that * Abraham, our father as pertaining to the flesh, hath found ?

2 For if Abraham were ^b justified by works, he hath whereof to glory ; but not before God.

* Isa. li. 2. Matt. iii. 9. John viii. 39, 39. 2 Cor. xi. 22.—^b Ch. iii. 20, 27, 28.

We may still suppose that the dialogue is carried on between the apostle and the Jew, and it will make the subject still more clear to assign to each his respective part.

Verse 1. Jew. What shall we then say ?] The pertaining to the flesh, must here refer to the sign in Abraham's flesh, viz., his circumcision ; on which the Jew would found his right to peculiar blessings. [It is better to take the expression as antithetical—i. e., as contrasting works with faith.]

Verse 2. For if Abraham were justified by works] The Jew proceeds :—I conclude, therefore, that Abraham was

3 For, what saith the scripture ? * Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness.

4 Now ^d to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt.

* Gen. xv. 6. Gal. iii. 6. James ii. 23.—^d Ch. xi. 6.

justified by works, or by his obedience to this law of circumcision ; and, consequently, he has cause for glorying, to exult in something which he has done to entitle him to these blessings.

APOSTLE. But not before God.] These seem to be the apostle's words, and contain the beginning of his answer to the arguments of the Jew, as if he had said :—Allowing that Abraham might glory in being called from heathenish darkness into such marvellous light, and exult in the privileges which God had granted to him ; yet this glorying was not

5 But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth * the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness.

6 Even as David also describeth the blessedness of the man, unto whom God imputeth righteousness without works,

7 Saying, ^b Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven, and whose sins are covered.

8 Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin.

9 Cometh this blessedness then upon the circumcision only, or upon the uncircumcision also? for we say that faith was reckoned to Abraham for righteousness.

10 How was it then reckoned? when ^c he was in circumcision, or in uncircumcision? Not in circumcision, but in uncircumcision.

11 And ^c he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that ^d he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also:

* Josh. xiv. 2.—^b Ps. xxxii. 1, 2.—^c Gen. xvii. 10.—^d Luke xix. 9. Ver. 12, 16. Gal. iii. 7.—^e Gen. xvii. 4, &c. Gal. iii. 29.—^f Gal. iii. 18.—^g Ch. iii. 20. v. 13, 20. vii. 8, 10, 11. 1 Cor. xv. 56. ^h Cor. iii.

before God as a reason why those privileges should be granted; the glorying itself being a consequence of these very privileges.

Verse 4. Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. Therefore, if Abraham had been justified by works, the blessings he received would have been given to him as a reward for those works, and consequently his believing could have had no part in his justification, and his faith would have been useless.

Verse 5. But to him that worketh not Which was the case with Abraham, for he was called when he was ungodly, i. e., an idolater; and, on his believing, was freely justified; and, as all men have sinned, none can be justified by works; and, therefore, justification, if it take place at all, must take place in behalf of the ungodly, inasmuch as all mankind are such.

Verse 6. Even as David also, &c. David, in Ps. xxxii. 1, 2, gives us also the true notion of this way of justification i. e., by faith, without the merit of works.

Verse 7. Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven. That is, the man is truly happy whose iniquities, whose transgressions of the law are forgiven; for by these he was exposed to the most grievous punishment. Whose sins, his innumerable deviations from the strict rule of truth and righteousness, are covered—entirely removed out of sight, and thrown into oblivion.

Verse 8. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord will not impute sin. That man is truly happy to whose charge God does not reckon sin.

Verse 9. Cometh this blessedness—upon the circumcision only. The word only, is very properly supplied by our translators, and indeed is found in some excellent MSS., and is here quite necessary to complete the sense.

Verse 10. How was it then reckoned? In what circumstances was Abraham when this blessing was bestowed upon him. When he was circumcised or before?

Not in circumcision but in uncircumcision. Faith was reckoned to Abraham for justification, as we read Gen. xv. 6, (where see the note); but circumcision was not instituted till about fourteen or fifteen years after, Gen. xvii. 1, &c.

Verse 11. And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal, &c. So far was obedience to the law of circumcision from being the reason of his justification, that he not only received this justification, before he was circumcised, but he received the sign of circumcision, as a seal of the pardon which he had before actually received. And thus he became the father, the great head and representative, of all them that believe; particularly the Gentiles, who are now in precisely the same state in which Abraham was when he received the mercy of God.

Verse 12. And the father of circumcision. He is also the head and representative of all the circumcision, of all 12 And the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised.

13 For the promise, that he should be the ^e heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law; but through the righteousness of faith.

14 For, ^f if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect:

15 Because ^g the law worketh wrath: for where no law is, ^h there is no transgression.

16 Therefore it is of faith, that it might be ⁱ by grace; ^j to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed; not to that only which is of the law, but to that also which is of the faith of Abraham, ^k who is the father of us all.

17 (As it is written, ^l I have made thee a father of many nations,) ^m before him whom he believed, even God, ⁿ who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those ^o things which be not as though they were.

18 Who against hope believed in hope, that he might become the father of many nations, accord-

Jews who walk in the steps of that faith; who seek for justification by faith only, and not by the works of the law; for this was the faith that Abraham had before he received circumcision.

Verse 13. For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world Abraham is here represented as having all the world given to him as his inheritance; because in him all nations of the earth are blessed: this must therefore relate to their being all interested in the Abrahamic covenant; and every person, now that the covenant is fully explained, has the privilege of claiming justification through faith, by the blood of the Lamb, in virtue of this original grant.

Verse 14. For, if they which are of the law be heirs If the Jews only be heirs of the promise made to Abraham, and that on the ground of prior obedience to the law, then faith is made void—is entirely useless; and the promise, which was made to faith, is made of none effect.

Verse 15. Because the law worketh wrath Law necessarily subjects the transgressor to punishment; for where no law is—where no rule of duty is enacted and acknowledged, there is no transgression; and where there is no transgression there can be no punishment, for there is no law to enforce it. But the Jews have a law, which they have broken; and now they are exposed to the penal sanctions of that law; and, if the promises of pardon, without the works of the law, do not extend to them, they must be finally miserable, because they have all broken the law, and the law exacts punishment.

Verse 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace On this account the promise is mercifully grounded, not on obedience to a law, but on the infinite goodness of God: and thus the promise is sure to all the seed—to all, both Jews and Gentiles, who, believing in Christ Jesus, have a right to all the blessings contained in the Abrahamic covenant. All the seed necessarily comprehends all mankind.

Verse 17. As it is written, I have made thee a father That Abraham's being a father of many nations has relation to the covenant of God made with him, may be seen, Gen. xvii. 4, 5.

God, who quickeneth the dead, &c. God is the most proper object of trust and dependance; for being almighty, eternal, and unchangeable, he can even raise the dead to life, and call those things which be not as though they were.

Verse 18. Who against hope believed in hope Though, in the ordinary course of things, he had not the best foundation of hope, yet he believed that he should be the father of many nations, according to that which was spoken; namely, that his posterity should be like the stars of heaven for multitude, and like the dust of the earth.

Verse 19. He considered not his own body now dead He showed at once the correctness and energy of his faith: God cannot lie; Abraham can believe. It is true that, according to the course of nature, he and Sarah are so old that they ing to that which was spoken, * So shall thy seed be.

19 And being not weak in faith, ^b he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb:

20 He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God.

21 And being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, ^c he was able also to perform.

* Gen. xv. 6.—^b Gen. xvii. 17. xviii. 11. Heb. xi. 11, 12.—^c Ps. cxv. 3. Luke i. 37, 45. Heb. xi. 19.—^d Ch. xv. 4. 1 Cor. x. 9, 11.—^e Acts ii. 24. xiii. 30.—^f Isa. liii. 5, 6. Ch. iii. 25. v. 6. viii. 32.

cannot have children; but God is almighty, and can do whatsoever he will, and will fulfil his promise.

Verse 21. And being fully persuaded] His soul was full of confidence that the truth of God bound him to fulfil his promise, and his power enabled him to do it.

Verse 22. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.] Abraham's strong faith in the promise of the coming Saviour, for this was essential to his faith, was reckoned to him for justification: for it is not said that any righteousness, either his own, or that of another, was imputed or reckoned to him for justification; but it, i. e., his faith in God.

Verse 24. But for us also] The mention of this circumstance has a much more extensive design than merely to honour Abraham. It is recorded as the model, according to which God will save both Jews and Gentiles: indeed there 22 And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness.

23 Now ^d it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him;

24 But for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe ^e on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead;

25 ^f Who was delivered for our offences, and ^g was raised again for our justification.

2 Cor. v. 21. Gal. i. 4. 1 Pet. ii. 24. iii. 18. Heb. ix. 28.—^h Cor. xv. 17. 1 Pet. i. 21.

can be no other way of salvation; as all have sinned, all must either be saved by faith through Christ Jesus, or finally perish.

Verse 25. Who was delivered for our offences] Who was delivered up to death as a sacrifice for our sins; for in what other way, or for what other purpose, could He, who is innocence itself, be delivered for our offences?

And was raised again for our justification.] He was raised that we might have the fullest assurance that the death of Christ had accomplished the end for which it took place; viz., our reconciliation to God, and giving us a title to that eternal life, into which he has entered, and taken with him our human nature, as the first-fruits of the resurrection of mankind.

CHAPTER V.

The effects of justification by faith, peace with God, 1. The joyous hope of eternal glory, 2. Glorifying in tribulation, 3. And gaining thereby patience, experience, and hope, 4. And having the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit, 5. The state of the world when Christ died for it, 6-10. Jesus Christ is an atonement, 11. Sin and death entered into the world by Adam's transgression, and all became guilty before God, 12-14. God's grace in sending Christ into the world to save fallen man, 15-19. The law is brought in to show the exceeding sinfulness of sin, 20. The grace of Christ is to be as extensive in its influences and reign, as sin has been in its enslaving and destructive nature, 21.

THEREFORE ^a being justified by faith, we have ^b peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ:

2 ^c By whom also we have access by faith into this grace ^d wherein we stand, and ^e rejoice in hope of the glory of God.

3 And not only so, but ^f we glory in tribulations also: ^g knowing that tribulation worketh patience;

* Isa. xxxii. 17. John xvi. 33. Ch. iii. 28, 30.—^b Eph. ii. 14. Col. i. 20.—^c John x. 9. xiv. 6. Eph. ii. 18. iii. 12. Heb. x. 19.—^d 1 Cor. xv. 1.—^e Heb. ii. 8.—^f Matt. v. 11, 12. Acts v. 41. 2 Cor.

Verse 1. Therefore being justified by faith] We are justified—have all our sins pardoned by faith, as the instrumental cause; for, being sinners, we have no works of righteousness that we can plead.

We have peace with God] Before, while sinners, we were in a state of enmity with God, which was sufficiently proved by our rebellion against his authority, and our transgression of his laws; but now, being reconciled, we have peace with God. Peace is generally the first fruits of our justification.

Through our Lord Jesus Christ] His passion and death being the sole cause of our reconciliation to God.

Verse 2. By whom also] We are not only indebted to our

4 ^h And patience, experience; and experience, hope:

5 ⁱ And hope maketh not ashamed; ^j because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.

6 For when we were yet without strength, ^k in due time ^l Christ died for the ungodly.

7 For scarcely for a righteous man will one die:

xii. 10. Phil. ii. 17. James i. 2, 12. 1 Pet. iii. 14.—^m James i. 8.—ⁿ James i. 12.—^o Phil. i. 20.—^p 2 Cor. i. 22. Gal. iv. 6. Eph. i. 13, 14.—^q Or, according to the time. Gal. iv. 4.—^r Ver. 8. Ch. iv. 25.

Lord Jesus Christ, for the free and full pardon which we have received, but our continuance in a justified state depends upon his gracious influence in our hearts, and his intercession before the throne of God.

We have access] We have received this access. It was only through Christ that we could at first approach God; and it is only through him that the privilege is continued to us. And this access to God, or introduction to the divine presence, is to be considered as a lasting privilege. We are not brought to God for the purpose of an interview, but to remain with him; to be his household; and, by faith, to behold his face, and walk in the light of his countenance.

* yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die.

8 But ^b God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

9 Much more then, being now justified ^c by his blood, we shall be saved ^d from wrath through him.

10 For ^e if, when we were enemies, ^f we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled we shall be saved ^g by his life.

11 And not only so, but we also ^h joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the ⁱ atonement.

12 Wherefore, as ^j by one man sin entered into the world, and ^k death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, ^l for that all have sinned :

^a Luke vi. 33. Col. i. 13, 14.—^b John iii. 16. xv. 13. 1 Pet. iii. 18. 1 John iii. 16. iv. 9, 10.—^c Ch. iii. 25. Eph. ii. 13. Gal. iv. 9.—ⁱ Or, reconciliation, var. 10. 2 Cor. v. 18, 19.—^j Gen. iii. 6. 1 Cor. xv. 21.—

Into this grace] This state of favour and acceptance. Wherein we stand] Having firm footing, and a just title through the blood of the Lamb to the full salvation of God. And rejoice] Have solid happiness, from the evidence we have of our acceptance with Him.

In hope of the glory of God.] Having our sins remitted, and our souls adopted into the heavenly family, we are become heirs; for if children, then heirs, Gal. iv. 7; and that glory of God is now become our endless inheritance.

Verse 3. But we glory in tribulations also] All the sufferings we endure for the testimony of our Lord are so sanctified to us by his grace, that they become powerful instruments of increasing our happiness.

Tribulation worketh patience] Endurance under trials, without sustaining loss or deterioration. It is a metaphor taken from refining metals.

Verse 4. And patience, experience] Full proof, by trial, of the truth of our religion, the solidity of our Christian state, and the faithfulness of our God. In such cases we have the opportunity of putting our religion to the test; and, by every such test, it receives the deeper sterling stamp. The apostle uses here also a metaphor taken from the purifying, refining, and testing of silver and gold.

Experience, hope] For we thus calculate, that he who has supported us in the past will support us in those which may yet come.

Verse 5. And hope maketh not ashamed] A hope that is not rationally founded will have its expectation cut off; and then shame and confusion will be the portion of its possessor.

Because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts] We have the most solid and convincing testimony of God's love to us, by that measure of it which he has communicated to our hearts. There it is poured out, and diffused abroad; filling, quickening, and invigorating all our powers and faculties. This love is the spring of all our actions; it is the motive of our obedience; the principle through which we love God, we love him because he first loved us; and we love him with a love worthy of himself, because it springs from him: it is his own; and every flame that rises from this pure and vigorous fire must be pleasing in his sight; it consumes what is unholy; refines every passion and appetite; sublimates the whole, and assimilates all to itself.

Verse 6. For when we were yet without strength] Their former state he points out in four particulars; which may be applied to men in general.

I. They were without strength; in a weak, dying state: neither able to resist sin, nor do any good: utterly devoid of power to extricate themselves from the misery of their situation.

II. They were ungodly; without either the worship or knowledge of the true God; they had not God in them; and, consequently, were not partakers of the divine nature: Satan lived in, ruled, and enslaved their hearts.

III. They were sinners, aiming at happiness, but constantly missing the mark, which is the ideal meaning of the Hebrew and the Greek.

IV. They were enemies, ver. 10, persons who hated God

13 (For until the law sin was in the world: but ^a sin is not imputed when there is no law.

14 Nevertheless, death reigned from ^b Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression, ^c who is the figure of him that was to come.

15 But not as the offence, so also ^d is the free gift. ^e For if, through the offence of one, many be dead; much ^f more the grace of God, and the gift by grace, ^g which ^h is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded ⁱ unto many.

16 And not as ^j it was by one that sinned, so ^k is the gift: for the judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift ^l is of many offences unto justification.

17 For, if ^m by one man's offence death reigned and holiness; and acted in continual hostility to both. What a gradation is here!

These four particulars point out the natural and practical state of every human being, previously to his regeneration by the grace and Spirit of God.

In due time Christ died for the ungodly.] This due or proper time will appear in the following particulars:—1. Christ was manifested in the flesh when the world needed him most. 2. When the powers of the human mind had been cultivated to the utmost, both in Greece and Rome, and had made every possible effort, but all in vain, to find out some efficient scheme of happiness. 3. When the Jews were in the lowest state of corruption, and had the greatest need of the promised deliverer. 4. When the fullness of the time came, foretold by the prophets. 5. When both Jews and Gentiles, the one from their jealousy, the other from their learning, were best qualified to detect imposture and to ascertain fact. 6. In a word, Christ came when his advent was most likely to promote its great object—glory to God in the highest, and peace and good will among men.

Died for the ungodly.] He died INSTEAD of the ungodly, see also ver. 8, so Luke xxii. 19. In this way the preposition is used by the best Greek writers.

Verse 7. For scarcely for a righteous man will one die] There is nothing in the life or conduct of a merely just man that would so endear him to any one, as to induce him to risk his life to save such a person.

Peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die.] This is the truly benevolent man, whose life is devoted to the public good: for such a person, peradventure, some who have had their lives preserved perhaps by his bounty, would even dare to die: but such cases may be considered merely as possible: they exist, it is true, in romance; and we find a few rare instances of friends exposing themselves to death for their friends.

Verse 8. But God commendeth his love, &c.] God hath set this act of infinite mercy in the most conspicuous light, so as to recommend it to the notice and admiration of all.

While we were yet sinners] We were neither righteous nor good; but impious and wicked.

Verse 9. Much more then, being now justified] If Jesus Christ, in his endless compassion towards us, gave his life for ours, while we were yet enemies; being now justified by his blood—by his death on the cross, and thus reconciled to God we shall be saved from wrath—from punishment for past transgression, through him—by what he has thus suffered for us.

Verse 10. We were reconciled] The enmity existing before rendered the reconciliation necessary. In every human heart there is a measure of enmity to holiness, and, consequently, to the author of it.

We shall be saved by his life.] For, as he died for our sins, so he rose again for our justification; and his resurrection to life is the grand proof that he has accomplished whatever he had purposed in reference to the salvation of man. This may be also understood of his life of intercession; for it is written, he ever LIVETH to make INTERCESSION for us, Heb. vii. 25. Through this life of intercession at the by one; much more they which receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ.)

18 Therefore, as^a by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so^b by the righteousness of one, the free gift came^c upon all men unto justification of life.

19 For, as by one man's^d disobedience, many right hand of God we are spared and blessed. And it will not be amiss to consider that, as our salvation implies the renovation of our nature, and our being restored to the image of God, so, we shall be saved in his life: for, I suppose, it is pretty generally agreed, that the life of God in the soul of man is essential to its salvation. The example also of the life of Christ is a means of salvation.

Verse 11. We also joy in God, &c.] We now feel that God is reconciled to us, and we are reconciled to him: the enmity is removed from our souls; and He, for Christ's sake, through whom we have received the atonement, the reconciliation, has remitted the wrath, the punishment, which we deserved: and now, through this reconciliation, we expect an eternal glory.

It was certainly improper to translate the Greek here by atonement, instead of reconciliation. It does not mean the atonement here, as we generally understand that word, viz., the sacrificial death of Christ; but rather the effect of that atonement, the removal of the enmity, and by this, the thorough change of our state from enmity to friendship.

Verse 12. Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world] From this verse, to the conclusion of the chapter, the apostle produces a strong argument to prove that, as all mankind stood in need of the grace of God in Christ to redeem them from their sins, so this grace has been afforded equally to all, both Jews and Gentiles.

Sin entered into the world] There was neither sin nor death before the offence of Adam; after that there were both; Adam's transgression was therefore the cause of both.

And death by sin] Natural evil is evidently the effect of moral evil; if man had never sinned, he had never suffered. Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return, was never spoken till after Adam had eaten the forbidden fruit.

Death passed upon all men] Hence we see that all human beings partook in the consequences of Adam's sin. He propagated his like; and, with the rudiments of his own nature, propagated those of his moral likeness.

For that all have sinned] All are born with a sinful nature; and the seeds of this evil soon vegetate, and bring forth corresponding fruits. There has never been one instance of an immaculate human soul since the fall of Adam. Every man sins, and sins too after the similitude of Adam's transgression.

Verse 13. For until the law sin was in the world] As death reigned from Adam to Moses, so also did sin. Now, as there was no written law from Adam to that given to Moses, the death that prevailed could not be the breach of that law; for sin, so as to be punished with temporal death, is not imputed where there is no law, which shows the penalty of sin to be death. Therefore, men are not subjected to death for their own personal transgressions, but for the sin of Adam; as, through his transgression, all come into the world with the seeds of death and corruption in their own nature, superadded to their moral depravity. All are sinful—all are mortal—and all must die.

Who is the figure of him that was to come] Adam was the figure, the type, pattern, or resemblance of him who was to come; i. e., of the Messiah. The correspondence between them appears in the following particulars:—1. Through him, as its spring and fountain, sin became diffused through the world, so that every man comes into the world with sinful propensities: for by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, ver. 12. Through Christ, as its spring and fountain, righteousness becomes diffused through the earth; so that every man is made partaker of a principle of grace and truth: for he is the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, John i. 9, 2. As in Adam all die; so in Christ shall all be made alive, 1 Cor. xv. 22. For, since by man, came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead, ver. 21. 3. As in or through Adam guilt came upon all men, so, were made sinners; so, by the obedience of one, shall many be made righteous.

20 Moreover, the law entered, that the offence might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound:

21 That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord.

^aJohn xv. 22. Ch. iii. 20. iv. 15. vii. 8. Gal. iii. 19, 23.—^bLuke vii. 47. 1 Tim. i. 14.—^c1 Cor. xv. 56, 57. Ch. vi. 18, 21, 23.

through Christ, the free gift comes upon all men unto justification of life, ver. 18. These alone seem to be the instances in which a similitude exists between Adam and Christ.

Verse 15. For if, through the offence of one, many be dead] That the many of the apostle here means all mankind, needs no proof to any but that person who finds himself qualified to deny that all men are mortal. And if the many, that is, all mankind, have died through the offence of one; certainly the gift by grace, which abounds unto the many, by Christ Jesus, must have reference to every human being. For it is most evident that the same persons are referred to in both clauses of the verse. If the apostle had believed that the benefits of the death of Christ had extended only to a select number of mankind, he never could have used the language he has done here.

Hath abounded unto many] That is, Christ Jesus died for every man; salvation is free for all; saving grace is tendered to every soul; and a measure of the divine light is actually communicated to every heart. John i. 9.

Verse 16. And not as it was by one that sinned] That is, the judicial act that followed Adam's sin took its rise from his one offence alone, and terminated in condemnation; but the free gift of God in Christ takes its rise also from the many offences which men, in a long course of life, have personally committed; and the object of this grace is to justify them freely, and bring them to eternal life.

Verse 17. Death reigned by one] Death is here personified, and is represented as reigning over the human race; and death, of course, reigns unto death; he is known as reigning, by the destruction of his subjects.

Shall reign in life] Those who receive, retain, and improve the abundant grace offered by Jesus Christ, shall be redeemed from the empire of death, and exalted to the throne of God, to live and reign with him ever, world without end, See Rev. i. 5, 6; ii. 7, 10, 11; iii. 21.

Verse 18. Therefore, as by the offence of one, &c.] The Greek text of this verse, literally rendered, stands thus: Therefore, as by one offence unto all men, unto condemnation; so likewise, by one righteousness unto all men, to justification of life. This is evidently an elliptical sentence, and its full meaning can be gathered only from the context. He who had no particular purpose to serve would, most probably, understand it, from the context, thus: Therefore, as by one sin all men came into condemnation; so also by one righteous act all men came unto justification of life; which is more fully expressed in the following verse. Now, leaving all particular creeds out of the question, and taking in the scope of the apostle's reasoning in this and the preceding chapter, is not the sense evidently this? Through the disobedience of Adam, a sentence of condemnation to death, without any promise or hope of a resurrection, passed upon all men; so, by the obedience of Christ unto death, this one grand righteous act, the sentence was so far reversed, that death shall not finally triumph, for all shall again be restored to life. Justice must have its due; and therefore all must die. The mercy of God, in Christ Jesus, shall have its due also; and therefore all shall be put into a salvable state here, and the whole human race shall be raised to life at the great day. Thus both justice and mercy are magnified; and neither is exalted at the expense of the other.

Verse 19. For, as by one man's disobedience, &c.] The explanation of this verse has been anticipated in the foregoing.

Verse 20. The law entered that the offence might abound] By law I understand the Mosaic law. By entering in, or rather, coming in privately, see Gal. ii. 4 (the only place where it occurs besides), I understand the temporary or limited use of that law, which was, as far as its rites and ceremonies are considered, confined to the Jewish people, and to them only till the Messiah should come; but considered as the moral law, or rule of conscience and life, it has in its spirit and power been slipped in—introduced into every conscience that sin might abound—that the true nature, deformity, and extent of sin might appear; for by the law is the knowledge of sin. [Instead of “the law entered,” we should read “the law came between.”] The abounding of sin is something more than the discovery of its deformity. It involves the idea of increase. The particle that, Mr. Wesley explains as implying consequence, and not design. This, however, is open to doubt.]

But where sin abounded] The grace of the gospel not only redeems from death, and restores to life, but brings the soul into such a relationship with God, and into such a participation of eternal glory, as we have no authority to believe ever would have been the portion even of Adam himself, had he even eternally retained his innocence.

Verse 21. That as sin hath reigned unto death] As extensively, as deeply, as universally, as sin, whether implying the act of transgression or the impure principle, from which the act proceeds, or both. Hath reigned, subjected the whole earth and all its inhabitants: the whole soul, and all its powers and faculties, unto death, temporal of the body, spiritual of the soul, and eternal of both; even so, as extensively, deeply, universally might grace reign—filling the whole earth, pervading, purifying the whole soul: through righteousness—through this doctrine of free salvation by the blood of the Lamb, and by the principle of holiness transfused through the soul by the Holy Ghost; unto eternal life—the proper object of an immortal spirit's hope, the only sphere where the human intellect can rest, and be happy in the place and state where God is; where he is seen as HE IS; and where he can be enjoyed without interruption in an eternal progression of knowledge and beatitude: by Jesus Christ our Lord—as the cause of our salvation, the means by which it is communicated, and the source whence it springs. Thus we find, that the salvation from sin here is as extensive and complete as the guilt and contamination of sin; death is conquered, hell disappointed, the devil confounded, and sin totally destroyed.

CHAPTER VI.

We must not abuse the boundless goodness of God by continuing in sin, under the wicked persuasion that the more we sin the more the grace of God will abound, 1. For, having been baptized into Christ, we have professed thereby to be dead to sin, 2-4. And to be planted in the likeness of his resurrection, 5. For we profess to be crucified with him, to die and rise again from the dead, 6-11. We should not, therefore, let sin reign in our bodies, but live to the glory of God, 12-14. The gospel makes no provision for living in sin, any more than the law did; and those who commit sin are the slaves of sin, 15-19. The degrading and afflictive service of sin and its wages, eternal death; the blessed affects of the grace of God in the heart, of which eternal life is the fruit, 20-23.

WHAT shall we say then? * Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? 2 God forbid. How shall we, that are ^b dead to sin, live any longer therein?

3 Know ye not, that ^c so many of us as ^d were baptized into Jesus Christ, ^e were baptized into his death?

4 Therefore, we are ^f buried with him by baptism into death: that ^g like as Christ was raised up from the dead by ^h the glory of the Father, ⁱ even so we also should walk in newness of life.

5 ^j For, if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.

Verse 1. Shall we continue in sin] It is very likely that these were the words of a believing Gentile, who might imagine, from the manner in which God had magnified his mercy, in blotting out his sin on his simply believing on Christ, that, supposing he even gave way to the evil propensities of his own heart, his transgressions could do him no hurt now that he was in the favour of God.

Verse 2. God forbid.] Let it not be; by no means; far from it; let not such a thing be mentioned!—Any of these is the meaning of the Greek phrase, which is a strong expression of surprise and disapprobation: and is not properly rendered by our God forbid! for, though this may express the same thing, yet it is not proper to make the sacred NAME so familiar on such occasions.

How shall we, that are dead to sin] The phraseology of this verse is common among Hebrews, Greeks, and Latins. To DIE to a thing or person is to have nothing to do with it

6 Knowing this, that ^k our old man is crucified with him, that ^l the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin.

7 For ^m he that is dead is ⁿ freed from sin.

8 Now ^o if we be dead with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him:

9 Knowing that ^p Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him.

10 For, in that he died, ^q he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, ^r he liveth unto God.

11 Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be ^s dead indeed unto sin, but ^t alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

11.—^a Gal. ii. 20. v. 24. vi. 14. Eph. iv. 22. Col. iii. 5, 9.—^b Col. ii. 11.—^c 1 Pet. iv. 1.—^d Or, justified.—^e 2 Tim. ii. 11.—^f Rev. i. 18.—^g Heb. ix. 27, 28.—^h Luke xx. 38.—ⁱ Ver. 2.—^j Gal. ii. 19.

or him: to be totally separated from them: and to live to a thing or person is to be wholly given up to them; to have the most intimate connexion with them.

Verse 3. Know ye not, &c.] To be baptized into Christ, is to receive the doctrine of Christ crucified, and to receive baptism as a proof of the genuineness of that faith, and the obligation to live according to its precepts.

Baptized into his death?] That, as Jesus Christ in his crucifixion died completely, so that no spark of the natural or animal life remained in his body, so those who profess his religion should be so completely separated and saved from sin, that they have no more connexion with it, nor any more influence from it, than a dead man has with or from his departed spirit.

Verse 4. We are buried with him by baptism into death] It is probable that the apostle here alludes to the mode of administering baptism by immersion: the whole body being 12 * Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey it in the lusts thereof.

13 Neither yield ye your^b members as^c instruments of unrighteousness unto sin: but^d yield yourselves unto God, as those that are alive from the dead; and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God.

14 For^e sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace.

15 What then^f shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid.

16 Know ye not, that^g to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?

17 But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the^h heart that form ofⁱ doctrine which was delivered you.

put under the water, which seemed to say, the man is drowned, is dead; and, when he came up out of the water, he seemed to have a resurrection to life; the man is risen again; he is alive! I say it is probable that the apostle alludes to this mode of immersion: but it is not absolutely certain that he does so, as some do imagine.

Raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father] From this we learn, that as it required the glory of the Father, that is, his glorious energy, to raise up from the grave the dead body of Christ, so it requires the same glorious energy to quicken the dead soul of a sinner, and enable him to walk in newness of life.

Verse 5. For if we have been planted together] If we take the word planted in its usual sense, we shall find it to be a metaphor both beautiful and expressive. When the seed, or plant, is inserted in the ground, it derives from that ground all its nourishment, and all those juices by which it becomes developed; by which it increases in size, grows firm, strong, and vigorous; and puts forth its leaves, blossoms, and fruit. The death of Jesus Christ is represented as the cause whence his fruitfulness, as the author of eternal salvation to mankind, is derived; and genuine believers in him are represented as being planted in his death, and growing out of it; deriving their growth, vigour, firmness, beauty, and fruitfulness from it. His sacrificial death is the soil in which they are planted; and from which they derive their life, fruitfulness, and their final glory.

Verse 6. Our old man is crucified with him] This seems to be a farther extension of the same metaphor. When a seed is planted in the earth, it appears as if the whole body of it perished. All seeds, as they are commonly termed, are composed of two parts; the germ, which contains the rudiments of the future plant; and the lobes, or body of the seed. The body dies that the germ may live. To apply this to the purpose in hand: how is the principle of life, which Jesus Christ has implanted in us, to be brought into full effect, vigour, and usefulness? By the destruction of the body of sin, our old man, our wicked, corrupt, and fleshly self is to be crucified; to be as truly slain as Christ was crucified; that our souls may as truly be raised from a death of sin to a life of righteousness, as the body of Christ was raised from the grave, and afterwards ascended to the right hand of God. But how does this part of the metaphor apply to Jesus Christ? Plainly and forcibly. Jesus Christ took on him a body; a body in the likeness of sinful flesh, chap. viii. 3; and gave up that body to death; through which death alone an atonement was made for sin, and the way laid open for the vivifying Spirit to have the fullest access to, and the most powerful operation in, the human heart. Here, the body of Christ dies that he may be a quickening Spirit to mankind. Our body of sin is destroyed by this quickening Spirit, that henceforth we should live unto Him who died and rose again. Thus the metaphor, in all its leading senses, is complete, and applies most forcibly to the subject in question.

Verse 7. He that is dead is freed from sin.] Literally, is justified from sin; or, is freed or delivered from it. Does not this simply mean that the man who has received Christ 18 Being then; made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.

19 I speak after the manner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness, and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness.

20 For when ye were^k the servants of sin, ye were free^l from righteousness.

21 * What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for^m the end of those things is death.

22 But nowⁿ being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life.

23 For^o the wages of sin is death; but^p the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

1 John viii. 32. 1 Cor. vii. 22. Gal. v. 1. 1. Pet. ii. 16.—b John viii. 34.—c Gr. to righteousness.—d Ch. vii. 5.—e Ch. i. 32.—f John vii. 32.—g Gen. ii. 17. Ch. v. 12. James i. 15.—h Ch. ii. 7. v. 17, 21. 1 Pet. i. 4.

Jesus by faith, and has been, through believing, made a partaker of the Holy Spirit, has had his old man, all his evil propensities destroyed; so that he is not only justified freely from all sin, but wholly sanctified unto God? The context shows that this is the meaning. Every instance of violence is done to the whole scope and design of the apostle, by the opinion, that "this text is a proof that believers are not fully saved from sin in this life, because only he that is dead is freed from sin." Then death is his justifier and deliverer! The divinity and philosophy of this sentiment are equally absurd. It is the blood of Christ alone that cleanses from all unrighteousness; and the sanctification of a believer is no more dependent on death than his justification. If it be said "that believers do not cease from sin till they die," I have only to say, they are such believers as do not make a proper use of their faith; and what can be said more of the whole herd of transgressors and infidels? They cease to sin, when they cease to breathe.

Verse 8. Now if we be dead with Christ] According to what is stated in the preceding verses. See particularly on the 6th verse.

Verse 9. Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more] So we, believing in Christ Jesus, and having a death unto sin, and a life unto righteousness, should sin no more. If we be risen indeed with Christ, we should seek the things above, and set our affections on things above, and not on the earth. The man who walks in humble, loving obedience, to an indwelling Christ, sin has no more dominion over his soul than death has over the immortal and glorified body of his Redeemer.

Verse 10. He died unto sin once] From the whole scope of the apostle's discourse it is plain that he considers the death of Christ as a death or sacrifice for sin; a sin-offering: in this sense no man has ever died for sin, or ever can die.

Verse 11. Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead] Die as truly unto sin, as he died for sin. Live as truly unto God, as he lives with God.

Verse 12. Let not sin therefore reign.] This is a prosopopœia, or personification. Sin is represented as a king, ruler, or tyrant, who has the desires of the mind and the members of the body under his control; so that by influencing the passions he governs the body. Do not let sin reign, do not let him work; that is, let him have no place, no being in your souls; because, wherever he is he governs, less or more: and indeed sin is not sin without this. Sin cannot be a quiescent thing: if it do not work it does not exist.

That ye should obey it in the lusts thereof.] The latter clause is wanting in the most ancient and reputable MSS. and in the principal Versions. [The ablest critics retain all the words in the text with the exception of "it in."] Verse 13. Neither yield ye your members] Do not yield to temptation. It is no sin to be tempted; the sin lies in yielding. While the sin exists only in Satan's solicitation, it is the devil's sin, and not ours: when we yield, we make the devil's sin our own: then we ENTER INTO temptation. Satan himself cannot force you to sin: till he wins over your will, he cannot bring you into subjection.

Yield yourselves unto God.] Let God have your wills; keep them ever on his side; there they are safe, and there they will be active. Satan cannot force the will, and God will not. Indeed it would cease to be will were it forced by either: it is essential to its being that it be free.

And your members as instruments, &c.] Let soul and body be employed in the service of your Maker; let him have your heart; and, with them, your heads, your hands, your feet. Think and devise what is pure; speak what is true, and to the use of edifying; work that which is just and good; and walk steadily in the way that leads to everlasting felicity. Be holy within and holy without.

Verse 14. Sin shall not have dominion over you.] God delivers you from it: and if you again become subject to it, it will be the effect of your own choice or negligence.

Ye are not under the law.] That law which exacts obedience, without giving power to obey.

But under grace.] Which, although it requires the strictest conformity to the will of God, affords sufficient power to be thus conformed.

Verse 15. Shall we sin, because we are not under the law.] Shall we sin because grace abounds? Shall we do evil that good may come of it? This be far from us!

Verse 16. To whom ye yield yourselves.] Can you suppose that you should continue to be the servants of Christ if ye give way to sin? Is he not the master who exacts the service, and to whom the service is performed? Sin is the service of Satan; righteousness the service of Christ. If ye sin ye are the servants of Satan, and not the servants of God.

Verse 17. But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin.] The apostle does not thank God that they were sinners; but that, although they were such, they had now received and obeyed the gospel.

That form of doctrine.] Christianity is here represented under the notion of a mould, or die, into which they were cast, and from which they took the impression of its excellence. The figure upon this die is the image of God, righteousness and true holiness, which was stamped on their souls in believing the gospel, and receiving the Holy Ghost.

Verse 18. Being then made free from sin.] A term that refers to the manumission of a slave. They were redeemed from the slavery of sin, and became the servants of righteousness. Here is another prosopopœia; both sin and righteousness are personified: sin can enjoin no good and profitable work; righteousness can require none that is unjust or injurious.

Verse 19. I speak after the manner of men.] This phrase is often used by the Greek writers to signify what was easy to be comprehended; what was level with common understandings, delivered in a popular style.

Because of the infirmity of your flesh.] Your inexperience in heavenly things, of which ye are only just beginning to know the nature and the names.

Servants to uncleanness, &c.] These different expressions show how deeply immersed in and enslaved by sin these Gentiles were before their conversion to Christianity.

Verse 20. Ye were free from righteousness.] I know not whether it be possible to paint the utter prevalence of sin in stronger colours than the apostle does here, by saying they were FREE from righteousness.

Verse 21. What fruit had ye then in those things.] God designs that every man shall reap benefit by his service. What benefit have ye derived from the service of sin?

Whereof ye are now ashamed?] Ye blush to remember your former life. It was scandalous to yourselves, injurious to others, and highly provoking to God.

The end of those things is death.] Whatever sin may promise of pleasure or advantage, the end to which it necessarily tends is the destruction of body and soul.

Verse 22. But now being made free from sin.] As being free from righteousness is the finished character of a sinner, so being made free from sin is the finished character of a genuine Christian.

And become servants to God.] They were transferred from the service of one master to that of another: they were freed from the slavery of sin, and engaged in the service of God.

Fruit unto holiness.] Holiness of heart was the principle; and righteousness of life the fruit.

Verse 23. For the wages of sin is death.] The second death, everlasting perdition. Every sinner earns this by long, sore, and painful service.

But the gift of God is eternal life.] A man may MERIT hell, but he cannot MERIT heaven. The apostle does not say that the wages of righteousness is eternal life: no, but that this eternal life, even to the righteous, is THE gracious GIFT of God. And even this gracious gift comes through Jesus Christ our Lord. A sinner goes to hell because he deserves it; a righteous man goes to heaven because Christ has died for him, and communicated that grace by which his sin is pardoned, and his soul made holy. The word which we here render wages, signified the daily pay of a Roman soldier. So every sinner has a daily pay, and this pay is death; he has misery because he sins. If men were as much in earnest to get their souls saved as they are to prepare them for perdition, heaven would be highly peopled, and devils would be their own companions.

CHAPTER VII

The law has power over a man as long as he lives, 1. And a wife is bound to her husband only as long as he lives, 2, 3. Christian believers are delivered from the Mosaic law by Christ Jesus, and united to God, 5-7. By the law is the knowledge of sin, 8. But it gives no power over it, 9-11. Yet it is holy, just, and good, 12. How it convinces of sin, and brings into bondage, 13-24. No deliverance from its curse but by Jesus Christ, 25.

KNOW ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how ^a that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth?

2 For ^b the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband.

3 So then, ^c if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress: but, if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man.

4 Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become ^d dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should ^e bring forth fruit unto God.

5 For, when we were in the flesh, the ^f motions of sins, which were by the law, ^g did work in our members ^h to bring forth fruit unto death.

Verse 1. For I speak to them that know the law] This is a proof that the apostle directs this part of his discourse to the Jews.

As long as he liveth?] Or, as long as it liveth; law does not extend its influence to the dead, nor do abrogated laws bind.

Verse 2. For the woman which hath an husband] A married woman is bound to her husband while he lives; but when her husband is dead, she is discharged from the law by which she was bound to him alone.

Verse 3. So then, if, while her husband liveth] Each party is equally bound to the other: but the death of either dissolves the engagement.

Verse 4. Wherefore, my brethren] This is a parallel case. You were once under the law of Moses, and were bound by its injunctions: but now ye are become dead to that law; for, The law, which was once your husband, is dead; God has determined that it shall be no longer in force; so that now, as a woman whose husband is dead is freed from her conjugal vow, and may legally be married to another, so God, who gave the law under which ye have hitherto lived, designed that it should be in force only till the advent of the Messiah: that advent has taken place, the law has consequently ceased, and now ye are called to take on you the yoke of the gospel, and lay down the yoke of the law; and it is the design of God that you should do so.

That ye should be married to another—who is raised from the dead] The object of God in giving the law was to unite you to Christ; and, as he has died, he has not only abolished that law which condemns every transgressor to death, without any hope of a revival, but he has also made that atonement for sin, by his own death, which is represented in the sacrifices prescribed by the law. And as Jesus Christ is risen again from the dead, he has thereby given the fullest proof that by his death he has procured the resurrection of mankind, and made that atonement required by the law.

Verse 5. For, when we were in the flesh] When we were without the gospel, in our carnal and unregenerated state, though believing in the law of Moses, and performing the rites and offices of our religion.

The motions of sins, which were by the law] The passions of sins, the evil propensities to sins; to every particular sin there is a propensity: one propensity does not excite to all kinds of sinful acts; hence the apostle uses the plural number, the PASSIONS or PROPENSITIES OF SINS; sins being not more various than their propensities in the unregenerate heart, which excite to them.

Did work in our members] The evil propensity acts in the whole nervous and muscular system, applying that stimulus to every part which is necessary to excite them to action.

To bring forth fruit unto death.] To produce those acts of transgression which subject the sinner to death, temporal and eternal.

Verse 6. But now we are delivered from the law] We, who have believed in Christ Jesus, are delivered from that yoke by which we were bound, which sentenced every transgressor to perdition, but provided no pardon even for the penitent, and no sanctification for those who are weary of their inbred corruptions.

That being dead wherein we were held] To us believers in Christ this commandment is abrogated; we are transferred to another constitution; that law which kills ceases to bind us; it is dead to us who have believed in Christ Jesus, who is the end of the law for justification and salvation to every one that believes.

That we should serve in newness of spirit] We are now brought under a more spiritual dispensation; now we know the spiritual import of all the Mosaic precepts. We see that the law referred to the gospel, and can only be fulfilled by the gospel.

The oldness of the letter.] The merely literal rites, ceremonies, and sacrifices are now done away; and the newness of the spirit, the true intent and meaning of all are now fully disclosed; so that we are got from an imperfect state into a state of perfection and excellence.

Verse 7. Is the law sin?] Law is only the means of disclosing this sinful propensity, not of producing it; as a bright beam of the sun introduced into a room shows millions of motes which appear to be dancing in it in all directions; but these were not introduced by the light, they were there before, only there was not light enough to make them manifest; so the evil propensity was there before, but there was not light sufficient to discover it.

I had not known sin, but by the law] It is not likely that a dark corrupt human heart can discern the will of God. His law is his will; it recommends what is just, and right, and good; and forbids what is improper, unjust, and injurious. If God had not revealed himself by this law, we should have done precisely what many nations of the earth have done, who have not had this revelation—put darkness for light, and sin for acts of holiness. While the human heart is its own measure it will rate its workings according to its own propensities; for itself is its highest rule. But when God gives a true insight of his own perfections, to be applied as a rule both of passion and practice, then sin is discovered, and discovered too to be exceedingly sinful. So strong propensities, because they appear to be inherent in our nature, would have passed for natural and necessary operations; and their sinfulness would not have been discovered, if the law had not said, Thou shalt not covet; and thus determined that the propensity itself, as well as its outward operation, is sinful.

Verse 8. Sin, taking occasion by the commandment] I think appear sin, working death in me by that which is good; that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful.

14 For, we know that the law is spiritual: but I am carnal, ^a sold under sin.

15 For, that which I do, I ^b allow not: for, ^c what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I.

16 If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good.

17 Now then, it is no more I that do it, ^d but sin that dwelleth in me.

18 For I know that ^e in me (that is, in my flesh)

the pointing, both in this and in the 11th verse, to be wrong: the comma should be after occasion, and not after commandment. There are different opinions concerning the meaning of the word which we here translate occasion. The word appears to signify, in general, whatsoever is necessary for the completion or accomplishment of any particular purpose. The very prohibition, as we have already seen in the preceding verse, becomes the instrument of exciting the evil propensity; for, although a sinner has the general propensity to what is evil, yet he seems to feel most delight in transgressing known law.

For without the law, sin was dead.] Where there is no law there is no transgression; for sin is the transgression of the law, and no fault can be imputed unto death, where there is no statute by which such a fault is made a capital offence.

All manner of concupiscence] It showed what was evil, and forbade it; and then the principle of rebellion, which seems essential to the very nature of sin, rose up against the prohibition; and he was the more strongly incited to disobedience in proportion as obedience was enjoined.

The word which we render concupiscence, signifies simply strong desire of any kind; but, in the New Testament, it is generally taken to signify irregular and unholy desires. Sin in the mind is the desire to do, or to be, what is contrary to the holiness and authority of GOD.

For without the law, sin was dead.] It seems consistent with the apostle's meaning, to interpret the place as implying the time in which Paul, in his unconverted Jewish state, had not the proper knowledge of the law—while he was unacquainted with its spirituality. He felt evil desire, but he did not know the evil of it; he did not consider that the law tried the heart and its workings, as well as outward actions.

Verse 10. And the commandment] Meaning the law in general, which was ordained to life: the rule of righteousness teaching those statutes which if a man do he shall live in them, Lev. xviii. 5, I found, by transgressing it, to be unto death; for it only presented the duty and laid down the penalty, without affording any strength to resist sin or subdue evil propensities.

Verse 11. Sin, taking occasion] Sin, deriving strength from the law, threatening death to the transgressor, deceived me, drew me aside to disobedience, promising me gratification, honour, independence, &c., as it promised to Eve; for to her history the apostle evidently alludes, and uses the very same expression, deceived me, Gen. iii. 13.

And by it slew me.] Subjected me to that death which the law denounced against transgressors; and rendered me miserable during the course of life itself. It is well known to scholars that the original verb signifies not only to slay or kill, but also to make wretched. The sinner lives a dying life, or a living death.

Verse 12. Wherefore the law is holy] As if he had said, to soothe his countrymen, to whom he had been showing the absolute insufficiency of the law either to justify or save from sin: I do not intimate that there is anything improper or imperfect in the law as a rule of life: it prescribes what is holy, just, and good; for it comes from a holy, just, and good God. But it neither pardons sin nor purifies the heart; and it is because it is holy, just, and good, that it condemns transgressors to death.

Verse 13. Was then that which is good made death unto me?] It is not the law that is the cause of death, but sin; it was sin which subjected us to death by the law, justly dwelleth no good thing: for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good, I find not.

19 For, the 'good that I would, I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I do.

20 Now, if I do that I would not, ^a it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

21 I find then ^b a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me.

22 For I ^c delight in the law of God, after ^d the inward man:

23 But ^e I see another law in ^f my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me threatening sin with death: which law was given that sin might appear—might be set forth in its own colours; when we saw it subjected us to death by a law perfectly holy, just, and good; that sin, by the law, might be represented as it really is; an EXCEEDING GREAT and deadly evil.

^a Ps. i. 2.—^b 2 Cor. iv. 16. Eph. iii. 16. Col. iii. 9, 10.—^c Gal. v. 17.—^d Ch. vi. 13, 19.

Verse 14. For, we know that the law is spiritual] This is a general proposition, and probably, in the apostle's autograph, concluded the above sentence. The law is not to be considered as a system of external rites and ceremonies; nor even as a rule of moral action: it is a spiritual system; it reaches to the most hidden purposes, thoughts, dispositions, and desires of the heart and soul; and it reproves and condemns everything, without hope of reprieve or pardon, that is contrary to eternal truth and rectitude.

But I am carnal, sold under sin.] This was probably, in the apostle's letter, the beginning of a new paragraph. I believe it is agreed, on all hands, that the apostle is here demonstrating the insufficiency of the law in opposition to the gospel. That by the former, is the knowledge, by the latter, the cure of sin. Therefore by I here he cannot mean himself, nor any Christian believer: if the contrary could be proved, the argument of the apostle would go to demonstrate the insufficiency of the gospel as well as the law.

In this and the following verses he states the contrariety between himself, or any Jew while without Christ, and the law of God. Of the latter he says, it is spiritual; of the former, I am carnal, sold under sin. Of the carnal man, in opposition to the spiritual, never was a more complete or accurate description given. The expressions, in the flesh, and after the flesh, in ver. 5, and in chap. viii. 5, 8, 9, &c., are of the same import with the word carnal in this verse. To be in the flesh, or to be carnally minded, solely respects the unregenerate. While unregenerate, a man is in a state of death and enmity against God, chap. viii. 6-9. This is St. Paul's own account of a carnal man.

Those who are of another opinion maintain that by the word carnal here the apostle meant that corruption which dwelt in him after his conversion; but this opinion is founded on a very great mistake; for, although there may be, after justification, the remains of the carnal mind, which will be less or more felt till the soul is completely sanctified, yet the man is never denominated from the inferior principle, which is under control, but from the superior principle which habitually prevails.

But the word carnal, though used by the apostle to signify a state of death and enmity against God, is not sufficient to denote all the evil of the state which he is describing; hence he adds, sold under sin. This is one of the strongest expressions which the Spirit of God uses in Scripture, to describe the full depravity of fallen man. Sin is here represented as a person; and the apostle compares the dominion which sin has over the man in question to that of a master over his legal slave. Universally through the scriptures man is said to be in a state of bondage to sin, until the Son of God makes him free: but in no part of the sacred writings is it ever said that the children of God are sold under sin. Christ came to deliver the lawful captive, and take away the prey from the mighty. Whom the Son maketh free, they are free indeed.

Verse 15. For, that which I do, I allow not, &c.] The Greek word, which is here translated I do, means a work which the agent continues to perform till it is finished, and is used by the apostle, Phil. ii. 13, to denote the continued employment of God's saints in his service to the end of their lives. What I am continually labouring at I allow not, I do not acknowledge to be right, just, holy, or profitable.

into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members.

24 O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?

*Ch. viii. 7. xii. 2. Eph. iv. 23. James iv. 1.

But what I hate, that do I.] I am a slave, and under the absolute control of my tyrannical master: I hate his service, but am obliged to work his will. Who, without blaspheming, can assert that the apostle is speaking this of a man in whom the Spirit of the Lord dwells?

Verse 16. If then I do that which I would not, &c.] Knowing that the law condemns it, and that therefore it must be evil. I consent unto the law; I show by this circumstance that I acknowledge the law to be good.

Verse 17. Now then it is no more I.] It is not that I which constitutes reason and conscience, but sin—corrupt and sensual inclinations, that dwell in me—that has the entire domination over my reason, darkening my understanding, and perverting my judgment; for which there is condemnation in the law, but no cure. So we find here that there is a principle in the unregenerate man stronger than reason itself; a principle which is, properly speaking, not of the essence of the soul, but acts in it, as its lord, or as a tyrant. This is inbred and indwelling sin—the seed of the serpent; by which the whole soul is darkened, confused, perverted, and excited to rebellion against God.

Verse 18. For I know that in me, &c.] I have learned by experience that in an unregenerate man there is no good. There is no principle by which the soul can be brought into the light; no principle by which it can be restored to purity: fleshly appetites alone prevail; and the brute runs away with the man.

For to will is present with me] Though the whole has suffered indescribably by the fall, yet there are some faculties that appear to have suffered less than others: or rather have received larger measures of the supernatural light, because their concurrence with the divine principle is so necessary to the salvation of the soul. Even the most unconcerned about spiritual things have understanding, judgment, reason, and will. Fallen as man is, he yet possesses extraordinary powers, which are capable of very high cultivation and improvement. In short, the soul seems capable of any thing, but knowing, fearing, loving, and serving God. And it is not only incapable of itself, for any truly religious acts; but, what shows its fall in the most indisputable manner, in its enmity to sacred things. Let an unregenerate man pretend what he pleases, his conscience knows that he hates religion; his soul revolts against it; his carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be. There is no reducing this fell principle to subjection; it is sin, and sin is rebellion against God; therefore sin must be destroyed, not subjected; if subjected, it would cease to be sin, because sin is in opposition to God; hence, the apostle says, most conclusively, it cannot be subjected; i. e., it must be destroyed, or it will destroy the soul for ever.

Verse 19. For the good that I would I do not.] Here is the most decisive proof that the will is on the side of God and truth.

But the evil which I would not.] And here is equally decisive proof that the will is against, or opposed to, evil. It is not the will that leads men astray; but the corrupt passions which oppose and oppress the will. It is truly astonishing into what endless mistakes men have fallen on this point, and what systems of divinity have been built on these mistakes. The will, this almost only friend to God in the human soul, has been slandered as God's worst enemy, and even by those who had the seventh chapter to the Romans before their eyes! Nay, it has been considered so fell a foe to God and goodness, that it is bound in the adamant chains of a dire necessity to do evil only; and the doctrine of will (absurdly called free will, as if will did not essentially imply what is free) has been considered one of the most destructive heresies. Let such persons put themselves to school, to their Bibles, and to common sense.

The plain state of the case is this: the soul is so completely fallen, that it has no power to do good till it receive that power from on high. But it has power to see good; to distinguish between that and evil; to acknowledge the excellence of this good, and to will it from a conviction of that excellence; but farther it cannot go. Yet, in various cases, it is solicited and consents to sin; and because it is will,

25 I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin.

*Or, this body of death.—1 Cor. xv. 57.

that is, because it is a free principle, it must necessarily possess this power: and although it can do no good unless it receive grace from God, yet it is impossible to force it to sin. Even Satan himself cannot do this; and before he can get it to sin, he must gain its consent.

"But does not this arguing destroy the doctrine of free grace?" No! it establishes that doctrine. 1. It is through the grace, the unmerited kindness, of God, that the soul has such a faculty, and that it has not been extinguished by sin. 2. This will, though a free principle, as it respects its nilling of evil and choosing good, yet, properly speaking, has no power by which it can subjugate the evil or perform the good. We know that the eye has a power to discern objects, but without light this power is perfectly useless, and no object can be discerned by it. So, of the person represented here by the apostle, it is said, To will is ever in readiness, it is ever at hand, it lies constantly before me; but how to perform that which is good, I find not; that is, the man is unregenerate, and he is seeking justification and holiness from the law. The law was never designed to give these—it gives the knowledge, not the cure of sin; therefore, though he nills evil and wills good, yet he can neither conquer the one nor perform the other till he receives the grace of Christ, till he seeks and finds redemption in his blood. Here, then, the free agency of man is preserved, without which he could not be in a salvable state; and the honour of the grace of Christ is maintained, without which there can be no actual salvation.

Verse 20. It is no more I.] Two principles are continually contending in me for the mastery: my reason, on which the light of God shines, to show what is evil; and my passions, in which the principle of sin works, to bring forth fruit unto death.

This strange self-contradictory propensity led some of the ancient philosophers to imagine that man has two souls, a good and a bad one.

Verse 21. I find then a law.] The word law, in this verse, must be taken as implying any strong or confirmed habit, under the influence of which the man generally acts; and in this sense the apostle most evidently uses it in ver. 23.

Verse 22. I delight in the law of God after the inward man.] To say that the inward man means the regenerate part of the soul, is supportable by no argument. The expression, frequently occurring among the purest Greek ethic writers, is used to signify the soul or rational part of man, in opposition to the body of flesh. If it be said that it is impossible for an unregenerate man to delight in the law of God, the experience of millions contradicts the assertion. Every true penitent admires the moral law, longs most earnestly for a conformity to it, and feels that he can never be satisfied till he awakes up after this divine likeness; and he hates himself, because he feels that he has broken it, and that his evil passions are still in a state of hostility to it.

Verse 23. But I see another law in my members.] The remonstrances of reason and conscience are rendered of no effect by the prevalence of sinful passions; which, from repeated gratifications, have acquired all the force of habit, and now give law to the whole carnal man.

Warring against the law of my mind.] Carrying on a system of warfare; laying continual siege to the soul; repeating incessantly its attacks; harassing, battering, and storming the spirit; and, by all these assaults, reducing the man to extreme misery.

Bringing me into captivity to the law of sin.] He does not here speak of an occasional advantage gained by sin, it was a complete and final victory gained by corruption; which, having stormed and reduced the city, carried away the inhabitants, with irresistible force, into captivity. When all this is considered, who, in his right mind, can apply it to the holy soul of the apostle of the Gentiles? Is there any thing in it that can belong to his gracious state? Surely nothing.

Verse 24. O wretched man that I am, &c.] This affecting account is finished more impressively by the groans of the wounded captive. Having long maintained a useless conflict against innumerable hosts and irresistible might, he is at last wounded and taken prisoner; and, to render his state more miserable, is not only encompassed by the slaughtered, but chained to a dead body; for there seems to be here an allusion to an ancient custom of certain tyrants, who bound a dead body to a living man, and obliged him to carry it about, till the contagion from the putrid mass took away his life!

And how well does this apply to the case of the person to whom the apostle refers! A body—a whole mass of sin and corruption, was bound to his soul with chains which he could not break; and the mortal contagion, transfused through his whole nature, was pressing him down to the bitter pains of an eternal death.

Verse 25. I thank God through Jesus Christ] Several excellent MSS., with the Vulgate, some copies of the Itala, and several of the Fathers, read the grace of God, or the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; this is an answer to the almost despairing question in the preceding verse.

So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God] That this clause contains the inference from the preceding train of argumentation, appears evident from the therefore with which the apostle introduces it.

CHAPTER VIII.

The happy state of those who believe in Christ and walk under the influence of his Spirit, 1, 2. The design of God in sending his Son into the world was to redeem men from sin, 3, 4. The miserable state of the carnally-minded, 5-8. How Christ lives and works in his followers; their blessedness here, and their happiness hereafter, 9-17. Sufferings are the common lot of all men; and from which Gentiles and Jews have the hope of being finally delivered, 18-23. The use and importance of hope, 24, 25. The Spirit makes intercession for the followers of Christ, 26, 27. All things work together for good to them that love God, and who act according to his gracious purpose in calling them, 28. The means used to bring men to eternal glory, 29, 30. The great blessedness, confidence, and security of all genuine Christians, whom, while they hold fast faith and a good conscience, nothing can separate from the love of God, 31-39.

THERE is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

2 For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.

3 For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh:

4 That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit.

5 For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit mind the things of the Spirit.

6 For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace.

7 Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.

8 So then, they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

9 But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his.

10 And if Christ be in you, the body is dead be-

Verse 1. There is, therefore, now no condemnation] Those who restrain the word now, so as to indicate by it the gospel dispensation only, do not take in the whole of the apostle's meaning. The apostle has not been dealing in general matters only, but also in those which are particular. He has not been pointing out merely the difference between the two dispensations, the Mosaic and the Christian; but he marks out the state of a penitent under the former, and that of a believer under the latter. The now, therefore, in the text, must refer more to the happy transition from darkness to light, from condemnation to pardon, which this believer now enjoys, than to the Christian dispensation taking the place of the Jewish economy.

Who walk not after the flesh, &c.] In this one verse we find the power and virtue of the gospel scheme; it pardons and sanctifies; the Jewish law could do neither.

This last clause is wanting in the principal MSS., Versions, and Fathers.

Verse 2. For the law of the spirit of life] The gospel of the grace of Christ, which is not only a law or rule of life, but affords that sovereign energy by which guilt is removed from the conscience, the power of sin broken, and its polluting influence removed from the heart. The law was a spirit of death, by which those who were under it were bound down, because of their sin, to condemnation and death. The gospel proclaims Jesus the Saviour; and what the law bound unto death, it looses unto life eternal.

Verse 3. For what the law could not do] The law could not pardon; the law could not sanctify; the law could not dispense with its own requisitions; it is the rule of righteousness, and therefore must condemn unrighteousness. This is its unalterable nature. Had there been perfect obedience to its dictates, instead of condemning, it would have applauded and rewarded; but as the flesh, the carnal and rebellious principle, had prevailed, and transgression had taken place, it was rendered weak, inefficient to undo this work of the flesh, and bring the sinner into a state of pardon and acceptance with God.

God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh] Did that which the law could not do; i. e., purchased pardon for the sinner, and brought every believer into the favour of God.

Condemned sin in the flesh] The design and object of the incarnation and sacrifice of Christ was to condemn sin, to have it executed and destroyed: not to tolerate it as some think, or to render it subservient to the purposes of his grace, as others; but to annihilate its power, guilt, and being in the soul of a believer.

Verse 4. That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us] That the guilt might be pardoned through the merit of that sacrifice; and that we might be enabled, by the power of his own grace and Spirit, to walk in newness of life; loving God with all our heart, soul, mind, and strength, and our neighbour as ourselves: and thus the righteousness, the spirit, design, and purpose of the law is fulfilled in us, through the strength of the Spirit of Christ, which is here put in opposition to the weakness of the law through the flesh.

Verse 5. For they that are after the flesh] And here is the great distinction between Jews and genuine Christians: the former are after the flesh—are under the power of the carnal, rebellious principle; and consequently mind, relish, the things of the flesh—the things which appertain merely to the present life, having no relish for spiritual and eternal things.

But they that are after the Spirit] They who are regenerated, who are born of the Spirit, being redeemed from the influence and law of the carnal mind; these relish the things of the Spirit—they are spiritually minded, and pass through things temporal, so as not to lose the things which are eternal.

Verse 6. For to be carnally minded is death] To live under the influence of the carnal mind is to live in the state of condemnation, and consequently liable to death eternal: whereas, on the contrary, he who is spiritually minded has the life and peace of God in his soul, and is in full prospect of life eternal.

Verse 7. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God] Because it is a carnal mind, and relishes earthly and sinful things, and lives in opposition to the pure and holy law of God.

It is not subject to the law of God] It will come under no obedience; for it is sin, and the very principle of rebellion; and therefore it cannot be subject, nor subdued.

From this we learn that the design of God, in the economy of the gospel, is not to weaken, curtail, or lay the carnal principle in bonds, but to destroy it. As it is not subject, and cannot be subject, to the law of God, it must be destroyed, else it will continue to rebel against God. It cannot be mended, or rendered less offensive in its nature, even by the operations of God; it is ever sin, and sin is ever enmity; and enmity, wherever it has power, will invariably show itself in acts of hostility and rebellion.

Verse 9. But ye are not in the flesh] Ye who have believed in Christ Jesus as the sin-offering which has condemned sin in the flesh; and, having been justified by faith and made partakers of the Holy Spirit, are enabled to walk in newness of life.

16 ^aThe Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.

17 And if children, then heirs; ^aheirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; ^aif so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

18 For I reckon that ^athe sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us.

19 For ^athe earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the ^amanifestation of the sons of God.

20 For ^athe creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope, 21 Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

If so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you] Or seeing that, the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. God made man in union with himself, and his heart was his temple. Sin being committed, the temple was defiled, and God abandoned it. Jesus Christ is come by his sacrifice and Spirit to cleanse the temple, and make man again a habitation of God through the Spirit. And when this Almighty Spirit again makes the heart his residence, then the soul is delivered from the moral effects of the fall.

Verse 10. And if Christ be in you, &c.] This is the criterion by which you may judge of the state of grace in which ye stand. If Christ dwell in your hearts by faith, the body is dead because of sin, in reference to sin; the members of your body no more perform the work of sin, than the body of a dead man does the functions of natural life.

Verse 11. But if the Spirit, &c.] He who here receives the grace and Spirit of Christ, and continues to live, under its influence, a life of obedience to the divine will, shall have a resurrection to eternal life; and the resurrection of Christ shall be the pattern after which they shall be raised.

Verse 12. Therefore, brethren, &c.] Therefore is the grand inference from all that he has been arguing in relation to sanctity of life, both to the Gentiles, chap. vi., and to the Jews, chap. vii. and viii. to this verse, where I suppose he begins to address himself to both, in a body, to the end of the chapter.

Verse 13. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die] Though this may mean, ye shall afterwards die, and this seems to indicate a temporal death, yet not exclusively of an eternal death; for both, and especially the latter, are necessarily implied.

But if ye through the Spirit] If ye seek that grace and spiritual help which the gospel of Christ furnishes, resist, and, by resisting, mortify the deeds of the flesh, against which the law gave you no assistance, ye shall live a life of faith, love, and holy obedience here, and a life of glory hereafter.

Verse 14. For as many as are led by the Spirit, &c.] No man who has not divine assistance can either find the way to heaven, or walk in it when found. The Spirit of God is the great agent here below, to enlighten, quicken, strengthen, and guide the true disciples of Christ; and all that are born of this Spirit are led and guided by it; and none can pretend to be the children of God who are not thus guided.

Verse 15. Ye have not received the spirit of bondage] All that were under the law were under bondage to its rites and ceremonies; and as, through the prevalence of that corrupt nature, with which every human being is polluted, and to remove which the law gave no assistance, they were often transgressing, consequently they had forfeited their lives, and were continually, through fear of death, subject to bondage, Heb. ii. 15.

But ye have received the Spirit of adoption] Ye are brought into the family of God by adoption; and the agent that brought you into this family is the Holy Spirit; and this very Spirit continues to witness to you the grace in which ye stand, by enabling you to call God your Father, with the utmost filial confidence and affection.

The Spirit of adoption] Adoption was an act frequent 22 For, we know that ^a the whole creation ^b groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.

23 And not only they, but ourselves also, which have ^c the first fruits of the Spirit, ^d even we ourselves, groan within ourselves, ^e waiting for the adoption, to wit, the ^f redemption of our body.

24 For we are saved by hope: but ^g hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?

25 But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it.

26 Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for ^h we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but ⁱ the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

among the ancient Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans; by which a person was taken out of one family, and incorporated with another. Persons of property, who had no children of their own, adopted those of another family. The child thus adopted ceased to belong to his own family, and was in every respect bound to the person who had adopted him, as if he were his own child; and in consequence of the death of his adopting father he possessed his estates. If a person after he had adopted a child happened to have children of his own, then the estate was equally divided between the adopted and real children. The Romans had regular forms of law, by which all these matters were settled.

Whereby we cry, Abba, Father.] The reason why the Syriac and Greek words are here conjoined, may be seen in the note on Mark xiv. 36, to which the reader is referred. The introduction of the words here shows that the persons in question had the strongest evidence of the excellence of the state in which they stood; they knew that they were thus adopted; and they knew this by the Spirit of God which was given them on their adoption; and let me say, they could know it by no other means. The Father who had adopted them could be seen by no mortal eye; and the transaction being purely of a spiritual nature, and transacted in heaven, can be known only by God's supernatural testimony of it upon earth. It is a matter of such solemn importance to every Christian soul, that God in his mercy has been pleased not to leave it to conjecture, assumption, or inductive reasoning; but attests it by his own Spirit in the soul of the person whom he adopts through Christ Jesus. It is the grand and most observable case in which the intercourse is kept up between heaven and earth; and the genuine believer in Christ Jesus is not left to the quibbles or casuistry of polemic divines or critics, but receives the thing, and the testimony of it, immediately from God himself. And were not the testimony of the state thus given, no man could possibly have any assurance of his salvation which would beget confidence and love. If to any man his acceptance with God be hypothetical, then his confidence must be so too. His love to God must be hypothetical, his gratitude hypothetical, and his obedience also. If God had forgiven me my sins, then I should love him, and I should be grateful, and I should testify this gratitude by obedience. But who does not see that these must necessarily depend on the IF in the first case. All this uncertainty, and the perplexities necessarily resulting from it, God has precluded by sending the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, by which we cry, Abba, Father: and thus our adoption into the heavenly family is testified and ascertained to us in the only way in which it can possibly be done, by the direct influence of the Spirit of God. Remove this from Christianity, and it is a dead letter.

Verse 16. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit.] That same Spirit, the Spirit of adoption; that is, the Spirit who witnesses this adoption; which can be no other than the Holy Ghost himself, and certainly cannot mean any disposition or affection of mind which the adopted person may feel; for such a disposition must arise from a knowledge of this adoption, and the knowledge of this adoption cannot be what is the mind of the Spirit; ^a because he maketh intercession for the saints ^b according to the will of God.

28 And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God; to them ^c who are the called according to his purpose.

29 For whom ^d he did foreknow, ^e he also did predestinate ^f to be conformed to the image of his Son, ^g that he might be the first born among many brethren.

30 Moreover whom he did predestinate, them he also ^h called: and whom he called, them he also ⁱ justified: and whom he justified, them he also ^j glorified.

31 What shall we then say to these things? ^k If God be for us, who can be against us?

given by any human or earthly means; it must come from God himself: therefore the reference must be to that Spirit, by whom alone the knowledge of the adoption is witnessed to the soul of the believer.

With our spirit.] In our understanding, the place or recipient of light and information; and the place or faculty to which such information can properly be brought. As the window is the proper medium to let the light of the sun into our apartments, so the understanding is the proper medium of conveying the Spirit's influence to the soul. We, therefore, have the utmost evidence of the fact of our adoption which we can possibly have; we have the word and Spirit of God; and the word sealed on our spirit by the Spirit of God. And this is not a momentary influx: if we take care to walk with God, and not grieve the Holy Spirit, we shall have an abiding testimony; and while we continue faithful to our adopting Father, the Spirit that witnesses that adoption will continue to witness it; and hereby we shall know that we are of God by the Spirit which he giveth us.

Verse 17. And if children, then heirs.] For the legitimate children can alone inherit the estate. This is not an estate to which they succeed in consequence of the death of a former possessor; it is like the promised land, given by God himself, and divided among the children of the family.

Heirs of God.] It is neither an earthly portion nor a heavenly portion; but God himself, who is to be their portion. It is not heaven they are to inherit; it is God, who is infinitely greater and more glorious than heaven itself.

Joint heirs with Christ.] Partaking of the same eternal glory with the glorified human nature of Christ.

If so be that we suffer with him.] Observe how prudently the apostle advances to the harsh affair of suffering. He does not mention it till he had raised up their thoughts to the highest object of joy and pleasure—the happiness and glory of a joint inheritance with the ever-blessed Son of God.

Verse 18. For I reckon that the sufferings, &c.] If the glory that is to be revealed be the enjoyment of God himself (see above), then the sufferings of this life, which, when compared with eternity, are but as for a moment, are not worthy to be put in competition with this glory which shall be revealed in us.

Verse 19. For the earnest expectation of the creature.] There is considerable difficulty in this and the four following verses: and the difficulty lies chiefly in the meaning of the word which we translate the creature, and creation. Some think that by it the brute creation is meant; others apply it to the Jewish people; others to the godly; others to the Gentiles; others to the good angels; and others to the fallen spirits, both angelic and human. Dissertations without end have been written on it; and it does not appear that the Christian world has come to any general agreement on the subject.

The scope and design of Saint Paul in this and the following verses may be thus summed up:—The apostle shows that the whole creation is in a suffering state, into which it has been brought by the disobedience of one man, Adam;

32 * He that spared not his own Son, but ^b delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?

33 Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? ^c It is God that justifieth.

34 ^d Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, ^e who is even at the right hand of God, ^f who also maketh intercession for us.

*Ch. v. 6, 10.—^bCh. iv. 25.—^cIsa. i. 8, 9. Rev. xii. 10, 11.—^dJob xxxiv. 29.—^eMark xvi. 19. Col. iii. 1. Heb. i. 3. viii. 1. xii. 1. 1 Pet. iii. 22.—^fHeb. vii. 25. ix. 24. 1 John ii. 1.—^gPs.

therefore, it was made subject to vanity—pain, sickness, and death; not willingly, for mankind had no part in that transgression which “brought death into the world and all our woe;” but God subjected the whole, purposing to afford them a deliverance, and infusing into every heart a hope that a more auspicious era should take place; and it is through the influence of this hope, which every man possesses, that the present ills are so patiently borne, because all are expecting better days. The great deliverer is the Messiah, and the gospel days the auspicious era which God intended to bring forward. They who believe in Christ with a heart unto righteousness are freed from the bondage of their sinful corruption, and brought into the glorious liberty of the sons of God; and they look forward with joyous expectation, waiting for the general resurrection, when their bodies also shall be redeemed from corruption, and the whole man, body and soul, be adopted into the family of heaven ABOVE, as their souls had been previously adopted into the family of faith BELOW. And although it may be said that the redemption provided by the gospel cannot be an object of hope to those who have never heard of it; yet, as every man has hope, and this hope is inspired by God for this very purpose, that it may be the means of supporting them in the ills of life—and God, in inspiring it, had respect to the glorious state of Christianity—therefore it is this state, in effect, that the whole creation are longing for. So Jesus Christ is said by the prophet Haggai, ii. 7, to be the desire of all nations: and yet not one of the nations of the earth had, at that time, heard of him. And thus, as Dr. Whitby has very properly remarked, “desire and expectation are ascribed to creatures, in reference to things they want, and which tend to their advantage; notwithstanding they explicitly know nothing of them.”

Verse 24. For we are saved by hope] We are supported and are comfortable in the expectation we have of receiving from the hand of our God all the good we need in the troubles and adversities of this life, and of having our bodies raised from corruption and death at the general resurrection.

Hope that is seen is not hope] As hope signifies the expectation of future good, so it necessarily supposes that the object of it is not seen, i. e., not enjoyed; for to see, in scripture language, sometimes signifies to enjoy. The hope that is seen, that is, enjoyed, is no longer hope, it is fruition; and a man cannot hope for that which he has in his possession.

Verse 25. But if we hope for that we see not] If we have a well-grounded expectation of our resurrection and final glorification, knowing that such things are necessarily future, and must for a certain time be delayed; then do we patiently wait for them, continue patiently to endure the common ills of life, and whatever tribulations we may be exposed to in consequence of our Christian profession; for we know, FAITHFUL is he who has promised. Hope is a sort of universal blessing, and one of the greatest which God has granted to man. To mankind, in general, life would be intolerable without it; and it is as necessary as faith is, even to the followers of God.

Verse 26. The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities] The same Spirit, mentioned before as bearing witness with ours that we are the children of God; and consequently it is not a disposition or frame of mind, for the disposition of our mind surely cannot help the infirmities of our minds.

The Greek word is very inadequately expressed by helpeth. It signifies such assistance as is afforded by persons to each other, who mutually bear the same load, or carry it between them. He who prays receives help from the Spirit of God; but he who prays not receives no such help. Whatever our strength may be, we must put it forth, even while most implicitly depending on the strength of God himself.

35 Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?

36 As it is written, ^a For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.

37 ^b Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us.

38 For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor xliv. 22. 1 Cor. xv. 30, 31. 2 Cor. iv. 11.—^a1 Cor. xv. 57. 2 Cor. ii. 14. 1 John iv. 4. v. 4, 5. Rev. xii. 11.

For we know not what we should pray for as we ought] And should therefore be liable to endless mistakes in our prayers, if suitable desires were not excited by the Holy Spirit and power received to bring these desires, by prayer, before the throne of grace.

But the Spirit itself] The same Spirit, viz., the Spirit that witnesses of our adoption and sonship, ver. 15, 16, makes intercession for us. Surely if the apostle had designed to teach us that he meant our own sense and understanding by the Spirit, he never could have spoken in a manner in which plain common sense was never likely to comprehend his meaning. Besides, how can it be said that our own spirit, our filial disposition, bears witness with our own spirit; that our own spirit helps the infirmities of our own spirit; that our own spirit teaches our own spirit that of which it is ignorant; and that our own spirit maketh intercession for our own spirit, with groanings unutterable? This would have been both incongruous and absurd. We must therefore understand these places of that help and influence which the followers of God receive from the Holy Ghost; and consequently, of the fulfilment of the various promises relative to this point which our Lord made to his disciples, particularly in John xiv. 16, 17, and 25; xv. 26, 27; xvi. 7; and particularly ver. 15, 14.

Verse 27. He maketh intercession for the saints] The word signifies to apply one's self to a person in behalf of another; to intercede or negotiate for. Our Lord makes intercession for us, by negotiating and managing, as our friend and agent, all the affairs pertaining to our salvation. And the Spirit of God makes intercession for the saints, not by the supplication of God on their behalf, but by directing and qualifying their supplications in a proper manner, by his agency and influence upon their hearts; which, according to the gospel scheme, is the peculiar work and office of the Holy Spirit.

According to the will of God.] According to the mind, intention, or design of God. And thus the prayers which we offer up, and the desires which subsist in the unutterable groanings, are all such as are pleasing in the sight of God.

From all this we learn that a fluency in prayer is not essential to praying: a man may pray most powerfully, in the estimation of God, who is not able to utter even one word. The unutterable groan is big with meaning, and God understands it, because it contains the language of his own Spirit.

Verse 28. And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God] To understand this verse aright let us observe: 1. That the persons in whose behalf all things work for good are they who love God, and, consequently, who live in the spirit of obedience. 2. It is not said that all things shall work for good, but that they work now in the behalf of him who loveth now; for both verbs are in the present tense. 3. All these things work together; while they are working, God's providence is working, his Spirit is working, and they are working TOGETHER with him. And whatever troubles, or afflictions, or persecutions may arise, God presses them into their service; and they make a part of the general working, and are caused to contribute to the general good of the person who now loves God, and who is working by faith and love under the influence and operation of the Holy Ghost. They who say sin works for good to them that love God speak blasphemous nonsense.

To them who are called according to his purpose.] Dr. Taylor translates, the invited; and observes that it is a metaphor taken from inviting guests, or making them welcome to a feast. Our being called or invited, according to God's purpose, proves that all things work for our good, on the supposition that we love God, and not otherwise.

life, nor angels, nor * principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come,

39 Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature,

* Eph. i. 21. vi. 12. Col. 16.

For our loving God, or making a due improvement of our calling, is evidently inserted by the apostle to make good his argument. He does not pretend to prove that all things shall concur to the everlasting happiness of all that are called; but only to those of the called who love God. But you will say: How is it evident and unquestionable that we are called? I answer: From our being in the visible church, and professing the faith of the gospel. As for what is termed effectual calling, as distinguished from the general invitations of the gospel, it is a distinction which divines have invented without any warrant from the sacred writings.

Verse 29. For whom he did foreknow, &c. To foreknow, here, signifies to design before, as at the first forming of the scheme; to bestow the favour and privilege of being God's people upon any set of men, chap. xi. 2. This is the foundation or first step of our salvation; namely the purpose and grace of God, which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the world began. 2 Tim. i. 9. Then, he knew or favoured us; for in this sense the word to know is taken in a great variety of places, both in the Old and New Testaments. And as he knew the GENTILES then, when the scheme was laid, and before any part of it was executed, consequently, in reference to the execution of this scheme, he foreknew us. This is the first step of our salvation, and the end or finishing of it is our conformity to the Son of God in eternal glory, ver. 17, which includes and supposes our moral conformity to him. When God knew us, at the forming of the gospel scheme; or, when he intended to bestow on us the privilege of being his people; he then destinated or designed us to be conformed to the image of his Son; and, as he destinated or determined us then to this very high honour and happiness, he pre-destinated, fore-ordained, or pre-determined us to it. Thus we are to understand the foundation and finishing of the scheme of our salvation. The foundation is the foreknowledge, or gracious purpose of God; the finishing is our being joint heirs with Christ. For, we must understand his foreknowing, predestinating, calling, and justifying, in relation to his glorifying; and that none are finally glorified, but those who, according to his purpose, are conformed to the image of his Son. Taylor.

The first-born among many brethren.] That he might be the chief or head of all the redeemed: for HIS human nature is the first fruits of the resurrection from the dead; and He is the first human being that, after having passed through death, was raised to eternal glory.

Verse 30. Whom he did predestinate, &c.] The Gentiles, whom He determined to call into his church with the Jewish people, He called—He invited by the preaching of the gospel, to believe on his Son Jesus Christ. It is worthy of note, that all that is spoken here refers to what had already taken place; for the calling, justifying, and glorifying, are here represented as having already taken place, as well as the foreknowing and the predestinating. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that the apostle refers to what God had already done among the Jews and Gentiles: though he may also speak of the things that were not, as though they were.

He also justified] Pardoned the sins of all those who with hearty repentance and true faith turned unto him.

He also glorified.] From all this we learn that none will be glorified who have not been sanctified and justified; that the justified are those who have been called or invited by the gospel of Christ; that those who have had this calling are they to whom God determined to grant this privilege—they did not choose this salvation first, but God sent it to them when they knew him not—and therefore the salvation of the Gentile world, as well as that of the Jews, comes through the gratuitous mercy of God himself, was the result of infinite designs, and stands on the same ground as the calling, &c., of the Jewish people. The words which we render glory, and to glorify, both mean to render illustrious, eminent, &c., &c., in various parts of the New Testament; and in this sense the verb is used, John xi. 4; xii. 28, 29; xiii. 31, 32; xiv. 13; xv. 8; xxi. 19; Acts iii. 18; and in chap. xi. 13: in none of which places eternal beatification can be intended. Here it seems to mean that those whom shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

ii. 15. 1 Pet. iii. 22.

God had called into a state of justification he had rendered illustrious by innumerable gifts, graces, and privileges, in the same manner as he had done to the Israelites of old.

The whole of the preceding discourse will show that every thing here is conditional, as far as it relates to the ultimate salvation of any person professing the gospel of Christ; for the promises are made to character, and not persons, as some have most injudiciously affirmed. The apostle insists upon a character all along from the beginning of the chapter. The absolute necessity of holiness to salvation is the very subject of his discourse; this necessity he positively affirms, and establishes by the most solid arguments. At the very entrance of his argument here, he takes care to settle the connexion between our calling and our love and obedience to God, on purpose to prevent that mistake into which so many have fallen, through their great inattention to the scope of his reasoning. Ver. 28: All things work together for good—To whom? To them that LOVE GOD: to them that are called according to his purpose. To them that love God, because they are called according to his purpose; for those only who love God can reap any benefit by this pre-destination, vocation, or any other instance of God's favour.

Verse 31. What shall we then say to these things?] As if he had said: What comfort may we derive from these doctrines? Why this: If God be for us, who can be against us? He who is infinitely wise has undertaken to direct us: He who is infinitely powerful has undertaken to protect us: He who is infinitely good has undertaken to save us. What cunning, strength, or malice can prevail against his wisdom, power, and goodness? None. Therefore we are safe who love God; and not only shall sustain no essential damage by the persecutions of ungodly men, but even these things work together for our good.

Verse 32. He that spared not his own Son] And can we, his sincere followers, doubt of the safety of our state, or the certainty of his protection? No: for if he loved us, Gentiles and Jews, so intensely as to deliver up to death his own Son for us all, can he withhold from us any minor blessing? Nay, will he not, on the contrary, freely give us all things?

Verse 34. Who is even at the right hand of God] To which he has exalted our human nature, which he took in conjunction with his divinity; and there he maketh intercession for us—manages all the concerns of his own kingdom in general, and of every member of his church in particular.

Verse 35. Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?] The question is not, Who shall separate the love of Christ from us? or prevent Christ from loving us? but, Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Who or what shall be able to remove our affection from him? And the questions that immediately follow show that this is the sense of the passage; for the tribulation, distress, &c., which he enumerates, are things by which they might be affected, but by which Christ could not be affected; and, consequently, the question most evidently refers to their love to him who had first loved them, and, while it affords a strong presumption of their perseverance, furnishes a most powerful argument against apostasy.

Shall tribulation?] Grievous affliction, or, distress of any kind: from a word which signifies to compress, oppress, straiten, &c.; anything by which a man is rendered miserable.

Or distress?] A word of nearly the same import with the former, but more intense in its signification. It signifies straitness, being hemmed in on every side, without the possibility of getting out or escaping.

Or persecution?] Signifies such pursuing as an enemy uses in order to overtake the object of his malice, that he may destroy him.

Or famine?] The total want of bread, and all the necessities of life.

Or nakedness?] Being absolutely without clothing; forcibly expressed by the derivation of the word, having one's limbs only, being totally unclothed.

Or peril?] A state of extreme and continued danger, perplexing and distressing with grievous forebodings and alarms.

Or sword? Slaughter; the total destruction of life, and especially beheading, and such like, done by order of the civil magistrate; for the word is used in this Epistle, chap. xiii. 4, to signify the authority and power which he has of judicially terminating life; i. e., of inflicting capital punishment.

Verse 37. Nay] We abide faithful in the new covenant of our God; and HE is faithful who has promised to support and make us more than conquerors; i. e., to give us a complete triumph over sin, and death, and hell, not leaving one enemy unsubdued.

Verse 38. For I am persuaded] After the blessed experience we have had of support by the grace and Spirit of him that loved us, that neither fear of death, nor hope of life, nor evil angels, nor principalities, nor powers, persecuting us for Christ's sake; nor the things we endure at present, nor the things to come, whatever tribulation we may be called to suffer in future;

Verse 39. Nor height—of honour, nor depth—of ignominy, nor any other creature (nor any other thing whatever), shall be able to separate us, who love God, from the love of God, which he has vouchsafed to us in Christ Jesus. The confidence expressed by the apostle is as rational as it is bold. On the premises laid down by him, in reference to which he has most logically conducted his whole argument, the conclusion to which he arrives is as natural and forcible as it is legitimate. The permanency of the Christian Church, in all the tribulations it has endured from pagans and papists, is a full proof of the correctness of the apostle's reasoning. The true followers of Christ can never be forsaken by him. And His Church, which is founded on the rock, can never be shaken down by the tempests of persecution. And what God does for his church in general (the collective body of those who believe in the Lord Jesus, love, and obey him), he does for every individual in that body: no man that trusts in him can be confounded.

CHAPTER IX.

Paul expresses his great sorrow for the unbelief and obstinacy of the Jews, 1-3. Whose high privileges he enumerates, 4, 5. Points out the manner in which God has chosen to communicate the knowledge of his name to both Jews and Gentiles; and how he deals, whether in judgment or mercy, with individuals; and produces the cases of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Esau, and Pharaoh, 6-17. God shows mercy and judgment as he thinks proper, and none have a right to find fault with his proceedings, 18-20. He has the same power over the human race as the potter has over the clay, 21-23. The prophets predicted the calling of the Gentiles, and the rejection of the Jews, 24-29. The Gentiles have attained to the knowledge of God's method of saving sinners; while the Jews have not attained this knowledge, 30, 31. The reason why the Jews have not attained the salvation provided for them in the gospel, 32, 33.

I SAY the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost,

2^b That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart.

Verse 1. I say the truth in Christ, I lie not] This is one of the most solemn oaths any man can possibly take. He appeals to Christ as the searcher of hearts that he tells the truth; asserts that his conscience was free from all guile in this matter, and that the Holy Ghost bore him testimony that what he said was true. Hence we find that the testimony of a man's own conscience, and the testimony of the Holy Ghost, are two distinct things, and that the apostle had both at the same time.

Verse 3. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ] Very few passages in the New Testament have puzzled critics and commentators more than this. Every person saw the perfect absurdity of understanding it in a literal sense, as no man in his right mind could wish himself eternally damned in order to save another, or to save even the whole world. And the supposition that such an effect could be produced by such a sacrifice, was equally absurd and monstrous. Therefore various translations have been made of the place, and different solutions offered. Let us examine the Greek text—"For I did wish myself to be an anathema FROM Christ (BY Christ, as some ancient MSS. read), for my brethren." As the verb is the 1st per. sing. of the imperfect tense, some have been led to think that St. Paul is here mentioning what had passed through his own mind when, filled with the love of God, he learned the rejection of the Jews; and that he only mentions it here as a thing which, in the effusions of his loving zeal, had been felt by him inconsiderately, and without any divine affluens lead-

7 * Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children : but, In ^b Isaac shall thy seed be called.

8 That is, They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God : but * the children of the promise are counted for the seed.

9 For this is the word of promise, ^a At this time will I come, and Sarah shall have a son.

10 And not only this; but when * Rebecca also had conceived by one, even by our father Isaac;

ing him to it; but that he does not intimate that now he felt any such unreasonable and preposterous wish. I am afraid this is but ill calculated to solve the difficulty.

The Greek word anathema, properly signifies any thing devoted to God, so as to be destroyed: it answers to the Hebrew cherem, which the Septuagint translate by it, and means either a thing or person separated from its former state or condition, and devoted to destruction. In this sense it is used, Deut. vii. 25, 26; Josh. vi. 17, 18; vii. 12.

It is certain that the word, both among the Hebrews and Greeks, was used to express a person devoted to destruction for the public safety. Such anathemas, or persons devoted to destruction for the public good, were common among all ancient nations. This one circumstance is sufficient to explain the word in this place. Paul desired to be devoted to destruction, as the Jews then were, in order to redeem his countrymen from this most terrible excision. And, as Christ may be considered as devoting them to destruction (see Matt. xxiv), Paul is willing that in their place Christ should devote him: for I could wish myself to be devoted BY Christ, to that temporal destruction to which he has adjudged the disobedient Jews, if by doing so I might redeem them. This, and this alone, seems to be the meaning of the apostle's wish.

Verse 4. Who are Israelites] Their very name of Israelites implied their very high dignity; they were a royal nation; princes of the most high God.

The adoption] The Israelites were all taken into the family of God, and were called his sons and first-born, Exod. iv. 22; Deut. xiv. 1; Jer. xxxi. 9; Hos. xi. 1; and this adoption took place when God made the covenant with them at Horeb.

The glory] The manifestation of God among them; principally by the cloud and pillar, and the Shekinah, or divine presence, appearing between the cherubim over the mercy-seat. These were peculiar to the Jews; no other nation was ever thus favoured.

The covenants] The covenants made with Abraham, both that which relates to the spiritual seed, and that which was peculiar to his natural descendants, Gal. iii. 16, 17; which covenants were afterwards renewed by Moses, Deut. xxxi. 1.

The giving of the law] The revelation of God by God himself, containing a system of moral and political precepts. This was also peculiar to the Jews; for to no other nation had he ever given a revelation of his will.

The service] The particular ordinances, rites, and ceremonies of their religious worship; and especially the sacrificial system, so expressive of the sinfulness of sin and the holiness of God.

The promises] The land of Canaan, and the blessings of the Messiah and his kingdom; which promises had been made and often repeated to the patriarchs and to the prophets.

Verse 5. Whose are the fathers] Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, 14 What shall we say then? * Is there unrighteousness with God? God forbid.

15 For he saith to Moses, ⁱ I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion.

16 So then, it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that sheweth mercy.

17 For ^m the scripture saith unto Pharaoh, ⁿ Even for this same purpose have I raised thee up, that I might shew my power in thee, and that my name might be declared throughout all the earth.

18 Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth.

19 Thou wilt say then unto me, Why doth he yet find fault? For ^o who hath resisted his will?

20 Nay but, O man, who art thou that ^p repliest against God? ^q Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus?

Joseph, the twelve patriarchs, Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, &c. &c., without controversy, the greatest and most eminent men that ever flourished under heaven.

And of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ came] These ancestors were the more renowned, as being the progenitors of the human nature of the MESSIAH. Christ, the Messiah, according to the flesh, sprang from them. But this Messiah was more than man, he is God over all; the very Being who gave them being, though he appeared to receive a being from them.

Here the apostle most distinctly points out the twofold nature of our Lord—his eternal Godhead and his humanity; and all the transpositions of particles, and alterations of points in the universe, will not explain away this doctrine. As this verse contains such an eminent proof of the deity of Christ, no wonder that the opposers of his divinity should strive with their utmost skill and cunning to destroy its force.

Verse 6. Not as though the word of God hath taken none effect.] This awful dispensation of God towards the Jews is not inconsistent with the veracity of the divine promise; for even the whole body of natural-born Jews are not the whole of the Israelites comprehended in the promise. Abraham is the father of many nations; and his seed is not only that which is of the law, but that also which is of the faith of Abraham, chap. iv. 16, 17. The Gentiles were included in the Abrahamic covenant as well as the Jews; and therefore the Jews have no exclusive right to the blessings of God's kingdom.

Verse 7. Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, &c.] Nor can they conclude, because they are the natural descendants of Abraham, that therefore they are all of them, without exception, the children of whom the promise is to be fulfilled.

But, In Isaac shall thy seed be called.] The promise is not confined to immediate natural descent, but may be accomplished in any part of Abraham's posterity.

Verse 8. That is, They which are the children of the flesh] Whence it appears that not the children who descended from Abraham's loins, nor those who were circumcised as he was, nor even those whom he might expect and desire, are therefore the church and people of God; but those who are made children by the good pleasure and promise of God, as Isaac was, are alone to be accounted for the seed with whom the covenant was established.

Verse 9. For this is the word of promise, &c.] It should be considered that the apostle, in this and the following quotations, does not give us the whole of the text which he intends should be taken into his argument, but only a hint or reference to the passages to which they belong; directing us to recollect or peruse the passage, and there view and judge of the argument.

Verse 10. And not only this] A Jew might object: "Ismael was rejected, not by the sovereign will of God, but because he was the son of the handmaid or bond-woman, and therefore unworthy to be the peculiar seed; but observe, 21 Hath not the 'potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make ^bone vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?

22 What if God, willing to shew his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long-suffering 'the vessels of wrath 'fitted 'to destruction:

23 And that he might make known 'the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy, which he had 'afore prepared unto glory,

* Prov. xvi. 4. Jer. xviii. 6. Wisd. xv. 7.—^b2 Tim. ii. 20.—^c1 Thess. v. 9.—^dOr, made up.—^e1 Pet. ii. 8. Jude iv.—^fCh. ii. 4.

this was not the only limitation of the seed of Abraham with regard to inheriting the promise, for when Rebecca was with child by that one person of Abraham's issue to whom the promise was made, namely, our father Isaac, she went to inquire of the Lord, Gen. xxv. 22, 23: And the Lord said unto her, Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and the elder shall serve the younger.

Verse 11. For the children being not yet born] As the word children is not in the text, the word nations would be more proper: for it is of nations that the apostle speaks, as the following verses show, as well as the history to which he refers.

Neither having done any good] To merit the distinction of being made the peculiar people of God; nor evil, to deserve to be left out of this covenant, and the distinguishing national blessings which it conferred; that the purpose of God according to election might stand—that such distinctions might appear to depend on nothing but God's free choice, not of works, or any desert in the people or nations thus chosen; but of the mere purpose of him who calleth any people he pleases, to make them the depositaries of his especial blessings, and thus to distinguish them from all others.

Verse 12. The elder shall serve the younger] That these words are used in a national, and not in a personal sense, is evident from this: that, taken in the latter sense, they are not true, for Jacob never did exercise any power over Esau, nor was Esau ever subject to him. Jacob on the contrary, was rather subject to Esau, and was sorely afraid of him; and, first, by his messengers, and afterwards personally, acknowledged his brother to be his lord, and himself to be his servant, see Gen. xxxii. 4, xxxiii. 8, 13. And hence it appears that neither Esau nor Jacob, nor even their posterities, are brought here by the apostle as instances of any personal reprobation from eternity: for, it is very certain that very many, if not the far greatest part, of Jacob's posterity were wicked, and rejected by God; and it is not less certain that some of Esau's posterity were partakers of the faith of their father Abraham.

If neither the prophet nor the apostle speaks of the persons of Jacob or Esau, but of their posterity, then it is evident that neither the love of God to Jacob, nor the hatred of God to Esau, were such, according to which the eternal states of men, either in happiness or misery, are to be determined; nor is there here any scriptural or rational ground for the decree of unconditional personal election and reprobation, which, comparatively, modern times have endeavoured to build on these scriptures. For, 1. It is here proved that Esau is not mentioned under any personal consideration, but only as the head of his posterity. 2. The testimony of scripture amply proves that all Esau's posterity were not, even in this sense, reprobated; nor all Jacob's posterity elected. 3. Neither does that service, or subjugation to Jacob, which the divine oracle imposed on Esau, import any such reprobation as some contend for; as the servant may be elected, while the master himself is in a state of reprobation. 4. Were it even granted that servitude did import such a reprobation, yet it is certain that Esau, in person, never did serve Jacob. 5. Nor does the hatred of God against Esau import any such reprobation of the person of Esau, because it is demonstrable that it related, not to Esau personally, but to his posterity. 6. The scope of the apostle's reasoning is to show that God is the sovereign of his own ways, has a right to dispense his blessings as he chooses, and to give salvation to mankind, not in the ways of their devising, but in that way that is most suitable to his infinite wisdom and goodness.

Therefore, 1. He chose the Jewish people from all others, and revealed himself to them. Thus they were the elect, and all the nations of mankind reprobate. 2. When the fullness of the time came he revealed himself also to the Gentiles, who gladly received the gospel; and the Jews, rejecting it, were cast off. Thus the elect became reprobate, and the reprobate, elect. 3. He published to all mankind that the pardon of sin could and should be obtained ONLY by faith in his son Jesus, and not by any obedience to any law. 4. That no personal, absolute, eternal reprobation of Esau can have been intended, we learn from this; that he was most amply reconciled to his brother, who had so deeply wronged and offended him, by depriving him of his birthright and his blessing: and his having forgiven his brother his trespasses, was no mean proof that God had forgiven him. See our Lord's words, Matt. vi. 14. Therefore there can be assigned no competent ground of his damnation, much less of his personal reprobation from all eternity. 5. And were such a personal reprobation intended, is it not shocking to suppose that the God of endless mercy, in whose sight his pious parents had found favour, should inform them, even before their child was born, that he had absolutely consigned him by an irrevocable decree to eternal damnation? A message of such horrid import coming immediately from the mouth of God, to a tender, weak, and delicate woman, whose hour of travail with two children was just at hand, could not have failed to produce abortion, and destroy her life. But the parents perfectly understood their God, and saw no decree of reprobation in his message; two manner of nations in thy womb—and the elder shall serve the younger. 6. There is no reason worthy the most wise and gracious God, why he should make known to the world, such a thing concerning Esau, who was yet unborn, that he had reprobated him from all eternity. Such a revelation could be of no spiritual advantage or edification to mankind, but rather of a malignant influence, as directly occasioning men to judge hardly of their Maker, and to conceive of him as no faithful Creator; as having no care, no love, no bowels of compassion towards the workmanship of his own hands.

Verse 14. What shall we say then?] Shall we suggest that God's bestowing peculiar privileges in this unequal manner, on those who otherwise are in equal circumstances, is inconsistent with justice and equity? By no means. Whatever God does is right, and he may dispense his blessings to whom and on what terms he pleases.

Verse 15. For he saith to Moses, I will have mercy, &c.] The words of God to Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 19, show that God has a right to dispense his blessings as he pleases. As if he had said: I will make such a display of my perfections as shall convince you that my nature is kind and beneficent; but know, that I am a debtor to none of my creatures. My benefits and blessings are merely from my own good will: nor can any people, much less a rebellious people, challenge them, as their due in justice or equity. And therefore I now spare the Jews; not because either you, who intercede for them, or they themselves have any claim upon my favour, but of my own free and sovereign grace I choose to show them mercy and compassion. I will give my salvation in my own way, and on my own terms. He that believeth on my son Jesus shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. This is God's ultimate design; this purpose he will never change; and this he has fully declared in the everlasting gospel. This is the grand DECREE of reprobation and election.

the number of the children of Israel be as the sand of the sea, 'a remnant shall be saved :

28 For he will finish ^b the work, and cut ^{it} short in righteousness : 'because a short work will the Lord make upon the earth.

* Ch. xi. 5.—^b Or, the account.—* Isa. xxviii. 22.—^d Isa. i. 9. Lam. iii. 22.

Verse 16. So then, it is not of him that willeth, &c.] I conclude, therefore, from these several instances, that the making or continuing any body of men the peculiar people of God, is righteously determined; not by the judgment, hopes, or wishes of men, but by the will and wisdom of God alone.

Verse 17. For the scripture saith unto Pharaoh] Exod. ix. 16, 16 : I have restored thee to health by removing the boils and blains, and by respiting thy deserved destruction to a longer day, that I may, in thy instance, give such a demonstration of my power in thy final overthrow, that all mankind may learn that I am God, the righteous Judge of all the earth, the avenger of wickedness. See this translation of the original vindicated in my notes on Exod. ix. 15, 16; and, about the hardening of Pharaoh, see the notes on those places where the words occur in the same book.

Verse 18. Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will] This is the apostle's conclusion from the facts already laid down : that God, according to his own will and wisdom, in perfect righteousness, bestows mercy; that is to say, his blessings, upon one part of mankind, while he suffers another part to go on in the abuse of his goodness and forbearance, hardening themselves in sin, till he brings upon them a most just and exemplary punishment, unless this be prevented by their deep repentance and general return to God through Jesus the promised, the real Messiah.

Verse 19. Why doth he yet find fault?] The question here is : If God's glory be so highly promoted and manifested by our obstinacy, and he suffers us to proceed in our hardness and infidelity, why does he find fault with us, or punish us for that which is according to his good pleasure?

Verse 20. Nay but, O man, who art thou] As if he had said : Weak, ignorant man, darest thou retort on the infinitely good and righteous God? God hath made, created, formed the Jewish nation; and shall the thing formed, when it hath corrupted itself, pretend to correct the wise and gracious Author of its being, and say, Why hast thou made me thus?

Verse 21. Hath not the potter power over the clay] The reference to this parable, Jer. xviii. 1, &c., shows most positively that the apostle is speaking of men, not individually, but nationally; and it is strange that men should have given his words any other application with this scripture before their eyes.

Verse 22. What if God, willing to shew his wrath] The apostle refers here to the case of Pharaoh and the Egyptians, and to which he applies Jeremiah's parable of the potter, and, from them, to the then state of the Jews.

But there is not a word of their final damnation; much less that either they or any others were, by a sovereign decree, reprobated from all eternity; and that their very sins, the proximate cause of their punishment, were the necessary effect of that decree which had from all eternity doomed them to endless torments. As such a doctrine could never come from God, so it never can be found in the words of his apostle.

Verse 23. And that he might make known] God endured, with much long-suffering, the vessels of wrath : 1. To shew his wrath, and to make his power known. And also, 2. That he might make known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy.

Which he had afore prepared unto glory] The Jews were fitted for destruction long before : but the fittest time to destroy them was after he had prepared the believing Gentiles unto glory. For the rod of the Messiah's strength was to be sent out of Zion, Ps. cx. 2. The Jewish nation was to supply the first preachers of the gospel, and from Jerusalem their sound was to go forth into all the earth. Therefore the Jewish state, notwithstanding its corruptions, was to be 30 What shall we say then? 'That the Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, 'even the righteousness which is of faith.

31 But Israel, ^b which followed after the law of righteousness, 'hath not attained to the law of righteousness.

32 Wherefore? Because they sought it not by faith, preserved till the Messiah came, and even till the gospel preached by the apostles had taken deep root in the Gentile world. Another thing which rendered the time when the Jewish polity was overthrown the most proper, was this, because then the immediate occasion of it was the extensiveness of the divine grace. They would not have the Gentiles admitted into the church of God; but contradicted, and blasphemed, and rejected the Lord that bought them : thus, then, the extensiveness of the divine grace occasioned their infidelity, ver. 33; chap. x. 3; xi. 11, 12, 15, 28, 30. Thus the Jews were diminished by that abundance of grace which has enriched the Gentiles. And so the grace of God was illustrated; or, so God made known the riches of his glory on the vessels of mercy—the apostles and primitive believers among the Jews, and the Gentile world which received the gospel by the preaching of the apostles and their successors.

* Isa. xlii. 19. Jer. i. 40.—^b Ch. iv. 11. x. 20.—* Ch. i. 17.—^b Ch. x. 2. xi. 7.—^c Gal. v. 4.

Verse 24. Even us, whom he hath called] All the Jews and Gentiles who have been invited by the preaching of the gospel to receive justification by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, and have come to the gospel feast on this invitation.

Verse 25. As he saith also in Osee] The prophet Hosea, from whom, chap. ii. ver. 23, this quotation is taken. The apostle shows that this calling of the Gentiles was no fortuitous thing, but a firm purpose in the divine mind, which he had largely revealed to the prophets; and by opposing the calling of the Gentiles, the Jews in effect renounced their prophets, and fought against God.

Verse 26. And it shall come to pass, &c.] As if he had said : The decrease of numbers in the church, by God's utterly taking away the ten tribes, shall be well supplied by what shall afterwards come to pass, by calling the Gentiles into it. They, the rejected Jews, which had been the people of God, should become a Lo-ammi—not my people. On the contrary, they, the Gentiles, who had been a Lo-ammi—not my people, should become the children of the living God.

Verse 27. Esaias also crieth] The apostle pursues his argument, which had for its object the proof that God, for their infidelity, had rejected the great body of the Jews, and that but a few of them would embrace the gospel, and be saved from that besom of destruction which was now coming to sweep them and their state away.

Verse 28. For he will finish the work, and cut it short, &c.] These appear to be forensic terms, and refer to the conclusion of a judicial proceeding; the Lord has tried and found them guilty, and will immediately execute upon them the punishment due to their transgressions.

Verse 29. And as Esaias said before] What God designs to do with the Jews at present, because of their obstinacy and rebellion, is similar to what he has done before, to which the same prophet refers, chap. i. 9.

Instead of remnant, seed, both the Septuagint and the apostle, have sperma, a seed, intimating that there were left enough of the righteous to be a seed for a future harvest of true believers. So the godly were not destroyed from the land; some remained, and the harvest was in the days of the apostles.

Verse 30. What shall we say then?] What is the final conclusion to be drawn from all these prophecies, facts, and reasonings?

Verse 31. But Israel, which followed after] But the Jews, who have hitherto been the people of God, though they have been industrious in observing a rule by which they supposed they could secure the blessings of God's peculiar kingdom, yet have not come up to the true and only rule by which those blessings can be secured.

Verse 32. Wherefore?] And where lies their mistake? Being ignorant of God's righteousness—of his method of saving sinners by faith in Christ, they went about to establish their own righteousness—their own method of obtaining everlasting salvation. But, finding that the gospel sets our special interest in God and the privileges of his church on a different footing, they are offended, and refuse to come into it.

Verse 33. As it is written, Behold, I lay in Sion] Christ, the Messiah, is become a stone of stumbling to them: and thus what is written in the prophecy of Isaiah is verified in their case, Isa. viii. 14; xxviii. 16: Behold, I lay in Sion, i. e., I shall bring in my Messiah; but he shall be a widely different person from him whom the Jews expect; for, whereas they expect the Messiah to be a mighty secular prince, and to set up a secular kingdom, he shall appear a man of sorrows and acquainted with griefs; and redeem mankind, not by his sword or secular power, but by his humiliation, passion, and death. Therefore they will be offended at him and reject him, and think it would be reproachful to trust in such a person for salvation.

And whosoever believeth on him] But so far shall any be from confusion or disappointment who believes in Christ; that on the contrary, every genuine believer shall find salvation—the remission of sins here, and eternal glory hereafter.

CHAPTER X.

The Apostle expresses his earnest desire for the salvation of the Jews, 1. Having a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge, they sought salvation by works, and not by faith in Christ, 2-4. The righteousness which is of the Lord shall be saved, 11-13. What is necessary to salvation, believing, hearing, preaching, a divine mission, the gospel, and obedience to its precepts, 14-16. Faith comes by hearing, 17. The universal spread of the gospel predicted by the prophets, 18-20. The ingratitude and disobedience of the Israelites, 21.

BRETHREN, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved.

2 For I bear them record ^a that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge.

3 For they being ignorant of ^b God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own ^c righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.

4 For ^d Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth.

5 For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, ^e That the man which doeth those things shall live by them.

^a Acts xxi. 20. xxii. 3. Gal. i. 14. iv. 17. See ch. ix. 31.—^b Ch. i. 17. ix. 30.—^c Phil. iii. 9.—^d Matt. v. 17. Gal. iii. 24.—^e Lev. xviii. 5. Neh. ix. 29. Ezek. xx. 11, 13, 21. Gal. iii. 12.—^f Deut.

Verse 1. My heart's desire, &c.] Though the apostle knew that the Jews were now in a state of rejection, yet he knew also that they were in this state through their own obstinacy, and that God was still waiting to be gracious, and consequently, that they might still repent and turn to him.

Verse 2. They have a zeal of God] By this fine apology for them, the apostle prepares them for the harsher truths which he was about to deliver.

Verse 3. For—being ignorant of God's righteousness] Not knowing God's method of saving sinners, which is the only proper and efficient method: and going about to establish their own righteousness—seeking to procure their salvation by means of their own contriving; they have not submitted—they have not bowed to the determinations of the Most

6 But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, ^f Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is, to bring Christ down from above:)

7 Or, Who shall descend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Christ again from the dead.)

8 But what saith it? ^g The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach;

9 That ^h if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved.

10 For with the heart man believeth unto righte-

High, relative to his mode of saving mankind, viz., through faith in Jesus Christ, as the only available sacrifice for sin—the end to which the law pointed.

Verse 4. For Christ is the end of the law] Where the law ends, Christ begins. The law ends with representative sacrifices; Christ begins with real offering. The law is our schoolmaster to lead us to Christ; it cannot save, but it leaves us at his door, where alone salvation is to be found. Christ as an atoning sacrifice for sin was the grand object of the whole sacrificial code of Moses; his passion and death were the fulfilment of its great object and design. Therefore every Jew who rejected Christ rejected salvation, and that very salvation which the law witnessed and required, and which could not be had but through Christ alone.

Verse 5. For Moses describeth the righteousness which is ousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.

11 For the scripture saith, * Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed.

12 For ^b there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for ^c the same Lord over all ^d is rich unto all that call upon him.

13 * For whosoever shall call ^e upon the name of the Lord shall be saved.

14 How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear ^f without a preacher?

15 And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, ^g How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!

16 But ^h they have not all obeyed the gospel.

* Isa. xxviii. 16. xlix. 23. Jer. xvii. 7. Ch. ix. 33.—^b Ch. iii. 22. Acts xv. 9. Gal. iii. 28.—^c Acts x. 36. Ch. iii. 29. 1 Tim. ii. 5. Eph. i. 7. ii. 4, 7.—^d Joel ii. 32. Acts ii. 21.—^e Acts ix. 14.—^f Tit. i. 3.—^g Isa. lxi. 7. Nah. i. 15.—^h Ch. iii. 3. Heb. iv. 2.—ⁱ Isa.

of the law] The place to which the apostle refers, seems to be Lev. xviii. 5: Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments; which if a man do, he shall live in them. No man ever did, nor ever can fulfil that law, so as to merit salvation by the performance of it: for, as all have sinned and come short of the glory of God, they are all under the curse of the law. If, therefore, there were not such a provision as is made by the death of Christ, no soul could be saved.

Verse 6. But the righteousness which is of faith] As it is most evident that there can be no justification by works, as all are sinful and all in a guilty state; if God will grant salvation at all, it must be by faith: but faith must have an object and a reason for its exercise; the object is Jesus Christ—the reason is the infinite merit of his passion and death.

Who shall ascend into heaven? &c.] Who, by the practice of the law, can bring Christ down from heaven? or, when brought down, and crucified and buried, as a sacrifice for sin, who can bring him up again from the dead? Or the sense of the apostle may be this: They who will not believe in Christ crucified must in effect be seeking another Messiah to come down from heaven with a different revelation; or they who will not credit the doctrine that we preach concerning his resurrection seem in effect to say, Christ yet remains to be raised from the dead, and reign over the Jews as a mighty secular sovereign, subjecting the Gentile world to the sway of his righteous sceptre.

Verse 8. But what saith it? The word is nigh thee] There is no occasion to seek high or low for the saving power; the word of reconciliation is nigh. By the preaching of the gospel the doctrine of salvation is nigh thee, and the saving influence is at hand: it is in thy mouth, easy to be understood, easy to be professed: and in thy heart, if thou art upright before God, sincerely desiring to be saved on his own terms, not striving to establish thy own method of justification by the law, which must for ever be ineffectual, but submitting to the method of justification which God has devised.

Verse 9. That if thou shalt confess, &c.] Acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ as the only Saviour. Believe in thy heart that he who died for thy offences has been raised for thy justification; and depend solely on him for that justification, and thou shalt be saved.

Verse 10. For with the heart man believeth, &c.] And be sincere in this: for with the heart, duly affected with a sense of guilt, and of the sufficiency of the sacrifice which Christ has offered, man believeth unto righteousness, believeth to receive justification; for this is the proper meaning of the term here, and in many other parts of this epistle; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. He who believes aright in Christ Jesus will receive such a full conviction of the truth, and such an evidence of his redemption, that his mouth will boldly confess his obligation to his Redeemer, and the blessed persuasion he has of the remission of all his sins through the blood of the cross.

Verse 11. For the scripture saith] And howsoever the Jews may despise this gospel, because it comes not unto them with pomp and ceremony, it puts those who receive it into possession of every heavenly blessing: and this is according to the positive declaration of the prophets.

Verse 12. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek] All are equally welcome to this salvation. One simple way of being saved is proposed to all, viz., faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; because he is the same Lord who has made all and governs all, and is rich in mercy to all that call upon him.

Verse 13. For whosoever shall call, &c.] He shall have his guilt pardoned, his heart purified; and if he abide in the faith, rooted and grounded in him, showing forth the virtues of him who has called him out of darkness into his marvellous light, he shall be saved with all the power of an eternal life.

It is evident that St. Paul understood the text of Joel as relating to our blessed Lord; and therefore his word Lord must answer to the prophet's word Yehovah, which is no mean proof of the Godhead of Jesus Christ.

Verse 14. How then shall they call on him]

1. There can be no salvation without the gospel: a dispensation of mercy and grace from God alone, here called, ver. 15, the gospel of peace; glad tidings of good things.

2. This must be preached, proclaimed in the world for the obedience of faith.

3. None can effectually preach this unless he have a divine mission; for how shall they preach except they be sent, ver. 15. The matter must come from God; and the person who proclaims it must have both authority and unction from on high.

4. This divinely-commissioned person must be heard: it is the duty of all, to whom this message of salvation is sent, to hear it with the deepest reverence and attention.

5. What is heard must be credited; for they who do not believe the gospel as the record which God has given of his Son, cannot be saved, ver. 14.

6. Those who believe must invoke God by Christ, which they cannot do unless they believe in him; and in this way alone they are to expect salvation.

Verse 16. But they have not all obeyed the gospel.] This seems to be the objection of a Jew; as if he had said: A divine mission would be attended with success; whereas there are numbers who pay no attention to the glad tidings you preach. To this the apostle answers, that the Spirit of God, by Isaiah, chap. liii. 1, foretold it would be so, even in the case of the Jews themselves, when he said, Lord who hath believed our report? For although God brings the message of salvation to men, he does not oblige them to embrace it. It is proposed to their understanding and conscience; but it does not become the means of salvation unless it be affectionately credited.

Verse 17. So then faith cometh by hearing] Preaching the gospel is the ordinary means of salvation; faith in Christ is the result of hearing the word, the doctrine of God preached. Preaching, God sends; if heard attentively, faith will be produced; and if they believe the report, the arm of the Lord will be revealed in their salvation.

Verse 18. But I say, Have they not heard?] Have not the means of salvation been placed within the reach of every Jew in Palestine, and of all those who sojourn in the different Gentile countries where we have preached the gospel, as well to the Jews as to the Gentiles themselves? Yes: for there is not a part of the Promised Land in which these glad tidings have not been preached; and there is scarcely a place in the Roman empire in which the doctrine of Christ has not been heard: if, therefore, the Jews have not believed, the fault is entirely their own: as God has amply furnished them with the means of faith and of salvation.

Verse 19. But I say, Did not Israel know? You object to this preaching among the Gentiles; but is not this according to the positive declaration of God? He, foreseeing your unbelief and rebellion, said by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 21, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people, and by a foolish nation I will anger you. As you have provoked me to jealousy with worshipping those that are no gods, I will provoke you to jealousy by those which are no people. This most evidently refers to the calling or inviting of the Gentiles to partake of the benefits of the gospel; and plainly predicts the envy and rage which would be excited in the Jews, in consequence of those offers of mercy made to the Gentiles.

Verse 21. But to Israel he saith. Thus the apostle proves, in answer to the objection made, ver. 16, that the infidelity of the Jews was the effect of their own obstinacy; that the opposition which they are now making to the gospel was foretold and deplored 700 years before; and that their opposition, far from being a proof of the insufficiency of the gospel, proved that this was the grand means which God had provided for their salvation; and having rejected this, they could expect no more. And this gives the apostle opportunity to speak largely concerning their rejection in the following chapter.

CHAPTER XI

God has not universally nor finally rejected Israel; nor are they all at present rejecters of the gospel, for there is a remnant of true believers now, as there was in the days of the prophet Elijah, 1-5. These have embraced the gospel, and are saved by grace, and not by the works of the law, 6. The body of the Israelites, having rejected this, are blinded, according to the prophetic declaration of David, 7-10. But they have not stumbled, so as to be finally rejected; but through their fall, salvation is come to the Gentiles, 11-14. There is hope of their restoration, and that the nation shall yet become a holy people, 15, 16. The converted Gentiles must not exult over the fallen Jews; the latter having fallen by unbelief, the former stand by faith, 17-20. The Jews, the natural branches, were broken off from the true olive, and the Gentiles having been grafted in, in their place, must walk uprightly, else they also shall be cut off, 21, 22. The Jews, if they abide not in unbelief, shall be again grafted in; and when the fulness of the Gentiles is come in, the great Deliverer shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, according to the covenant of God, 23-27. For the sake of their forefathers God loves them, and will again call them, and communicate His gifts to them, 28, 29. The gospel shall be again sent to them, as it has now been sent to the Gentiles, 30-32. This procedure is according to the immensity of the wisdom, knowledge, and unsearchable judgments of God, who is the Creator, Preserver, and Governor of all things, and to whom all adoration is due, 33-36.

I SAY then, *Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For ^bI also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.

2 God hath not cast away his people which ^che foreknew. Wot ye not what the scripture saith ^d of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying,

*1 Sam. xii. 22. Jer. xxxi. 37.—^b2 Cor. xi. 22. Phil. iii. 5,—^cCh. viii. 29.

Verse 1. I say then, Hath God cast away his people? Has he utterly and finally rejected them? for this is necessarily the apostle's meaning, and is the import of the Greek word which signifies to thrust or drive away; has he thrust them off, and driven them eternally from him? God forbid—by no means. This rejection is neither universal nor final. For I also am an Israelite—I am a regular descendant from Abraham, through Israel or Jacob, and by his son Benjamin. And I stand up in the Church of God, and in the peculiar covenant; for the rejection is only of the obstinate and disobedient; those who believe on Christ, as I have done, are continued in the church.

Verse 2. God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew. God has not finally and irrevocably rejected a people whom he has loved (or approved) so long, for this is evidently the meaning of the word in this place.

3 *Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life.

4 But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal.

5 * Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace.

^dGr. in Elias?—1 Kings xix. 10, 14.—^e1 Kings xix. 18.—^fCh. ix. 27.

Wot ye not what the scripture saith] This reference is to 1 Kings xix. 10, 14.

Verse 4. But what saith the answer of God] The answer which God made assured him that there were seven thousand, that is, several or many thousands; for so we must understand the word seven, a certain for an uncertain number. These had continued faithful to God; but, because of Jezebel's persecution, they were obliged to conceal their attachment to the true religion; and God, in his providence, preserved them from her sanguinary rage.

Who have not bowed the knee] Baal was the God of Jezebel; or, in other words, his worship was then the worship of the state; but there were several thousands of pious Israelites who had not acknowledged this idol, and did not partake in the idolatrous worship.

Verse 5. Even so then at this present time] As in the 6 And * if by grace, then is it no more of works : otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace : otherwise work is no more work.

9 And David saith, ^g Let their table be made a snare, and a trap, and a stumbling-block, and a recompence unto them :

10 ^h Let their eyes be darkened, that they may not see, and bow down their back alway.

present day the irreligion of the Jews is very great ; yet there is a remnant, a considerable number, who have accepted of the grace of the gospel.

According to the election of grace.] The election of grace simply signifies God's gracious design in sending the Christian system into the world, and saving under it all those who believe in Christ Jesus, and none else. Thus the believers in Christ are chosen to inherit the blessings of the gospel, while those who seek justification by the works of the law are rejected.

Verse 6. And if by grace.] And let this very remnant of pious Jews, who have believed in Christ Jesus, know that they are brought in, precisely in the same way as God has brought in the Gentiles ; the one having no more worthiness to plead than the other ; both being brought in, and continued in, by God's free grace, and not by any observance of the Mosaic law.

And if by grace.] Then let these very persons remember, that their election and interest in the covenant of God has no connexion with their old Jewish works ; for were it of works, grace would lose its proper nature, and cease to be what it is—a free undeserved gift.

But if it be of works.] On the other hand, could it be made to appear that they are invested in these privileges of the kingdom of Christ only by the observance of the law of Moses, then GRACE would be quite set aside ; and if it were not, work, or the merit of obedience, would lose its proper nature, which excludes favour and free gift.

Verse 7. What then ?] What is the real state of the case before us ? Israel—the body of the Jewish people, have not obtained that which they so earnestly desire, i. e. to be continued, as they have been hitherto, the peculiar people of God ; but the election hath obtained it—as many of them as have believed in Jesus Christ, and accepted salvation through him : this is the grand scheme of the election by grace ; God chooses to make those his peculiar people who believe in his Son, and none other shall enjoy the blessings of his kingdom. Those who would not receive him are blinded ; they have shut their eyes against the light, and are in the very circumstances of those mentioned by the prophet Isaiah, chap. xix. 10.

Verse 8. God hath given them the spirit of slumber.] As they had wilfully closed their eyes against the light, so God has, in judgment, given them up to the spirit of slumber.

Verse 10. Let their eyes be darkened.] All these words are declarative, and not imprecatory. God declares what will be the case of such obstinate unbelievers ; their table, their common providential blessings, will become a snare, a trap, a stumbling-block, and the means of their punishment. Their eyes will be more and more darkened as they persist in their unbelief, and their back shall be bowed down always ; far from becoming a great and powerful nation, they shall continue ever in a state of abject slavery and oppression, till they acknowledge Jesus as the promised Messiah, and submit to receive redemption in his blood.

Verse 11. Have they stumbled that they should fall ?] Have the Jews so sinned against God as to be for ever put out of the reach of his mercy ? By no means.

11 I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall ? God forbid : but rather ¹ through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy.

12 Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the ² diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles ; how much more their fulness ?

13 For I speak to you Gentiles, inasmuch as I am ³ the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office :

14 If by any means I may ⁴ provoke to emulation them which are my flesh, and ⁵ might save some of them.

15 For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead ?

—Acts xii. 46. xviii. 6. xxii. 18, 21. xxviii. 24, 28. Ch. x. 19.—¹ Or, decay, or loss.—² Act. ix. 15. xii. 2. xxii. 21. Ch. xv. 16. Gal. i. 16. ii. 2, 7, 8, 9. Eph. iii. 8. 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11. —³ 1 Cor. vii. 16. ix. 22. 1 Tim. iv. 16. James v. 20.

But rather through their fall salvation is come.] The church of God cannot fail ; if the Jews have broken the everlasting covenant, Isaiah xiv. 5, the Gentiles shall be taken into it ; and this very circumstance shall be ultimately the means of inciting them to seek and claim a share in the blessings of the new covenant ; and this is what the apostle terms provoking them to jealousy, i. e., exciting them to emulation, for so the word should be understood. We should observe here, that the fall of the Jews was not in itself the reason of the calling of the Gentiles ; for whether the Jews had stood or fallen, whether they had embraced or rejected the gospel, it was the original purpose of God to take the Gentiles into the church : for this was absolutely implied in the covenant made with Abraham : and it was in virtue of that covenant that the Gentiles were now called, and not BECAUSE of the unbelief of the Jews.

Verse 12. Now if the fall of them.] The English reader may imagine that, because fall is used in both these verses, the original word is the same. But it is not so : and when Paul says, Have they stumbled that they should fall ? He means a fall quite destructive and ruinous ; whereas by their fall, and the fall of them, he means no more than such a lapse as was recoverable ; as in the case of Adam's offence.

The riches of the world.] If, in consequence of their unbelief, the riches of God's grace and goodness be poured out on the whole Gentile world, how much more shall that dispensation of grace and mercy enrich and aggrandize the Gentiles, which shall bring the whole body of the Jews to the faith of the gospel !

Verse 13. This and the following verse should be read in a parenthesis.

I magnify mine office.] This is a very improper translation of the original, which is, literally, I honour this my ministry.

Verse 14. Might save some of them.] And yet all these were among the reprobate, or rejected ; however, the apostle supposed that none of them were irrecoverably shut out from the divine favour ; and that some of them, by his preaching, might be disposed to receive salvation by Christ Jesus.

Verse 15. But life from the dead ?] If the rejection of the Jews became the occasion of our receiving the gospel, yet so far must we feel from exulting over them, that we should esteem their full conversion to God as great and choice a favour as we would the restoration of a most intimate friend to life, who had been at the gates of death.

Verse 16. If the root be holy, so are the branches.] The word holy in this verse is to be taken in that sense which it has so frequently in the Old and New Testaments, viz., consecrated, set apart to sacred uses. It must not be forgotten that the first converts to Christ were from among the Jews ; these formed the root of the Christian Church ; but the chief reference is to the ancestors of the Jewish people, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob ; and as these were devoted to God and received into his covenant, all their posterity, the branches which proceeded from this root, became entitled to the same privileges : and as the root still remains, and the branches also, the descendants from that root still have a certain title to the blessings of the covenant ; though, because of their obstinate unbelief, these blessings are sus-

17 And if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert grafted in among them, and with them partake of the root and fatness of the olive tree;

18 Boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee.*

19 Thou wilt say then, The branches were broken off, that I might be grafted in.

20 Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. 'Be not high-minded, but ⁸ fear:

21 For if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee.

22 Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God: on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness: otherwise thou also shalt be cut off.

pended, as they cannot, even on the ground of the old covenant, enjoy these blessings but through faith.

Verse 17. And if some of the branches, &c.] If the present nation of the Jews, because of their unbelief, are cut off from the blessings of the church of God, and the high honour and dignity of being his peculiar people; and thou, being a wild olive—ye Gentiles, being without the knowledge of the true God, and consequently bringing forth no fruits of righteousness, were grafted in among them—are now inserted in the original stock, having been made partakers of the faith of Abraham, and consequently of his blessings; and enjoy, as the people did who sprang from him, the fatness of the olive tree—the promises made to the patriarchs, and the spiritual privileges of the Jewish church.

Verse 18. Boast not against the branches.] Do not exult over, much less insult, the branches, whose place you now fill up according to the election of grace; for remember, ye are not the root, nor do ye bear the root, but the root bears you.

Verse 19. Thou wilt say then, &c.] You may think that you have reason to exult over them.

Verse 20. Well; because of unbelief, &c.] This statement is all true; but then, consider, why is it that they were cast out? Was it not because of their unbelief? And you stand by faith: be not high-minded; let this humble, not exalt you in your own estimation; for if the blessings were received by faith, consequently not by works; and if not by works, you have no merit; and what you have received is through the mere mercy of God.

Verse 21. For if God spared not the natural branches] If He, in his infinite justice and holiness, could not tolerate sin in the people whom he foreknew, whom he had so long loved, cherished, miraculously preserved and blessed; take heed lest he also spare not thee.

Verse 22. Behold therefore the goodness] The exclamation, Behold the goodness of God! is frequent among the Jewish writers, when they wish to call the attention of men to particular displays of God's mercy, especially towards those who are singularly unworthy.

And severity of God.] As goodness signifies the essential quality of the divine nature, the fountain of all good to men and angels, so severity signifies that particular exercise of his goodness and holiness which leads him to sever from his mystical body whatsoever would injure, corrupt, or destroy it.

The apostle having adopted this metaphor as the best he could find to express that act of God's justice and mercy by which the Jews were rejected, and the Gentiles elected in their stead, and, in order to show that though the Jewish tree was cut down, or its branches lopped off, yet it was not rooted up, he informs the Gentile believers that, as it is customary to insert a good scion in a bad or useless stock, they who were bad, contrary to the custom in such cases, were grafted in a good stock, and their growth and fruitfulness proclaimed the excellence and vegetative life of the stock in which they were inserted. This was the goodness

23 And they also, if they abide not in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graft them in again.

24 For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive tree: how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive tree?

25 For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.

26 (And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob:

27 For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins.)

28 As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for

of the heavenly Gardener to them; but it was severity, an act of excision to the Jews.

Verse 23. If they abide not in unbelief] So, we find that their rejection took place in consequence of their wilful obstinacy: and, that they may return into the fold, the door of which still stands open.

For God is able to graft them in again.] Fallen as they are and degraded, God can, in the course of his providence and mercy, restore them to all their forfeited privileges; and this will take place if they abide not in unbelief: which intimates that God has furnished them with all the power and means necessary for faith, and that they may believe on the Lord Jesus whenever they will.

Verse 24. The olive tree, which is wild by nature] Which is naturally wild and barren; for, that the wild olive bore no fruit is sufficiently evident from the testimony of the authors who have written on the subject; hence the proverb, "more unfruitful than the wild olive."

And wert grafted contrary to nature.] Contrary to all custom; for a scion taken from a barren or useless tree is scarcely ever known to be grafted into a good stock; but here the Gentiles, a fruitless and sinful race, are grafted on the ancient patriarchal stock.

Verse 25. I would not—that ye should be ignorant of this mystery] Mystery signifies any thing that is hidden or covered, or not fully made manifest. The Greek word in the New Testament signifies, generally, any thing or doctrine that has not, in former times, been fully known to men: or, something that has not been heard of, or which is so deep, profound, and difficult of comprehension, that it cannot be apprehended without special direction and instruction: here it signifies the doctrine of the future restoration of the Jews, not fully known in itself, and not at all known as to the time in which it will take place. In chap. xvi. 25 it means the Christian religion, not known till the advent of Christ.

Lest ye should be wise in your own conceits.] It seems from this, and from other expressions in this epistle, that the converted Gentiles had not behaved toward the Jews with that decorum and propriety which the relation they bore to them required.

Blindness in part is happened to Israel.] Partial blindness, or blindness to a part of them; for they were not all unbelievers: several thousands of them had been converted to the Christian faith; though the body of the nation, and especially its rulers, civil and spiritual, continued opposed to Christ and his doctrine.

Until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.] And this blindness will continue till the Church of the Gentiles be fully completed—till the gospel be preached through all the nations of the earth, and multitudes of heathens every where embrace the faith.

We should not restrict the meaning of these words too much, by imagining, 1. That the fulness must necessarily mean all the nations of the universe, and all the individuals of those nations: probably no more than a general spread of Christianity over many nations which are now under the influence of Pagan or Mohammedan superstition, may be what is intended. 2. We must not suppose that the coming in here mentioned necessarily means, what most religious persons understand by conversion, a thorough change of the whole heart and the whole life: the acknowledgment of the divine mission of our Lord, and a cordial embracing of the Christian religion, will sufficiently fulfil the apostle's words. If we wait for the conversion of the Jews till such a time as every Gentile and Mohammedan soul shall be, in this especial sense, converted to God, then we shall wait for ever.

Verse 26. And so all Israel shall be saved] Shall be brought into the way of salvation, by acknowledging the Messiah; for the word does not mean eternal glory; for no man can conceive that a time will ever come in which every Jew, then living, shall be taken to the kingdom of glory. The term saved, as applied to the Israelites in different parts of the scripture, signifies no more than their being gathered out of the nations of the world, separated to God, and possessed of the high privilege of being his peculiar people.

As it is written] Now this cannot be understood of the manifestation of Christ among the Jews; or of the multitudes which were converted before, at, and for some time after, the day of pentecost; for these times were all past when the apostle wrote this epistle, which was probably about the 57th or 58th year of our Lord; and, as no remarkable conversion of that people has since taken place, therefore the fulfilment of this prophecy is yet to take place.

Verse 27. For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins] The reader, on referring to Isa. lix. 20, 21, will find that the words of the original are here greatly abridged.

Verse 28. As concerning the gospel] The unbelieving Jews, with regard to the gospel which they have rejected, are at present enemies to God, and aliens from his kingdom, under his Son Jesus Christ, on account of that extensive grace which has overturned their peculiarity, by admitting the Gentiles into his church and family: but with regard to the original purpose of election, whereby they were chosen and separated from all the people of the earth to be the peculiar people of God, they are beloved for the father's sake; he has still favour in store for them, on account of their forefathers the patriarchs.

Verse 29. For the gifts and calling of God, &c.] The gifts which God has bestowed upon them, and the calling—the invitation, with which he has favoured them, he will never revoke.

Repentance, when applied to God, signifies simply change of purpose relative to some declaration made subject to certain conditions.

Verse 30. For as ye in times past] The apostle pursues his argument in favour of the restoration of the Jews. As ye, Gentiles, in times past—for many ages back.

Have not believed] Were in a state of alienation from God, yet not so as to be totally and for ever excluded.

Have now obtained mercy] For ye are now taken into the kingdom of the Messiah; through their unbelief—by that method which, in destroying the Jewish peculiarity, and fulfilling the Abrahamic covenant, has occasioned the unbelief and obstinate opposition of the Jews.

Verse 31. Even so have these also] In like manner the Jews are, through their infidelity, shut out of the kingdom of God:

That through your mercy] But this exclusion will not be everlasting; but this will serve to open a new scene, when, through farther displays of mercy to you Gentiles, they also may obtain mercy—shall be received into the kingdom of God again; and this shall take place whenever they shall consent to acknowledge the Lord Jesus, and see it their privilege to be fellow-heirs with the Gentiles of the grace of life.

As sure, therefore, as the Jews were once in the kingdom, and the Gentiles were not; as sure as the Gentiles are now in the kingdom, and the Jews are not; so surely will the Jews be brought back into that kingdom.

Verse 32. For God hath concluded them all in unbelief] God hath shut or locked them all up under unbelief. This refers to the guilty state of both Jews and Gentiles. They had all broken God's laws—the Jews, the written law; the Gentiles the law written in their hearts; see chap. i. 19, 20, and ii. 14, 15. They are represented here as having been accused of their transgressions; tried at God's bar; found guilty on being tried; condemned to the death they had merited; remanded to prison, till the sovereign will, relative to their execution, should be announced; shut or locked up, under the jailor unbelief; and there, both continued in the same state, awaiting the execution of their sentence; but God, in his own compassion, moved by no merit in either party, caused a general pardon by the gospel to be proclaimed to all. The Jews have refused to receive this pardon on the terms which God has proposed it, and therefore continue locked up under unbelief. The Gentiles have welcomed the offers of grace, and are delivered out of their prison.

Verse 33. O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!] Wisdom may here refer to the designs of God; knowledge, to the means which he employs to accomplish these designs.

Verse 34. For who hath known the mind of the Lord?] Who can pretend to penetrate the counsels of God, or fathom the reasons of his conduct? His designs and his counsels are like himself, infinite, and, consequently, inscrutable. It is strange that, with such a scripture as this before their eyes, men should sit down and coolly and positively write about counsels and decrees of God formed from all eternity, of which they speak with as much confidence and decision as if they had formed a part of the council of the Most High, and had been with him in the beginning of his ways!

Verse 35. Or, who hath first given to him?] To whom is he indebted? Have either Jews or Gentiles any right to his blessings? May not he bestow his favours as he pleases, and to whom he pleases? Does he do any injustice to the Jews in choosing the Gentiles? And was it because he was under obligation to the Gentiles that he has chosen them in the place of the Jews? Let him who has any claim on God prefer it, and he shall be compensated.

Verse 36. For of him, &c.] This is so far from being the case, for or him, as the original designer and author, and by him, as the prime and efficient cause, and to him, as the ultimate end for the manifestation of his eternal glory and goodness, are all things in universal nature, through the whole compass of time and eternity.

CHAPTER XII.

Such displays of God's mercy as Jews and Gentiles have received should induce them to consecrate themselves to Him ; and not be conformed to the world, 1, 2. Christians are exhorted to think meekly of themselves, 3. And each to behave himself properly in the office which he has received from God, 4-8. Various important moral duties recommended, 9-18. We must not avenge ourselves, but overcome evil with good, 19-21.

I BESEECH you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, ^b that ye ^c present your bodies ^d a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service.

2 And ^e be not conformed to this world ; but ^f be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may ^g prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God.

3 For I say, ^h through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, ⁱ not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think ; but to think ^j soberly, according as God hath dealt ^k to every man the measure of faith.

Verse 1. I beseech you therefore, brethren] This address is probably intended both for the Jews and the Gentiles ; though some suppose that the Jews are addressed in the first verse, the Gentiles in the second.

By the mercies of God] By the tender mercies or compassions of God, such as a tender father shows to his refractory children ; who, on their humiliation, is easily persuaded to forgive their offences.

That ye present your bodies] A metaphor taken from bringing sacrifices to the altar of God. The person offering picked out the choicest of his flock, brought it to the altar, and presented it there as an atonement for his sin.

A living sacrifice] In opposition to those dead sacrifices which they were in the habit of offering while in their Jewish state : and that they should have the lusts of the flesh mortified, that they might live to God.

Holy] Without spot or blemish ; referring still to the sacrifice required by the law.

Acceptable unto God] The sacrifice being perfect in its kind, and the intention of the offerer being such that both can be acceptable and well pleasing to God, who searches the heart.

Your reasonable service.] The reasonable service of the apostle may refer to the difference between the Jewish and Christian worship. The former religious service consisted chiefly in its sacrifices, which were of irrational creatures, i. e., the lambs, rams, kids, bulls, goats, &c., which were offered under the law. The Christian service or worship is rational, because performed according to the true intent and meaning of the law : the heart and soul being engaged in the service. He alone lives the life of a fool and a madman who lives the life of a sinner against God ; for, in sinning against his Maker he wrongs his own soul, loves death, and rewards evil unto himself.

Verse 2. And be not conformed to this world] By this world may be understood that present state of things both among the Jews and Gentiles ; the customs and fashions of the people who then lived, the Gentiles particularly, who had neither the power nor the form of godliness ; though some think that the Jewish economy, frequently termed alam hazzei, this world, this peculiar state of things, is alone intended. And the apostle warns them against reviving usages that Christ had abolished ; this exhortation still continues in full force.

Be ye transformed] Be ye metamorphosed, transformed, appear as new persons, and with new habits ; as God has given you a new form of worship, so that ye serve in the newness of the spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter.

4 For ^a as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office :

5 So ^b we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another.

6 ^c Having then gifts differing ^d according to the grace that is given to us, whether ^e prophecy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith ;

The word implies a radical, thorough, and universal change, both outward and inward.

By the renewing of your mind] Where the spirit, the temper, and disposition of the mind, Eph. iv. 23, are not renewed, an outward change is of but little worth, and but of short standing.

That ye may prove] That ye may have practical proof and experimental knowledge of the will of God—of his purpose and determination which is good in itself ; infinitely so. Acceptable, well pleasing to, and well received by, every mind that is renewed and transformed.

And perfect] Finished and complete : when the mind is renewed, and the whole life changed, then the will of God is perfectly fulfilled : for this is its grand design in reference to every human being.

Verse 3. Through the grace given unto me] By the grace given, St. Paul certainly means his apostolical office, by which he had the authority, not only to preach the gospel, but also to rule the Church of Christ.

Not to think—more highly] Not to act proudly ; to arrogate nothing to himself on account of any grace he had received, or of any office committed to him.

But to think soberly] Let no man think himself more or greater than God has made him ; and let him know that whatever he is or has of good or excellence, he has it from God : and that the glory belongs to the giver, and not to him who has received the gift.

Measure of faith.] It is very likely that the faith here used, means the Christian religion ; and the measure, the degree of knowledge and experience which each had received in it, and the power this gave him of being useful in the Church of God.

Verse 4. For as we have many members] As the human body consists of many parts, each having its respective office, and all contributing to the perfection and support of the whole ; each being indispensably necessary in the place which it occupies, and each equally useful, though performing a different function.

Verse 5. So we, being many] We who are members of the Church of Christ, which is considered the body of which he is the head, have various offices assigned to us, according to the measure of grace, faith, and religious knowledge which we possess ; and although each has a different office, and qualifications suitable to that office, yet all belong to the same body ; and each has as much need of the help of another as that other has of his ; therefore, let there be neither pride on the one hand, nor envy on the other.

Verse 6. Having then gifts differing, &c.] Let each apply that which is evil; cleave to that which is good.

10 *Be kindly affectioned one to another ^b with brotherly love; ^c in honour preferring one another;

11 Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; himself to the diligent improvement of his particular office and talent, and modestly keep within the bounds of it, not exalting himself or despising others.

Whether prophecy] That prophecy, in the New Testament, often means the gift of exhorting, preaching, or of expounding the scriptures, is evident from many places in the Gospels, Acts, and St. Paul's Epistles, see 1 Cor. xi. 4, 5; and especially 1 Cor. xiv. 3; see also Luke i. 76, vii. 23; Acts xv. 32; 1 Cor. xiv. 29. I think the apostle uses the term in the same sense here.

The proportion of faith, which some render the analogy of faith, signifies in grammar "the similar declension of similar words;" but in scriptural matters it has been understood to mean the general and consistent plan or scheme of doctrines delivered in the scriptures; where everything bears its due relation and proportion to another. Thus the death of Christ is commensurate in its merits to the evils produced by the fall of Adam. The doctrine of justification by faith bears the strictest analogy or proportion to the grace of Christ, and the helpless, guilty, condemned state of man: whereas the doctrine of justification by works is out of all analogy to the demerit of sin, the perfection of the law, the holiness of God, and the miserable, helpless state of man.

Verse 7. Or ministry] This simply means the office of a deacon; and what this office was, see in the note on Acts vi. 4, where the subject is largely discussed.

Or he that teacheth] The teacher was a person whose office it was to instruct others, whether by catechising, or simply explaining the grand truths of Christianity.

Verse 8. Or he that exhorteth] The person who admonished and reprehended the unruly or disorderly; and who supported the weak and comforted the penitents, and those who were under heaviness through manifold temptations.

He that giveth] He who distributeth the alms of the church, with simplicity—being influenced by no partiality, but dividing to each according to the necessity of his case.

He that ruleth] He that presides over a particular business; but, as the verb also signifies to defend or patronise, it is probably used here to signify receiving and providing for strangers. It might also imply the persons whose business it was to receive and entertain the apostolical teachers who travelled from place to place, establishing and confirming the churches. In this sense the noun is applied to Phoebe, chap. xvi. 2: She hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also.

He that sheweth mercy] Let the person who is called to perform any act of compassion or mercy to the wretched, do it, not grudgingly nor of necessity, but from a spirit of pure benevolence and sympathy.

Verse 9. Let love be without dissimulation.] Have no hypocritical love; let not your love wear a mask; make no empty professions.

Ahor that which is evil] Hate sin as ye would hate that hell to which it leads. The word signifies to hate or detest with horror; the preposition greatly strengthens the meaning.

^l Mind not high things, but ^m condescend to men of low estate. ⁿ Be not wise in your own conceits.

17 ^o Recompense to no man evil for evil. ^p Provide things honest in the sight of all men.

18 If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, ^q live peaceably with all men.

19 Dearly beloved, ^r avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, ^s Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord.

20 ^t Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head.

21 ^u Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

Cleave to that which is good.] Be CEMENTED or GLUED to that which is good; so the word literally signifies. Have an unalterable attachment to whatever leads to God, and contributes to the welfare of your fellow-creatures.

Verse 10. Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love] The word translated brotherly love signifies that affectionate regard which every Christian should feel for another, as being members of the same mystical body: hence it is emphatically termed the love of the brethren.

The word which we translate kindly affectioned, signifies that tender and indescribable affection which a mother bears to her child, and which almost all creatures manifest towards their young.

In honour preferring one another] The meaning appears to be this: Consider all your brethren as more worthy than yourself; and let neither grief nor envy affect your mind at seeing another honoured and yourself neglected. This is a hard lesson, and very few persons learn it thoroughly. If we wish to see our brethren honoured, still it is with the secret condition in our own minds that we be honoured more than they. We have no objection to the elevation of others, providing we may be at the head. But who can bear even to be what he calls neglected?

Verse 11. Not slothful in business] That God, who forbade working on the seventh day, has, by the same authority, enjoined it on the other six days. He who neglects to labour during the week is as culpable as he who works on the sabbath. An idle, slothful person, can never be a Christian.

Fervent in spirit] Do nothing at any time but what is to the glory of God, and do everything as unto him; and in everything let your hearts be engaged. Be always in earnest, and let your heart ever accompany your hand.

Serving the Lord] Ever considering that his eye is upon you, and that you are accountable to him for all that you do, and that you should do everything so as to please him. In order to this there must be simplicity in the INTENTION, and purity in the AFFECTIONS.

Instead of serving the Lord, several MSS. and many editions have, serving the time—embracing the opportunity. I confess I do not see sufficient reason, after all that the critics have said, to depart from the common reading.

Verse 12. Rejoicing in hope] Of that glory of God that to each faithful follower of Christ shall shortly be revealed.

Patient in tribulation] Remembering that what you suffer as Christians you suffer for Christ's sake, and it is to his honour, and the honour of your Christian profession, that you suffer it with an even mind.

Continuing instant in prayer] Making the most fervent and intense application to the throne of grace for the light and power of the Holy Spirit.

Verse 13. Distributing to the necessity of saints] Relieve your poor brethren according to the power which God has given you. Do good unto all men, but especially to them which are of the household of faith.

Given to hospitality.] Pursuing hospitality, or the duty of entertaining strangers. A very necessary virtue in ancient times, when houses of public accommodation were exceedingly scarce.

Verse 14. Bless them which persecute you] Give good words, or pray for them that give you bad words, who make dire imprecations against you. Bless them, pray for them, and on no account curse them, whatever the provocation may be. Have the loving, forgiving mind, that was in your Lord.

Verse 15. Rejoice with them that do rejoice] Take a lively interest in the prosperity of others.

Weep with them that weep] Labour after a compassionate or sympathising mind. Let your heart feel for the distressed; enter into their sorrows, and bear a part of their burdens.

Verse 16. Be of the same mind] Live in a state of continual harmony and concord, and pray for the same good for all which you desire for yourselves.

Mind not high things] Be not ambitious; affect nothing above your station; do not court the rich nor the powerful: do not pass by the poor man to pay your court to the great man; do not affect titles or worldly distinctions, much less sacrifice your conscience for them. The attachment to high things and high men is the vice of little, shallow minds. However, it argues one important fact, that such persons are conscious that they are of no worth and of no consequence in themselves, and they seek to render themselves observable, and to gain a little credit by their endeavours to associate themselves with men of rank and fortune, and if possible to get into honourable employments; and, if this cannot be attained, they affect honourable titles.

But condescend to men of low estate] Be a companion of the humble, and pass through life with as little noise and show as possible. Let the poor, godly man, be your chief companion; and learn from his humility and piety to be humble and godly.

Be not wise in your own conceits] Be not puffed up with an opinion of your own consequence; for this will prove that the consequence itself is imaginary. Be not wise, by yourselves. Do not suppose that wisdom and discernment dwell alone with you.

Verse 17. Recompense, &c.] Do not be litigious. Beware of too nice a sense of your own honour; intolerable pride is at the bottom of this.

Provide things honest] Be prudent; be cautious; neither eat, drink, nor wear, but as you pay for everything. He who takes credit, even for food or raiment, when he has no probable means of defraying the debt, is a dishonest man. It is no sin to die through lack of the necessities of life when the providence of God has denied the means of support; but it is a sin to take up goods without the probability of being able to pay for them.

Verse 18. If it be possible] To live in a state of peace with one's neighbours, friends, and even family, is often very difficult. Though it be but barely possible, labour after it.

Verse 19. Dearely beloved, avenge not yourselves] Never take the execution of the law into your hands; rather suffer injuries. The Son of Man is come, not to destroy men's lives, but to save: be of the same spirit. When he was reviled, he reviled not again. It is the part of a noble mind to bear up under unmerited disgrace; little minds are litigious and quarrelsome.

Give place unto wrath] Leave room for the civil magistrate to do his duty; for by avenging yourselves you take your cause both out of the hands of the civil magistrate and out of the hands of God. I believe this to be the meaning of give place to wrath—punishment—the penalty which the law, properly executed, will inflict.

Vengeance is mine] This fixes the meaning of the apostle, and at once shows that the exhortation, Rather give place to wrath or punishment, means, Leave the matter to the judgment of God; it is his law that in this case is broken; and to him the infliction of deserved punishment belongs. Some think it means, "Yield a little to a man when in a passion, for the sake of peace, until he grow cooler."

I will repay] In my own time and in my own way. But he gives the sinner space to repent, and this long-suffering leads to salvation.

Verse 20. If thine enemy hunger, feed him] Do not withhold from any man the office of mercy and kindness; you have been God's enemy, and yet God fed, clothed, and preserved you alive: do to your enemy as God has done to you. Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, is a metaphor taken from smelting metals. The ore is put into the furnace, and fire put both under and over, that the metal may be liquefied, and, leaving the scoria and dross, may fall down pure to the bottom of the furnace.

It is most evident, from the whole connexion of the place and the apostle's use of it, that the heaping the coals of fire upon the head of the enemy is intended to produce not an evil, but the most beneficial effect; and the following verse is an additional proof.

Verse 21. Be not overcome of evil] Do not, by giving place to evil, become precisely the same character which thou condemnest in another. Overcome evil with good—however frequently he may grieve and injure thee, always repay him with kindness; thy good, in the end, may overcome his evil.

CHAPTER XIII.

Subjection to civil governors inculcated, from the consideration that civil government is according to the ordinance of God; and that those who resist the lawfully constituted authorities shall receive condemnation, 1, 2. And those who are obedient shall receive praise, 3. The character of a lawful civil governor, 4. The necessity of subjection, 5. The propriety of paying lawful tribute, 6, 7. Christians should love one another, 8-10. The necessity of immediate conversion to God proved from the shortness and uncertainty of time, 11, 12. How the Gentiles should walk so as to please God, and put on Christ Jesus in order to their salvation, 13, 14.

LET every soul ^a be subject unto the higher powers. For ^b there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ^c ordained of God.

2 Whosoever, therefore, resisteth ^d the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: ^e and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation.

3 For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? ^f do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same:

4 ^g For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil.

5 Wherefore ^h ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, ⁱ but also for conscience, sake.

^a Tit. iii. 1. 1 Pet. ii. 13.—^b Prov. viii. 15, 16. Dan. ii. 21. iv. 33. Wied. vi. 8. John xix. 11.—^c Or, ordered.—^d Tit. iii. 1.—^e Deut. xvii. 12. xxi. 18.—^f 1 Pet. ii. 13.—^g Ch. ii. 8. xii. 19. 1 Kings x. 9. Jer. xxi. 9.—^h Eccles. iiii. 2.—ⁱ 1 Pet. ii. 19.—^j Matt. xxii.

Verse 1. Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers.] This is a very strong saying, and most solemnly introduced; and we must consider the apostle as speaking, not from his own private judgment, or teaching a doctrine of present expediency, but declaring the mind of God on a subject of the utmost importance to the peace of the world; a doctrine which does not exclusively belong to any class of people, order of the community, or official situation, but to every soul; and, on the principles which the apostle lays down, to every soul in all possible varieties of situation, and on all occasions.

For there is no power but of God] As God is the origin of power, and the Supreme Governor of the universe, he delegates authority to whomsoever he will; and though in many cases the governor himself may not be of God, yet civil government is of him; for without this there could be no society, no security, no private property; all would be confusion and anarchy, and the habitable world would soon be depopulated. But it has been asked: If the ruler be an immoral or profligate man, does he not prove himself thereby to be unworthy of his office, and should he not be deposed? I answer, no. He may be irregular in his own private life; but if he rule according to the law; if he make no attempt to change the constitution, nor break the compact between him and the people, there is, therefore, no legal ground of opposition to his civil authority, and every act against him is not only rebellion in the worst sense of the word, but is unlawful and absolutely sinful.

Verse 2. Whosoever resisteth the power] He who sets himself in order against this order of God; and they who resist, they who obstinately, and for no right reason, oppose the ruler, and strive to unsettle the constitution, and to bring about illegal changes.

Shall receive to themselves damnation.] Condemnation; Shall be condemned both by the spirit and letter of that constitution, which, under pretence of defending or improving, they are indirectly labouring to subvert.

Verse 3. For rulers are not a terror to good works] Here the apostle shows the civil magistrate what he should be: he is clothed with great power, but that power is entrusted to him, not for the terror and oppression of the upright man, but to overawe and punish the wicked. It is, in a word, for the benefit of the community, and not for the aggrandizement of himself, that God has entrusted the supreme civil power to any man.

Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? If thou wouldst not live in fear of the civil magistrate, live according to the laws; and consequently instead of incurring blame thou wilt have praise. This is said on the supposition that the ruler is himself a good man: such the laws suppose him to be; and the apostle, on the general question of obedience and protection, assumes the point that the magistrate is such.

Verse 4. For he is the minister of God to thee for good] He is the minister of God—the office is by divine appointment: the man who is worthy of the office will act in conformity to the will of God; and as the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears open to their cry, con-

6 For, for this cause pay ye tribute also: for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing.

7 Render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour.

8 Owe no man any thing, but to love one another: for ^a he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law.

9 For this, ^b Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, ^c Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

10 Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore ^d love is the fulfilling of the law.

11 And that, knowing the time, that now it is sequently the ruler will be the minister of God to them for good.

He beareth not the sword in vain] His power is delegated to him for the defence and encouragement of the good, and the punishment of the wicked; and he has authority to punish capitally, when the law so requires: this the term sword leads us to infer.

For he is the minister of God, a revenger] For he is God's vindictive minister, to execute wrath; to inflict punishment upon the transgressors of the law—and this according to the statutes of that law—for God's civil ministers are never allowed to pronounce or inflict punishment according to their own minds or feelings, but according to the express declarations of the law.

Verse 5. Ye must needs be subject] There is a necessity that ye should be subject, not only for wrath, on account of the punishment which will be inflicted on evil doers, but also for conscience sake; not only to avoid punishment, but also to preserve a clear conscience.

Verse 6. For this cause pay ye tribute also] Because civil government is an order of God, and the ministers of state must be at considerable expense in providing for the safety and defence of the community, it is necessary that those in whose behalf these expenses are incurred should defray that expense; and hence nothing can be more reasonable than an impartial and moderate taxation, by which the expenses of the state may be defrayed, and the various officers, whether civil or military, who are employed for the service of the public, be adequately remunerated.

Verse 7. Render therefore to all their dues] This is an extensive command. Be rigidly just; withhold neither from the king nor his ministers, nor his officers of justice and revenue, nor from even the lowest of the community, what the laws of God and your country require you to pay.

Tribute to whom tribute] This word probably means such taxes as were levied on persons and estates.

Custom to whom custom] This word probably means such duties as were laid upon goods, merchandise, &c., on imports and exports; what we commonly call custom.

Fear to whom fear] It is likely that the word which we translate fear, signifies that reverence which produces obedience. Treat all official characters with respect, and be obedient to your superiors.

Honour to whom honour.] The word may here mean that outward respect which the principle reverence, from which it springs, will generally produce. If a man habituate himself to disrespect official characters, he will soon find himself disposed to pay little respect or obedience to the laws themselves.

Verse 8. Owe no man any thing, but to love one another] Here the apostle shows them their duty to each other: but this is widely different from that which they owe to the civil government: to the first they owe subjection, reverence, obedience, and tribute: to the latter they owe nothing but mutual love, and those offices which necessarily spring from it.

Verse 9. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery] He that loves another will not deprive him of his wife, of his life, of his property, of his good name ; and will not even permit a desire to enter into his heart which would lead him to wish to possess anything that is the property of another : for the law—the sacred scripture has said : Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

Verse 11. And that, knowing the time] Some think the passage should be understood thus : We have now many advantages which we did not formerly possess. Salvation is nearer—the whole Christian system is more fully explained, and the knowledge of it more easy to be acquired than formerly ; on which account a greater progress in religious knowledge and in practical piety is required of us : and we have for a long time been too remiss in these respects. Deliverance from the persecutions, &c., with which they were then afflicted, is supposed by others to be the meaning of the apostle.

Verse 12. The night is far spent] If we understand this in reference to the heathen state of the Romans it may be paraphrased thus : The night is far spent—heathenish darkness is nearly at an end. The day is at hand—the full manifestation of the Sun of righteousness, in the illumination of the whole Gentile world, approaches rapidly. Cast off the works of darkness—prepare to meet this rising light, and welcome its approach ; by throwing aside superstition, impiety, and vice of every kind. This sense seems most suitable to the following verses, where the vices of the Gentiles are particularly specified ; and they are exhorted to abandon them, and to receive the gospel of Christ. The common method of explanation is this : The night is far spent—our present imperfect life, full of afflictions, temptations, and trials, is almost run out ; the day of eternal blessedness is at hand—is about to dawn on us in our glorious resurrection unto eternal life. Therefore, let us cast off—let us live as candidates for this eternal glory. But this sense cannot at all comport with what is said below, as the Gentiles are most evidently intended.

Verse 13. Let us walk honestly, as in the day] Let us

14 But ⁱ put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and ^j make not provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof.

walk decently. Let our deportment be decent, orderly, and grave ; such as we shall not be ashamed of in the eyes of the whole world.

Not in rioting and drunkenness] Drunken festivals, such as were celebrated in honour of their gods, when, after they had sacrificed, they drank to excess, accompanied with abominable acts of every kind.

Not in chambering] The original word signifies whoredoms and prostitution of every kind.

And wantonness] All manner of uncleanliness and sodomitical practices.

Not in strife and envying] Not in contentions and furious altercations, which must be the consequence of such practices as are mentioned above. Can any man suppose that this address is to the Christians at Rome ? If those called Christians at Rome were guilty of such acts, there could be no difference, except in profession, between them and the most abominable of the heathens.

The advices to the Christians may be found in the preceding chapter ; those at the conclusion of this chapter belong solely to the heathens.

Verse 14. Put ye on the Lord Jesus] Putting on or being clothed with Jesus Christ, signifies receiving and believing the gospel ; and consequently, taking its maxims for the government of life, having the mind that was in Christ.

And make not provision for the flesh] By flesh we are here to understand, not only the body, but all the irregular appetites and passions which lead to the abominations already recited. No provision should be made for the encouragement and gratification of such a principle as this.

To fulfil the lusts thereof] In reference to its lusts ; such as the rioting, drunkenness, prostitutions, and uncleanliness, mentioned, ver. 13, to make provision for which the Gentiles lived and laboured, and bought and sold, and schemed and planned ; for it was the whole business of their life to gratify the sinful lusts of the flesh.

CHAPTER XIV.

In things indifferent, Christians should not condemn one another, 1. Particularly with respect to different kinds of food, 2-4. And the observation of certain days, 5, 6. None of us should live unto himself, but unto Christ, who lived and died for us, 7-9. We must not judge each other ; for all judgment belongs to God, 10-13. We should not do any thing by which a weak brother may be stumbled or grieved ; lest we destroy him for whom Christ died, 14-16. The kingdom of God does not consist in outward things, 17, 18. Christians should endeavour to cultivate peace and brotherly affection, and rather deny themselves of certain privileges than be the means of stumbling a weak brother, 19-21. The necessity of doing all in the spirit of faith, 22, 23.

HIM that ^ais weak in the faith receive ye, but ^bnot to doubtful disputations.

2 For one believeth that he ^cmay eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs.

3 Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and ^dlet not him which eateth not judge him that eateth: for God hath received him.

4 ^eWho art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand.

5 ^fOne man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be ^gfully persuaded in his own mind.

6 He that ^hregardeth ⁱthe day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for ^jhe giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth God thanks.

^aCh. xv. 1, 7. 1 Cor. viii. 9, 11. ix. 23.—Or, not to judge his doubtful thoughts.—^bVer. 14. 1 Cor. x. 25. 1 Tim. iv. 4. Tit. i. 15. ^cCol. ii. 16.—James iv. 12.—Gal. iv. 10. Col. iii. 16.—Or, fully assured.—Gal. iv. 10.—Or, observe.—11 Cor. x. 31. 1 Tim. iv. 8.

Verse 1. Him that is weak in the faith] By this the apostle most evidently means the converted Jew, who must indeed be weak in the faith, if he considered this distinction of meats and days essential to his salvation.

Receive ye] Associate with him; receive him into your religious fellowship; but when there, let all religious alterations be avoided.

Not to doubtful disputations] These words have been variously translated and understood. Dr. Whitby thinks the sense of them to be this: Not discriminating them by their inward thoughts. Do not reject any from your Christian communion because of their particular sentiments on things which are in themselves indifferent. Do not curiously inquire into their religious scruples, nor condemn them on that account.

Verse 2. One believeth that he may eat all things] He believes that whatsoever is wholesome and nourishing, whether herbs or flesh—whether enjoined or forbidden by the Mosaic law—may be safely and conscientiously used by every Christian.

Another, who is weak, eateth herbs] Certain Jews, lately converted to the Christian faith, believe the Mosaic law relative to clean and unclean meats to be still in force; and therefore, when they are in a Gentile country, for fear of being defiled, avoid flesh entirely, and live on vegetables.

Verse 4. Yea, he shall be holden up] He is sincere and upright, and God, who is able to make him stand, will uphold him; and so teach him that he shall not essentially err.

Verse 5. One man esteemeth one day above another] Reference is made here to the Jewish institutions, and especially their festivals; such as the passover, pentecost, feast of tabernacles, new moons, jubilee, &c. The converted Jew still thought these of moral obligation; the Gentile Christian not having been bred up in this way, had no such prejudices.

Another] The converted Gentile esteemeth every day—considers that all time is the Lord's, and that each day should be devoted to the glory of God; and that those festivals are not binding on him.

We add here alike, and make the text say what I am sure was never intended, viz., that there is no distinction of days, not even of the Sabbath: and that every Christian is at liberty to consider this day to be holy or not holy, as he happens to be persuaded in his own mind. See note on Gen. ii. 3.

Let every man be fully persuaded] With respect to the propriety or non-propriety of keeping the above festivals, let every man act from the plenary conviction of his own mind: there is a sufficient latitude allowed; all may be fully satisfied.

Verse 6. He that regardeth the day] A beautiful apology for mistaken sincerity and injudicious reformation. Do not condemn the man for what is indifferent in itself: if he keep these festivals, his purpose is to honour God by the religious observance of them. On the other hand, he who finds that he cannot observe them in honour of God, not 7 For ^knone of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself.

8 For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's.

9 For ^lto this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be ^mLord both of the dead and living;

10 But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for ⁿwe shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ.

11 For it is written, ^oAs I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God.

12 So then ^pevery one of us shall give account of himself to God.

13 Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that ^qno man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.

believing that God has enjoined them, does not observe them at all.

Verse 7. None of us liveth to himself] The Greek writers use this phrase to signify to act according to one's own judgment, following one's own opinion. Christians must act in all things according to the mind and will of God, and not follow their own wills.

Verse 9. Christ both died, and rose] That we are not our own, but are the Lord's, both in life and death, is evident from this—that Christ lived, and died, and rose again, that he might be the Lord of the dead and the living; for his power extends equally over both worlds: separate, as well as embodied spirits, are under his authority; and he it is who is to raise even the dead to life: and thus all throughout eternity shall live under his dominion. The clause, and rose, is wanting in several reputable MSS., and is not necessary to the text.

Verse 10. We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ] Why should we then judge and condemn each other? We are accountable to God for our conduct, and shall be judged at his bar; and let us consider whatever measure we mete, the same shall be measured unto us again.

Verse 12. Every one of us shall give account of himself] We shall not, at the bar of God, be obliged to account for the conduct of each other—each shall give account of himself: and let him take heed that he be prepared to give up his account with joy.

Verse 13. Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more] Let us abandon such rash conduct; it is dangerous, it is uncharitable: judgment belongs to the Lord, and he will condemn those only who should not be acquitted.

That no man put a stumbling-block] Let both the converted Jew and Gentile consider that they should labour to promote each other's spiritual interests, and not be a means of hindering each other in their Christian course; or of causing them to abandon the gospel, on which, and not on questions of rites and ceremonies, the salvation of their souls depend.

Verse 14. I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus] And yet, after having given them this decisive judgment, through respect to the tender, mistaken conscience of weak believers, he immediately adds: But to him that esteemeth any thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean; because if he act contrary to his conscience, he must necessarily contract guilt.

It is dangerous to trifle with conscience, even when erroneous; it should be born with and instructed; it must be won over, not taken by storm. Its feelings should be respected, because they ever refer to God, and have their foundation in his fear. It is a great blessing to have a well-informed conscience; it is a blessing to have a tender conscience; and even a sore conscience is infinitely better than none.

Verse 15. If thy brother be grieved] If he think that 14 I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, *that there is nothing ^bunclean of itself: but *to him that esteemeth any thing to be ^cunclean, to him it is unclean.

15 But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkest thou not *charitably. 'Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died.

16 * Let not then your good be evil spoken of:

17 ^a For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

18 For he that in these things serveth Christ ⁱ is acceptable to God, and approved of men.

19¹ Let us therefore follow after the things which

^a Acts x. 15. Ver. 2, 20. 1 Cor. x. 25. 1 Tim. iv. 4. Tit. i. 15. — ^b Gr. common. — 1 Cor. viii. 7, 10. — ^c Gr. common. — Gr. according to charity. — 1 Cor. viii. 11. — Ch. xii. 17. — 1 Cor. viii. 8. — 1 John iii. 21. — Ps. xxxiv. 14. Ch. xii. 18. — Ch. xv. 2. 1 Cor.

thou doest wrong, and he is in consequence stumbled at thy conduct.

Now walkest thou not charitably.] According to love; for love worketh not ill to its neighbour; but by thy eating some particular kind of meat, on which neither thy life nor well-being depends, thou workest ill to him by grieving and distressing his mind; and therefore thou breakest the law of God in reference to him, while pretending that thy Christian liberty raises thee above his scruples.

Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died.] This puts the uncharitable conduct of the person in question in the strongest light, because it supposes that the weak brother may be so stumbled as to fall and perish finally; even the man for whom Christ died. To injure a man in his circumstances is bad; to injure him in his person is worse; to injure him in his reputation is still worse; and to injure his soul is worst of all.

From this verse we learn that a man for whom Christ died may perish, or have his soul destroyed; and destroyed with such a destruction as implies perdition; the original is very emphatic.

Verse 16. Let not then your good be evil spoken of.] Do not make such a use of your Christian liberty as to subject the gospel itself to reproach. Whatsoever you do, do it in such a manner, spirit, and time, as to make it productive of the greatest possible good.

Verse 17. For the kingdom of God.] That holy religion which God has sent from heaven, and which he intends to make the instrument of establishing a counterpart of the kingdom of glory among men, see on Matt. iii. 2.

Is not meat and drink.] It consists not in these outward and indifferent things. It neither particularly enjoins nor particularly forbids such.

But righteousness.] Pardon of sin, and holiness of heart and life.

And peace.] In the soul, from a sense of God's mercy; peace regulating, ruling, and harmonizing the heart.

And joy in the Holy Ghost.] Solid spiritual happiness; a joy which springs from a clear sense of God's mercy; the love of God being shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost.

Verse 18. For he that in these things.] This was a very common form of speech among the Jews; that he who was a conscientious observer of the law was pleasing to God, and approved of men.

Verse 19. Let us therefore follow.] Instead of contending about meats, drinks, and festival times, in which it is not likely that the Jews and Gentiles will soon agree, let us endeavour to the utmost of our power to promote peace and unanimity.

Verse 20. For meat destroy not the work of God.] Do not make for peace, and things wherewith *one may edify another.

20 ¹ For meat destroy not the work of God. = All things indeed are pure; * but it is evil for that man who eateth with offence.

21 It is good neither to eat ^c flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

22 Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. * Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth.

23 And he that ^c doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith: for * whatsoever is not of faith is sin.

hinder the progress of the gospel either in your own souls or in those of others, by contending about lawful or unlawful meats.

All things indeed are pure.] This is a repetition of the sentiment delivered, ver. 14, in different words.

Verse 21. It is good neither to eat flesh, &c.] The spirit and self-denying principles of the gospel teach us, that we should not only avoid everything in eating or drinking which may be an occasion of offence or apostasy to our brethren, but even lay down our lives for them should it be necessary.

Whereby thy brother stumbleth.] The original means to strike, to hit the foot against a stone in walking, so as to halt, and be impeded in one's journey. It here means, spiritually, any thing by which a man is so perplexed in his mind as to be prevented from making due progress in the divine life.

Or is offended.] Originally the word signified the piece of wood or key in a trap, which being trodden on caused the animal to fall into a pit, or the trap to close upon him. In the New Testament it generally refers to total apostasy from the Christian religion; and this appears to be its meaning in this place.

Or is made weak.] Without mental vigour; without power sufficiently to distinguish between right and wrong, good and evil, lawful and unlawful. To get under the dominion of an erroneous conscience, so as to judge that to be evil or unlawful which is not so.

Verse 22. Hast thou faith?] The term faith seems to signify in this place a full persuasion in a man's mind that he is right, that what he does is lawful, and has the approbation of God and his conscience.

Happy is he that condemneth not, &c.] That man only can enjoy peace of conscience who acts according to the full persuasion which God has given him of the lawfulness of his conduct: whereas he must be miserable who allows himself in the practice of any thing for which his conscience upbraids and accuses him.

Verse 23. And he that doubteth.] This verse is a necessary part of the preceding, and should be read thus: But he that doubteth is condemned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith.

For whatsoever is not of faith is sin.] Whatever he does, without a full persuasion of its lawfulness (see ver. 21), is to him sin; for he does it under a conviction that he may be wrong in so doing.

Some think that these words have a more extensive signification, and that they apply to all who have not true religion and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; every work of such persons being sinful in the sight of a holy God, because it does not proceed from a pure motive.

CHAPTER XV.

The strong should bear the infirmities of the weak, and each strive to please, not himself, but his neighbour, after the example of Christ, 1-3. Whosoever was written in old times was written for our learning, 4. We should be of one mind, that we might with one mouth glorify God, 5, 6. We should accept each other as Christ has accepted us, 7. Scriptural proofs that Jesus Christ was not only the minister of the circumcision, but came also for the salvation of the Gentiles, 8-12. The God of hope can fill us with all peace and joy in believing, 13. Character of the church of Rome, 14. The reason why the apostle wrote so boldly to the church in that city—what God had wrought by him, and what he purposed to do, 15-24. He tells them of his intended journey to Jerusalem, with a contribution to the poor saints—a sketch of this journey, 25-29. He commends himself to their prayers, 30-33.

WE then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves.

2 Let every one of us please his neighbour for his good to edification.

3 For even Christ pleased not himself; but, as it is written, 'The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me.

4 For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning; that we, through patience and comfort of the scriptures, might have hope.

5 Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be like-minded one toward another according to Christ Jesus:

6 That ye may with one mind and one mouth

Verse 1. We then that are strong] We are bound in duty to bear any inconveniences that may arise from the scruples of the weaker brethren, and to ease their consciences by prudently abstaining from such indifferent things as may offend and trouble them; and not take advantage from our superior knowledge to make them submit to our judgment.

Verse 2. Let every one of us please his neighbour] Though we should not indulge men in mere whims and caprices, yet we should bear with their ignorance and their weakness, knowing that others had much to bear with from us before we came to our present advanced state of religious knowledge.

Verse 3. For even Christ pleased not himself] Christ never acted as one who sought his own ease or profit; he not only bore with the weakness, but with the insults, of his creatures.

Verse 4. For whatsoever things were written aforetime] This refers not only to the quotation from the 69th Psalm, but to all the Old Testament scriptures; for it can be to no other scriptures that the apostle alludes. Some think that the word which we translate comfort, should be rendered exhortation; but there is certainly no need here to leave the usual acceptation of the term, as the word comfort makes a regular and consistent sense with the rest of the verse.

Verse 6. That ye—Jews and Gentiles—may with one mind] Thinking the same things, and bearing with each other, after the example of Christ; and one mouth, in all your religious assemblies, without jarring or contentions, glorify God for calling you into such a state of salvation, and showing himself to be your loving compassionate Father, as he is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 7. Wherefore receive ye one another] Have the most affectionate regard for each other, and acknowledge each other as the servants and children of God Almighty.

As Christ also received us] In the same manner, and with the same cordial affection, as Christ has received us into communion with himself, and has made us partakers of such inestimable blessings, condescending to be present in all our assemblies.

Verse 8. Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision] To show the Gentiles the propriety of bearing with the scrupulous Jews, he shows them here that they were under glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

7 Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God.

8 Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers:

9 And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy; as it is written, For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name.

10 And again he saith, Rejoice, ye Gentiles, with his people.

11 And again, Praise the Lord, all ye Gentiles; and laud him, all ye people.

the greatest obligations to this people; to whom, in the days of his flesh, Jesus Christ confined his ministry; giving the world to see that he allowed the claim of the Jews as having the first right to the blessings of the gospel.

Verse 9. And that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy] As the Jews were to glorify God for his truth, so the Gentiles were to glorify God for his mercy.

I will confess to thee among the Gentiles] This quotation is taken from Psalm xviii. 49, and shows that the Gentiles had a right to glorify God for his mercy to them.

Verse 13. Now the God of hope, &c.] May the God of this hope—that God who caused both Jews and Gentiles to hope that the gracious promises which he made to them should be fulfilled.

Verse 14. And I—am persuaded of you] This is supposed to be an address to the Gentiles; and it is managed with great delicacy: he seems to apologize for the freedom he had used in writing to them: which he gives them to understand proceeded from the authority he had received by his apostolical office, the exercise of which office respected them particularly. So they could not be offended when they found themselves so particularly distinguished.

Ye—are full of goodness] Instead of goodness, some MSS. of good repute have love. In this connection both words seem to mean nearly the same thing.

Filled with all knowledge] So completely instructed in the mind and design of God, relative to their calling, and the fruit which they were to bring forth to the glory of God, that they were well qualified to give one another suitable exhortations on every important point.

Instead of one another, several MSS. have others; which gives a clearer sense: for, if they were all filled with knowledge, there was little occasion for them to admonish others—to impart the wisdom they had to those who were less instructed.

Verse 15. Because of the grace] Because of the office which I have received from God, namely, to be the apostle of the Gentiles. This authority gave him full right to say, advise, or enjoin anything which he judged to be of importance to their spiritual interests.

Verse 16. Ministering the gospel of God] Acting as a priest. Here is a plain allusion to the Jewish sacrifices of Jesse, and he that shall rise to reign over the Gentiles; in him shall the Gentiles trust.

13 Now the God of hope fill you with all *joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Ghost.

14 And ^b I myself also am persuaded of you, my brethren, that ye also are full of goodness, *filled with all knowledge, able also to admonish one another.

15 Nevertheless, brethren, I have written the more boldly unto you in some sort, as putting you in mind, ^a because of the grace that is given to me of God, 16 That * I should be the minister of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, ministering the gospel of God, that the *offering ^a up of the Gentiles might be acceptable, being sanctified by the Holy Ghost.

17 I have therefore whereof I may glory through Jesus Christ ^a in those things which pertain to God.

18 For I will not dare to speak of any of those things ^a which Christ hath not wrought by me, ^a to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed, offered by the priest, and sanctified or made acceptable by the libamen offered with them; for he compares himself, in preaching the gospel, to the priest performing his sacred functions—preparing his sacrifice to be offered.

Verse 17. I have therefore whereof I may glory] Being sent of God on this most honourable and important errand, I have matter of great exultation, not only in the honour which he has conferred upon me, but in the great success with which he has crowned my ministry.

Verse 18. For I will not dare to speak] If the thing were not as I have stated it, I would not dare to arrogate to myself honours which did not belong to me.

By word and deed] These words may refer to the doctrines which he taught, and to the miracles which he wrought among men.

Verse 19. Through mighty signs and wonders] This more fully explains the preceding clause.

Round about unto Illyricum] Among ancient writers this place has gone by a great variety of names, Illyria, Illyrica, Illyricum, Illyris, and Illyrium. It is a country of Europe, extending from the Adriatic Gulf to Pannonia; according to Pliny, it extended from the river Arxia to the river Drinius, thus including Liburnia on the west, and Dalmatia on the east. Its precise limits have not been determined by either ancient or modern geographers. When the apostle says that he preached the gospel from Jerusalem round about to Illyricum, he intends his land journeys chiefly.

I have fully preached the gospel] I have successfully preached—I have not only proclaimed the word, but made converts, and founded churches.

Verse 20. So have I strived to preach the gospel] For I have considered it my honour to preach the gospel where that gospel was before unknown. This is the proper import of the original word.

Verse 21. But as it is written] These words, quoted from Isa. lii. 15, he applies to his own conduct; not that the words themselves predicted what Paul had done, but that he endeavoured to fulfil such a declaration by his manner of preaching the gospel to the heathen.

Verse 22. For which cause &c.] My considering it a point of honour to build on no other man's foundation; and, finding that the gospel has been long ago planted at Rome, I have been prevented from going thither, purposing rather to spend my time and strength in preaching where Christ has not, as yet, been proclaimed.

Verse 23. But—having no more place in these parts] The apostle was then at Corinth; and, having evangelized all those parts, he had no opportunity of breaking up any new ground.

Verse 24. Whosoever I take my journey into Spain] Where it is very likely the gospel had not yet been planted;

19 ^a Through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the gospel of Christ.

20 Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, ^a lest I should build upon another man's foundation:

21 But as it is written, ^a To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see: and they that have not heard, shall understand.

22 For which cause also * I have been * much hindered from coming to you.

23 But now having no more place in these parts, and ^a having a great desire these many years to come unto you;

24 Whosoever I take my journey into Spain, I will come to you: for I trust to see you in my journey, ^a and to be brought on my way thitherward by you, if first I be somewhat filled ^a with your company.

25 But now * I go unto Jerusalem to minister unto the saints.

26 For ^a it hath pleased them of Macedonia and though legendary tales inform us that St. James had planted the gospel there long before this time, and had founded many bishoprics!

I will come to you] These words are wanting in almost every MS. of note, and in the Syriac of Erpen, Coptic, Vulgate, Æthiopic, Armenian, and Itala.

Somewhat filled with your company] The word which we translate filled would be better rendered gratified; for it signifies to be satisfied, to be gratified, and to enjoy.

The apostle, though he had not the honour of having planted the Church at Rome, yet expected much gratification from the visit which he intended to pay them.

Verse 25. Now I go unto Jerusalem] From this and the two following verses we learn that the object of his journey to Jerusalem was, to carry a contribution made among the Gentile Christians at Macedonia and Achaia for the relief of the poor Jewish Christians at Jerusalem. About this affair he had taken great pains, as appears from 1 Cor. xvi. 1-4; 2 Cor. chapters viii. and ix.

Verse 27. For if the Gentiles have been made partakers, &c.] It was through and by means of the Jews that the Gentiles were brought to the knowledge of God and the gospel of Christ. These were the spiritual things which they had received; and the pecuniary contribution was the carnal things which the Gentiles were now returning.

Verse 28. When, therefore, I have performed this] Service, and have sealed—faithfully delivered up to them this fruit of the success of my ministry and of your conversion to God, I will come by you into Spain: this was in his desire; he had fully purposed it, if God should see meet to permit him; but it does not appear that he ever went.

Verse 29. In the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ] The words, of the gospel, are wanting in almost every MS. of importance. There is no doubt they should be omitted. The fulness of the blessing of Christ is really more than the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

Verse 30. For the love of the Spirit] By that love of God which the Holy Spirit sheds abroad in your hearts.

That ye strive together] That ye agonise with me.

Verse 31. That I may be delivered from them that do not believe] He knew that his countrymen, who had not received the gospel, lay in wait for his life; and, no doubt, they thought they should do God service by destroying him, not only as an apostate, in their apprehension, from the Jewish religion, but as one who was labouring to subvert and entirely destroy it.

And that my service] Service, in its connexion here, could refer to nothing else but the contribution which he was carrying to the poor saints at Jerusalem.

Verse 32. That I may come unto you with joy] Should his journey to Jerusalem be prosperous, and his service ac-Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem.

27 It hath pleased them, verily; and their debtors they are. For ^aif the Gentiles have been made partakers of their spiritual things, ^btheir duty is also to minister unto them in carnal things.

28 When, therefore, I have performed this, and have sealed to them ^cthis fruit, I will come by you into Spain.

29 ^dAnd I am sure that, when I come unto you, I shall come in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

CHAPTER XVI.

The apostle commends to the Christians at Rome Phœbe, a deaconess of the Church at Cenchrea, 1, 2. Sends greetings to Aquila and Priscilla, of whom he gives a high character; and greets also the Church at their house, 3-5. Mentions several others by name, both men and women, who were members of the Church of Christ at Rome, 6-16. Warns them to beware of those who cause dissensions and divisions, of whom he gives an awful character, 17, 18. Extols the obedience of the Roman Christians, and promises them a complete victory over Satan, 19, 20. Several persons send their salutations, 21-23. To whose good wishes he subjoins the apostolic blessing; commends them to God; gives an abstract of the doctrines of the gospel; and concludes with ascribing glory to the only wise God, through Christ Jesus, 24-27.

I COMMEND unto you Phœbe our sister, which is a servant of the church which is at ^aCenchrea:

2 ^bThat ye receive her in the Lord, as becometh saints; and that ye assist her in whatsoever business she hath need of you: for she hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also.

3 Greet ^cPriscilla and Aquila, my helpers in Christ Jesus:

4 Who have for my life laid down their own necks: unto whom not only I give thanks, but also all the churches of the Gentiles.

^aActs xviii. 18.—^bPhil. ii. 29. 3 John 5, 6.—^cActs xviii. 2, 19, 26. 2 Tim. iv. 19.

Verse 1. I commend unto you Phœbe] Phœbe is here termed a servant, a deaconess of the church at Cenchrea. There were deaconesses in the primitive church, whose business it was to attend the female converts at baptism; to instruct the catechumens, or persons who were candidates for baptism; to visit the sick, and those who were in prison; and, in short, perform those religious offices for the female part of the church which could not with propriety be performed by men. They were chosen in general out of the most experienced of the church, and were ordinarily widows who had born children. Some ancient constitutions required them to be forty, others fifty, and others sixty years of age. It is evident that they were ordained to their office by the imposition of the hands of the bishop; and the form

6 Greet Mary, who bestowed much labour on us.

7 Salute Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen, and my fellow-prisoners, who are of note among the apostles, who also ^fwere in Christ before me.

8 Greet Amplias, my beloved in the Lord.

9 Salute Urbane, our helper in Christ, and Stachys, my beloved.

10 Salute Apelles, approved in Christ. Salute them which are of Aristobulus' ^ghousehold.

of prayer used on the occasion is extant in the apostolical constitutions. In the tenth or eleventh century the order became extinct in the Latin Church, but continued in the Greek Church till the end of the twelfth century.

Cenchrea was a seaport on the east side of the Isthmus which joined the Morea to Greece.

Verse 2. Succourer of many] One who probably entertained the apostles and preachers who came to minister at Cenchrea, and who was remarkable for entertaining strangers.

Verse 3. Greet Priscilla and Aquila] This pious couple had been obliged to leave Rome, on the edict of Claudius, see Acts xviii. 2, and take refuge in Greece. It is likely that they returned to Rome at the death of Claudius, or whenever the decree was annulled. Instead of Priscilla, 11 Salute Herodion, my kinsman. Greet them that be of the household of Narcissus, which are in the Lord.

12 Salute Tryphena and Tryphosa, who labour in the Lord. Salute the beloved Persis, which laboured much in the Lord.

13 Salute Rufus, chosen in the Lord; and his mother and mine.

14 Salute Asyncretus, Phlegon, Hermas, Patrobas, Hermes, and the brethren which are with them.

15 Salute Philologus, and Julia, Nereus, and his sister, and Olympas, and all the saints which are with them.

*Or, friends.—†2 John i.—‡1 Cor. xvi. 20. § 2 Cor. xiii. 12. 1 Thess. v. 23. 1 Pet. v. 14.—¶ Acta xv. 1, 5, 24. 1 Tim. vi. 3.—1 Cor. v. 9, 11. 2 Thess. xiii. 6, 14. 2 Tim. iii. 5. Titus iii. 10. 2 the principle MSS. and Versions have Prisca, which most critics suppose to be the genuine reading.

Verse 4. Who have for my life laid down their own necks] What transaction this refers to we know not; but it appears that these persons had, on some occasion, hazarded their own lives to save that of the apostle; and that the fact was known to all the Churches of God in that quarter, who felt themselves under the highest obligations to these pious persons, for the important service which they had thus rendered.

Verse 5 The church that is in their house.] In these primitive times no such places existed as those which we now term churches; the word always signifying the congregation or assembly of believers, and not the place they assembled in.

Epenetus—the firstfruits of Achaia] In 1 Cor. xvi. 15, the house or family of Stephanas is said to be the firstfruits of Achaia: how then can it be said here, that Epenetus was the firstfruits, or first person who had received the gospel in that district? Ans.—Epenetus might have been one of the family of Stephanas; that is, one of that family which first received the gospel in that country. This would rationally account for the apparent difficulty, were we sure that of Achaia, was the true reading: but this is more than doubtful, for of Asia, is the reading of many MSS. versions, and Fathers.

Verse 6. Greet Mary, who bestowed much labour on us.] Her works, though hidden from man, are with God; and her name is recorded with honour in the book of life.

Verse 7. Andronicus and Junia, my kinsmen] As the word signifies relatives, whether male or female, and as Junia may probably be the name of a woman, the wife of Andronicus, it would be better to say relatives than kinsmen. But probably St. Paul means no more than that they were Jews; for in chap. ix. 3, he calls all the Jews his kinsmen according to the flesh.

My fellow-prisoners] As Paul was in prison often, it is likely that these persons shared this honour with him on some occasion, which is not distinctly marked.

Of note among the apostles] They were not only well known to St. Paul, but also to the rest of the apostles.

In Christ before me.] That is, they were converted to Christianity before Paul was; probably at the day of Pentecost, or by the ministry of Christ himself, or by that of the seventy disciples.

Verse 8. Amphias, my beloved in the Lord] One who is my particular friend, and also a genuine Christian.

Verse 9. Urbanus, our helper] Who this Urbanus was we know not; what is here stated is, that he had been a fellow-labourer with the apostles.

Stachys, my beloved.] One of my particular friends.

Verse 10. Apelles, approved in Christ] A man who, on different occasions, had given the highest proofs of the sincerity and depth of his religion: Some suppose that Apelles was the same with Apollos: whoever he was, he had given every demonstration of being a genuine Christian.

Of Aristobulus' household.] It is doubted whether this person was converted, as the apostle does not salute him, but his household; or as the margin reads, his friends. He might have been a Roman of considerable distinction, who, though not converted himself, had Christians among his servants or his slaves.

Verse 11. Herodion my kinsman.] Probably another converted Jew.

16 Salute one another with an holy kiss. The churches of Christ salute you.

17 Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them ^d which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and ^e avoid them.

18 For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but ^f their own belly; and ^g by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple.

19 For ^h your obedience is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf: but yet I would have you ⁱ wise unto that which is good, and ^j simple concerning evil.

Which are in the Lord.] This might intimate that some of this family were not Christians; or those only of that family that were converted to the Lord being saluted.

Verse 12. Tryphena and Tryphosa] Two holy women, who it seems were assistants to the apostle in his work, probably by exhorting, visiting the sick, &c. Persis was another woman, who it seems excelled the preceding; for, of her it is said, she laboured much in the Lord. We learn from this, that Christian women, as well as men, laboured in the ministry of the word. In those times of simplicity, all persons, whether men or women, who had received the knowledge of the truth, believed it to be their duty to propagate it to the uttermost of their power. Many have spent much useless labour in endeavouring to prove that these women did not preach. That there were some prophetesses, as well as prophets, in the Christian Church, we learn; and that a woman might pray or prophecy, provided she had her head covered, we know, and that whoever prophesied spoke unto others to edification, exhortation, and comfort. St. Paul declares, 1 Cor. xiv. 3. And that no preacher can do more, every person must acknowledge; because to edify, exhort, and comfort, are the prime ends of the gospel ministry. If women thus prophesied, then women preached. There is, however, much more than this implied in the Christian ministry, of which men only, and men called of God, are capable.

Verse 13. Rufus, chosen in the Lord] One of great excellence in Christianity; a choice man as we would say.

His mother and mine.] It is not likely that the mother of Rufus was the mother of Paul; but while she was the natural mother of the former, she acted as a mother to the latter.

Verse 14. Salute Asyncretus, &c.] Who these were we know not.

Verse 15. Salute Philologus, &c.] Of these several persons, though much has been conjectured, nothing certain is known. Even the names of some are so ambiguous that we know not whether they were men or women. One thing we may remark, that there is no mention of St. Peter, who, according to the Roman and papistical catalogue of bishops, must have been at Rome at this time; if he were not now at Rome, the foundation stone of Rome's ascendancy, of Peter's supremacy, and of the uninterrupted succession, is taken away, and the whole fabric falls to the ground.

Verse 16. Salute one another with an holy kiss.] In those early times the kiss, as a token of peace, friendship, and brotherly love, was frequent among all people; and the Christians used it in their public assemblies, as well as in their occasional meetings. This was at last laid aside, not because it was abused, but because the church becoming very numerous, the thing was impossible.

The churches of Christ salute you.] The word ALL, is added here by some of the most reputable MSS. and principal Versions. St. Paul must mean here that all the Churches in Greece and Asia, through which he had passed, in which the faith of the Christians at Rome was known, spoke of them affectionately and honourably; and probably, knowing the apostle's design of visiting Rome, desired to be kindly remembered to the Church in that city.

Verse 17. Mark them which cause divisions.] Look sharply after such that they do you no evil, and avoid them—give them no countenance, and have no religious fellowship with them.

20 And 'the God of peace 'shall 'bruise Satan under your feet shortly. 'The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

21 'Timotheus my workfellow, and 'Lucius, and 'Jason, and 'Sospiter, my kinsmen, salute you.

22 I, Tertius, who wrote this epistle, salute you in the Lord.

23 'Gaius mine host, and of the whole church, saluteth you. 'Erastus the chamberlain of the city saluteth you, and Quartus a brother.

24 'The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Verse 18. They—serve not our Lord Jesus] The Church of God has ever been troubled with such pretended pastors—men who feed themselves, not the flock; men who are too proud to beg, and too lazy to work; who have neither grace nor gifts to plant the standard of the cross on the devil's territories, and by the power of Christ make inroads upon his kingdom, and spoil him of his subjects. On the contrary, by sowing the seeds of disension, by means of doubtful disputations, and the propagation of scandals; by glaring and insinuating speeches, for they affect elegance and good breeding, they rend Christian congregations, form a party for themselves, and thus live on the spoils of the Church of God.

Verse 19. For your obedience is come abroad] The apostle gives this as a reason why they should continue to hear and heed those who had led them into the path of truth, and avoid those false teachers whose doctrines tended to the subversion of their souls.

Yet I would have you wise] I would wish you carefully to discern the good from the evil, and to show your wisdom, by carefully avoiding the one and cleaving to the other.

Verse 20. The God of peace] Who neither sends nor favours such disturbers of the tranquillity of his church.

Shall bruise Satan] Shall give you the dominion over the great adversary of your souls, and over all his agents who, through his influence, endeavour to destroy your peace and subvert your minds.

Verse 21. Timotheus my workfellow] This is on all hands allowed to be the same Timothy to whom St. Paul directs the two epistles which are still extant. See some account of him in the notes on Acts xvi. 1, &c.

Lucius] This was probably Luke the evangelist, and writer of the book called The Acts of the Apostles. [This is improbable. The name would have been Lucas. Query: Lucius of Cyrene, Acts xiii. 1.]

Jason] It is likely that this is the same person mentioned, Acts xvii. 7.

Sospiter] He was a Berean, the son of one Pyrrhus, a Jew by birth, and accompanied St. Paul from Greece into Asia, and probably into Judea; see Acts xx. 4.

Verse 22. I, Tertius, who wrote this epistle] Some eminent commentators suppose Tertius to be the same with Silas—the companion of St. Paul. If this were so, it is strange that the name which is generally given him elsewhere in scripture should not be used in this place. [There is no ground for this supposition.]

Verse 23. Gaius mine host] Gaius in Greek is the same as Caius in Latin, which was a very common name among the Romans. St. Luke (Acts xix. 29) mentions one Gaius of Macedonia, who was exposed to much violence at Ephesus in the tumult excited by Demetrius the silversmith against St. Paul and his companions; and it is very possible that this was the same person.

25 Now 'to him that is of power to establish you 'according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, 'according to the revelation of the mystery, 'which was kept secret since the world began,

26 But 'now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for 'the obedience of faith.

27 To 'God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ for ever. 'Amen.

Erastus the chamberlain of the city] Treasurer of the city of Corinth, from which St. Paul wrote this epistle. This is supposed to be the same person as is mentioned, Acts xix. 22. [This is doubtful.] He was one of St. Paul's companions, and, as appears from 2 Tim. iv. 20, was left about this time by the apostle at Corinth. He is called the chamberlain, which signifies the same as treasurer; he to whom the receipt and expenditure of the public money was intrusted. He received the tolls, customs, &c., belonging to the city, and out of them paid the public expenses. Such persons were in very high credit; and if Erastus was at this time treasurer, it would appear that Christianity was then in considerable repute in Corinth. But if the Erastus of the Acts was the same with the Erastus mentioned here, it is not likely that he now held the office, for this could not at all comport with his travelling with St. Paul.

Quartus a brother.] Probably nothing more is meant than that he was a Christian—one of the heavenly family, a brother in the Lord.

Verse 24. The grace of our Lord] This is the conclusion of Tertius, and is similar to what St. Paul used above.

Verse 25. Of power to establish you] To that God, without whom nothing is wise, nothing strong; who is as willing to teach as he is wise: as ready to help as he is strong.

According to my gospel] That gospel which explains and publishes God's purpose of taking the Gentiles to be his people under the Messiah, without subjecting them to the law of Moses.

Which was kept secret] This purpose of calling the Gentiles and giving them equal privileges to the Jews, without obliging them to submit to circumcision, &c.

Verse 26. But now is made manifest] Now under the New Testament dispensation, and by my preaching.

By the scriptures of the prophets] Hints relative to this important work being scattered up and down through all their works, but no clear revelation that the Gentiles, who should be admitted into the church, should be admitted without passing under the yoke of the Mosaic law.

Verse 27. To God only wise] This comes in with great propriety. He alone, who is the fountain of wisdom and knowledge, had all this mystery in himself; and he alone who knew the times, places, persons, and circumstances, could reveal the whole; and he has revealed all in such a way as not only to manifest his unsearchable wisdom, but also his infinite goodness.

Written to the Romans from Corinthus, &c.] That this epistle was written from Corinth is almost universally believed. This subscription, however, stands on very questionable grounds. It is wanting in almost all the ancient MSS.; and even of those which are more modern, few have it entirely, as in our common editions.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EPISTLE

TO THE

one of the most celebrated cities of Greece, was situated on a gulf of the same name, and was the capital of the Peloponnesus or Achaia. It exceeded all the cities of the world for the splendour and magnificence of its public buildings, such as temples, palaces, theatres, porticos, cenotaphs, baths, and other edifices; all enriched with a beautiful kind of columns, capitals, and bases, from which the Corinthian order in architecture took its rise. Corinth was also celebrated for its statues; those, especially, of Venus, the Sun, Neptune and Amphitrite, Diana, Apollo, Jupiter, Minerva, &c. The Temple of Venus was not only very splendid, but also very rich, and maintained, according to Strabo, not less than 1000 courtesans, who were the means of bringing an immense concourse of strangers to the place. Thus riches produced luxury, and luxury a total corruption of manners; though arts, sciences, and literature continued to flourish long in it, and a measure of the martial spirit of its ancient inhabitants was kept alive in it by means of those public games which, being celebrated on the Isthmus which connects the Peloponnesus to the mainland, were called the Isthmian games, and were exhibited once every five years. The exercises in these games were, leaping, running, throwing the quoit or dart, boxing, and wrestling. It appears that, besides these, there were contentions for poetry and music; and the conquerors in any of these exercises were ordinarily crowned either with pine leaves or with parsley. The apostle alludes to those games in different parts of his epistles, which shall all be particularly noticed as they occur.

As we have seen that Corinth was well situated for trade, and consequently very rich, it is no wonder that, in its heathen state, it was exceedingly corrupt and profligate. Notwithstanding this, every part of the Grecian learning was highly cultivated here; so that, before its destruction by the Romans, Cicero scrupled not to call it the eye of all Greece. Yet the inhabitants of it were as lascivious as they were learned. Public prostitution formed a considerable part of their religion; and they were accustomed, in their public prayers, to request the gods to multiply their prostitutes! and, in order to express their gratitude to their deities for the favours they received, they bound themselves, by vows, to increase the number of such women; for commerce with them was neither esteemed sinful nor disgraceful. I mention these things the more particularly because they account for several things mentioned by the apostle in his letters to this city, and things which, without this knowledge of their previous Gentile state and customs, we could not comprehend.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

C O R I N T H I A N S.

CHAPTER I.

The salutation of Paul and Sosthenes, 1, 2. The apostolical benediction, 3. Thanksgiving for the prosperity of the church at Corinth, 4. In what that prosperity consisted, 5-9. The apostle reproves their dissensions, and vindicates himself from being any cause of them, 10-17. States the simple means which God uses to convert sinners and confound the wisdom of the wise, &c., 18-21. Why the Jews and Greeks did not believe, 22. The matter of the apostle's preaching, and the reasons why that preaching was effectual to the salvation of men, 23-29. All should glory in God, because all blessings are dispensed by Him through Christ Jesus, 30, 31.

PAUL, ^a called to be an apostle of Jesus Christ through the will of God, and ^c Sosthenes our brother,

2 Unto the church of God which is at Corinth, ^d to them that ^e are sanctified in Christ Jesus, ^f called to be saints, with all that in every place ^g call upon the name of Jesus Christ ^h our Lord, ⁱ both theirs and ours.

3 ^j Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

4 ^k I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ;

5 That in every thing ye are enriched by him, ^l in all utterance, and ^m in all knowledge;

Verse 1. Paul, called to be an apostle] See the note on Rom. i. 1.

Through the will of God] By a particular appointment from God alone; for, being an extraordinary messenger, he derived no part of his authority from man.

Sosthenes our brother] Probably the same person mentioned, Acts xviii. 17, where see the note.

Verse 2. The church of God which is at Corinth] This church was planted by the apostle himself about A.D. 52, as we learn from Acts xviii. 1.

Sanctified in Christ Jesus] Separated from the corruptions of their place and age.

Called to be saints] Constituted saints or invited to become such; this was the design of the gospel, for Jesus Christ came to save men from their sins.

With all that in every place, &c.] By this we see that the apostle intended that this epistle should be a general property of the universal church of Christ; though there are several matters in it that are suited to the state of the Corinthians only.

Both theirs and ours.] He is the exclusive property of no one church, or people, or nation. Calling on or invoking the name of the Lord Jesus, was the proper distinguishing mark of a Christian. In those times of apostolic light and purity no man attempted to invoke God but in the name of Jesus Christ; this is what genuine Christians still mean when they ask any thing from God for Christ's sake.

6 Even as ⁿ the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you:

7 So that ye come behind in no gift; ^o waiting for the ^p coming of our Lord Jesus Christ:

8 ^q Who shall also confirm you unto the end, ^r that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 ^s God is faithful, by whom ye were called unto ^t the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord.

10 Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^u that ye all speak the same thing, and ^v that there be no ^w divisions among you; but ^x that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment.

Verse 4. For the grace—which is given you] The various spiritual gifts which they had received, as specified in the succeeding verses.

Verse 5. Ye are enriched—ye abound—in all utterance] In all doctrine; for so the word should be translated and understood. All the truths of God relative to their salvation had been explicitly declared to them; and they had all knowledge; so that they perfectly comprehended the doctrines which they had heard.

Verse 6. As the testimony of Christ, &c.] The testimony of Christ is the gospel which the apostle had preached, and which had been confirmed by various gifts of the Holy Spirit, and miracles wrought by the apostle.

Verse 7. So that ye come behind in no gift] Every gift and grace of God's Spirit was possessed by the members of that church, some having their gifts after this manner, others after that.

Waiting for the coming of our Lord] It is difficult to say whether the apostle means the final judgment, or our Lord's coming to destroy Jerusalem, and make an end of the Jewish polity.

Verse 8. In the day of our Lord Jesus] In the day that he comes to judge the world, according to some; but, in the day in which he comes to destroy the Jewish polity, according to others.

Verse 9. God is faithful] The faithfulness of God is a favourite expression among the ancient Jews; and by it they 11 For it hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you.

12 Now this I say, ^athat every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of ^bApollus; and I of ^cCephas; and I of Christ.

13 ^aIs Christ divided? was Paul crucified for you? or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?

14 I thank God that I baptized none of you, but ^aCrispus and ^aGaius;

15 Lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name.

16 And I baptized also the household of ^aStephanas: besides, I know not whether I baptized any other.

17 For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel: ^anot with wisdom of ^awords, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect.

properly understand the integrity of God in preserving whatever is intrusted to him.

Unto the fellowship, &c.] Into the communion or participation of Christ, in the graces of his Spirit and the glories of his future kingdom. God will continue to uphold and save you, if you intrust your bodies and souls to him.

Verse 10. By the name of our Lord Jesus] By his authority, and in his place; and on account of your infinite obligations to his mercy in calling you into such a state of salvation.

That ye all speak the same thing] If they did not agree exactly in opinion on every subject, they might, notwithstanding, agree in the words which they used to express their religious faith. On every essential doctrine of the gospel all genuine Christians agree: why then need religious communion be interrupted? This general agreement is all that the apostle can have in view; for it cannot be expected that any number of men should in every respect perfectly coincide in their views of all the minor points, on which an exact conformity in sentiment is impossible to minds so variously constituted as those of the human race. Angels may thus agree, who see nothing through an imperfect or false medium; but to man this is impossible.

Verse 11. By them which are of the house of Chloe] This was doubtless some very religious matron at Corinth, whose family were converted to the Lord.

Contentions] Altercations; produced by the divisions mentioned above. When once they had divided, they must necessarily have contended, in order to support their respective parties.

Verse 12. Every one of you saith] It seems from this expression that the whole church at Corinth was in a state of dissension.

The converts were partly Jews and partly Greeks. The Gentile part might boast the names of Paul and Apollus; the Jewish, those of Cephas and Christ. But these again might be subdivided; some probably considered themselves disciples of Paul, he being the immediate instrument of their conversion, while others might prefer Apollus for his extraordinary eloquence.

Instead of Christ, some have conjectured that we should read of Crispus; who is mentioned ver. 14. [Without any authority.]

Verse 13. Is Christ divided? Can he be split into different sects and parties? Has he different and opposing systems?

Was Paul crucified for you? As the gospel proclaims salvation through the crucified one, has Paul poured out his blood as an atonement for you?

Were ye baptized in the name of Paul? To be baptized in, or into the name of one, implied that the baptized was to be the disciple of him into whose name, religion, &c., he was baptized.

Verse 14. I thank God that I baptised none of you] None of those who now live in Corinth, except Crispus, the ruler of the synagogue, Acts xviii. 8. And Gaius, the same person 18 For the preaching of the cross is to ^athem that perish ^afoolishness; but unto us ^awhich are saved it is the ^apower of God.

19 For it is written, ^aI will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent.

20 ^aWhere is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? ^ahath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?

21 ^aFor after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.

22 For the ^aJews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom:

23 But we preach Christ crucified, ^aunto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks ^afoolishness;

24 But unto them which are called, both Jews probably with whom Paul lodged, Rom. xvi. 23, where see the notes.

Verse 15. Lest any should say &c.] He was careful not to baptize, lest it should be supposed that he wished to make a party for himself.

Verse 16. The household of Stephanas] From chap. xvi. 15, we learn that the family of Stephanas were the first converts in Achaia, probably converted and baptized by the apostle himself. Epenetus is supposed to have been one of this family.

I know not whether I baptized any other.] It is strange that the doubt here expressed by the apostle should be construed so as to affect his inspiration! What, does the inspiration of prophet or apostle necessarily imply that he must understand the geography of the universe, and have an intuitive knowledge of the inhabitants of the earth, and how often, and where they may have changed their residence! Nor was that inspiration ever given so to work on a man's memory that he could not forget any of the acts which he had performed during life. Inspiration was given to the holy men of old that they might be able to write and proclaim the mind of God in the things which concern the salvation of men.

Verse 17. For Christ sent me not to baptize] It appears sufficiently evident that baptizing was considered to be an inferior office; and though every minister of Christ might administer it, yet apostles had more important work.

Not with wisdom of words] In several places in the New Testament the term logos is taken not only to express a word, a speech, a saying, &c., but doctrine, or the matter of teaching. Here, and in 1 Thess. i. 5, and in several other places, it seems to signify reason, or that mode of rhetorical argumentation so highly prized among the Greeks. The apostle was sent, not to pursue this mode of conduct, but simply to announce the truth; to proclaim Christ crucified for the sin of the world; and to do this in the plainest and simplest manner possible, lest the numerous conversions which followed might be attributed to the power of the apostle's eloquence, and not to the demonstration of the Spirit of God. It is worthy of remark that, in all the revivals of religion with which we are acquainted, God appears to have made very little use of human eloquence, even when possessed by pious men. His own nervous truths, announced by plain common sense, though in homely phrase, have been the general means of the conviction and conversion of sinners. Human eloquence and learning have often been successfully employed in defending the out-works of Christianity; but simplicity and truth have preserved the citadel.

Verse 18. For the preaching of the cross] The doctrine of the cross; or the doctrine that is of or concerning the cross; that is the doctrine that proclaims salvation to a lost world through the crucifixion of Christ.

Is to them that perish foolishness] There are, properly speaking, but two classes of men known where the gospel is preached: the unbelievers and gainsayers, who are perishing; and the obedient believers, who are in a state of sal-and Greeks, Christ 'the power of God, and 'the wisdom of God.

25 Because the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men.

26 For ye see your calling, brethren, how that 'not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called;

27 But 'God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty;

* Rom. i. 4, 16. Ver. 18.—^b Col. ii. 8.—^c John vii. 48.—^d Matt. xi. 19. James ii. 5. See Ps. viii. 2.—^e Rom. iv. 17.—^f Ch. ii. 6.—^g Rom. iii. 27. Eph. i. 9.—^h Ver. 24.—ⁱ Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. Rom. iv. 25.

vation. To those who will continue in the first state, the preaching of salvation through the merit of a crucified Saviour is folly. To those who believe, this doctrine of Christ crucified is the power of God to their salvation; it is divinely efficacious to deliver them from all the power, guilt, and pollution of sin.

Verse 19. For it is written] The place referred to is Isa. xix. 14.

I will destroy the wisdom of the wise] Of wise men—of the philosophers who in their investigations see nothing less than God, and whose highest discoveries amount to nothing in comparison of the grand truths relative to God, the invisible world, and the true end of man, which the gospel has brought to light.

Verse 20. Where is the wise—the scribe—the disputer of this world?] These words most manifestly refer to the Jews; as the places (Isa. xix. 14; xxiii. 18; and xlv. 25) to which he refers cannot be understood of any but the Jews.

The wise man of the apostle is the chakam of the prophet, whose office it was to teach others.

The scribe of the apostle is the sopher of the prophet; this signifies any man of learning, as distinguished from the common people, especially any master of the traditions.

The disputer answers to the derosh, or darshan, the propounder of questions; the seeker of allegorical, mystical, and cabalistical senses from the holy scriptures. Now as all these are characters well known among the Jews, and as the words of this world are a simple translation of olam hazzeh, which is repeatedly used to designate the Jewish republic, there is no doubt that the apostle has the Jews immediately in view. This wisdom of theirs induced them to seek out of the sacred oracles any sense but the true one; and they made the word of God of none effect by their traditions.

Verse 21. For after that in the wisdom of God] The plain meaning of this verse is, that the wise men of the world, especially the Greek philosophers, who possessed every advantage that human nature could have, independently of a divine revelation, and who had cultivated their minds to the uttermost, could never, by their learning, wisdom, and industry, find out God; nor had the most refined philosophers among them just and correct views of the divine nature, nor of that in which human happiness consists.

By the foolishness of preaching] By the preaching of Christ crucified, which the Gentiles termed foolishness, in opposition to their own doctrines, which they termed wisdom.

Verse 22. For the Jews require a sign] Instead of a sign, the best MSS. and versions have signs; which reading is undoubtedly genuine. There never was a people in the universe more difficult to be persuaded of the truth than the Jews; and had not their religion been incontestably proved by the most striking and indubitable miracles, they never would have received it. This slowness of heart to believe, added to their fear of being deceived, induced them to require miracles to attest every thing that professed to come from God.

And the Greeks seek after wisdom] Such wisdom, or philosophy, as they found in the writings of Cicero, Seneca, Plato, &c., which was called philosophy, and which came recommended to them in all the beauties and graces of the Latin and Greek languages.

Verse 23. Unto the Jews a stumbling-block] Because Jesus came meek, lowly, and impoverished; not seeking worldly glory, nor affecting worldly pomp; whereas they expected the Messiah to come as a mighty prince and conqueror; because Christ did not come so, they were offended at him.

28 And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and 'things which are not, 'to bring to nought things that are:

29 'That no flesh should glory in his presence.

30 But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us 'wisdom, and 'righteousness, and 'sanctification, and 'redemption.

31 That, according as it is written, 'He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

2 Cor. v. 21. Phil. iii. 8.—John xvii. 19.—^b Eph. i. 7.—^c Jer. ix. 23, 24. 2 Cor. x. 17.

Unto the Greeks foolishness] Because they could not believe that proclaiming supreme happiness through a man that was crucified at Judea as a malefactor could ever comport with reason and common sense; for both the matter and manner of the preaching were opposite to every notion they had formed of what was dignified and philosophic.

Verse 24. But unto them which are called] Those, both of Jews and Greeks, who were by the preaching of the gospel called or invited, and have accordingly believed in Christ Jesus; they prove this doctrine to be divinely powerful, to enlighten and convert the soul, and to be a proof of God's infinite wisdom, which has found out such an effectual way to glorify both his justice and mercy, and save, to the uttermost, all that come to him through Christ Jesus. The called, or invited, is a title of genuine Christians, and is frequently used in the New Testament.

Verse 25. The foolishness of God is wiser, &c.] The meaning of these strong expressions is, that the things of God's appointment, which seem to men foolishness, are infinitely beyond the highest degree of human wisdom; and those works of God, which appear to superficial observers weak and contemptible, surpass all the efforts of human power.

Verse 26. Ye see your calling] The state of grace and blessedness to which ye are invited. I think the sentence should be read in the imperative: Take heed to, or consider your calling, brethren; that not many of you are wise after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble: men is not in the original, and Paul seems to allude to the Corinthian believers in particular. We spoil, if not corrupt, the apostle's meaning, by adding are called, as if God did not send his gospel to the wise, the powerful, and the noble, or did not will their salvation. The truth is, the gospel has an equal call to all classes of men; but the wise, the mighty, and the noble, are too busy, or too sensual, to pay any attention to an invitation so spiritual and so divine; and therefore there are few of these in the church of Christ in general.

Verse 27. But God hath chosen the foolish things] God has chosen, by means of men who are esteemed rude and illiterate, to confound the greatest of the Greek philosophers, and overturn their systems; and, by means of men weak, without secular power or authority, to confound the scribes and pharisees, and in spite of the exertions of the Jewish sanhedrin, to spread the doctrine of Christ crucified all over Judea, and by such instruments as these to convert thousands of souls to the faith of the gospel, who are ready to lay down their lives for the truth.

Verse 28. And base things—and things which are despised] It is very likely that the apostle refers here to the Gentiles and to the Gentile converts, who were considered base and despicable in the eyes of the Jews, who counted them no better than dogs, and who are repeatedly called the things that are not.

Verse 29. That no flesh should glory] God does his mighty works in such a way as proves that though he may condescend to employ men as instruments, yet they have no part either in the contrivance or energy by which such works were performed.

Verse 30. But of him are ye in Christ Jesus] Even the good which you possess is granted by God, for it is by and through him that Christ Jesus comes, and all the blessings of the gospel dispensation.

Who of God is made unto us wisdom] As being the author of that evangelical wisdom which far exceeds the wisdom of the philosopher and the scribe, and even that legal constitution, which is called the wisdom of the Jews, Deut. iv. 6.

And righteousness] Justification, as procuring for us that remission of sins which the law could not give, Gal. ii. 21; iii. 21.

And sanctification] As procuring for and working in us, not only an external and relative holiness, as was that of the Jews, but true and eternal holiness, Eph. iv. 24, wrought in us by the Holy Spirit.

And redemption] He is the author of redemption, not from the Egyptian bondage, or Babylonish captivity, but from the servitude of Satan, the dominion of sin and death, and from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the sons of God, or the redemption of the body, Rom. viii. 21, 23.

Verse 31. According as it is written] Jerem. ix. 23, 24. So then, as all good is of and from God, let him that has either wisdom, riches, pardon, holiness, or any other blessing, whether temporal or spiritual, acknowledge that he has nothing but what he has received; and that, as he has cause of glorying (boasting or exultation) in being made a partaker of these benefits and mercies of his Creator and Redeemer, let him boast in God alone, by whom, through Christ Jesus, he has received the whole.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle makes an apology for his manner of preaching, 1. And gives the reason why he adopted that manner, 2-5. He shows that this preaching, notwithstanding it was not with excellence of human speech or wisdom, yet was the mysterious wisdom of God, which the princes of this world did not know, and which the Spirit of God alone could reveal, 6-10. It is the Spirit of God only that can reveal the things of God, 11. The apostles of Christ know the things of God by the Spirit of God, and teach them, not in the words of man's wisdom, but in the words of that Spirit, 12, 13. The natural man cannot discern the things of the Spirit, 14. But the spiritual man can discern and teach them, because he has the mind of Christ, 15, 16.

AND I, brethren, when I came to you, ^acame not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you ^bthe testimony of God:

2 For I determined not to know any thing among you, ^csave Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

3 And ^dI was with you ^ein weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling.

4 And my speech and my preaching ^fwas not with ^genticing words of man's wisdom, ^hbut in demonstration of the Spirit and of power:

Verse 1. When I came to you] Acting suitably to my mission, which was to preach the gospel, but not with human eloquence, chap. i. 17.

Verse 2. I determined not to know anything among you] Satisfied that the gospel of God could alone make you wise unto salvation, I determined to cultivate no other knowledge, and to teach nothing but Jesus Christ, and him crucified, as the foundation of all true wisdom, piety, and happiness.

Verse 3. I was with you in weakness] It is very likely that St. Paul had not only something in his speech very unfavourable to a ready and powerful elocution, but also some infirmity of body that was still more disadvantageous to him. [The context seems to intimate that this weakness was an inward sense of incompetence for his great work, rather than a physical infirmity.]

In fear, and in much trembling] This was often the state of his mind; dreading lest at any time he should be unfaithful, and so grieve the Spirit of God; or that, having preached to others, himself should be a castaway. [preaching.]

Verse 4. And my speech] My doctrine; the matter of my And my preaching] My proclamation, my manner of recommending the grand but simple truths of the gospel.

Was not with enticing words of man's wisdom] With persuasive doctrines of human wisdom. I used none of the means of which great orators avail themselves in order to become popular; and thereby to gain fame.

But in demonstration of the Spirit] In the manifestation;

5 That your faith should not ⁱstand in the wisdom of men, but ^jin the power of God.

6 Howbeit, we speak wisdom among them ^kthat are perfect: yet not ^lthe wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world ^mthat come to nought:

7 But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, ⁿwhich God ordained before the world unto our glory:

8 ^oWhich none of the princes of this world knew: for ^phad they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

or, as two ancient MSS. have it, in the revelation of the Spirit. The doctrine that he preached was revealed by the Spirit: that it was a revelation of the Spirit, the holiness, purity, and usefulness of the doctrine rendered manifest; and the overthrow of idolatry, and the conversion of souls, by the power and energy of the preaching, were the demonstration that all was divine.

Verse 5. That your faith should not stand] That the illumination of your souls, and your conversion to God might appear to have nothing human in it.

Verse 6. We speak wisdom among them that are perfect] By among those that are perfect, we are to understand Christians of the highest knowledge and attainments—those who were fully instructed in the knowledge of God through Christ Jesus. Nothing, in the judgment of St. Paul, deserved the name of wisdom but this. And though he apologises for his not coming to them with excellency of speech or wisdom, yet he means what was reputed wisdom among the Greeks, and which, in the sight of God, was mere folly when compared with that wisdom which came from above.

Verse 7. The wisdom of God in a mystery] The gospel of Jesus Christ, which had been comparatively hidden from the foundation of the world (the settling of the Jewish economy, as this phrase often means), though appointed from the beginning to be revealed in the fulness of time.

Verse 8. Which none of the princes of this world knew] Here it is evident that this world refers to the Jewish state,

9 But, as it is written, * Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him;

10 But ^b God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God.

11 For what man knoweth the things of a man, * save the spirit of man which is in him? ^d even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.

12 Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but * the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.

and to the degree of knowledge in that state: and the rulers, the priests, rabbins, &c., who were principally concerned in the crucifixion of our Lord.

The Lord of glory.] Or the glorious Lord, infinitely transcending all the rulers of the universe; whose is eternal glory; who gave that glorious gospel in which his followers may glory, as it affords them such cause of triumph as the heathens had not, who gloried in their philosophers.

Verse 9. But, as it is written] The quotation is taken from Isa. lxi. 4. These words have been applied to the state of glory in a future world; but they certainly belong to the present state, and express merely the wondrous light, life, and liberty which the gospel communicates to them that believe in the Lord Jesus Christ in that way which the gospel itself requires.

Verse 10. But God hath revealed them unto us] A manifest proof that the apostle speaks here of the glories of the gospel, and not of the glories of the future world.

For the Spirit searcheth all things] This is the Spirit of God, which spoke by the prophets, and has now given to the apostles the fulness of that heavenly truth, of which He gave to the former only the outlines.

Yea, the deep things of God.] The purposes which have existed in his infinite wisdom and goodness from eternity; and particularly what refers to creation, providence, redemption and eternal glory, as far as men and angels are concerned in these purposes.

Verse 11. For what man knoweth the things of a man] As the Spirit is here represented to live in God as the soul lives in the body of a man, and as this Spirit knows all the things of God, and had revealed those to the apostles which concern the salvation of the world, therefore what they spoke and preached was true, and men may implicitly depend upon it. The miracles which they did, in the name of Christ, were the proof that they had that Spirit, and spoke the truth of God.

Verse 12. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world] We, who are the genuine apostles of Christ, have received this Spirit of God, by which we know the deep things of God; and, through the teaching of that Spirit, we preach Christ crucified.

13 * Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual.

14 * But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: ^b for they are foolishness unto him: ^c neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.

15 ^d But he that is spiritual ^e judgeth all things, yet he himself is ^f judged of no man.

16 * For who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he ^g may instruct him? ^h But we have the mind of Christ.

That we might know the things] We receive this teaching that we may know what those supereminently excellent things are which God has purposed freely to give to mankind.

Verse 13. Which things also we speak] We dare no more use the language of the Jews and the Gentiles in speaking of those glorious things, than we can indulge their spirit. He who has a spiritual mind will easily comprehend an apostle's preaching.

Comparing spiritual things with spiritual.] This is commonly understood to mean, comparing the spiritual things under the Old Testament, with the spiritual things under the New; but this does not appear to be the apostle's meaning. The passage therefore should be translated: Explaining spiritual things to spiritual persons. And this sense the following verse requires.

Verse 14. But the natural man] The animal man—the man who is in a mere state of nature, and lives under the influence of his animal passions.

Verse 15. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things] He who has the mind of Christ discerns and judges of all things spiritual; yet he himself is not discerned by the mere animal man. Some suppose that the word should be understood thus: He examines, scrutinizes, convinces, reproves, which it appears to mean in chap. xiv. 24; and they read the verse thus: The spiritual man—the well-taught Christian, convinces, i. e., can easily convict all men, every animal man, of error and vice; yet he himself is convicted of no man; his mind is enlightened, and his life is holy; and therefore the animal man cannot convict him of sin. This is a good sense, but the first appears the most natural.

Verse 16. For who hath known the mind of the Lord] How can the animal man know the mind of the Lord? and how can any man communicate that knowledge which he has never acquired, and which is foolishness to him, because it is spiritual, and he is animal? Isa. xl. 13.

The words, that he may instruct him, should be translated that he may teach it: that is, the mind of God; not instruct God, but teach his mind to others. And this interpretation the Hebrew will also bear.

CHAPTER III.

Because of the carnal, divided state of the people at Corinth, the apostle was obliged to treat them as children in the knowledge of sacred things, 1-3. Some were for setting up Paul, others Apollos, as their sole teachers, 4. The apostle shows that himself and fellow-apostles were only instruments which God used to bring them to the knowledge of the truth; and even their sowing and watering the seed was of no use unless God gave the increase, 5-8. The church represented as God's husbandry, and as God's building, the foundation of which is Christ Jesus, 9-11. Ministers must beware how and what they build on this foundation, 12-15. The Church of God is his temple, and he that defiles it shall be destroyed, 16, 17. No man should depend on his own wisdom; for the wisdom of the world is foolishness with God, 18-20. None should glory in man as his teacher; God gives his followers every good, both for time and eternity, 21-23.

I. CORINTHIANS.

AND I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto ^a spiritual, but as unto ^b carnal, even as unto ^c babes in Christ.

2 I have fed you with ^d milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able.

3 For ye are yet carnal: for 'whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as ^e men?'

4 For while one saith, 'I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not carnal?'

5 Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but 'ministers by whom ye believed, ^h even as the Lord gave to every man?'

6 'I have planted, ^m Apollos watered; ⁿ but God gave the increase.

Verse 1. I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual] This is a continuation of the preceding discourse. But as unto carnal] Persons under the influence of fleshly appetites; coveting and living for the things of this life.

Babes in Christ.] Just beginning to acquire some notion of the Christian religion, but as yet very incapable of judging what is most suitable to yourselves, and consequently utterly unqualified to discern between one teacher and another.

Verse 2. I have fed you with milk] I have instructed you in the elements of Christianity—in its simplest and easiest truths; because, from the low state of your minds in religious knowledge, you were incapable of comprehending the higher truths of the gospel: and in this state you will still continue.

Verse 3. There is among you envying, and strife, and divisions] There are three things here worthy of note: these people were wrong in thought, word, and deed. Envy refers to the state of their souls; they had inward grudgings and disaffection towards each other. Strife or contention, refers to their words; they were continually disputing and contending whose party was the best, each endeavouring to prove that he and his party were alone in the right. Divisions refers to their conduct; as they could not agree, they contended till they separated from each other, and thus rent the Church of Christ.

Verse 4. For while one saith, I am of Paul, &c.] It was notorious that both Paul and Apollos held the same creed; between them there was not the slightest difference: when, therefore, the dissentients began to prefer the one to the other, it was the fullest proof of their carnality; because in the doctrines of these apostles there was no difference: so that what the people were captivated by must be something in their outward manner, Apollos being probably more eloquent than Paul.

Verse 5. Ministers by whom ye believed] No one of these has either preached or recommended himself; they all preach and recommend Christ Jesus the Lord.

Even as the Lord gave to every man?] Paul, therefore, is as necessary to the perfecting of the Church of Christ as Apollos; and Apollos as Paul. Both, but with various gifts, point out the same Christ, building on one and the same foundation.

Verse 6. I have planted] I first sowed the seed of the gospel at Corinth, and in the region of Achaia.

Apollos watered] Apollos came after me, and, by his preachings and exhortations, watered the seed which I had sowed; the seed has taken root, has sprung up, and borne much fruit; but this was by the especial blessing of God. As in the natural so in the spiritual world; it is neither the sower nor the waterer that produces the strange and inexplicable multiplication of the grain sown in the ground; it is God alone.

Verse 7. So then, neither is he that planteth anything] God alone should have all the glory, as the seed is his, the ground is his, the labourers are his, and the produce all comes from himself.

Verse 8. He that planteth and he that watereth are one]

7 So then, 'neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase.

8 Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one; 'and every man shall receive his own reward, according to his own labour.

9 For 'we are labourers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are ^p God's building.

10 'According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid ^q the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But ^r let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.

11 For other foundation can no man lay than 'that is laid, ^s which is Jesus Christ.

12 Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble;

—^p Ps. lxi. 12. Rom. ii. 6. Ch. iv. 5. Gal. vi. 4, 5. Rev. ii. 23. xii. 12.—^q Acts xv. 4. 2 Cor. vi. 1.—^r Or, tillage.—^s Eph. ii. 20. Col. ii. 7. Both Paul and Apollos have received the same doctrine, preach the same doctrine, and labour to promote the glory of God in the salvation of your souls.

According to his own labour.] God does not reward his servants according to the success of their labour, because that depends on himself; but he rewards them according to the quantum of faithful labour which they bestow on his work.

Verse 9. For we are labourers together with God] It would perhaps be more correct to translate we are fellow-labourers of God; for, the preposition may express the joint labour of the teachers one with another, and not with God.

Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building.] The word which we translate husbandry, signifies properly an arable field; so Prov. xxiv. 30: I went by the field of the slothful; and chap. xxxi. 16: The wise woman considereth a field, and buyeth it. It would be more literal to translate it, Ye are God's farm.

Ye are God's building.—Ye are not only the field which God cultivates, but ye are the house which God builds, and in which he intends to dwell. As no man in viewing a fine building extols the quarryman that dug up the stones, the woodman that hewed down the timber, the carpenter that squared and jointed it, &c., but the architect who planned it, and under whose direction the whole work was accomplished; so, no man should consider Paul, or Apollos, or Kephas, anything, but as persons employed by the great Architect to form a building which is to become a habitation of himself through the Spirit, and the design of which is entirely his own.

Verse 10. As a wise master-builder] The design or plan of the building is from God; all things must be done according to the pattern which he has exhibited; but the execution of this plan was intrusted chiefly to St. Paul, he was the wise or experienced architect which God used in order to lay the foundation.

Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon.] Let him take care that the doctrines which he preaches be answerable to those which I have preached; let him also take heed that he enjoin no other practice than that which is suitable to the doctrine, and in every sense accords with it.

Verse 11. Other foundation can no man lay] I do not speak particularly concerning the foundation of this spiritual building; it can have no other foundation than Jesus Christ: there cannot be two opinions on this subject among the true apostles of our Lord. The only fear is lest an improper use should be made of this heavenly doctrine; lest a bad superstructure should be raised on this foundation.

Verse 12. If any man build—gold, silver, &c.] By gold, silver, and precious stones, the apostle certainly means pure and wholesome doctrines: by wood, hay, and stubble, false doctrines; such as at that time prevailed in the Christian Church.

Verse 13. The day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire] The apostle refers to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem I think very probable; and when this is considered, all the terms and metaphors will appear 13 * Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day ^b shall declare it, because ^c it ^d shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is.

14 If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, ^e he shall receive a reward.

15 If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; ^f yet so as by fire.

16 * Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

17 If any man ^g defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

clear and consistent. [The reference can hardly be to any other day than the second coming of Christ.]

And the fire shall try every man's work] The difference of the Christian and the Jewish systems should then be seen: the latter should be destroyed in that fiery day, and the former prevail more than ever.

Verse 14. If any man's work abide] Perhaps there is here an allusion to the purifying of different sorts of vessels under the law. All that could stand the fire were to be purified by the fire; and those which could not resist the action of the fire were to be purified by water, Namb. xxi. 23.

He shall receive a reward.] He has not only preached the truth, but he has laboured in the word and doctrine. And the reward is to be according to the labour.

Verse 15. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss] If he have preached the necessity of incorporating the law with the gospel, or proclaimed as a doctrine of God anything which did not proceed from heaven, he shall suffer loss—all his time and labour will be found to be uselessly employed and spent. Some refer the loss to the work, not to the man; and understand the passage thus: If any man's work be burned, it shall suffer loss—much shall be taken away from it; nothing shall be left but the measure of truth and uprightness which it may have contained.

But he himself shall be saved.] If he have sincerely and conscientiously believed what he preached, and yet preached what was wrong, not through malice or opposition to the gospel, but through mere ignorance, he shall be saved; God in his mercy will pass by his errors; and he shall not suffer punishment because he was mistaken. Yet, as in most erroneous teachings there is generally a portion of wilful and obstinate ignorance, the salvation of such erroneous teachers is very rare; and is expressed here, yet so as by fire, i. e., with great difficulty; a mere escape; a hair's breadth deliverance; he shall be like a brand plucked out of the fire.

The popish writers have applied what is here spoken to the fire of purgatory; and they might with equal propriety have applied it to the discovery of the longitude, the perpetual motion, or the philosopher's stone; because it speaks just as much of the former as it does of any of the latter. The fire mentioned here is to try the man's work, not to purify his soul.

Verse 16. Ye are the temple of God.] As the whole congregation of Israel were formerly considered as the temple and habitation of God because God dwelt among them, so here the whole Church of Corinth is called the temple of God, because all genuine believers have the Spirit of God to dwell in them; and Christ has promised to be always in the midst even of two or three who are gathered together in his name. Therefore where God is, there is his temple.

Verse 17. If any man defile the temple] If any man destroy the temple of God, him will God destroy. The verb is the same in both clauses. The reference is to him who wilfully opposes the truth; the erring, mistaken man, shall barely escape; but the obstinate opposer shall be destroyed. The former shall be treated leniently; the latter shall have judgment without mercy.

Verse 18. If any man among you seemeth to be wise] If any man pretend or affect to be wise. This seems to refer to some individual in the Church of Corinth, who had been very troublesome to its peace and unity: probably Diotrephes 18 ¹ Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise.

19 For ² the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God: for it is written, ³ He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.

20 And again, ⁴ The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise, that they are vain.

21 Therefore ⁵ let no man glory in men: for ⁶ all things are yours;

22 Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; ⁷ all are yours;

23 And ⁸ ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's.

Ver. 4, 5, 6.—¹ 2 Cor. iv. 5, 15.—² Ch. vi. 2. Rom. viii. 28. 2 Cor. iv. 15. 1 Tim. iv. 8.—³ Rom. xiv. 8. Ch. xi. 8. 2 Cor. x. 7. Gal. iii. 29.

or some one of a similar spirit, who wished to have the pre-eminence, and thought himself wiser than seven men that could render a reason. Every Christian church has less or more of these.

Let him become a fool] Let him divest himself of his worldly wisdom, and be contented to be called a fool, and esteemed one, that he may become wise unto salvation, by renouncing his own wisdom, and seeking that which comes from God.

Verse 19. The wisdom of this world] Whether it be the pretended deep and occult wisdom of the rabbins, or the wire-drawn speculations of the Grecian philosophers, it is foolishness with God; for as folly consists in spending time, strength, and pains to no purpose, so these may be fitly termed fools who acquire no saving knowledge by their speculations.

He taketh the wise in their own craftiness.] This is a quotation from Job v. 13. and powerfully shows what the wisdom of this world is: it is a sort of craft, a subtle trade, which they carry on to wrong others and benefit themselves; and they have generally too much cunning to be caught by men; but God often overthrows them with their own devisings.

Verse 20. The Lord knoweth the thoughts of the wise] This is a quotation from Psalm xciv. 11. What is here said of the vanity of human knowledge is true of every kind of wisdom that leads not immediately to God himself.

Verse 21. Let no man glory in men] Let none suppose that he has any cause of exultation in anything but God. All are yours; he that has God for his portion has every thing that can make him happy and glorious: all are his.

Verse 22. Whether Paul, or Apollos] As if he had said: God designs to help you by all things and persons; every teacher sent from him will become a blessing to you, if you abide faithful to your calling.

Or the world] The word here means rather the inhabitants of the world, than what we commonly understand by the world itself; and this is its meaning in John iii. 16, 17, vi. 33, xiv. 31, and xvii. 21. See particularly on John xii. 19. The apostle's meaning evidently is: Not only Paul, Apollos, and Cephas, are yours—appointed for and employed in your service: but every person besides with whom you may have an intercourse or connexion, whether Jew or Greek, whether enemy or friend. God will cause every person, as well as every thing, to work for your good, while you love, cleave to, and obey Him.

Or life] With all its trials and advantages; every hour of it, every tribulation in it, the whole course of it, as the grand state of your probation, is a general blessing to you.

Or death] Death is your servant; he comes a special messenger from God for you; he comes to take your souls to glory; and he cannot come before his due time to those who are waiting for the salvation of God.

Or things present] Every occurrence in providence, in the present life; for God rules in providence as well as in grace.

Verse 23. And ye are Christ's] You are called by his name; you have embraced his doctrine; you depend on him for your salvation; he is your foundation-stone; he has gathered you out of the world, and acknowledges you as his people and followers.

I. CORINTHIANS.

And Christ is God's.] And Christ is of God. Christ, the Messiah, is the gift of God's eternal love and mercy to mankind. Christ in his human nature is as much the property of God as any other human being. And as mediator between God and man, he must be considered in a certain way, inferior to God; but, in his own essential, eternal nature, there is no inequality—he is God over all. Ye, therefore, do not belong to men.

CHAPTER IV.

Ministers should be esteemed by their flocks as the stewards of God, whose duty and interest it is to be faithful, 1, 2. Precipitate and premature judgments condemned, 3-5. The apostle's caution to give the Corinthians no offence, 6. We have no good but what we receive from God, 7. The worldly-mindedness of the Corinthians, 8. The enumeration of the hardships, trials, and sufferings of the apostles, 9-13. For what purpose St. Paul mentions these things, 14-16. He promises to send Timothy to them, 17. And to come himself shortly, to examine and correct the abuses that had crept in among them, 18-21.

LET a man so account of us, as of ^a the ministers of Christ, ^b and stewards of the mysteries of God.

2 Moreover, it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.

3 But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of you, or of man's ^c judgment; yea, I judge not mine own self.

4 For I know nothing by myself; ^d yet am I not hereby justified: but he that judgeth me is the Lord.

5 ^e Therefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come, ^f who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and will make manifest the counsels of the hearts: and ^g then shall every man have praise of God.

8 Now ye are full, ^m now ye are rich, ye have reigned as kings without us: and I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you.

9 For I think that God hath set forth ⁿ us the apostles last, ^o as it were appointed to death: for ^p we are made a ^q spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men.

Verse 1. Let a man so account of us] This is a continuation of the subject in the preceding chapter; and should not have been divided from it.

As of the ministers of Christ] The word means an under-rower, or one who, in the galleys, rowed in one of the under-most benches; but it means also, as used by the Greek writers, any inferior officer or assistant. By the term here, the apostle shows the Corinthians that, far from being heads and chiefs, he and his fellow-apostles considered themselves only as inferior officers, employed under Christ; from whom alone they received their appointment, their work, and their recompence.

Stewards of the mysteries of God.] The steward, or oikonomos, was the master's deputy in regulating the concerns of the family, providing food for the household, seeing it served out at the proper times and seasons, and in proper quantities. He received all the cash, expended what was necessary for the support of the family, and kept exact accounts, which he was obliged at certain times to lay before the master. The mysteries, the doctrines of God, relative to the salvation of the world by the passion and death of Christ, and the inspiration, illumination, and purification of the soul by the Spirit of Christ, constituted a principal part of the divine treasure intrusted to the hands of the stewards by their heavenly master; as the food that was to be dispensed with at proper times, seasons, and in proper proportions, to the children and domestics of the church, which is the house of God.

Verse 3. It is a very small thing that I should be judged of you] Those who preferred Apollos or Kephas before St. Paul, would of course give their reasons for this preference; and these might, in many instances, be very unfavourable to his character as a man, a Christian, or an apostle; of this he was regardless, as he sought not his own glory, but the glory of God in the salvation of their souls.

Or of man's judgment] Literally, or of man's day; but it signifies any day set apart by a judge or magistrate to try a man on. This is the meaning in Psalm xxxvii. 13; Mal. iii. 17; and 2 Pet. iii. 10.

I judge not mine own self.] I leave myself entirely to God, whose I am, and whom I serve.

Verse 4. For I know nothing by myself] I am not conscious that I am guilty of any evil, or have neglected to fulfil faithfully the duty of a steward of Jesus Christ.

Yet am I not hereby justified] I do not pretend to say that though I am not conscious of any offence towards God, I must therefore be pronounced innocent; no, I leave those things to God; he shall pronounce in my favour, not I myself.

Verse 5. Judge nothing before the time] God, the righteous Judge, will determine everything shortly: it is his province alone to search the heart, and bring to light the hidden things of darkness.

Verse 6. These things] Which I have written, chap. iii. 5, &c.

I have in a figure transferred to myself and to Apollos] wise in Christ; * we are weak, but ye are strong; ye are honourable, but we are despised.

11 ^b Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place;

12 ^a And labour, working with our own hands: being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it;

13 Being defamed, we entreat: * we are made as the filth of the earth, and are the offscouring of all things unto this day.

14 I write not these things to shame you, but ^a as my beloved sons I warn you.

15 For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for, ^a in Christ Jesus, I have begotten you through the gospel.

I have written as if myself and Apollos were the authors of the sects which now prevail among you; although others, without either our consent or knowledge, have proclaimed us heads of parties.

Verse 7. For who maketh thee to differ] It is likely that the apostle is here addressing himself to some one of those puffed up teachers, who was glorying in his gifts, and in the knowledge he had of the gospel, &c. It has been applied in a more general sense by religious people; God is the foundation of all good; no man possesses any good but what he has derived from God. If any man possess that grace which saves him from scandalous enormities, let him consider that he has received it as a mere free gift from God's mercy.

Verse 8. Now ye] I am of opinion that the apostle here intends a strong irony; and one which, when taken in conjunction with what he had said before, must have stung them to the heart.

Verse 9. God hath set forth us the apostles last] The apostle seems to allude to the Roman spectacles, the Bestiarii and the gladiators, where in the morning men were brought into the theatres to fight with wild beasts, and to them was allowed armour to defend themselves and smite the beasts that assailed them; but in the meridian or noon-day spectacles the gladiators were brought forth naked, and without anything to defend themselves from the sword of the assailant; and he that then escaped was only kept for slaughter to another day, so that these men might well be called men appointed for death; and this being the last appearance in the theatre for that day, they are said here to be set forth the last.

We are made a spectacle] We are exhibited in the theatre to the world. Angels are astonished at our treatment, and so are the more considerate part of men.

Verse 10. We are fools for Christ's sake] Here he still carries on the allusion to the public spectacles among the Romans, where they were accustomed to hiss, hoot, mock, and variously insult the poor victims.

Ye are wise in Christ] Surely all these expressions are meant ironically; the apostles were neither fools, nor weak, nor contemptible; nor were the Corinthians, morally speaking, wise and strong, and honourable. Change the persons, and then the epithets will perfectly apply.

Verse 11. We both hunger and thirst, &c.] Who would then have been an apostle of Christ, even with all its spiritual honours and glories, who had not a soul filled with love both to God and man, and the fullest conviction of the reality of the doctrine he preached, and of that spiritual world in which alone he could expect rest?

Have no certain dwelling-place] We are mere itinerant preachers, and when we set out in the morning know not where, or whether we shall or not, get a night's lodging.

Verse 12. Working with our own hands] They were obliged to labour in order to supply themselves with the necessities of life while preaching the gospel to others. This, no doubt, was the case in every place where no Church had been as yet formed: afterwards, the people of God sup-16 Wherefore, I beseech you, ^a be ye followers of me.

17 For this cause have I sent unto you ^a Timotheus, ^a who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who shall bring you ^a into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I ^a teach every where ^a in every church.

18 ^a Now some are puffed up, as though I would not come to you.

19 ^a But I will come to you shortly, ^a if the Lord will; and will know, not the speech of them which are puffed up, but the power.

20 For ^a the kingdom of God is not in word, but in power.

21 What will ye? ^a shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness?

plied their ministers, according to their power, with food and raiment.

Being reviled, we bless, &c.] What a most amiable picture does this exhibit of the power of the grace of Christ! It is only the grace of Christ that can make a man patient in bearing injuries, and render blessing for cursing, beneficence for malevolence, &c.

Verse 13. Being defamed] Being blasphemed. Blaspheming against men is anything by which they are injured in their persons, characters, or property.

We are made as the filth of the earth—the offscouring of all things] The Greek word, which we render filth, means a purgation, or lustrative sacrifice; that which we translate offscouring is a redemption sacrifice. To understand the full force of these words, as applied by the apostle in this place, we must observe that he alludes to certain customs among the heathens, who, in the time of some public calamity, chose out some unhappy men of the most abject and despicable character to be a public expiation for them; these they maintained a whole year at the public expense; and then they led them out, crowned with flowers, as was customary in sacrifices; and, having heaped all the curses of the country upon their heads, and whipped them seven times, they burned them alive, and afterwards their ashes were thrown into the sea, while the people said these words: be thou our propitiation. [The explanation which the text itself naturally suggests, viz., that the apostles were treated as outcasts, is more probably correct.]

Verse 15. For though ye have ten thousand instructors] Myriads of leaders, that is, an indefinite multitude; for so the word is often used. The word pedagogue, which we have from the original, and which we improperly apply to a schoolmaster, was, among the Greeks, the person or servant who attended a child, had the general care of him, and who led him to school for the purpose of being instructed by the teacher.

Not many fathers] Many offer to instruct you who have no parental feeling for you; and how can they? you are not their spiritual children, you stand in this relation to me alone; for in Christ Jesus—by the power and unction of his Spirit, I have begotten you.

Verse 16. Be ye followers of me.] It should rather be translated, Be ye imitators of me. As children should imitate their parents in preference to all others, he calls on them to imitate him, as he claims them for his children. He lived for God and eternity, seeking not his own glory, emolument, or ease; these sowers of sedition among them were actuated by different motives.

Verse 17. For this cause] That you may imitate me. My ways which be in Christ] This person will show to you that what I require of you is no other than what I require of all the Churches of Christ which I have formed, as I follow the same plan of discipline in every place.

Verse 18. Some are puffed up] Imagining themselves to be safe, because they suppose that I shall not revisit Corinth.

Verse 19. But I will come to you shortly] And then I shall put those proud men to the proof, not of their speech—eloquence, or pretensions to great knowledge and influence, but of their power—the authority they profess to have from God, and the evidences of that authority in the works they have performed. See the Introduction, sect. xi.

Verse 20. For the kingdom of God] The religion of the Lord Jesus is not in word—in human eloquence, excellence of speech, or even in doctrines; but in power, in the mighty energy of the Holy Spirit; enlightening, quickening, converting, and sanctifying believers; and all his genuine apostles are enabled, on all necessary occasions, to demonstrate the truth of their calling by miracles; for this the original word often means.

Verse 21. Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love? Shall I come to you with the authority of a teacher, and use the rod of discipline? or shall I come in the tenderness of a father, and entreat you to do what I have authority to enforce?

CHAPTER V.

Account of the incestuous person, or of him who had married his father's wife, 1. The apostle reproves the Corinthians for their carelessness in this matter, and orders them to excommunicate the transgressor, 2-5. They are reprehended for their glorying, while such scandals were among them, 6. They must purge out the old leaven, that they may properly celebrate the Christian Passover, 7-9. They must not associate with any who, professing the Christian religion, were guilty of any scandalous vice, and must put away from them every evil person, 10-13.

IT is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as ^a named among the Gentiles, ^b that one should have his ^c father's wife.

2 ^d And ye are puffed up, and have not rather ^e mourned, that he that hath done this deed might be taken away from among you.

3 ^f For I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit, have ^g judged already, as though I were present, concerning him that hath so done this deed;

4 In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, when ye are gathered together, and my spirit, ^h with the power of our Lord Jesus Christ,

5 ⁱ To deliver such an one unto ^j Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Verse 1. There is fornication among you] The word which we translate fornication in this place, must be understood in its utmost latitude of meaning; as implying all kinds of impurity: for, that the Corinthians were notoriously guilty of every species of irregularity and debauch, we have already seen; and it is not likely that in speaking on this subject, in reference to a people so very notorious, he would refer to only one species of impurity, and that not the most flagitious.

That one should have his father's wife.] Most think that the father was alive, and imagine that to this the apostle refers, 2 Cor. vii. 13, where, speaking of the person who did the wrong, he introduces also him who had suffered the wrong; which must mean the father, and the father then alive. I think it most natural to conclude that the person in question had married the wife of his deceased father, not his own mother, but step-mother, then a widow.

The word named, is wanting in almost every MS. and Version of importance, and certainly makes no part of the text. The words should be read, and such fornication as is not amongst the Gentiles, i. e., not allowed.

Verse 2. Ye are puffed up] Ye are full of strength and contention relative to your parties and favourite teachers, and neglect the discipline of the church. Had you considered the greatness of this crime, ye would have rather 6 ^k Your glorying is not good. Know ye not that ^l a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?

7 Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even ^m Christ our ⁿ passover ^o is sacrificed for us:

8 Therefore ^p let us keep ^q the feast, ^r not with old leaven, neither ^s with the leaven of malice and wickedness; but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

mourned, and have put away this flagrant transgression from among you.

Taken away from among you.] Probably no more is meant than a simple disowning of the person, accompanied with the refusal to admit him to the sacred ordinances, or to have any intercourse or connexion with him.

Verse 3. Absent in body, but present in spirit] Perhaps St. Paul refers to the gift of the discernment of spirits, which it is very likely the apostles in general possessed on extraordinary occasions. He had already seen this matter so clearly that he had determined on that sort of punishment which should be inflicted for this crime.

Verse 4. In the name of our Lord Jesus] Who is the head of the church; and under whose authority every act is to be performed.

And my spirit] My apostolical authority derived from Him; with the power, with the miraculous energy of the Lord Jesus, which is to inflict the punishment that you pronounce.

Verse 5. To deliver such an one unto Satan] There is no evidence that delivering to Satan was any form of excommunication known either among the Jews or the Christians. It was a species of punishment administered in extraordinary cases, in which the body and the mind of an incorrigible company, * if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one, * no, not to eat.

12 For what have I to do to judge * them also transgressor were delivered by the authority of God into the power of Satan, to be tortured with diseases and terrors as a warning to all; but, while the body and mind were thus tormented, the immortal spirit was under the influence of the Divine mercy; and the affliction, in all probability, was in general only for a season; though sometimes it was evidently unto death, as the destruction of the flesh seems to imply. But the soul found mercy at the hand of God; for such a most extraordinary interference of God's power and justice, and of Satan's influence, could not fail to bring the person to a state of the deepest humiliation and contrition; and thus, while the flesh was destroyed, the spirit was saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. No such power as this remains in the church of God; none such should be assumed; the pretensions to it are as wicked as they are vain. It was the same power by which Ananias and Sapphira were struck dead, and Elymas the sorcerer struck blind. Apostles alone were intrusted with it.

Verse 6. Know ye not] If this leaven—the incestuous person, be permitted to remain among you; if his conduct be not exposed by the most formidable censure; the flood-gates of impurity will be opened on the church, and the whole state of Christianity ruined in Corinth.

Verse 7. Purge out therefore the old leaven] As it is the custom of the Jews previously to the passover to search their houses in the most diligent manner for the old leaven, and throw it out, sweeping every part clean; so act with this incestuous person.

Verse 8. Therefore let us keep the feast] It is very likely that the time of the passover was now approaching, when the Church of Christ would be called to extraordinary acts of devotion, in commemorating the passion, death, and resurrection of Christ; and of this circumstance the apostle takes advantage in his exhortation to the Corinthians.

Not with old leaven] Under the Christian dispensation we must be saved equally from Judaism, Heathenism, and from sin of every kind; malice and wickedness must be destroyed; and sincerity and truth, inward purity and outward holiness, take their place.

Verse 9. I wrote unto you in an epistle] The wisest and best skilled in biblical criticism agree that the apostle does not refer to any other epistle than this; and that he speaks here of some general directions which he had given in the foregoing part of it; but which he had now in some measure changed and greatly strengthened, as we see from ver. 11. The words may be translated, I HAD written to you in THIS that are without? do not ye judge * them that are within?

13 But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore * put away from among yourselves that wicked person.

iii. 7.—* Ch. vi. 1, 2, 3, 4.—* Deut. xiii. 5. xvii. 7. xxi. 21. xxii. 21, 22, 24.

EPISTLE. The principal evidence against this is 2 Cor. vii. 8, where the same words as above appear to refer to this first epistle. Possibly the apostle may refer to an epistle which he had written though not sent; for, on receiving further information from Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, relative to the state of the Corinthian church, he suppressed that, and wrote this, in which he considers the subject much more at large.

Not to company with fornicators] With which, as we have already seen, Corinth abounded. It was not only the grand sin, but staple, of the place.

Verse 10. For then must ye needs go out of the world.] What an awful picture of the general corruption of manners does this exhibit! The Christians at Corinth could not transact the ordinary affairs of life with any others than with fornicators, covetous persons, extortioners, railers, drunkards, and idolaters, because there were none others in the place!

Verse 11. But now I have written] I not only write this, but I add more: if any one who is called a brother, i. e., professes the Christian religion, be a fornicator, covetous, idolater, railer, drunkard, or extortioner, not even to eat with such—have no communion with such an one, in things either sacred or civil. You may transact your worldly concerns with a person that knows not God, and makes no profession of Christianity, whatever his moral character may be; but ye must not even thus far acknowledge a man professing Christianity, who is scandalous in his conduct. Let him have this extra mark of your abhorrence of all sin; and let the world see that the church of God does not tolerate iniquity.

Verse 12. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without?] The term without signifies those who were not members of the church, and in this sense its correspondent term in Hebrew is generally understood in the Jewish writers, where it frequently occurs. The word also, which greatly disturbs the sense here, is wanting in several of the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers. The sentence should stand thus: Does it belong to me to pass sentence on those which are without—which are not members of the church? By no means. Pass ye sentence on them which are within, which are members of the church: those which are without which are not members of the church, God will pass sentence on, in that way in which he generally deals with the heathen world. But put ye away the evil from among yourselves.

CHAPTER VI.

The Corinthians are reprov'd for their litigious disposition; brother going to law with brother, and that before the heathen, 1-6. They should suffer wrong rather than do any, 7, 8. No unrighteous person can enter into the glory of God, 9, 10. Some of the Corinthians had been grievous sinners, but God had saved them, 11. Many things may be lawful which are not at all times expedient, 12. Meats are for the belly, and the belly for meats; but the body is not for uncleanness, 13. Christ's resurrection a pledge of ours, 14. The bodies of Christians are members of Christ, and must not be defiled, 15-17. He that commits fornication sins against his own body, 18. Strong dissuaves from it, 19, 20.

DARE any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the saints?

2 Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?

3 Know ye not that we shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?

4 If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church.

5 I speak to your shame. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? no, not one that shall be able to judge between his brethren?

6 But brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbelievers.

7 Now, therefore, there is utterly a fault among you, because ye go to law one with another. Why do ye not rather take wrong? why do ye not rather suffer yourselves to be defrauded?

* Ps. xlix. 14. Dan. vii. 22. Matt. xix. 28. Luke xxii. 30. Rev. ii. 26. iii. 21. xx. 4.—² Pet. ii. 4. Jude 6.—³ Ch. v. 12.—⁴ Prov. xx. 22. Matt. v. 39, 40. Luke vi. 29. Rom. xii. 17, 19. 1 Thess. v. 15.—¹ 1 Thess. iv. 6.—² Ch. xv. 50. Gal. v. 21. Eph. v. 5. 1

Verse 1. Before the unjust, and not before the saints? It is very likely that at Corinth, where such corruption of manners reigned, there was a great perversion of public justice; and it is not to be supposed that matters relative to the Christians were fairly decided.

Verse 2. The saints shall judge the world? Nothing can be more evident than that the writers of the New Testament often use the word, to signify the Jewish people; and sometimes the Roman empire, and the Jewish state; and in the former sense it is often used by our Lord. The place before us is generally understood to imply, that the redeemed of the Lord shall be, on the great day, assessors with him in judgment; and shall give their award in the determinations of his justice. On reviewing this subject, I am fully of opinion that this cannot be the meaning of the words, and that no such assessorship as is contended for ever will take place; and that the interpretation is clogged with a multitude of absurdities.

I think that these words of the apostle refer to the prediction of Daniel, chap. vii. 18, 27, and such like prophecies, where the kingdoms of the earth are promised to the saints of the Most High; that is, that a time shall come when Christianity shall so far prevail that the civil government of the world shall be administered by Christians, which, at that time, was administered by heathens. And this is even now true of all those parts of the earth which may be considered of the greatest political consequence. They profess Christianity, and the kings and other governors are Christians in this general sense of the term. [The best modern critics reject this interpretation, and understand the apostle as referring to the active participation of the saints in the reign of Christ. The argument runs thus: Persons called to such dignity are surely able to pass judgment on the trifling affairs of this life.]

Verse 3. Know ye not that we shall judge angels? By angels all confess that demons are intended; but certainly all saints, according to the latitude with which that word is understood, i. e., all who profess Christianity, shall not judge angels. Nor is this judging of angels to be understood of the last day; but the apostle speaks of the ministers of the gospel, himself and others, who, by the preaching of the gospel, through the power of Christ, should spoil the devils of their oracles and their idols, should deprive them of their worship, should drive them out of their seats, and strip them of their dominion.

Verse 4. Things pertaining to this life They could examine all civil cases among themselves, which they were permitted to determine without any hindrance from the heathen governments under which they lived.

Who are least esteemed in the church. Those who were in the lowest order of judges; for the apostle may refer here to the orders in the Jewish benches, as Dr. Lightfoot con-jec-

8 Nay, ye do wrong, and defraud, and that your brethren.

9 Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived; neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, 10 Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God.

11 And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God.

12 All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but I will not be brought under the power of any.

13 Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both it and them. Now the body is not for fornication, but for the Lord; and the Lord for the body.

tures, of which there were five. The fifth order did not receive its authority immediately from the Sanhedrin, but was chosen by the parties between whom the controversy depended. The apostle certainly does not mean persons of no repute, but such as these arbitrators, who were chosen for the purpose of settling private differences, and preventing them from going before the regular magistrates. [This, however, seems far-fetched. The apostle simply affirms, that instead of leaving the decision of disputes to the church, the Corinthians were in the habit of appealing to secular judges, who were really despised by the church.]

Verse 5. Is it so, that there is not a wise man among you? Have you none among yourselves that can be arbitrators of the differences which arise, that you go to the heathen tribunals?

Verse 6. Brother goeth to law with brother One Christian sues another at law! This is almost as great a scandal as can exist in a Christian society.

Verse 7. There is utterly a fault among you There is a most manifest defect among you, 1. Of peaceableness; 2. Of brotherly love; 3. Of mutual confidence; and, 4. Of reverence for God, and concern for the honour of his cause. [Perhaps, also, the text implies loss.]

Verse 9. The unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom The unrighteous, those who act contrary to right, cannot inherit, for the inheritance is by right. There are here ten classes of transgressors which the apostle excludes from the kingdom of God, and any man who is guilty of any of the evils mentioned above is thereby excluded from this kingdom, whether it imply the church of Christ here below, or the state of glory hereafter.

Verse 11. But ye are washed Ye have been baptized into the Christian faith, and ye have promised in this baptism to put off all filthiness of the flesh and spirit; and the washing of your bodies is emblematical of the purification of your souls.

Ye are sanctified Ye are separated from earthly things to be connected with spiritual. Ye are separated from time to be connected with eternity. Ye are separated from idols to be joined to the living God. Separation from common, earthly, or sinful uses, to be wholly employed in the service of the true God, is the ideal meaning of this word, both in the Old and New Testaments.

Ye are justified Ye have been brought into a state of favour with God; your sins having been blotted out through Christ Jesus, the Spirit of God witnessing the same to your conscience, and carrying on by his energy the great work of regeneration in your hearts.

Verse 12. All things are lawful unto me It is likely that some of the Corinthians had pleaded that the offence of the man who had his father's wife, as well as the eating the things offered to idols, was not contrary to the law, as it then stood.

14 And ^a God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us ^b by his own power.

15 Know ye not that ^c your bodies are the members of Christ? shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of a harlot? God forbid.

16 What! know ye not that he which is joined to a harlot is one body? for ^d two, saith he, shall be one flesh.

17 ^e But he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit.

To this the apostle answers: Though such a thing be lawful, yet the case of fornication, mentioned chap. v. 1, is not expedient, it is not agreeable to propriety, decency, order, and purity. It is contrary to the established usages of the best and most enlightened nations, and should not be tolerated in the church of Christ.

But I will not be brought under the power of any.] Allowing that they are all lawful, or at least that there is no law against them, yet they are not expedient; there is no necessity for them; and some of them are abominable, and forbidden by the law of God and nature, whether forbidden by yours or not; while others, such as eating meats offered to idols, will almost necessarily lead to bad moral consequences: and who, that is a Christian, would obey his appetite so far as to do those things for the sake of gratification? A man is brought under the power of anything which he cannot give up.

Verse 13. Meats for the belly] I suppose that means the animal appetite, or propensity to food, &c. God has provided different kinds of aliments for the appetite of man, and he has adapted the appetite to these aliments, and the aliments to the appetite: but none of these is eternal; all these lower appetites and sensations will be destroyed by death.

Now the body is not for fornication.] God has not made the body for any uncleanness, nor indulgence in sensuality; but he has made it for Christ.

Verse 14. And God hath both raised up the Lord] He has raised up the human nature of Christ from the grave, as a pledge of our resurrection; and will also raise us up by his own power, that we may dwell with him in glory for ever.

Verse 15. Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ?] Because he has taken your nature upon him, and thus, as believers in him, ye are the members of Christ.

Shall I then take, &c.] Shall we, who profess to be members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones, connect ourselves with harlots, and thus dishonour and pollute the bodies which are members of Christ?

18 ^f Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth ^g against his own body.

19 What! ^h know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, ⁱ and ye are not your own?

20 For ^j ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's.

Verse 17. Is one spirit.] Who can change such a relationship for communion with a harlot; or for any kind of sensual gratification?

Verse 18. Flee fornication.] Abominate, detest, and escape from every kind of uncleanness. Some sins, or solicitations to sin, may be reasoned with; in the above cases, if you parley you are undone; reason not, but FLY!

Sinneth against his own body.] Though sin of every species has a tendency to destroy life, yet none are so mortal as those to which the apostle refers; they strike immediately at the basis of the constitution. Neither prostitutes, whoremongers, nor unclean persons of any description, can live out half their days.

Verse 19. Your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost] What an astonishing saying is this! As truly as the living God dwelt in the Mosaic tabernacle, and in the temple of Solomon, so truly does the Holy Ghost dwell in the souls of genuine Christians; and as the temple and all its utensils were holy, separated from all common and profane uses, and dedicated alone to the service of God, so the bodies of genuine Christians are holy, and all their members should be employed in the service of God alone.

And ye are not your own?] Ye have no right over yourselves, to dispose either of your body, or any of its members, as you may think proper or lawful; you are bound to God, and to him you are accountable.

Verse 20. Ye are bought with a price] As the slave who is purchased by his master for a sum of money is the sole property of that master, so ye, being bought with the price of the blood of Christ, are not your own, you are his property. As the slave is bound to use all his skill and diligence for the emolument of his master, so you should employ body, soul, and spirit in the service of your Lord; promoting, by every means in your power, the honour and glory of your God, whom you must also consider as your Lord and Master.

CHAPTER VII.

A solution of several difficult cases concerning marriage and married persons, 1-6. God has given every man his proper gift, 7. Directions to the unmarried and widows, 8, 9. Directions to the married, 10, 11. Directions to men married to heathen women, and to women married to heathen men, 12-16. Every man should abide in his vocation, 17-24. Directions concerning virgins, and single persons in general, 25-28. How all should behave themselves in the things of this life, in reference to eternity, 29-31. The trials of the married state, 32-35. Directions concerning the state of virginity or celibacy, 36-38. How the wife is bound to her husband during his life, and her liberty to marry another after his death, 39, 40.

NOW, concerning the things whereof ye wrote unto me: "It is good for a man not to touch a woman."

2 Nevertheless, "to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband."

3 "Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence: and likewise also the wife unto the husband."

4 The wife hath not power of her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife.

5 "Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that Satan tempt you not for your incontinency."

6 But I speak this by permission, "and not of commandment."

7 For "I would that all men were even as I myself. But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that."

8 I say, therefore, to the unmarried and widows, "It is good for them if they abide even as I:"

9 But, "if they cannot contain, let them marry; for it is better to marry than to burn."

10 And unto the married I command, "yet not I,

Verse 1. The things whereof ye wrote unto me] It is sufficiently evident that the principal part of this epistle was written in answer to some questions which had been sent to the apostle in a letter from the Corinthian church; and the first question seems to be this: "Is it proper for a man to marry in the present circumstances of the church?"

Verse 2. Let every man have his own wife] Let every man have one woman, his own; and every woman one man, her own. Here, plurality of wives and husbands is most strictly forbidden; and they are commanded to marry for the purpose of procreating children.

Verse 3. Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence] Though our version is no translation of the original, yet few persons are at a loss for the meaning, and the context is sufficiently plain.

Verse 4. The wife hath no power, &c.] Her person belongs to her husband; her husband's person belongs to her: neither of them has any authority to refuse what the other has a matrimonial right to demand.

Verse 5. Defraud ye not one the other] What ye owe thus to each other never refuse paying, unless by mutual consent; and let that be only for a certain time, when prudence dictates the temporary separation, or when some extraordinary spiritual occasion may render it mutually agreeable, in order that ye may fast and pray, and derive the greatest possible benefit from these duties by being enabled to wait on the Lord without distraction.

Verse 6. I speak this by permission, &c.] We may understand the apostle here as saying that the directions already given were from his own judgment, and not from any divine inspiration; and we may take it for granted that where he does not make this observation he is writing under the immediate affluus of the Holy Spirit.

Verse 7. For I would that all men, &c.] It never could be his wish that marriage should cease among men, and that human beings should no longer be propagated upon earth; nor could he wish that the church of Christ should always be composed of single persons; this would have been equally absurd; but as the church was then in straits and difficulties, it was much better for its single members not to encumber themselves with domestic embarrassments.

Every man hath his proper gift of God] Continence is a state that cannot be acquired by human art or industry; a man has it from God, or not at all.

Verse 8. The unmarried and widows] It is supposed that the apostle speaks here of men who had been married, but but the Lord, "Let not the wife depart from her husband:"

11 But, and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife.

12 But to the rest speak I, "not the Lord: If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away."

13 And the woman which hath an husband that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, "let her not leave him."

14 For the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is sanctified by the husband: else "were your children unclean; but now are they holy."

15 But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us "to peace."

16 For what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt "save thy husband?" or "how knowest thou, O man, whether thou shalt save thy wife?"

17 But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And "so ordain I in all churches."

were now widowers; as he does of women who had been married, but were now widows. And when he says even as I, he means that he himself was a widower; for several of the ancients rank Paul among the married apostles.

Verse 9. But, if they cannot contain] If they find it inconvenient and uncomfortable to continue as widowers, and widows, let them re-marry.

It is better to marry than to burn.] It would be well to soften the sense of this word in reference to the subject of which the apostle speaks. He cannot mean burning with lust.

Verse 10. I command, yet not I, but the Lord] I do not give my own private opinion or judgment in this case; for the Lord Jesus commands that man shall not put asunder them whom God hath joined, Matt. v. 32, xix. 6. And God has said the same, Gen. ii. 24.

Verse 11. But, and if she depart] He puts the case as probable, because it was frequent, but lays it under restrictions.

Let her remain unmarried] She departs at her own peril; but she must not marry another: she must either continue unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband.

And let not the husband put away his wife.] Divorces cannot be allowed but in the case of fornication: an act of this kind dissolves the marriage vow; but nothing else can.

Verse 12. But to the rest speak I, not the Lord] These words do not intimate that the apostle was not now under the influences of the divine Spirit; but that there was nothing in the sacred writings which bore directly on this point.

If any brother] A Christian man, have a wife that believeth not, i. e., who is a heathen, not yet converted to the Christian faith, and she be pleased to dwell with him, notwithstanding his turning Christian since their marriage, let him not put her away because she still continues in her heathen superstition.

Verse 13. And the woman] Converted from heathenism to the Christian faith; which hath a husband, who still abides in heathenism; if he be pleased to dwell with her, notwithstanding she has become a Christian since their marriage; let her not leave him because he still continues a heathen.

Verse 14. The unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife] Or rather, is to be reputed as sanctified on account of his wife; she being a Christian woman, and he, though a heathen, being by marriage one flesh with her: her sanctity, as far as it refers to outward things, may be considered as *not become uncircumcised. Is any called in uncircumcision? ¹let him not be circumcised.

19 ^c Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, ^d but the keeping of the commandments of God.

20 Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called.

21 Art thou called being a servant? care not for it: but if thou mayest be made free, use it rather.

22 For he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is ^e the Lord's ^ffreeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is ^g Christ's servant.

23 ^h Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men.

imputed to him so as to render their connexion not unlawful. The case is the same when the wife is a heathen and the husband a Christian.

[Else were your children unclean] If this kind of relative sanctification were not allowed, the children of these persons could not be received into the Christian church, nor enjoy any rights or privileges as Christians; but the Church of God never scrupled to admit such children as members, just as well as she did those who had sprung from parents both of whom were Christians.

Verse 15. But if the unbelieving depart] Whether husband or wife: if such obstinately depart and utterly refuse all cohabitation, a brother or a sister—a Christian man or woman, is not under bondage to any particular laws, so as to be prevented from remarrying. Such, probably, the law stood then; but it is not so now: for the marriage can only be dissolved by death, or by the ecclesiastical court. [But it is questionable whether the release from bondage in such cases is a permission to marry again. See Matt. v. 31, 32; xix. 3, 9.]

God hath called us to peace.] The refractory and disagreeing party should not be compelled to fulfil such matrimonial engagements as would produce continual jarring and discord.

Verse 16. For what knowest thou, O wife] Bear your cross, and look up to God, and he may give your unbelieving husband or wife to your prayers.

Verse 17. But as God hath distributed to every man, &c.] Let every man fulfil the duties of the state to which God in the course of his providence has called him.

So ordain I in all churches.] I do not lay on you a burden which others are not called to bear: this is the general rule which, by the authority of God, I impose on every Christian society.

Verse 18. Is any man called being circumcised?] Is any man who was formerly a Jew converted to Christianity?

Let him not become uncircumcised.] Let him not endeavour to abolish the sign of the old covenant, which he bears in his flesh.

Let him not be circumcised.] Let no man who, being a Gentile, has been converted to the Christian faith, submit to circumcision as something necessary to his salvation.

Verse 19. Circumcision is nothing] Circumcision itself, though commanded of God, is nothing of itself, it being only a sign of the justification which should be afterwards received by faith.

Verse 20. Let every man abide in the same calling] Any situation of life is equally friendly to the salvation of the soul, if a man be faithful to the grace he has received.

Verse 21. Art thou called being a servant?] Art thou 27 Art thou bound unto a wife? seek not to be loosed. Art thou loosed from a wife? seek not a wife.

28 But, and if thou marry, thou hast not sinned; and if a virgin marry, she hath not sinned. Nevertheless such shall have trouble in the flesh: but I spare you.

29 But ^o this I say, brethren, the time is short: it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none; converted to Christ while thou art a slave—the property of another person, and bought with his money? care not for it—this will not injure thy Christian condition: but if thou canst obtain thy liberty, use it rather—prefer this state for the sake of freedom, and the temporal advantages connected with it.

Verse 22. For he that is called] The man who, being a slave, is converted to the Christian faith, is the Lord's freeman; his condition as a slave does not vitiate any of the privileges to which he is entitled as a Christian: on the other hand, all free men, who receive the grace of Christ, must consider themselves the slaves of the Lord, i. e., his real property, to be employed and disposed of according to his godly wisdom.

Verse 23. Ye are bought with a price] As truly as your bodies have become the property of your masters, in consequence of his paying down a price for you; so sure you are now the Lord's property, in consequence of your being purchased by the blood of Christ.

Verse 24. Let every man—abide with God.] Let him live to God in whatsoever station he is placed by Providence. If he be a slave, God will be with him even in his slavery, if he be faithful to the grace which he has received.

Verse 25. Now concerning virgins] This was another subject on which the church at Corinth had asked the advice of the apostle. The word virgin we take to signify a pure, unmarried young woman; but it is evident that the word in this place means young unmarried persons of either sex, as appears from verses 26, 27, 32-34, and from Rev. xiv. 4.

I have no commandment of the Lord] There is nothing in the sacred writings that directly touches this point.

Yet I give my judgment] As every way equal to such commandments had there been any, seeing I have received the teaching of his own Spirit, and have obtained mercy of the Lord to be faithful to this heavenly gift, so that it abides with me to lead me into all truth.

Verse 26. This is good for the present distress] In such times, when the people of God had no certain dwelling-place, when they were lying at the mercy of their enemies, without any protection from the state—the state itself often among the persecutors—he who had a family to care for, would find himself in very embarrassed circumstances, as it would be much more easy to provide for his personal safety than to have the care of a wife and children. On this account it was much better for unmarried persons to continue for the present in their celibacy.

Verse 27. Art thou bound unto a wife?] That is, Married; for the marriage contract was considered in the light of a bond.

Verse 28. But, and if thou marry] As there is no law body and in spirit: but she that is married careth for the things of the world, how she may please her husband.

I. CORINTHIANS.

35 And this I speak for your own profit; not that I may cast a snare upon you, but for that which is comely, and that ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction.

36 But if any man think that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age, and need so require, let him do what he will, he sinneth not: * let them marry.

37 Nevertheless he that standeth stedfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his against this, even in the present distress, thou hast not sinned, because there is no law against this; and it is only on account of prudential reasons that I give this advice.

* Deut. vii. 3.—^b Heb. xiii. 4.

And if a virgin marry.] Both the man and the woman have equal privileges in this case; either of them may marry without sin.

But I spare you.] The evil is coming; but I will not press upon you the observance of a prudential caution, which you might deem too heavy a cross.

Verse 29. The time is short.] The persecutions and distresses are at the door, and life itself will soon be run out.

They that have wives.] Let none begin to think of any comfortable settlement for his family; let him sit loose to all earthly concerns, and stand ready prepared to escape for his life, or meet death, as the providence of God may permit.

Verse 31. And they that use this world.] Let them who have earthly property or employments discharge conscientiously their duties, from a conviction of the instability of earthly things.

For the fashion of this world.] Properly, the present state or constitution of things; the frame of the world, that is, the world itself. But often the term world, is taken to signify the Jewish state and polity; the destruction of this was then at hand, and this the Holy Spirit might then signify to the apostle.

Verse 32. Without carefulness.] Though all these things will shortly come to pass, yet do not be anxious about them. Every occurrence is under the direction and management of God.

He that is unmarried careth for the things that belong to the Lord.] He has nothing to do with a family, and therefore can give his whole time to the service of his Maker, having him alone to please.

Verse 33. But he that is married.] He has a family to provide for, and his wife to please, as well as to fulfil his duty to God, and attend to the concerns of his own soul.

Verse 34. There is a difference also between a wife and a virgin.] The unmarried careth (only) for the things of the Lord, having no domestic duties to perform. Whereas she that is married careth (also) for the things of the world, how she may please her husband, having many domestic duties to fulfil, her husband being obliged to leave to her the care of the family, and all other domestic concerns.

Verse 35. This I speak for your own profit.] Nothing spoken here was ever designed to be of general application; it concerned the church at Corinth alone, or churches in similar circumstances.

Not that I may cast a snare upon you.] Here is a manifest allusion to the Retiarus among the Romans, who carried a small casting net, which he endeavoured to throw over the head of his adversary, and thus entangle him.

The apostle, therefore, intimates that what he says was not intended absolutely to bind them, but to show them the propriety of following an advice which in the present case own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, doeth well.

38 ^b So thef, he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better.

39 ^c The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; ^d only in the Lord.

40 But she is happier if she so abide, * after my judgment: and 'I think also that I have the Spirit of God.

^e Rom. vii. 2.—^d 2 Cor. vi. 14.—^e Ver. 25.—^f 1 Thess. iv. 8.

would be helpful to them in their religious connexions, that they might attend upon the Lord without distraction, which they could not do in times of persecution, when, in addition to their own personal safety, they had a wife and children to care for.

For that which is comely.] But for the sake of decency, and of attending more easily upon the Lord without distraction.

Verse 36. Uncomely toward his virgin.] It is generally supposed that these three verses relate to virgins under the power of parents and guardians, and the usual inference is, that children are to be disposed of in marriage by the parents, guardians, &c. Now, this may be true, but it has no foundation in the text, for to keep his virgin is not to keep his daughter's, but his own virginity, or rather his purpose of virginity. That this must be the true import of these words appears from this consideration, that this depends upon the purpose of his own heart, and the power he has over his own will, and the no necessity arising from himself to change this purpose. Whereas the keeping a daughter unmarried depends not on these conditions on her father's part, but on her own; for, let her have a necessity, and surely the apostle would not advise the father to keep her a virgin, because he had determined so to do; nor could there be any doubt whether the father had power over his own will or not, when no necessity lay upon him to betroth his virgin. [This exposition does violence not only to the structure of the sentence, but to its most obvious meaning. It can only be maintained by the adoption of various readings which have little critical value.]

Verse 39. The wife is bound by the law.] But, if the husband die, she is free to remarry, but only in the Lord; that is, she must not marry a heathen nor an irreligious man; and she should not only marry a genuine Christian, but one of her own religious sentiments; for, in reference to domestic peace, much depends on this.

Verse 40. But she is happier if she so abide.] If she continue in her widowhood because of the present distress; for this must always be taken in, that consistency in the apostle's reasoning may be preserved.

After my judgment.] According to the view I have of the subject, which view I take by the light of the Divine Spirit, who shows me the tribulations which are coming on the church.

I think—I have the Spirit of God.] The apostle cannot be understood as expressing any doubt of his being under the inspiration of the Divine Spirit, as this would have defeated his object in giving the above advices; for if they were not dictated by the Spirit of God, can it be supposed that, in the face of apparent self-interest, and the prevalence of strong passions, they could have been expected to have become rules of conduct to this people? They must have understood him as asserting that he had the direction of the Spirit of God in giving those opinions, else they could not be expected to obey.

CHAPTER VIII.

The question of the Corinthians concerning meats offered to idols, and the apostle's preface to his instructions on that head, 1-3. The nature of idolatry, 4, 5. Of genuine worship, 6. Some ate of the animals that had been offered to idols knowingly, and so defiled their conscience, 7. Neither eating nor abstinence in themselves, recommend us to God, 8. But no man should use his Christian liberty so as to put a stumbling-block before a brother, 9, 10. If he act otherwise, he may be the means of a brother's destruction, 11. Those who act so as to wound the tender conscience of a brother, sin against Christ, 12. The apostle's resolution on this head, 13.

NOW ^aas touching things offered unto idols, we know that we all have ^bknowledge.

^c Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth.

2 And ^dif any man think that he knoweth any thing, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know.

3 But if any man love God, ^ethe same is known of him.

4 As concerning, therefore, the eating of those things that are offered in sacrifice unto idols, we know that ^fan idol is nothing in the world, ^gand that there is none other God but one.

5 For though there be that are ^hcalled gods, whether in heaven or in earth (as there be gods many, and lords many,)

6 But ⁱto us there is but one God, the Father. ^jof whom are all things, and we ^kin him; and ^lone Lord Jesus Christ, ^mby whom are all things, and we by him.

7 Howbeit, there is not in every man that knowledge: for some, ⁿwith conscience of the idol unto this hour, eat it as a thing offered unto an idol; and their conscience being weak is ^odefiled.

8 But ^pmeat commendeth us not to God: for neither, if we eat, ^qare we the better; neither, if we eat not, ^rare we the worse.

9 But ^stake heed, lest by any means this ^tliberty of yours become ^ua stumbling-block to them that are weak.

10 For if any man see thee which hast knowledge and was understood by them in this way: they are not Elohim, the true GOD; but they are nothings and VANITY.

Verse 5. There be that are called gods] There are many images that are supposed to be representations of divinities; but these divinities are nothing, the figments of mere fancy; and these images have no corresponding realities.

Whether in heaven or in earth] As the sun, moon, planets, stars, the ocean, rivers, trees, &c. And thus there are, nominally, gods many, and lords many.

Verse 6. But to us there is but one God, the Father] Who produced all things, himself uncreated and unoriginated. And we in him, and we for him; all intelligent beings having been created for the purpose of manifesting his glory, by receiving and reflecting his wisdom, goodness, and truth.

And one Lord Jesus] Only one visible Governor of the world and the church, by whom are all things; who was the Creator, as he is the Upholder of the universe. And we by him, being brought to the knowledge of the true God, by the revelation of Jesus Christ; for it is the only begotten Son alone that can reveal the Father.

Verse 7. There is not in every man that knowledge] This is spoken in reference to what is said, ver. 4: We know that an idol is nothing in the world; for some with a conscience of the idol, viz., that it is something, eat it—the flesh that was offered to the idol as a thing thus offered, considering the feast as a sacred banquet, by which they have fellowship with the idol. And their conscience being weak—not properly instructed in divine things, is defiled—he performs what he does as an act of religious worship, and thus his conscience contracts guilt through this idolatry.

Verse 8. Meat commendeth us not to God] As to the thing, considered in itself, the eating gives us no spiritual advantage; and the eating not is no spiritual loss.

Verse 9. But take heed] Lest by frequenting such feasts and eating things offered to idols, under the conviction that an idol is nothing and that you may eat those things innocently, this liberty of yours should become a means of grievously offending a weak brother who has not your knowledge, or inducing one who respects you for your superior knowledge to partake of these things with the conscience, the persuasion, and belief, that an idol is something, and to conclude, that as you partake of such things, so he may also, and with safety.

^a Acts xv. 20, 29. Ch. x. 19.—^b Rom. xiv. 14, 22.—^c Rom. xiv. 3, 10.—^d Ch. xiii. 8, 9, 12. Gal. vi. 3. 1 Tim. vi. 4.—^e Exod. xxxiii. 12, 17. Nah. i. 7. Matt. vii. 23. Gal. iv. 9. 2 Tim. ii. 19.—^f Isa. xli. 24. Ch. x. 19.—^g Deut. iv. 39. vi. 4. Isa. xlviii. 8. Mark xii. 29. Ver. 6. Eph. iv. 6. 1 Tim. ii. 5.—^h John x. 34.—ⁱ Mal. ii. 10.

Verse 1. As touching things offered unto idols] It was customary, after the blood and life of an animal had been offered in sacrifice to an idol, to sell the flesh in the market indiscriminately with that of other animals which had not been sacrificed, but merely killed for common use. Even the less scrupulous Jews, knowing that any particular flesh had been thus offered, would abhor the use of it; and as those who lived among the Gentiles, as the Jews at Corinth, must know that this was a common case, hence they would be generally scrupulous; and those of them that were converted to Christianity would have their scruples increased. On the other hand, those of the Gentiles who had received the faith of Christ, knowing that an idol was nothing in the world, nor was even a representation of anything (for the beings represented by idol images were purely imaginary), made no scruple to buy and eat the flesh as they used to do, though not with the same intention; for when, in their heathen state, they ate the flesh offered to idols, they ate it as a feast with the idol, and were thus supposed to have communion with the idol, which was the grossest idolatry.

We know that we all have knowledge] These words contain a general truth, as they relate to Christians of those times, and may be thus paraphrased: "All we who are converted to God by Christ have sufficient knowledge concerning idols and idol worship; and we know also the liberty which we have through the gospel, not being bound by Jewish laws, rites, ceremonies, &c.; but many carry their knowledge in this liberty too far, and do what is neither seemly nor convenient, and thus give offence to others."

Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth] This knowledge is very nearly allied to pride; it puffeth up the mind with vain conceit, makes those who have it bold and rash, and renders them careless of the consciences of others.

Verse 2. He knoweth nothing yet, &c.] He that can torment his neighbour's weak or tender conscience with his food or his conduct, does not love him as himself, and therefore knows nothing as he ought to know.

Verse 3. But if any man love God] In that way which the commandment requires, which will necessarily beget love to his neighbour, the same is known of him—is approved of God, and acknowledged as his genuine follower.

Verse 4. An idol is nothing in the world] This expression was common in the Old Testament and among the Jews; sit at meat in ^athe idol's temple, shall not ^bthe conscience of him which is weak be ^cemboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols;

11 And ^dthrough thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died?

^a 1 Mac. i. 47.—^b Ch. x. 28, 32.—^c Gr. edified.—^d Rom. xiv. 15, 20.

Verse 10. If any man see thee which hast knowledge] Of the true God, and who art reputed for thy skill in divine things.

Be emboldened to eat] Be built up—he confirmed and established in that opinion which before he doubtfully held, that on seeing you eat he may be led to think there is no harm in feasting in an idol-temple, nor in eating things offered to idols.

Verse 11. Shall the weak brother perish] Being first taught by thy conduct that there was no harm in thus eating, he grieves the spirit of God; becomes again darkened and hardened: and, sliding back into idolatry, dies in it, and so finally perishes.

For whom Christ died ^a] So we learn that a man may perish for whom Christ died: this admits of no quibble. If a man for whom Christ died, apostatizing from Christianity (for he is called a brother though weak), return again to and 12 But ^awhen ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ.

13 Wherefore, ^bif meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend.

^a Matt. xxv. 40, 45.—^b Rom. xiv. 21. 2 Cor. xi. 29.

die in idolatry, cannot go to heaven; then a man for whom Christ died may perish everlastingly.

Verse 12. But when ye sin so against the brethren] Against Christians, who are called by the gospel to abhor and detest all such abominations.

Ye sin against Christ.] By sending to perdition, through your bad example, a soul for whom he shed his blood; and so far defeating the gracious intentions, of his sacrificial death.

Verse 13. Wherefore, &c.] Rather than give any occasion to a Christian to sin against and so to harden his conscience that he should return to idolatry and perish, I would not only abstain from all meats offered to idols, but I would eat no flesh, should I exist through the whole course of time, but live on the herbs of the field, rather than cause my brother to stumble, and thus fall into idolatry and final ruin.

CHAPTER IX.

St. Paul vindicates his apostleship, and shows that he has equal rights and privileges with Peter and the brethren of our Lord; and that he is not bound, while doing the work of an apostle, to labour with his hands for his own support, 1-6. He who labours should live by the fruit of his own industry, 7. For the law will not allow even the ox to be muzzled which treads out the corn, 8-10. Those who minister in spiritual things have a right to a secular support for their work, 11-14. He shows the disinterested manner in which he has preached the gospel, 15-18. How he accommodated himself to the prejudices of men, in order to bring about their salvation, 19-23. The way to heaven compared to a race, 24. The qualifications of those who may expect success in the games celebrated at Corinth, and what that success implies, 25. The apostle applies these things spiritually to himself; and states the necessity of keeping his body in subjection, lest, after having proclaimed salvation to others, he should become a cast-away, 26, 27.

AM ^aI not an apostle? am I not free? ^bhave I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord? ^care not ye my work in the Lord?

2 If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am to you: for ^dthe seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord.

3 Mine answer to them that do examine me is this.

4 ^eHave we not power to eat and to drink?

^a Acts ix. 15. xlii. 2. xxvi. 17. 2 Cor. xii. 12. Gal. ii. 7, 8. 1 Tim. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11.—^b Acts ix. 3. 17. xviii. 9. xxii. 14, 18. xxiii. 11. Ch. xv. 8.—^c Ch. iii. 6. iv. 15.—^d 2 Cor. iii. 2. xii. 12.—^e Ver. 14. 1 Thess. ii. 6. 2 Thess. iii. 9.—^f Or. woman.—^g Matt. xiii. 55.

Verse 1. Am I not an apostle? Am I not free?] These questions are all designed as assertions of the affirmative: I am an apostle; and I am free—possessed of all the rights and privileges of an apostle.

Have I not seen Jesus Christ] This was judged essentially necessary to constitute an apostle.—See Acts xxii. 14, 15; xvi. 16.

Are not ye my work] Your conversion from heathenism is the proof that I have preached with the divine unction and authority.

Verse 2. If I be not an apostle unto others] If there be 5 Have we not power to lead about a sister, ^aa wife, as well as other apostles, and ^bas ^cthe brethren of the Lord, and ^dCephas?

6 Or I only and Barnabas, ^ehave not we power to forbear working?

other churches which have been founded by other apostles; yet it is not so with you.

The seal of mine apostleship are ye] Your conversion to Christianity is God's seal to my apostleship. Had not God sent me, I could not have profited your souls.

In the Lord.] The apostle shows that it was by the grace and influence of God alone that he was an apostle, and that they were converted to Christianity.

Verse 3. Mine answer to them] This is my defence against those who examine me. The words are forensic; and the apostle considers himself as brought before a legal tribunal

8 Say I these things as a man? or saith not the law the same also?

9 For it is written in the law of Moses, 'Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen?

10 Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written: that he that ploweth should plow in hope; and that he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope.

11 'If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?

12 If others be partakers of this power over you, are not we rather? 'Nevertheless we have not used this power; but suffer all things, 'lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ.

13 'Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things, 'live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar, are partakers with the altar?

14 Even so 'hath the Lord ordained, 'that they and questioned so as to be obliged to answer as upon oath. His defence therefore was this, that they were converted to God by his means.

Verse 4. Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not authority, or right, to expect sustenance, while we are labouring for your salvation? Meat and drink, the necessaries, not the superfluities, of life, were what those primitive messengers of Christ required; it was just that they who laboured in the gospel should live by the gospel; they did not wish to make a fortune, or accumulate wealth; a living was all they desired.

Verse 5. Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife? When the apostle speaks of leading about a sister, a wife, he means first, that he and all other apostles, and consequently all ministers of the gospel, had a right to marry. And secondly, we find that their wives were persons of the same faith; for less can never be implied in the word sister. This is a decisive proof against the papistical celibacy of the clergy: and as to their attempts to evade the force of this text by saying that the apostles had holy women who attended them, and ministered to them in their peregrinations, there is no proof of it; nor could they have suffered either young women or other men's wives to have accompanied them in this way without giving the most palpable occasion of scandal. [The point is not the Apostle's right of marriage, but his right to take a wife with him on his travels, at the cost of the Church.]

Verse 6. Or I only and Barnabas? Have we alone of all the apostles no right to be supported by our converts?

Verse 7. Who goeth a warfare—at his own charges? These questions, which are all supposed from the necessity and propriety of the cases to be answered in the affirmative, tend more forcibly to point out that the common sense of man joins with the providence of God in showing the propriety of every man living by the fruits of his labour.

Verse 8. Say I these things as a man? Is this only human reasoning? or does not God say in effect the same things?

Verse 9. Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox? See this largely explained in the note on Deut. xxv. 4.

Doth God take care for oxen? Is it likely that God should be solicitous for the comfort of oxen, and be regardless of the welfare of men?

Verse 10. And he that thresheth in hope should be partaker of his hope. Many of the best MSS. and Versions read the passage thus: And he who thresheth, in hope of partaking.

Verse 11. If we have sown unto you spiritual things? If we have been the means of bringing you into a state of salvation by the divine doctrines which we have preached unto you, is it too much for us to expect a temporal support when we give ourselves up entirely to this work?

Verse 12. If others be partakers of this power? If those who in any matter serve you have a right to a recompence for that service, surely we who have served you in the most which preach the gospel should live of the gospel.

15 But I have used none of these things: neither have I written these things, that it should be so done unto me: for 'it were better for me to die, than that any man should make my glorying void.

16 For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for 'necessity is laid upon me: yea, woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel.

17 For if I do this thing willingly, 'I have a reward; but if against my will, 'a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me.

18 What is my reward then? Verily that, 'when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I 'abuse not my power in the gospel.

19 For though I be 'free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, 'that I might gain the more.

20 And 'unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the essential matters have a right to our support while thus employed in your service.

We have not used this power. Though we had this right we have not availed ourselves of it, but have worked with our hands to bear our own charges, lest any of you should think that we preached the gospel merely to procure a temporal support, and so be prejudiced against us, and thus prevent our success in the salvation of your souls.

Verse 13. They which minister about holy things. All the officers about the temple, whether priests, Levites, Nethinim, &c., had a right to their support while employed in its service.

Verse 14. Even so hath the Lord ordained. This is evidently a reference to our Lord's ordination, Matt. x. 10: The workman is worthy of his meat. And Luke x. 7: For the labourer is worthy of his hire. And in both places it is the preacher of the gospel of whom he is speaking.

Verse 15. Neither have I written, &c. Though I might plead the authority of God in the law, of Christ in the gospel, the common consent of our own doctors, and the usages of civil society, yet I have not availed myself of my privileges; nor do I now write with the intention to lay in my claims.

Verse 16. For though I preach the gospel. I have cause of glorying that I preach the gospel free of all charges to you, but I cannot glory in being a preacher of the gospel, because I am not such either by my own skill or power: I have received both the office, and the grace by which I execute the office from God. I have not only his authority to preach, but that authority obliges me to preach; and if I did not, I should endanger my salvation.

Verse 17. For if I do this thing willingly. If I be a cordial co-operator with God, I have a reward, an incorruptible crown, ver. 25. Or, If I freely preach this gospel without being burthensome to any, I have a special reward; but if I do not, I have simply an office to fulfil, into which God has put me, and may fulfil it conscientiously, and claim my privileges at the same time; but then I lose that special reward which I have in view by preaching the gospel without charge to any.

Verse 18. That I abuse not my power. I am inclined to think that the verb is to be understood here, not in the sense of abusing, but of using to the uttermost—exactng every thing that a man can claim by law.

Verse 19. For though I be free. Although I am under no obligation to any man, yet I act as if every individual had a particular property in me, and as if I were the slave of the public.

Verse 20. Unto the Jews I became as a Jew. In Acts xvi. 3, we find that for the sake of the unconverted Jews he circumcised Timothy.

law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law;

22 ^dTo the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; ^eI am made all things to all men, ^fthat I might by all means save some.

23 And this I do for the gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you.

ceremonies, though they had in the main embraced the gospel, he became as if under the same obligations; and therefore purified himself in the temple, as we find related, Acts xxi. 26, where also see the notes.

After the first clause, the following words, not being myself under the law, are added by the best MSS. and Versions.

Verse 21. To them that are without law] The Gentiles, who had no written law, though they had the law written in their hearts; see on Rom. ii. 15.

Being not without law to God] Instead of to God, and to Christ, the most important MSS. and Versions have of God, and of Christ; being not without the law of God, but under the law of Christ.

Them that are without law] He might, among the heathen, appear as if he were not a Jew, and discourse with them on the great principles of that eternal law, the outlines of which had been written in their hearts, in order to show them the necessity of embracing that gospel, which was the power of God unto salvation to every one that believed.

Verse 22. To the weak became I as weak] Those who were conscientiously scrupulous, even in respect to lawful things.

I am made all things to all men] I assumed every shape and form consistent with innocence and perfect integrity; giving up my own will, my own way, my own ease, my own pleasure, and my own profit, that I might save the souls of all.

Verse 23. And this I do for the gospel's sake] Instead of this, all things is the reading of the best MSS.

That I might be partaker thereof with you] That I might attain to the reward of eternal life which it sets before me; and this is in all probability the meaning of the word, which we translate the gospel, and which should be rendered here prize or reward; this is a frequent meaning of the original word.

Verse 24. They which run in a race run all] The apostle alludes to the athletic exercises in the games which were celebrated every fifth year on the isthmus, or narrow neck of land, which joins the Peloponnesus, or Morea, to the mainland; and were thence termed the Isthmian games.

But one receiveth the prize?] The apostle places the Christian race in contrast to the Isthmian games; in them, only one received the prize, though all ran; in this, if all run, all will receive the prize; therefore he says, So run run all, but one receiveth the prize? ^aSo run, that ye may obtain.

25 And every man that ^bstriveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we ^can incorruptible.

26 I therefore so run, ^dnot as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air:

27 ^eBut I keep under my body, and ^fbring it into subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be ^ga castaway.

that ye may obtain. Be as much in earnest to get to heaven as others are to gain their prize; and, although only one of them can win, all of you may obtain.

Verse 25. Is temperate in all things] All those who contended in these exercises went through a long state and series of painful preparations.

They do it to obtain a corruptible crown] The crown won by the victor in the Olympian games was made of the willow olive; in the Pythian games of laurel; in the Nemean games of parsley; and in the Isthmian games of the pine. These were all corruptible, for they began to wither as soon as they were separated from the trees, or plucked out of the earth. In opposition to these, the apostle says, he contended for an incorruptible crown, the heavenly inheritance. He sought not worldly honour; but that honour which comes from God.

Verse 26. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly] In the foot-course in those games, how many soever ran, only one could have the prize, however strenuously they might exert themselves; therefore, all ran uncertainly; but it was widely different in the Christian course; if every one ran as he ought, each would receive the prize.

Not as one that beateth the air] I have a real and a deadly foe; and as I fight not only for my honour but for my life; I aim every blow well, and do execution with each.

Verse 27. But I keep under my body, &c.] The apostle considers his body as an enemy with which he must contend; he must mortify it by self-denial, abstinence, and severe labour; it must be the slave of his soul, and not the soul the slave of the body, which in all unregenerate men is the case.

Lest—when I have preached to others] The word which we translate having preached, refers to the office of the herald at these games, whose business it was to proclaim the conditions of the games, display the prizes, exhort the combatants, excite the emulation of those who were to contend, declare the terms of each contest, pronounce the name of the victors, and put the crown on their heads.

Should be a castaway] The word signifies such a person as the judges of the games reject as not having deserved the prize. So Paul himself might be rejected by the Great Judge; and to prevent this, he ran, he contended, he denied himself, and brought his body into subjection to his spirit, and had his spirit governed by the Spirit of God.

CHAPTER X.

Peculiar circumstances in the Jewish history were typical of the greatest mysteries of the gospel; particularly their passing through the Red Sea, and being overshadowed with the miraculous cloud, 1, 2. The manna with which they were fed, 3. And rock out of which they drank, 4. The punishments inflicted on them for their disobedience are warnings to us, 5. We should not lust as they did, 6. Nor commit idolatry, 7. Nor fornication as they did; in consequence of which twenty-three thousand of them were destroyed, 8. Nor tempt Christ as they did, 9. Nor murmur, 10. All these transgressions and their punishments are recorded as warnings to us, that we may not fall away from the grace of God, 11, 12. God never suffers any to be tempted above their strength, 13. Idolatry must be detested, 14. And the sacrament of the Lord's Supper properly considered and taken, that God may not be provoked to punish us, 15-22. There are some things which may be legally done which are not expedient; and we should endeavour so to act as to edify each other, 23, 24. The question concerning eating things offered to idols considered, and finally settled, 25-30. We should do all things to the glory of God, avoid whatsoever might be the means of stumbling another, and seek the profit of others in spiritual matters rather than our own gratification, 31-33.

MOREOVER, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under ^a the cloud, and all passed through ^b the sea;
 2 And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea;
 3 And did all eat the same ^c spiritual meat;
 4 And did all drink the same ^d spiritual drink; (for they drank of that spiritual rock that ^e followed them: and that rock was Christ.)
 5 But with many of them God was not well pleased; for they ^f were overthrown in the wilderness.
 6 Now those things were ^g our examples, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as ^h they also lusted.
 7 ⁱ Neither be ye idolaters, as ^j were some of them; as it is written, ^k The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play.
 8 ^l Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and ^m fell in one day three and twenty thousand.

9 Neither let us tempt Christ, as ⁿ some of them also tempted, and ^o were destroyed of serpents.

10 Neither murmur ye, as ^p some of them also murmured, and ^q were destroyed of ^r the destroyer.

11 Now all these things happened unto them for ^s ensamples: and ^t they are written for our admonition, ^u upon whom the ends of the world are come.

12 Wherefore ^v let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.

13 There hath no temptation taken you but ^w such as is common to man: but ^x God is faithful, ^y who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will, with the temptation, also ^z make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.

14 Wherefore, my dearly beloved, ^{aa} flee from idolatry.

15 I speak as to wise ^{ab} men; judge ye what I say.

Verse 1. I would not that ye should be ignorant] It seems as if the Corinthians had supposed that their being made partakers of the ordinances of the gospel, such as Baptism and the Lord's Supper, would secure their salvation, notwithstanding they might be found partaking of idolatrous feasts; as long, at least, as they considered an idol to be nothing in the world. To remove this destructive supposition, the apostle shows that the Jews had sacramental ordinances in the wilderness; and that, notwithstanding they had the typical baptism from the cloud, and the typical eucharist from the paschal lamb, and the manna that came down from heaven, yet, when they joined with idolaters and partook of idolatrous feasts, God was not only displeased with them, but signified this displeasure by pouring out His judgments upon them, so that in one day 23,000 of them were destroyed.

Verse 2. And were all baptized unto Moses] Rather INTO Moses—into the covenant of which Moses was the mediator; and by this typical baptism they were brought under the obligation of acting according to the Mosaic precepts, as Christians receiving Christian baptism are said to be baptized INTO Christ, and are thereby brought under obligation to keep the precepts of the Gospel.

Verse 3. Spiritual meat] The manna, which is here called spiritual. 1. Because it was provided supernaturally; and, 2. Because it was a type of Christ Jesus.

Verse 4. That spiritual rock that followed them] How could the rock follow them? It does not appear that the rock ever moved from the place where Moses struck it. But to solve this difficulty, it is said that rock here is put, by metonymy, for the water of the rock; and that this water did follow them through the wilderness. This is likely; but we have not direct proof of it.

Others contend, that by the rock following them we are to understand their having carried off its waters with them on their journeyings. This we know is a common custom in these deserts to the present day; and the Greek verb to follow has this sense.

Yet it appears that the apostle does not speak about the rock itself, but of Him whom it represented; namely, Christ: this was the Rock that followed them, and ministered to them; and this view of the subject is rendered more probable by what is said ver. 9, that they tempted Christ, and were destroyed by serpents.

Verse 5. They were overthrown in the wilderness.] Nothing can be a more decisive proof than this that people, who have every outward ordinance, and are made partakers of the grace of our Lord Jesus, may so abuse their privileges and grieve the Spirit of God as to fall from their state of grace, and perish everlastingly.

Verse 6. These things were our examples] The punishments which God inflicted on them furnish us with evidences of what God will inflict upon us, if we sin after the similitude of those transgressors.

We should not lust after evil things] The apostle refers here to the history in Num. xi. 4, &c.: And the mixed multitude fell a lusting, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? Into the same spirit the Corinthians had most evidently fallen; they lusted after the flesh in the idol feasts, and therefore frequented them, to the great scandal of Christianity.

Verse 7. Neither be ye idolaters] The apostle considers partaking of the idolatrous feasts as being real acts of idolatry: because those who offered the flesh to their gods considered them as feeding invisibly with them on the flesh thus offered, and that every one that partook of the feast was a real participator with the god to whom the flesh or animal had been offered in sacrifice.

Rose up to play] See the note on Exod. xxxii. 6. The Jews generally explain this word as implying idolatrous acts only; I have considered it as implying acts of impurity, with which idolatrous acts were often accompanied. It also means those dances which were practised in honour of their gods.

Verse 8. Fell in one day three and twenty thousand.] In Numb. xxv. 9, the number is 24,000. I think the discordance may be best accounted for by supposing that Phineas and his companions might have slain 1000 men, who were heads of the people, and chief in this idolatry: and that the plague sent from the Lord destroyed 23,000 more; so an equal number to the whole tribe of Levi perished in one day, who were just 23,000.

Verse 9. Neither let us tempt Christ] By tempting Christ is meant disbelieving the providence and goodness of God; and presuming to prescribe to him how he should send them the necessary supplies, and of what kind they should be, &c.

Verse 10. Neither murmur ye] It appears, from what the apostle says here, that the Corinthians were murmuring

I. CORINTHIANS.

16 * The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? * the bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?

17 For * we, being many, are one bread, and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread.

18 Behold * Israel * after the flesh: * are not they which eat of the sacrifices partakers of the altar?

19 What say I then? * that the idol is any thing? or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing?

20 But I say, that the things which the Gentiles * sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils.

21 * Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and * the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and of the table of devils.

22 Do we * provoke the Lord to jealousy? * are we stronger than he?

against God and his apostle for prohibiting them from partaking of the idolatrous feasts, just as the Israelites did in the wilderness in reference to a similar subject.

Destroyed of the destroyer.] The Jews supposed that God employed destroying angels to punish those rebellious Israelites; they were five in number, and one of them they call Mesachith, the destroyer; which appears to be another name for Samael, the angel of death, to whose influence they attribute all deaths which are not uncommon or violent.

Verse 11. Upon whom the ends of the world are come.] The end of the times included within the whole duration of the Mosaic economy. For although the word means, in its primary sense, endless being, or duration; yet, in its accommodated sense, it is applied to any round or duration that is complete in itself: and here it evidently means the whole duration of the Mosaic economy.

Verse 12. Let him that thinketh he standeth.] Let him that most confidently standeth—him who has the fullest conviction in his own conscience that his heart is right with God, and that his mind is right in the truth, take heed lest he fall from his faith, and from the state of holiness in which the grace of God has placed him.

Verse 13. But such as is common to man.] Your temptations or trials have been but trifling in comparison of those endured by the Israelites; they might have been easily resisted and overcome. Besides, God will not suffer you to be tried above the strength he gives you; but as the trial comes, he will provide you with sufficient strength to resist it: as the trial comes in, he will make your way out. Satan is never permitted to block up our way, without the providence of God making a way through the wall. God ever makes a breach in his otherwise impregnable fortification. Should an upright soul get into difficulties and straits, he may rest assured that there is a way out, as there was a way in; and that the trial shall never be above the strength that God shall give him to bear it.

Verse 14. Wherefore—flee from idolatry.] This is a trial of no great magnitude; to escape from so gross a temptation requires but a moderate portion of grace and circumspection.

Verse 15. I speak as to wise men.] The Corinthians valued themselves not a little on their wisdom and various gifts; the apostle admits this, and draws an argument from it against themselves.

Verse 16. The cup of blessing.] The apostle speaks here of the Eucharist, which he illustrates by the cos habberacah, cup of blessing, over which thanks were expressed at the conclusion of the passover.

The communion of the blood of Christ.] We who partake of this sacred cup, in commemoration of the death of Christ, are made partakers of his body and blood, and thus have fellowship with him; as those who partake of an idol feast, thereby, as much as they can, participate with the idol, to whom the sacrifice was offered.

23 * All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not.

24 * Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth.

25 * Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat, asking no question for conscience sake:

26 For * the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof.

27 If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; * whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience sake.

28 But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice unto idols, eat not, * for his sake that shewed it, and for conscience' sake: for * the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof:

Verse 17. For we, being many, are one bread.] The original would be better translated thus: Because there is one bread, or loaf, we, who are many, are one body.

Verse 18. Behold Israel after the flesh.] All the Israelites who offer sacrifice, and partake of those sacrifices, give proof thereby that they are Jews, and are in fellowship with the object of their worship; so they who join in idol festivals, and eat things which have been offered to idols, give proof that they are in communion with those idolaters, and that they have fellowship with the demons they worship.

Verse 19. What say I then?] A Jewish phrase for, I conclude; and this is his conclusion: that although an idol is nothing, has neither power nor influence, nor are things offered to idols anything the worse for being thus offered; yet, as the things sacrificed by the Gentiles are sacrificed to demons and not to God, those who partake of them have fellowship with demons: those who profess Christianity cannot have fellowship both with Christ and the devil.

Verse 21. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord.] It is in vain that you who frequent these idol festivals profess the religion of Christ, and commemorate his death and passion in the Holy Eucharist; for you cannot have that fellowship with Christ which this ordinance implies, while you are partakers of the table of demons.

Verse 22. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy?] All idolatry is represented as a sort of spiritual adultery; it is giving that heart to Satan that should be devoted to God; and he is represented as being jealous, because of the infidelity of those who have covenanted to give their hearts to him.

Are we stronger than he?] A sinner should consider, while he is in rebellion against God, whether he be able to resist that power whereby God will inflict vengeance.

Verse 23. All things are lawful for me.] I may lawfully eat all kinds of food, but all are not expedient. It would not be becoming in me to eat of all, because I should by this offend and grieve many weak minds.

Verse 24. Let no man seek his own, &c.] Let none, for his private gratification or emolument, disturb the peace or injure the soul of another.

Verse 26. For the earth is the Lord's.] And because God made the earth and its fulness, all animals, plants, and vegetables, there can be nothing in it or them impure or unholy; because all are the creatures of God.

Verse 27. If any—bid you to a feast.] The apostle means any common meal, not an idol festival; for to such no Christian could lawfully go.

Whatsoever is set before you, eat.] Do not act as the Jews generally do, torturing both themselves and others with questions.

Verse 28. This is offered in sacrifice unto idols.] While they were not apprised of this circumstance they might lawfully eat; but when told that the flesh set before them had been offered to an idol, then they were not to eat, for the sake of his weak conscience who pointed out the circumstance.

For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof] This clause, which appears also in ver. 26, has scarcely any authority to support it.

Verses 29, 30. For why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience? &c.] The gospel of Christ did not lay any man under this general burthen, that he must do nothing at which any weak brother might feel hurt or be stumbled; for the liberty of the gospel must not take for its rule the scrupulosity of any conscience; for if a man, by grace—by the allowance or authority of the gospel, partake of anything that God's bounty has sent, and which the gospel has not forbidden, and give thanks to God for the blessing, no man has right or authority to condemn such a person.

Verse 31. Whether therefore ye eat or drink] This is a sufficient rule to regulate every man's conscience and practice in all indifferent things, where there are no express commands or prohibitions.

Verse 32. Give none offence, &c.] Scrupulously avoid giving any cause of offence either to the unconverted Jews or the unconverted Gentiles, so as to prejudice them against Christianity: nor to the Church of God, made up of converts from the above parties.

Verse 33. Even as I please all men] Act as I do; forgetting myself, my own interests, convenience, ease, and comfort, I labour for the welfare of others; and particularly that they may be saved. How blessed and amiable was the spirit and conduct of this holy man!

CHAPTER XI.

The apostle reprehends the Corinthians for several irregularities in their manner of conducting public worship; the men praying or prophesying with their heads covered, and the women with their heads uncovered, contrary to custom, propriety, and decency, 1-6. Reasons why they should act differently, 7-16. They are also reprov'd for their divisions and heresies, 17-19. And for the irregular manner in which they celebrated the Lord's Supper, 20-22. The proper manner of celebrating this holy rite laid down by the apostle, 23-26. Directions for a profitable receiving of the Lord's Supper, and avoiding the dangerous consequences of communicating unworthily, 27-34.

Verse 1. Be ye followers of me] This verse certainly belongs to the preceding chapter, and is here out of all proper place and connexion.

Verse 2. That ye remember me in all things] It appears that the apostle had previously given them a variety of directions relative to the matters mentioned here; that some had paid strict attention to them, and that others had not; and that contentions and divisions were the consequences which he here reproveth and endeavours to rectify.

Verse 3. The head of every man is Christ] The apostle is speaking particularly of Christianity and its ordinances: Christ is the head or Author of this religion; and is the creator, preserver, and Lord of every man. The man also is the Lord or head of the woman; and the Head or Lord of Christ, as Mediator between God and man, is God the Father.

Verse 4. Praying or prophesying] Any person who engages in public acts in the worship of God, whether prayer, singing, or exhortation; for we learn from the apostle himself, that to prophesy, signifies to speak unto men to edifica-

5 But ⁱ every woman that prayeth or prophesieth with her head uncovered dishonoureth her head: for that is even all one as if she were ^j shaven.

6 For if the woman be not covered, let her also be shorn: but if it be ^k a shame for a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be covered.

tion, exhortation, and comfort, chap. xiv. 8. And this comprehends all that we understand by exhortation, or even preaching.

Having his head covered] With his cap or turban on, dishonoureth his head; because the head being covered was a sign of subjection; and while he was employed in the public ministration of the word, he was to be considered as a representative of Christ, and on this account his being veiled or covered would be improper. This decision of the apostle was in point blank hostility to the canons of the Jews; for they would not suffer a man to pray unless he was veiled.

Verse 5. But every woman that prayeth, &c.] Whatever may be the meaning of praying and prophesying, in respect to the man, they have precisely the same meaning in respect to the woman. So that some women at least, as well as some men, might speak to others to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. And this kind of prophesying or teaching was predicted by Joel, ii. 28, and referred to by Peter, Acts ii. 17. And had there not been such gifts bestowed on 7 For a man indeed ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as ^a he is the image and glory of God: but the woman is the glory of the man.

8 For ^b the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man.

9 ^c Neither was the man created for the woman: but the woman for the man.

10 For this cause ought the woman ^d to have ^e power on her head ^f because of the angels.

11 Nevertheless ^g neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord.

12 For as the woman is of the man, even so is the man also by the woman; ^h but all things of God.

13 Judge in yourselves: is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?

14 Doth not even nature itself teach you, that, if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him?

15 But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her: for her hair is given her for a ⁱ covering.

women, the prophecy could not have had its fulfilment. The only difference marked by the apostle was, the man had his head uncovered because he was the representative of Christ; the woman had her's covered, because she was placed by the order of God in a state of subjection to the man, and because it was a custom, both among the Greeks and Romans, and among the Jews, an express law, that no woman should be seen abroad without a veil. This was, and is, a common custom through all the east, and none but public prostitutes go without veils. And if a woman should appear in public without a veil, she would dishonour her head—her husband. And she must appear like to those women who had their hair shorn off as the punishment of whoredom, or adultery.

Verse 6. For if the woman be not covered] If she will not wear a veil in the public assemblies, let her be shorn—let her carry a public badge of infamy: but if it be a shame—if to be shorn or shaven would appear, as it must, a badge of infamy, then let her be covered—let her by all means wear a veil. Even in mourning it was considered disgraceful to be obliged to shear off the hair; and lest they should lose this ornament of their heads, the women contrived to evade the custom, by cutting off the ends of it only.

Verse 7. A man indeed ought not to cover his head] He should not wear his cap or turban in the public congregation, for this was a badge of servitude, or an indication that he had a conscience overwhelmed with guilt; and besides, it was contrary to the custom that prevailed, both among the Greeks and Romans.

He is the image and glory of God] He is God's vicegerent in this lower world; and, by the authority which he has received from his Maker, he is his representative among the creatures, and exhibits, more than any other part of the creation, the glory and perfections of the Creator.

But the woman is the glory of the man] As the man is, among the creatures, the representative of the glory and perfections of God; so the woman is, in the house and family, the representative of the power and authority of the man.

Verse 8. For the man is not of the woman] His meaning is that the man does not belong to the woman, as if she was the principal; but the woman belongs to the man in that view.

Verse 10. For this cause ought the woman to have power on her head because of the angels] There are few portions in the sacred writings that have given rise to such a variety of conjectures and explanations, and are less understood, than this verse, and ver. 29 of chap. xv. Our translators were puzzled with it; and have inserted here one of the largest marginal readings found any where in their work; but this is only on the words power on her head, which they interpret thus: that is, a covering, in sign that she is under the power of her husband. Bishop Pearce contends that the original should be read, Wherefore the woman ought to 16 But ^j if any man seem to be contentious, we have no such custom, ^k neither the churches of God.

17 Now in this that I declare unto you I praise you not, that ye come together not for the better, but for the worse.

18 For first of all, when ye come together in the church, ^l I hear that there be ^m divisions among you; and I partly believe it.

19 For ⁿ there must be also ^o heresies among you, ^p that they which are approved may be made manifest among you.

20 When ye come together therefore into one place, ^q this is not to eat the Lord's supper.

21 For in eating, every one taketh before other his own supper: and one is hungry, and ^r another is drunken.

have a power upon her head, that is, the power of the husband over the wife; the word power standing for the sign or token of that power which was a covering or veil; and he believes that the apostle uses the word angels, in its most obvious sense, for the heavenly angels; and that he speaks according to the notion which then prevailed among Jews, that the holy angels interested themselves in the affairs of men, and particularly were present in their religious assemblies, as the cherubim, their representation, were present in their temple. Eccles. v. 6; 1 Tim. v. 21.

On the whole, the Bishop's sense of the passage and paraphrase stands thus: "And because of this superiority in the man, I conclude that the woman should have on her head a veil, the mark of her husband's power over her, especially in the religious assemblies, where the angels are supposed to be invisibly present."

After all, the custom of the Nazarite may cast some light upon this place. As Nazarite means one who has separated himself by vow to some religious austerity, wearing his own hair, &c.; so a married woman was considered a Nazarite for life, i.e., separated from all others, and joined to one husband, who is her lord: and hence the apostle, alluding to this circumstance, says, The woman ought to have power on her head, i.e., wear her hair and veil, for her hair is a proof of her being a Nazarite, and of her subjection to her husband, as the Nazarite was under subjection to the Lord, according to the rule or law of his order. See notes on Num. vi. 5-7. [The reference to the Nazarite can scarcely be sustained. The weight of modern criticism is in favour substantially of the interpretation of Bishop Pearce, though it is felt that the entire difficulty of the passage is not met.]

Verse 11. Neither is the man without the woman] The apostle seems to say: I do not intimate any disparagement of the female sex, by insisting on the necessity of her being under the power or authority of the man; for they are both equally dependant on each other, in the Lord. Others think that he means that men and women equally make a Christian society, and in it have equal right and privileges.

Verse 12. For as the woman is of the man] For as the woman was first formed out of the side of man, man has ever since been formed out of the womb of the woman; but they, as all other created things, are of God.

Verse 13. Judge in yourselves] Consider the subject in your own common sense, and then say whether it be decent for a woman to pray in public without a veil on her head?

Verse 14. Doth not nature—teach you, that, if a man have long hair] Nature certainly teaches us, by bestowing it, that it is proper for women to have long hair; and it is not so with men. The hair of the male rarely grows like that of the female, unless art is used, and even then it bears but a scanty proportion to the former. Hence it is truly womanish to have long hair, and it is a shame to the man who affects it.

23 For ^a I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, ^b That the Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread :

24 And when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat : this is my body, which is broken for you : this do ^c in remembrance of me.

25 After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood : this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me.

26 For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ^d ye do shew the Lord's death ^e till he come.

27 ^f Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.

Verse 15. But if a woman have long hair] The Author of their being has given a larger proportion of hair to the head of women than to that of men; and to them it is an especial ornament, and may in various cases serve as a veil.

Verse 16. But if any man seem to be contentious] If any person sets himself up as a wrangler—puts himself forward as a defender of such points, that a woman may pray or teach with her head uncovered, and that a man may, without reproach, have long hair; let him know that we have no such custom as either, nor are they sanctioned by any of the churches of God, whether among the Jews or the Gentiles.

Verse 17. Now in this—I praise you not] He is obliged to condemn certain irregularities which had crept in among them, particularly relative to the celebration of the Lord's Supper. Through some false teaching which they had received, in the absence of the apostle, they appear to have celebrated it precisely in the same way the Jews did their passover. That, we know, was a regular meal, only accompanied with certain peculiar circumstances and ceremonies : two of these ceremonies were, eating bread, solemnly broken, and drinking a cup of wine called the Cup of Blessing. Now, it is certain that our Lord had taken these two things, and made them expressive of the crucifixion of his body, and the shedding of his blood, as an atonement for the sins of mankind. The teachers which had crept into the Corinthian Church appear to have perverted the whole of this divine institution; for the celebration of the Lord's supper appears to have been made among them a part of an ordinary meal.

Verse 18. There be divisions among you] They had schisms, among them : the old parties were kept up, even in the place where they assembled to eat the Lord's Supper.

Verse 19. There must be also heresies] Not a common consent of the members of the church, either in the doctrines of the gospel, or in the ceremonies of the Christian religion. Their difference in religious opinion led to a difference in their religious practice, and thus the Church of God, that should have been one body, was split into sects and parties.

Verse 20. This is not to eat the Lord's supper] They did not come together to eat the Lord's Supper exclusively, which they should have done, and not have made it a part of an ordinary meal.

Verse 22. Have ye not houses to eat and to drink in ?] They should have taken their ordinary meal at home, and have come together in the church to celebrate the Lord's Supper.

Despise ye the church of God] Ye render the sacred assembly and the place contemptible by your conduct, and ye show yourselves destitute of that respect which ye owe to the place set apart for divine worship.

And shame them that have not ?] Them that are poor, not them who had not victuals at that time; but those who were so poor as to be incapable of furnishing themselves as others had done.

Verse 28. I have received of the Lord] It is possible that several of the people at Corinth did receive the bread and 28 But ^a let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup.

29 For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh ^b damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.

30 For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep.

31 For ^c if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged.

32 But when we are judged, ^d we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world.

33 Wherefore, my brethren, when ye come together to eat, tarry one for another.

34 And if any man ^e hunger, let him eat at ^f home; that ye come not together unto ^g condemnation. And the rest ^h will I set in order when ⁱ I come.

wine of the Eucharist as they did the paschal bread and wine, as a mere commemoration of an event. And as our Lord had by this institution consecrated that bread and wine, not to be the means of commemorating the deliverance from Egypt, and their joy on the account, but their deliverance from sin and death by his passion and cross; therefore the apostle states that he had received from the Lord what he delivered; viz., that the eucharistic bread and wine were to be understood of the accomplishment of that of which the paschal lamb was the type—the body broken for them, the blood shed for them.

Verse 26. Ye do shew the Lord's death] As in the pass-over they showed forth the bondage they had been in, and the redemption they had received from it; so in the Eucharist they showed forth the sacrificial death of Christ, and the redemption from sin derived from it.

Verse 27. Whosoever shall eat—and drink—unworthily] To put a final end to controversies and perplexities relative to these words and the context, let the reader observe, that to eat and drink the bread and wine in the Lord's Supper unworthily, is to eat and drink as the Corinthians did, who ate it not in reference to Jesus Christ's sacrificial death; but rather in such a way as the Israelites did the passover, which they celebrated in remembrance of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage. Those who acknowledge it as a sacrificial offering, and receive it in remembrance of God's love to them in sending his Son into the world, can neither bring damnation upon themselves by so doing, nor eat nor drink unworthily.

Shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord.] If he use it irreverently, if he deny that Christ suffered unjustly (for of some such persons the apostle must be understood to speak), then he in effect joins issue with the Jews in their condemnation and crucifixion of the Lord Jesus, and renders himself guilty of the death of our blessed Lord.

Verse 28. Let a man examine himself] Let him try whether he has proper faith in the Lord Jesus; and whether he discerns the Lord's body; and whether he duly considers that the bread and wine point out the crucified body and spilt blood of Christ.

Verse 29. Eateth and drinketh damnation] Judgment, punishment; and yet this is not unto damnation, for the judgment or punishment inflicted upon the disorderly and the profane was intended for their emendation; for in ver. 32 it is said, when we are judged, we are chastened, corrected as a father does his children, that we should not be condemned with the world.

Verse 30. For this cause] That they partook of this sacred ordinance without discerning the Lord's body; many are weak and sickly : it is hard to say whether these words refer to the consequences of their own intemperance, or to some extraordinary disorders inflicted immediately by God himself. Acting as they did in this solemn and awful sacrament, they might have provoked God to plague them with divers diseases and sundry kinds of death.

Verse 31. If we would judge ourselves] If, having noted improperly, we condemn our conduct and humble ourselves, we shall not be judged, i.e., punished for the sin we have committed.

Verse 34. The rest will I set in order, &c.] All the other matters relative to this business, to which you have referred in your letter, I will regulate when I come to visit you; as, God permitting, I fully design. The apostle did visit them about one year after this, as is generally believed.

CHAPTER XII

The apostle proceeds to the question of the Corinthians concerning Spiritual Gifts, 1. He calls to their remembrance their former state, and how they were brought out of it, 2, 3. Shows that there are diversities of gifts which proceed from the Spirit, 4. Diversities of administrations which proceed from the Lord Jesus, 5. And diversities of operations which proceed from God, 6. What these gifts are, and how they are dispensed, 7-11. Christ is the Head, and the church his members; and this is pointed out under the similitude of the human body, 12, 13. The relation which the members of the body have to each other; and how necessary their mutual support, 14-26. The members in the church, or spiritual body, and their respective offices, 27-30. We should earnestly covet the best gifts, 31.

NOW ^a concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.
2 Ye know ^b that ye were Gentiles, carried away unto these ^c dumb idols, even as ye were led.

3 Wherefore I give you to understand, ^d that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus ^e accursed; and ^f that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.

4 Now ^g there are diversities of gifts, but ^h the same Spirit.

5 ⁱ And there are differences of ^j administrations, but the same Lord.

Verse 1. Now concerning spiritual gifts] This was a subject about which they appear to have written to the apostle, and concerning which there were probably some contentions among them. The words may as well be translated concerning spiritual persons, as spiritual gifts; and indeed the former agrees much better with the context.

Verse 2. Ye were Gentiles] Previously to your conversion to the Christian faith; ye were heathens, carried away, not guided by reason or truth, but hurried by your passions into a senseless worship, the chief part of which was calculated only to excite and gratify animal propensities.

Verse 3. No man speaking by the Spirit of God] It was granted on all hands that there could be no religion without divine inspiration, because God alone could make his will known to men: hence heathenism pretended to this inspiration; Judaism had it in the law and the prophets; and it was the very essence of the Christian religion. The heathen priests and priestesses pretended to receive by inspiration, from their god, the answers which they gave to their votaries. And as far as the people believed their pretensions, so far they were led by their teaching.

And that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord] Nor can we demonstrate this person to be the Messiah and the Saviour of men but by the Holy Ghost, enabling us to speak with divers tongues, to work miracles; he attesting the truth of our doctrines to them that hear, by enlightening their minds, changing their hearts, and filling them with the peace and love of God.

Verse 4. There are diversities of gifts] Gracious endowments, leading to miraculous results; such as the gift of 6 And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God ^h which worketh all in all.

7 ⁱ But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

8 For to one is given by the Spirit, ^m the word of wisdom; to another ⁿ the word of knowledge, by the same Spirit;

9 ^o To another faith, by the same Spirit; to another ^p the gifts of healing, by the same Spirit;

10 To ^q another the working of miracles; to another ^r prophecy; ^s to another discerning of spirits; to another ^t divers kinds of tongues; to another the interpretation of tongues:

prophecy, speaking different tongues, &c. And these all came by the extraordinary influences of the Holy Spirit.

Verse 5. Differences of administrations] Various offices in the church, such as apostle, prophet, and teacher; under which were probably included bishop or presbyter, pastor, deacon, &c.: the qualifications for such offices, as well as the appointments themselves, coming immediately from the one Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 6. Diversities of operations] Miraculous influences exerted on others; such as the expulsion of demons, inflicting extraordinary punishments, the healing of different diseases, raising the dead, &c.: all these proceeded from God the Father, as the fountain of all goodness and power, and the immediate dispenser of every good and perfect gift.

Verse 7. The manifestation of the Spirit] This is variously understood by the fathers; some of them rendering the word by illumination, others demonstration, and others operation. The apostle's meaning seems to be this: Whatever gifts God has bestowed, or in what various ways soever the Spirit of God may have manifested himself, it is all for the common benefit of the church; God has given no gift to any man for his own private advantage, or exclusive profit.

Verse 8. Word of wisdom] It is very difficult to say what is intended here by the different kinds of gifts mentioned by the apostle: they were probably all supernatural, and were necessary at that time only for the benefit of the church.

By doctrine of wisdom we may understand the mystery of our redemption, in which the wisdom of God was most eminently conspicuous, see chap. ii. 7, 10; and which is called the manifold wisdom of God, Eph. iii. 10.

11 But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, ^a dividing to every man severally ^b as he will.

12 For ^c as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; ^d so also is Christ.

13 For ^e by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, ^f whether we be Jews or ^g Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and ^h have been all made to drink into one Spirit.

14 For the body is not one member, but many.

15 If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

16 And if the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

17 If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

18 But now hath ⁱ God set the members every

By the doctrine of knowledge, we may understand either a knowledge of the types, &c., in the Old Testament; or what are termed mysteries; the calling of the Gentiles, the recalling of the Jews, the mystery of iniquity, of the beast, &c., and especially the mystical sense or meaning of the Old Testament, with all its types, rites, ceremonies, &c. &c.

By faith, ver. 9, we are to understand that miraculous faith by which they could remove mountains, chap. xiii. 2; or a peculiar impulse that came upon the apostles when any difficult matter was to be performed, which inwardly assured them that God's power would assist them in the performance of it. Others think that justifying faith, received by means of gospel teaching, is what is intended.

Gifts of healing simply refers to the power which at particular times the apostles received from the Holy Spirit to cure diseases; a power which was not always resident in them; for Paul could not cure Timothy, nor remove his own thorn in the flesh; because it was given only on extraordinary occasions, though perhaps more generally than many others.

The working of miracles, ver. 10. This seems to refer to the same class as the operations ver. 6, as the words are the same; and to signify those powers by which they were enabled at particular times to work miraculously on others; ejecting demons, inflicting punishments or judgments, as in the cases mentioned under ver. 6.

Prophecy. This seems to import two things: 1st, the predicting future events, such as then particularly concerned the state of the church and the apostles; as Acts xi. 28, xxi. 10, and xxvii. 25, &c. And, 2nd, as implying the faculty of teaching or expounding the scriptures, which is also a common acceptance of the word.

Discerning of spirits. A gift by which the person so privileged could discern a false miracle from a true one; or a pretender to inspiration from him who was made really partaker of the Holy Ghost. It properly extended also to the discernment of false professors from true ones, as appears in Peter, in the case of Ananias and his wife.

Divers kinds of tongues. Different languages, which they had never learned, and which God gave them for the immediate instruction of people of different countries who attended their ministry.

Interpretation of tongues. It was necessary that while one was speaking the deep things of God in a company where several were present who did not understand, though the majority did, there should be a person who could immediately interpret what was said to that part of the congregation that did not understand the language. This power to interpret was also an immediate gift of God's Spirit, and is classed here among the miracles.

Verse 11. But all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit. All these gifts are miraculously bestowed; they cannot be acquired by human art or industry, the different languages excepted; but they were given in such a way, and in such circumstances, as sufficiently proved that they also were miraculous gifts.

one of them in the body, ⁱ as it hath pleased him.

19 And if they were all one member, where were the body?

20 But now are they many members, yet but one body.

21 And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you.

22 Nay much more, those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary:

23 And those members of the body, which we think to be less honourable, upon these we ^j bestow more abundant honour; and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness.

24 For our comely parts have no need: but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honour to that part which lacked:

25 That there should be no ^k schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another.

Verse 12. For as the body is one. Though the human body have many members, and though it be composed of a great variety of parts, yet it is but one entire system; every part and member being necessary to the integrity or completeness of the whole.

So also is Christ. That is, So is the church the body of Christ, being composed of the different officers already mentioned, and especially those enumerated, ver. 28, apostles, prophets, teachers, &c. It cannot be supposed that Christ is composed of many members, &c., and therefore the term church must be understood; unless we suppose, which is not improbable, that the term Christ, is used to express the church, or whole body of Christian believers.

Verse 13. For by one Spirit are we all baptized, &c. As the body of man, though composed of many members, is informed and influenced by one soul; so the Church of Christ, which is his body, though composed of many members, is informed and influenced by one Spirit, the Holy Ghost; actuating and working by this spiritual body, as the human soul does in the body of man.

To drink into one Spirit. We are to understand being made partakers of the gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost agreeably to the words of our Lord, John vii. 37, &c.

Verse 14. For the body is not one member. The mystical body, the church, as well as the natural body, is composed of many members.

Verse 15. If the foot shall say, &c. As all the members of the body are necessarily dependent on each other, and minister to the general support of the system, so is it in the church.

Verse 21. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee. The apostle goes on, with his principal object in view, to show that the gifts and graces with which their different teachers were endowed, were all necessary for their salvation, and should be collectively used; for not one of them was unnecessary, nor could they dispense with the least of them; the body of Christ needed the whole for its nourishment and support.

Verse 22. Those members—which seem to be more feeble. These, and the less honourable and uncomely, mentioned in the next verses, seem to mean the principal viscera, such as the heart, lungs, stomach, and intestinal canal. These, when compared with the arms and limbs, are comparatively weak; and some of them, considered in themselves, uncomely and less honourable; yet these are more essential to life than any of the others.

Verse 25. That there should be no schism in the body. So completely has God tempered the whole together that not the smallest visible part can be removed from the body without not only injuring its proportions, but producing deformity. Hence the members have the same care one for another.

Verse 26. And whether one member suffer. As there is a mutual exertion for the general defence, so there is a mutual sympathy. If the eye, the hand, the foot, &c., be injured, 26 And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it.

27 Now ^a ye are the body of Christ, and ^b members in particular.

28 And ^c God hath set some in the church; first ^d apostles; secondarily ^e prophets; thirdly teachers;

^a Rom. xii. 5. Eph. i. 23. iv. 12. v. 23, 30. Col. i. 24. — ^b Eph. v. 30. — ^c Eph. iv. 11. — ^d Eph. ii. 20. iii. 5. — ^e Acts xiii. 1. Rom. xii. 6. — the whole man grieves; and if by clothing, or any thing else, any particular member or part is adorned, strengthened, or better secured, it gives a general pleasure to the whole man.

Verse 27. Now ye are the body of Christ] As the members in the human body, so the different members of the mystical body of Christ. All are intended by him to have the same relation to each other; to be mutually subservient to each other; to mourn for and to rejoice with each other. He has also made each necessary to the beauty, proportion, strength, and perfection of the whole. Not one is useless; not one unnecessary. Hence no teacher should be exalted above or opposed to another. As the eye cannot say to the hand I have no need of thee, so luminous Apollos cannot say to laborious Paul, I can build up and preserve the church without thee.

Verse 28. First apostles] Persons immediately designated by Christ, and sent by him, to preach the gospel to all mankind.

Secondarily prophets] Persons who, under divine inspiration, predict future events; but the word is often applied to those who preached the gospel.

Thirdly teachers] Persons whose chief business it was to instruct the people in the elements of the Christian religion, and their duty to each other.

Miracles] Persons endued with miraculous gifts, such as those mentioned, Mark xvi. 17, 18; casting out devils, speaking with new tongues, &c.

Gifts of healings.] Such as laying hands upon the sick, and healing them, Mark xvi. 18; which, as being one of the most beneficent miraculous powers, was most frequently conceded.

Helps] Persons who accompanied the apostles, baptized those who were converted by them, and were sent by them to such places as they could not attend to, being otherwise employed.

Governments] Dr. Lightfoot contends that this word does not refer to the power of ruling, but to the case of a person endued with a deep and comprehensive mind, who is profoundly wise and prudent; and he thinks that it implies the same as discernment of spirits, ver. 10, where see the note.

Diversities of tongues.] Kinds of tongues; that is, different kinds. The power to speak, on all necessary occasions, languages which they had not learned.

Verse 31. But covet earnestly] To covet signifies to desire earnestly. This disposition towards heavenly things is highly laudable; towards earthly things, deeply criminal. A man may possess the best of all these gifts, and yet be deficient in what is essentially necessary to his salvation, for he may be without that love or charity which the apostle here calls the more excellent way, and which he proceeds in the next chapter to describe.

CHAPTER XIII.

Charity, or love to God and man, the sum and substance of all true religion; so that without it, the most splendid eloquence, the gift of prophecy, the most profound knowledge, faith by which the most stupendous miracles might be wrought, benevolence the most unbounded, and zeal for the truth, even to martyrdom, would all be unavailing to salvation, 1-3. The description and praise of this grace, 4-7. Its durability; though tongues, prophecies, and knowledge shall cease, yet this shall never fail, 8-10. Description of the present imperfect state of man, 11, 12. Of all the graces of God in man, Charity, or Love, is the greatest, 13.

THOUGH I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not ^a charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.

Verse 1. Though I speak, &c.] At the conclusion of the preceding chapter the apostle promised to show the Corinthians a more excellent way than that in which they were now proceeding. They were so distracted with contentions, divided by parties, and envious of each other's gifts, that unity was nearly destroyed. This was a full proof that love to God and man was wanting; and that without this, their numerous gifts and other graces were nothing in the eyes of God; for it was evident that they did not love one another, which is a proof that they did not love God; and consequently, that they had not true religion. Having, by his advices and directions, corrected many abuses, and having shown them how in outward things they should walk so as to please God, he now shows them the spirit, temper, and disposition in which this should be done, and without which all the rest must be ineffectual.

The tongues of men] All human languages, with all the eloquence of the most accomplished orator.

And of angels] 4. e., Though a man knew the language of the eternal world so well that he could hold conversation with its inhabitants, and find out the secrets of their kingdom. Or, probably, the apostle refers to a notion that was common among the Jews, that there was a language by which angels might be invoked, adjured, collected, and dispersed; and by the means of which many secrets might be found out, and curious arts and sciences known.

[Sounding brass] That is, like a trumpet made of brass; for the latter word is often employed to signify the trumpet, because generally made of this metal. [Or, better still, any piece of resonant brass. The notion of a musical instrument destroys the force of the figure.]

[Tinkling cymbal] "The cymbal was a concave-convex plate of brass, the concave side of which, being struck against another plate of the same kind, produced a tinkling inharmonious sound."

Verse 2. And though I have the gift of prophecy] Though I should have received from God the knowledge of future events, so that I could correctly foretell what is coming to pass in the world and in the church:—

And understand all mysteries] The meaning of all the types and figures in the Old Testament, and all the unexplored secrets of nature; and all knowledge—every human art and science; and though I have all faith—such miraculous faith as would enable me to remove mountains; or had such powerful discernment in sacred things that I could solve the greatest difficulties, see the note Matt. xxi. 21, and have not charity—this love to God and man, as the principle and motive of all my conduct, the characteristics of which are given in the following verses; I am nothing—nothing in myself, nothing in the sight of God, nothing in the church, and good for nothing to mankind.

Verse 3. And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor] This is a proof that charity, in our sense of the word, is not what the apostle means; for surely almsgiving can go no farther than to give up all that a man possesses in order to relieve the wants of others. The word which we translate to feed the poor, signifies to divide into morsels, and put into the mouth; which implies carefulness and tenderness in applying the bounty thus freely given.

And though I give my body to be burned] Some of the foreign critics translate it thus; "If I should deliver up my body to receive a stigma with a hot iron;" which may mean, If I should, in order to redeem another, willingly give up myself to slavery, and receive the mark of my owner, by having my flesh stamped with a hot iron, and have not love, as before specified, it profits me nothing. This gives a good sense; but will the passage bear it? [The idea of branding is always conveyed among Greek writers by another word.]

The charity or love which God recommends, the apostle describes in sixteen particulars, which are the following:—

Verse 4. (1.) Charity suffereth long] Has a long mind; to the end of which neither trials, adversities, persecutions, nor provocations, can reach. The love of God, and of our neighbour for God's sake, is patient towards all men: it suffers all the weakness, ignorance, errors, and infirmities of the children of God; and all the malice and wickedness of the children of this world; and all this, not merely for a time, but long, without end; for it is still a mind or disposition, to the end of which trials, difficulties, &c., can never reach. It also waits God's time of accomplishing his gracious or providential purposes, without murmuring or repining; and bears its own infirmities, as well as those of others, with humble submission to the will of God.

(2.) Is kind] It is tender and compassionate in itself, and they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.

9 ^j For we know in part, and we prophesy in part;

10 But when that which is ^k perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

11 When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I ^l thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things.

12 For ^m now we see through a glass, ⁿ darkly; but then ^o face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.

13 And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the ^p greatest of these is charity.

kind and obliging to others; it is mild, gentle, and benign; and, if called to suffer, inspires the sufferer with the most amiable sweetness, and the most tender affection. It is also submissive to all the dispensations of God; and creates trouble to no one.

(3.) Charity envieth not] Is not grieved because another possesses a greater portion of earthly, intellectual, or spiritual blessings. Those who have this pure love rejoice as much at the happiness, the honour, and comfort of others, as they can do in their own. They are ever willing that others should be preferred before them.

(4.) Charity vaunteth not itself] There is a phrase in our own language that expresses what I think to be the meaning of the original, does not set itself forward—does not desire to be noticed or applauded; but wishes that God may be all in all.

(5.) Is not puffed up] Is not inflated with a sense of its own importance: for it knows it has nothing but what it has received; and that it deserves nothing that it has got. Every man, whose heart is full of the love of God, is full of humility; for there is no man so humble as he whose heart is cleansed from all sin.

Verse 5. (6.) Doth not behave itself unseemly] Love never acts out of its place or character; observes due decorum and good manners; is never rude, bearish, or brutish; and is ever willing to become all things to all men, that it may please them for their good to edification. No ill-bred man, or what is termed rude or unmannerly, is a Christian.

(7.) Seeketh not her own] Love is never satisfied but in the welfare, comfort, and salvation of all. That man is no Christian who is solicitous for his own happiness alone; and cares not how the world goes, so that himself may be comfortable.

(8.) Is not easily provoked] Is not provoked, is not irritated, is not made sour or bitter. How the word easily got into our translation it is hard to say; but, however it got in, it is utterly improper, and has nothing in the original to countenance it. If love is provoked at all, it then ceases to be love; and if it be not easily provoked, this grants, as almost all the commentators say, that in special cases it may be provoked. When the man who possesses this love gives way to provocation, he loses the balance of his soul, and grieves the Spirit of God. In that instant he ceases from loving God with all his soul, mind, and strength; and surely if he get embittered against his neighbour, he does not love him as himself. It is generally said that, though a man may feel himself highly irritated against the sin, he may feel tender concern for the sinner. Irritation of any kind is inconsistent with self-government, and consequently with internal peace and communion with God.

(9.) Thinketh no evil] Never supposes that a good action may have a bad motive; gives every man credit for his profession of religion, uprightness, godly zeal, &c., while nothing is seen in his conduct or in his spirit inconsistent with this profession. The original implies that he does not invent or devise any evil; or, does not reason on any particular act or word so as to infer evil from it; for this would destroy his love to his brother; it would be ruinous to charity and benevolence.

Verse 6. (10.) Rejoiceth not in iniquity] Rejoiceth not in falsehood, but on the contrary, rejoiceth in the truth. At first view, this character seems to say but little in its favour; for who can rejoice in unrighteousness or falsity? But is it not a frequent case that persons, who have received any kind of injury, and have foreborn to avenge themselves, but perhaps have left it to God; when evil falls upon the sinner do console themselves with what appears to them an evidence that God has avenged their quarrels; and do at least secretly rejoice that the man is suffering for his misdeeds? Is not this, in some sort, rejoicing in iniquity? Again: is it not common for interested persons to rejoice in the successes of an unjust and sanguinary war, in the sackage and burning of cities and towns; and is not the joy always in proportion to the slaughter that has been made of the enemy? And do these call themselves Christians? Then we may expect that Moloch and his sub-devils are not so far behind this description of Christians as to render their case utterly desperate. If such Christians can be saved demons need not despair!

(11.) But rejoiceth in the truth] Every thing that is opposite to falsehood and irreligion. Those who are filled with the love of God and man rejoice in the propagation and extension of divine truth—in the spread of true religion, by which alone peace and goodwill can be diffused throughout the earth.

Verse 7. (12) Beareth all things] This word is also variously interpreted; to endure, bear, sustain, cover, conceal, contain. We well know that it is a grand and distinguishing property of love to cover and conceal the faults of another; and it is certainly better to consider the passage in this light than in that which our common version holds out; and this perfectly agrees with what St. Peter says of charity, 1 Pet. iv. 8; It shall cover the multitude of sins; but there is not sufficient evidence that the original will fully bear this sense; and perhaps it would be better to take it in the sense of contain, keep in, as a vessel does liquor. Love conceals every thing that should be concealed; betrays no secret; retains the grace given; and goes on to continual increase.

(13.) Believeth all things] Is ever ready to believe the best of every person, and will credit no evil of any but on the most positive evidence; gladly receives whatever may tend to the advantage of any person whose character may have suffered from obloquy and detraction; or even justly, because of his misconduct.

(14.) Hopeth all things] When there is no place left for believing good of a person, then love comes in with its hope, where it could not work by its faith; and begins immediately to make allowances and excuses, as far as a good conscience can permit; and farther, anticipates the repentance of the transgressor, and his restoration to the good opinion of society and his place in the Church of God, from which he had fallen.

(15.) Endureth all things] Bears up under all persecutions and maltreatment from open enemies and professed friends; bears adversities with an even mind, as it submits with perfect resignation to every dispensation of the providence of God; and never says of any trial, affliction, or insult, this cannot be endured.

Verse 8. (16.) Charity never faileth] This love never falleth off, because it bears, believes, hopes, and endures all things; and while it does so it cannot fail; it is the means of preserving all other graces; indeed, properly speaking, it includes them all; and all receive their perfection from it. Love to God and man can never be dispensed with. It is essential to social and religious life; without it no communion can be kept up with God; nor can any man have a preparation for eternal glory whose heart and soul are not deeply imbued with it.

Prophecies—shall fail] Whether the word imply predicting future events, or teaching the truths of religion to men, all such shall soon be rendered useless.

Tongues—shall cease] The miraculous gift of different languages, that also shall cease, as being unnecessary.

Knowledge—shall vanish away] All human arts and sciences, as being utterly useless in the eternal world, though so highly extolled and useful here.

Verse 9. For we know in part] We have here but little knowledge even of earthly, and much less of heavenly, things. He that knows most knows little in comparison of what is known by angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect. And as we know so very little, how deficient must we be if we have not much love!

We prophesy in part] Even the sublimest prophets have been able to say but little of the heavenly state; and the best preachers have left the Spirit of God very much to supply.

Verse 10. But when that which is perfect] The state of eternal blessedness; then that which is in part—that which is imperfect, shall be done away; the imperfect as well as the probationary state shall cease for ever.

Verse 11. When I was a child] This future state of blessedness is as far beyond the utmost perfection that can be attained in this world, as our adult state of Christianity is above our state of natural infancy, in which we understand only as children understand; speak only a few broken articulate words, and reason only as children reason; having few ideas, little knowledge but what may be called mere instinct, and that much less perfect than the instinct of the brute creation; and having no experience. But when we became men—adults, having gained much knowledge of men and things, we spoke and reasoned more correctly, having left off all the manners and habits of our childhood.

Verse 12. Now we see through a glass, darkly] Of these words some literal explanation is necessary. The word which we translate a glass, literally signifies a mirror or reflector. The word is not used for a glass to look through; nor would such an image have suited with the apostle's design. The word which we render darkly, will help us to the true meaning of the place.

Now—in this life, we see by means of a mirror reflecting the images of heavenly and spiritual things, in an enigmatical manner, invisible things being represented by visible, spiritual things by natural, eternal by temporal; but then—in the eternal world, face to face, everything being seen in itself, and not by means of a representative or similitude.

Now I know in part] Though I have an immediate revelation from God concerning his great design in the dispensation of the gospel, yet there are lengths, breadths, depths, and heights of this design, which even that revelation has not discovered; nor can they be known and apprehended in the present imperfect state. Eternity alone can unfold the whole scheme of the gospel.

As—I am known] In the same manner in which disembodied spirits know and understand.

Verse 13. And now [in this present life] abideth faith, hope, charity] These three supply the place of that direct vision which no human embodied spirit can have; these abide or remain for the present state. Faith, by which we apprehend spiritual blessings, and walk with God. Hope, by which we view and expect eternal blessedness, and pass through things temporal so as not to lose those which are eternal. Charity or love, by which we show forth the virtues of the grace which we receive by faith, in living a life of obedience to God, and of good-will and usefulness to man.

But the greatest of these is charity] Without faith it is impossible to please God, and without it, we cannot partake of the grace of our Lord Jesus; without hope we could not endure, as seeing him who is invisible; nor have any adequate notion of the eternal world; nor bear up under the afflictions and difficulties of life: yet great and useful and indispensably necessary as these are, yet charity or love is greater: Love is the fulfilling of the law; but this is never said of faith or hope.

Some say love is the greatest because it remains throughout eternity, whereas faith and hope proceed only through life; hence we say that there faith is lost in sight, and hope in fruition. But does the apostle say so? Or does any man inspired by God say so? I believe not. Faith and hope will as necessarily enter into eternal glory as love will. The perfections of God are absolute in their nature, infinite in number, and eternal in their duration. However high, glorious, or sublime the soul may be in that eternal state, it will ever, in respect to God, be limited in its powers, and must be improved and expanded by the communications of the Supreme Being. Hence it will have infinite glories in the nature of God to apprehend by faith, to anticipate by hope, and enjoy by love.

I conclude therefore that faith and hope will exist in the eternal world as well as love; and that there, as well as here, it may endlessly be said, The greatest of these is love. With great propriety therefore does the apostle exhort, Follow after love, it being so essential to our comfort and happiness here, and to our beatification in the eternal world; and how necessary faith and hope are to the same end we have already seen.

CHAPTER XIV.

We should earnestly desire spiritual gifts; but prophesying is to be preferred, because it is superior to the gift of tongues, 1, 2. Prophecy defined, 3. How to regulate this supernatural gift of tongues, in teaching for the edification of the church, 4-13. In praying and giving thanks, 14-17. Those who speak with tongues should interpret, that others may be edified, 18-22. What benefit may accrue from this in the public assemblies, 23-28. How the prophets or teachers should act in the Church, 29-33. Women should keep silence in the church, 34, 35. All should be humble, and everything should be done in love, 36-40.

FOLLOW after charity, and ^a desire spiritual gifts; but ^b rather that ye may prophesy.

2 For he that ^c speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not unto men, but unto God: for no man ^d understandeth him; howbeit in the spirit he speaketh mysteries.

3 But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort.

4 He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church.

5 I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied; for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying.

^a Ch. xii. 31.—^b Numb. xi. 25, 29.—^c Acts ii. 4. x. 46.—^d Gr. heareth. Acts xxii. 9.

Verse 1. Follow after charity] Most earnestly labour to be put in possession of that love which beareth, believeth, hopeth, and endureth all things. This clause belongs to the preceding chapter.

Desire spiritual gifts] Ye are very intent in getting those splendid gifts which may add to your worldly consequence, and please your carnal minds; but labour rather to get the gifts of God's Spirit, by which ye may grow in grace, and be useful to others; and particularly desire that ye may prophesy—that ye may be able to teach and instruct others in the things of their salvation.

Verse 2. For he that speaketh in an unknown tongue] This chapter is crowded with difficulties. It is not likely that the Holy Spirit should, in the church, suddenly inspire a man with the knowledge of some foreign language, which none in the church understood but himself; and lead him to treat the mysteries of Christianity in that language, though none in the place could profit by his teaching.

Dr. Lightfoot's mode of reconciling these difficulties is the most likely I have met with. He supposes that by the unknown tongue the Hebrew is meant, and that God restored the true knowledge of this language when he gave the apostles the gift of tongues. [Dr. Clarke has evidently misapprehended the bearings of the apostle's argument. Had St. Paul implied the Hebrew language by the word tongue, he could not have said, "he that speaketh (in it) speaketh not unto men," for Hebrew was understood by large numbers of Jews. The argument of the apostle is this:—that the Corinthian Christians should be more anxious to prophesy, i.e., to preach, than to speak with "the tongue," which was a sign, and therefore supernatural.]

Speaketh not unto men, but unto God] None present understanding the language, God alone knowing the truth and import of what he says.

In the spirit he speaketh mysteries.] Though his own mind apprehends the mysteries contained in the words which he reads or utters; but if, by the Spirit, we understand the Spirit of God, it only shows that it is by that Spirit that he is enabled to speak and apprehend these mysteries.

Verse 3. But he that prophesieth] The person who has the gift of teaching is much more useful to the church than he is who has only the gift of tongues, because he speaks to the profit of men, viz., to their edification, by the Scriptures he expounds; to their exhortation, by what he teaches; and to their comfort by his revelation.

Verse 4. He that speaketh in an unknown tongue] In 6 Now, brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by ^e revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine?

7 And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the ^f sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?

8 For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

9 So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words ^g easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? for ye shall speak into the air.

10 There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification.

11 Therefore if I know not the meaning of the ^e Ver. 26.—^f Or, tunes.—^g Gr. significant.

the Hebrew for instance, the knowledge of the depth and power of which he has got by a divine revelation, edifieth himself by that knowledge.

But he that prophesieth] Has the gift of preaching. Edifieth the church.] Speaketh unto men to edification, exhortation, and comfort, ver. 3.

Verse 5. I would that ye all spake with tongues] The word does not so much imply a wish or desire, as a command or permission. As if he had said: I do not restrain you to prophesying or teaching, though I prefer that; but I give you full permission to speak in Hebrew whenever it is proper, and when one is present who can interpret for the edification of the church, provided yourselves have not that gift, though you understand the language. [This is clearly foreign to the sense of the original.]

Greater is he that prophesieth] A useful, zealous preacher, though unskilled in learned languages, is much greater in the sight of God, and in the eye of sound common sense, than he who has the gift of those learned tongues; except he interpret: and we seldom find great scholars good preachers.

Verse 6. Speaking with tongues] Without interpreting. What shall I profit you?] i.e., I shall not profit you.

Except I shall speak to you either by revelation] Of some secret thing; or by knowledge, of some mystery; or by prophesying, foretelling some future event; or by doctrine, instructing you what to believe and practise.

Verse 7. And even things without life] The speech of one who speaks in an unknown tongue, but does not interpret, tends no more to edification than those discordant and unmeaning sounds do to pleasure and delight.

Verse 8. If the trumpet give an uncertain sound] If, when the soldier should prepare himself for the battle, the trumpet should give a different sound to that which is ordinarily used on such occasions, the soldier is not informed of what he should do, and therefore does not arm himself.

Verse 9. Likewise ye] If ye do not speak in the church so as to be understood, your labour is useless; ye shall speak into the air—your speech will be lost and dissipated in the air, without conveying any meaning to any person; there will be a noise or sound, but nothing else.

Verse 10. There are, it may be] For example. So many kinds of voices] So many different languages, each of which has its distinct articulation, pronunciation, emphasis, and meaning; or there may be so many different nations, each possessing a different language, &c.

voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian; and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me.

12 Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous * of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church.

13 Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue, pray that he may interpret.

14 For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful.

15 What is it then? I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: ^b I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing ^c with the understanding also.

16 Else, when thou shalt bless with the spirit, how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen ^d at thy giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest?

17 For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified.

18 I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all:

19 Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, than by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue.

* Gr. of spirits.—^b Eph. v. 19. Col. iii. 16.—^c 1'sa. xlvii. 7.—^d Ch. xi. 24.—^e Ps. cxxxi. 2. Matt. xi. 25. xviii. 3. xix. 14. Rom. xvi. 19. Ch. iii. 1. Eph. iv. 14. Heb. v. 12, 13.—^f Matt. xviii. 3. 1 Pet.

Verse 11. If I know not the meaning of the voice] The power and signification of the language.

I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian] I shall appear to him, and he to me, as a person who has no distinct and articulate sounds which can convey any kind of meaning.

Verse 12. Forasmuch as ye are zealous] Seeing ye affect so much to have spiritual gifts, seek that ye may get those by which ye may excel in edifying the church.

Verse 14. For if I pray in an unknown tongue] If my prayers are composed of sentences and sayings taken out of the prophets, &c., and in their own language—my spirit prayeth, my heart is engaged in the work, and my prayers answer all the purpose of prayers to myself; but my understanding is unfruitful to all others, because they do not understand my prayers, and I either do not or cannot interpret them.

Verse 15. I will pray with the spirit] I will endeavour to have all my prayers influenced and guided by the Spirit of God; and to have my own heart deeply affected in and by the work.

And I will pray with the understanding also] I will endeavour so to pray that others may understand me, and thus be edified and improved by my prayers.

I will sing with the spirit] It does appear that singing psalms or spiritual hymns was one thing that was implied in what is termed prophesying in the Old Testament, as is evident from 1 Sam. x. 5, 6, 10, &c. And when this came through an immediate afflatus or inspiration of God, there is no doubt that it was exceedingly edifying; and must have served greatly to improve and excite the devotional spirit of all that were present.

Verse 16. He that occupieth the room of the unlearned] One who is not acquainted with the language in which you speak, sing, or pray.

Say Amen] Give his assent and ratification to what he does not understand. It was very frequent in primitive times to express their approbation in the public assemblies by Amen. This practice, soberly and piously conducted, might still be of great use in the Church of Christ.

Verse 17. Thou verily givest thanks well] Because he felt gratitude, and, from a sense of his obligation, gave praise to God; but because this was in an unknown tongue, those who heard him received no edification.

Verse 18. I speak with tongues more than ye all] He understood more languages than any of them did; and this was indispensably necessary, as he was the apostle of the Gentiles in general, and had to preach to different provinces where different dialects, if not languages, were used.

20 Brethren, * be not children in understanding: howbeit in malice ^b be ye children; but in understanding be ^c men.

21 ^a In the law it is ^a written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord.

22 Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe.

23 If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned or unbelievers, ^d will they not say that ye are mad?

24 But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all:

25 And thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so, falling down on his face, he will worship God, and report ^e that God is in you of a truth.

26 How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, ^f hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an

Verse 19. Yet in the church] As the grand object of public worship is the edification of those who attend, five words, spoken so as to convey edification, were of much more consequence than ten thousand which, not being understood, could convey none.

Verse 20. Be not children in understanding] The apostle's meaning is this; Brethren, be not as little children, just beginning to go to school, in order to learn the first elements of their mother tongue, and with an understanding only sufficient to apprehend those elements; howbeit, in wickedness, be ye as infants, who neither speak, do, nor purpose evil. But in understanding be ye perfect men, whose vigour of body and energy of mind show a complete growth, and a well cultivated understanding.

Verse 21. In the law it is written] But the passage quoted is in Isa. xxviii. 11. Here is no contradiction, for the term torah, LAW, was frequently used by the Jews to express the whole scriptures, law, prophets, and hagiographa; and they used it to distinguish these sacred writings from the words of the scribes.

With men of other tongues] "With the tongues of foreigners and with the lips of foreigners will I speak to this people; and yet, for all that, will they not hear me, saith the Lord."

Verse 22. Wherefore tongues are for a sign] The miraculous gift of tongues was never designed for the benefit of those who have already believed, but for the instruction of unbelievers, that they might see from such a miracle that this is the work of God; and so embrace the gospel.

Prophesying] Teaching the things of God in a known language is of infinitely more consequence than speaking in all the foreign tongues in the universe.

Verse 23. Will they not say that ye are mad?] So they well might, finding a whole assembly of people talking languages which those who had most need of instruction could not understand.

Verse 25. And thus are the secrets of his heart] As these, who were the prophets or teachers, had often the discernment of spirits, they were able in certain cases, and probably very frequently, to tell a man the secrets of his own heart; and, where this was not directly the case, God often led his ministers to speak those things that were suitable to the case before them, though they themselves had no particular design. [There is no need for supposing any exercise of spiritual discernment. The mere force of truth, plainly preached, would bring about conviction.]

Verse 26. How is it—every one of you hath a psalm, &c.] It seems likely that, when the whole church came together, among whom there were many persons with extraordinary interpretation. * Let all things be done unto edifying.

27 If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret.

28 But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God.

29 Let the prophets speak two or three, and ^b let the other judge.

30 If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, ^c let the first hold his peace.

31 For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted.

32 And ^d the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets.

33 For God is not the author of ^e confusion, but of peace, ^f as in all churches of the saints.

gifts, each of them wished to put himself forward, and occupy the time and attention of the congregation: hence confusion must necessarily take place, and perhaps not a little contention. This was contrary to that edifying which was the intention of these gifts.

Verse 27. Let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course.] Let only two or three in one assembly act in this way, that too much time may not be taken up with one exercise; and let this be done by course, the one after the other, that two may not be speaking at the same time: and let one interpret for all that shall thus speak.

Verse 28. But if there be no interpreter.] If there be none present who can give the proper sense of this reading and speaking, then let him keep silence, and not occupy the time of the church, by speaking in a language which only himself can understand.

Verse 29. Let the prophets.] Those who have the gift of speaking to men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort, ver. 3.

And let the other judge.] The other prophets, or qualified persons, judge of the propriety of what had been spoken; or let them discern how the revelation under the new Covenant confirmed and illustrated the revelation granted under the Old Testament. It appears to have been taken for granted, that a man might pretend to this spirit of prophecy who was not sent of God; and therefore it was the duty of the accredited teachers to examine whether what he spoke was according to truth, and the analogy of faith.

Verse 30. Be revealed to another that sitteth by.] If such a person could say, I have just received a particular revelation from God, then let him have the liberty immediately to speak it; as it might possibly relate to the circumstances of that time and place.

Verse 31. For ye may all prophesy one by one.] The gifts which God grants are given for the purpose of edification; but there can be no edification where there is confusion; therefore let them speak one by one.

Verse 32. And the spirits of the prophets, &c.] Let no one interrupt another; and let all be ready to prefer others before themselves; and let each feel a spirit of subjection to his brethren. God grants no ungovernable gifts.

Verse 33. For God is not the author of confusion.] Let not the persons, who act in the congregation in this disorderly manner, say that they are under the influence of God; for he is not the author of confusion; but two, three, or more, praying or teaching in the same place, at the same time, is confusion. How often is a work of God marred and discredited by the folly of men! for nature will always, and Satan too, mingle themselves as far as they can in the genuine work of the Spirit, in order to discredit and destroy it.

Verse 34. Let your women keep silence in the churches.] This was a Jewish ordinance; women were not permitted to teach in the assemblies, or even to ask questions.

This was their condition till the time of the gospel, when, according to the prediction of Joel, the Spirit of God was to be poured out on the women as well as the men, that they 34 * Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but ^a they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the ^b law.

35 And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church.

36 What! came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only?

37 ^c If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord.

38 But if any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant.

39 Wherefore, brethren, ^d covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues.

40 ^e Let all things be done decently and in order.

ii. 5. 1 Pet. iii. 1.—^a Gen. iii. 16.—^b 2 Cor. x. 7. 1 John iv. 6.—^c Ch. xii. 31. 1 Thess. v. 20.—^d Ver. 33.

might prophesy, i.e., teach. And that they did prophesy or teach is evident from what the apostle says, chap. xi. 5, where he lays down rules to regulate this part of their conduct while ministering in the church.

But does not what the apostle says here contradict that statement, and show that the words in chap. xi. should be understood in another sense? For, here it is expressly said that they should keep silence in the church; for it was not permitted to a woman to speak. Both places seem perfectly consistent. It is evident from the context that the apostle refers here to asking questions, and what we call dictating in the assemblies. It was permitted to any man to ask questions, to object, altercate, attempt to refute, &c., in the synagogue; but this liberty was not allowed to any woman; because it was perfectly indecorous for women to be contending with men in public assemblies, on points of doctrine, cases of conscience, &c. But this by no means intimated that when a woman received any particular influence from God to enable her to teach, that she was not to obey that influence; on the contrary, she was to obey it, and the apostle lays down directions in chap. xi. for regulating her personal appearance when thus employed.

Verse 35. For it is a shame for women to speak in the church.] The apostle refers to irregular conduct, such conduct as proved that they were not under obedience, ver. 34.

Verse 36. Came the word of God out from you? Was it from you that other churches received the gospel? Are you the mother church? that you should have rules, and orders, and customs, different from all others; and set yourselves up for a model to be copied by all the churches of Christ?

Or came it unto you only? Are you the only church of God? Are there not many others founded before you that have no such customs, and permit no such disorders?

Verse 37. If any man think himself to be a prophet, &c.] He who is really a spiritual man, under the influence of the Spirit of God, and capable of teaching the Divine will, will acknowledge that what I now say is from the same Spirit; and that, the things which I now write are the commandments of God, and must be obeyed on pain of his displeasure.

Verse 38. But if any man be ignorant.] If he affect to be so, or pretend that he is ignorant; let him be ignorant—let him be so at his peril. [The Apostle does not so much declare a penalty, as give expression to despair of instructing a man wilfully ignorant.]

Verse 39. Covet to prophesy.] Let it be your endeavour and prayer to be able to teach the way of God to the ignorant; this is the most valuable, because the most useful gift of the Spirit.

And forbid not to speak with tongues.] Let every gift have its own place and operation; let none envy another; nor prevent him from doing that part of the work to which God, by giving the qualification, has evidently called him.

Verse 40. Let all things be done decently.] In their proper forms; with becoming reverence, according to their dignity and importance. Everything in the Church of God should be conducted with gravity and composure, suitable to the importance of the things, the infinite dignity of the object of worship, and the necessity of the souls in behalf of which those religious ordinances are instituted.

And in order.] Everything in its place, everything in its time, and everything suitably.

CHAPTER XV.

The gospel which the apostle preached to the Corinthians, viz., that Christ died for our sins, and rose again the third day, 1-4. The witnesses of his resurrection, Peter, James, and more than five hundred brethren, 5-7. Lastly, Paul himself saw him, and was called by him to the apostleship, 8-11. Objections against the resurrection of the dead answered, 12-34. The manner in which this great work shall be performed, 35-49. The astonishing events that shall take place in the last day, 50-57. The use we should make of this doctrine, 58.

MOREOVER, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel * which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and ^b wherein ye stand:

2 ^c By which also ye are saved, if ye ^d keep in memory * what I preached unto you, unless ^e ye have believed in vain.

3 For I ^f delivered unto you first of all that ^h which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins ⁱ according to the scriptures:

4 And that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day ^j according to the scriptures:

* Gal. i. 11.—^a Rom. v. 2.—^b Rom. i. 16. Ch. i. 21.—^c Or, hold fast.—^d Gr. by what speech.—^e Gal. iii. 4.—^f Ch. xi. 2, 23.—^g Gal. i. 12.—^h Ps. xxii. 15, &c. Isa. liii. 5, 6, &c. Dan. ix. 26. It appears from this chapter that there were some false apostles at Corinth, who denied the resurrection, see verse 12; in consequence of which St. Paul discusses three questions in this chapter:

1. Whether there be a resurrection of the dead? ver. 1-35.
2. What will be the nature of the resurrection bodies? 35-51.
3. What should become of those who should be found alive in the day of judgment? 51-57.

Verse 1. The gospel which I preached unto you.] This gospel is contained in Christ dying for our sins, being buried, and rising again the third day.

Verse 2. By which also ye are saved.] That is, ye are now in a salvable state; and are saved from your Gentilism, and from your former sins.

If ye keep in memory.] Your future salvation, or being brought finally to glory, will now depend on your faithfulness to the grace that ye have received.

Verse 3. For I delivered unto you first of all.] As the chief things, or matters of the greatest importance; fundamental truths.

That which I—received.] By revelations from God himself, and not from man.

That Christ died for our sins.] The death of Jesus Christ, as a vicarious sacrifice for sin, is among the things that are of chief importance, and is essential to the gospel scheme of salvation.

According to the scriptures.] It is not said anywhere in the scriptures, in express terms, that Christ should rise on the third day; but it is fully implied in his types, as in the case of Jonah, who came out of the belly of the fish on the third day; but particularly in the case of Isaac, who was a very expressive type of Christ; for as his being brought to the mount Moriah, bound, and laid on the wood, in order to be sacrificed, pointed out the death of Christ; so his being brought alive on the third day from the mount was a figure of Christ's resurrection.

5 ^k And that he was seen of Cephas, then ^l of the twelve:

6 After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen sleep.

7 After that, he was seen of James, then ^m of all the apostles.

8 ⁿ And last of all he was seen of me also, as of ^o one born out of due time.

9 For I am ^p the least of the apostles, that am not meet to be called an apostle, because ^q I persecuted the Church of God.

Verse 5. That he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve.] This refers to the journey to Emmaus, Luke xxiv. 13 and 34; and to what is related, Mark xvi. 14.

Then of the twelve.] Instead of twelve, eleven is the reading of several MSS. Versions, and Fathers. Perhaps the term twelve is used here merely to point out the society of the apostles, who, though at this time they were only eleven, were still called the twelve, because this was their original number, and a number which was afterwards filled up.

Verse 6. Above five hundred brethren at once.] This was probably in Galilee, where our Lord had many disciples. See Matt. xxviii. 16.

Verse 7. After that, he was seen of James.] But where, and on what occasion, we are not told; nor indeed do we know which James is intended. But one thing is sufficiently evident, from what is here said, that this James, of whom the apostle speaks, was still alive; for the apostle's manner of speaking justifies this conclusion.

Then of all the apostles.] Including, not only the eleven, but, as some suppose, the seventy-two disciples.

Verse 8. And last of all—of me also.] It seems that it was essential to the character of a primitive apostle that he had seen and conversed with Christ; and it is evident, from the history of Saul's conversion, Acts ix. 4-7, that Jesus Christ did appear to him; and he pleaded this ever after as a proof of his call to the apostleship.

As of one born out of due time.] The apostle considers himself as coming after the time in which Jesus Christ personally conversed with his disciples; and that, therefore, to see him at all, he must see him in this extraordinary way.

Verse 9. I am the least of the apostles.] This was literally true in reference to his being chosen last, and chosen not in the number of the twelve, but as an extra apostle.

Am not meet to be called an apostle.] None of the twelve had ever persecuted Christ, nor withstood his doctrine: Saul of Tarsus had been, before his conversion, a grievous perse-

10 But, *by the grace of God I am what I am : and his grace which was bestowed upon me was not in vain ; but ^b I laboured more abundantly than they all : * yet not I, but the grace of God which was with me.

11 Therefore whether if were I or they, so we preach, and so ye believed.

12 Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead ?

13 But if there be no resurrection of the dead, ^d then is Christ not risen :

14 And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain.

cutor ; and therefore he says, I am not proper to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the Church of God, i.e., of Christ, which none of the apostles ever did.

Verse 10. But, by the grace of God I am what I am] God, by his mere grace and good will, has called me to be an apostle, and has denominated me such.

And his grace, &c.] Nor have I been unfaithful to the divine call ; I used the grace which he gave me ; and when my labours, travels, and sufferings are considered, it will be evident that I have laboured more abundantly than the whole twelve.

Yet not I, but the grace of God] It was not through my own power or wisdom that I performed these things, but through the divine influence which accompanied me.

Verse 11. Whether it were I or they] All the apostles of Christ agree in the same doctrines ; we all preach one and the same thing ; and, as we preached, so ye believed ; having received from us the true apostolical faith, that Jesus died for our sins, and rose again for our justification ; and that his resurrection is the pledge and proof of ours.

Verse 12. Now if Christ be preached, &c.] That there was some false teacher, or teachers, among them, who was endeavouring to incorporate Mosaic rites and ceremonies with the Christian doctrines, and even to blend Sadduceism with the whole, appears pretty evident. To confute this mongrel Christian, and overturn his bad doctrine, the apostle writes this chapter.

Verse 13. If there be no resurrection of the dead] As Christ was partaker of the same flesh and blood with us, and he promised to raise mankind from the dead through his resurrection, if the dead rise not then Christ has had no resurrection.

Verse 14. Then is our preaching vain] Our whole doctrine is useless, nugatory, and false.

And your faith is also vain.] Your belief of a false doctrine must necessarily be to you unprofitable.

Verse 15. False witnesses] As having testified the fact of Christ's resurrection, as a matter which ourselves had witnessed, when we knew that we bore testimony to a falsehood.

Verse 17. Ye are yet in your sins.] If he has not been raised from the dead, there is a presumption that he has been put to death justly ; and, if so, consequently he has made no atonement ; and ye are yet in your sins—under the power, guilt, and condemnation of them. All this reasoning of the apostle goes to prove that at Corinth, even among those false teachers, the innocency of our Lord was allowed, and the reality of his resurrection not questioned.

Verse 18. They also which are fallen asleep] All those who, either by martyrdom or natural death, have departed in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, are perished ; their hope was without foundation, and their faith had not reason and truth for its object.

Verse 19. If in this life only we have hope] It would be better to translate and point this verse as follows : And, if in this life we have hoped in Christ only, we are more to be pitied than all men. If, in this life, we have no other hope and confidence but in Christ (and if he be still dead, and not yet risen), we are more to be pitied than any other men ; we are sadly deceived ; we have denied ourselves, and been denied by others ; have mortified ourselves, and been persecuted by our fellow-creatures on account of our belief and hope in 15 Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God : because * we have testified of God that he raised up Christ : whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not.

16 For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised :

17 And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain ; * ye are yet in your sins.

18 Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.

19 * If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable.

20 But now ^b is Christ risen from the dead, and become ^c the first-fruits of them that slept.

† 2 Tim. iii. 12.—^b 1 Pet. i. 3.—^c Acts xxvi. 23. Ver. 23. Col. i. 18. Rev. i. 5.

One who is not existing, and therefore can neither succour us here, nor reward us hereafter.

Verse 20. But now is Christ risen] On the contrary, Christ is raised from the dead, and is become the first fruits of them that slept. His resurrection has been demonstrated, and our resurrection necessarily follows ; as sure as the first-fruits are the proof that there is a harvest, so surely the resurrection of Christ is a proof of ours.

Verse 21. For since by man came death] Mortality came by Adam, immortality by Christ ; so sure as all have been subjected to natural death by Adam, so sure shall all be raised again by Christ Jesus.

Verse 23. But every man in his own order] The apostle mentions three orders here : 1. Christ, who arose from the dead by his own power. 2. Them that are Christ's ; all his apostles, martyrs, confessors, and faithful followers. 3. Then cometh the end, when the whole mass shall be raised. Whether this order be exactly what the apostle intends, I shall not assert. Of the first, Christ's own resurrection, there can be no question. The second, the resurrection of his followers, before that of the common dead, is thought by some very reasonable ; but it seems contrary to ver. 52, in which all the dead are said to rise in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. And thirdly, that all the other mass of mankind should be raised last, just to come forward and receive their doom, is equally reasonable ; but it is apparently inconsistent with the manner in which God chooses to act, see ver. 53. Some think that by them that are Christ's at his coming, we are to understand Christ's coming to reign on earth a thousand years with his saints, previously to the general judgment ; but I must confess I find nothing in the sacred writings distinctly enough marked to support this opinion of the Millennium, or thousand years' reign ; nor can I conceive any important end that can be answered by this procedure.

Verse 24. When he shall have delivered up the kingdom] The mediatorial kingdom, which comprehends all the displays of his grace in saving sinners and all his spiritual influence in governing the Church.

All rule, and all authority and power.] As the apostle is here speaking of the end of the present system of the world, the rule, authority, and power, may refer to all earthly governments, emperors, kings, princes, &c. ; though angels, principalities, and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and all spiritual wickedness in high places, may be also intended.

Verse 25. For he must reign, &c.] Therefore the kingdom cannot be given up till all rule and government be cast down. So that while the world lasts, Jesus, as the Messiah and Mediator, must reign ; and all human beings are properly his subjects, are under his government, and are accountable to him.

Verse 26. The last enemy] Death, shall be destroyed ; shall be counter-worked, subverted, and finally overturned. But death cannot be destroyed by their being simply no farther death ; death can only be destroyed and annihilated by a general resurrection ; if there be no general resurrection, it is most evident that death will still retain his empire. Therefore, the fact that death shall be destroyed, assures the fact that there shall be a general resurrection ; and this is a proof, also, that after the resurrection there shall be no more death.

Verse 27. For he hath put all things under his feet.] The 49 And ^aas we have borne the image of the earthy, ^bwe shall also bear the image of the heavenly.

50 Now this I say, brethren, that ^cflesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption.

51 Behold, I shew you a mystery: ^dWe shall not all sleep, ^ebut we shall all be changed, 52 In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: ^ffor the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed.

53 For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and ^gthis mortal must put on immortality.

54 So, when this corruptible shall have put on

It is raised in incorruption] Being no more subject to corruption, dissolution, and death.

Verse 43. It is sown in dishonour] Being now stripped of all the glory it had as a machine, fearfully and wonderfully made by the hands of God; and also consigned to death and destruction because of sin. This is the most dishonourable circumstance.

It is raised in glory] It is raised a glorious body, because immortal, and for ever redeemed from the empire of death.

It is sown in weakness] The principles of dissolution, corruption, and decay, have prevailed over it; disease undermined it; and death made it his prey.

It is raised in power] To be no more liable to weakness through labour; decay, by age; wasting, by disease; and dissolution, by death.

Verse 44. It is sown a natural body] An animal body, having a multiplicity of solids and fluids of different kinds, with different functions.

It is raised a spiritual body.] One perfect in all its parts, no longer dependant on natural productions for its support, being built up on indestructible principles, and existing in a region where there shall be no more death; no more causes of decay leading to dissolution; and consequently, no more necessity for food, nutrition, &c.

Verse 45. The first man Adam was made a living soul] This is found, Gen. ii. 7, in the words nismath chayim, the breath of lives; which the apostle translates, a living soul.

The last Adam—a quickening spirit.] Some contend that the first Adam and the last Adam mean the same person in two different states: the first man with the body of his creation; the same person with the body of his resurrection. See on ver. 49.

Verse 46. That was not first which is spiritual] The natural or animal body described, ver. 44, was the first; it was the body with which Adam was created. The spiritual body is the last, and is that with which the soul is to be clothed in the resurrection.

Verse 47. The first man is of the earth] That is: Adam's body was made out of the dust of the earth; and hence the apostle says he was of the dust; for the body was made dust from the ground, Gen. ii. 7.

The second man is—from heaven.] Heavenly, as some good MSS. and Versions read. I conceive both these clauses to relate to man; and to point out the difference between the animal body and the spiritual body, or between the bodies which we now have and the bodies which we shall have in the resurrection. But can this be the meaning of the clause, the second man is the Lord from heaven? Some of the most eminent ancient and modern critics leave out the word Lord, and the Tertullian says it was put in by the heretic Marcion. I do think that it is not legitimate in this place. The first man and the second man of this verse are the same as the first Adam and the second Adam of ver. 45, and it is not clear that Christ is meant in either place.

Verse 48. As is the earthy, &c.] As Adam was, who was formed from the earth, so are all his descendants; frail, decaying, and subject to death.

As is the heavenly] As is the heavenly state of Adam and all glorified beings, so shall be the state of all those who, at the resurrection, are found fit for glory.

Verse 49. And as we have borne the image of the earthy] As being descendants from Adam we have all been born in incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, ^hDeath is swallowed up in victory.

55 ⁱO death, where is thy sting? ^jO grave, where is thy victory?

56 The sting of death is sin; and ^kthe strength of sin is the law.

57 ^lBut thanks be to God, which giveth us ^mthe victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

58 ⁿTherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord; forasmuch as ye know ^othat your labour is not in vain in the Lord.

his likeness, and subject to the same kind of corruption, disgrace, and death; we shall also be raised to a life immortal, such as he now enjoys in the kingdom of God. This interpretation proceeds on the ground that what is here spoken belongs to Adam in his twofold state, viz., of mortality and immortality; of disgrace and honour; of earth and heaven.

But by many commentators the words are understood to refer to Adam and Christ, in ver. 45, 47, 48, and 49. By these, Christ is called the second Adam, the quickening Spirit, the second man, and the heavenly; whose image of righteousness and true holiness we are to bear.

But when I consider how all these terms are used and applied in the Jewish writings, it appears to me that as this was not their import among them, so it was not the design of Paul; and it would be very difficult to find any place where Jesus Christ is called the second Adam in either Old or New Testament. [This interpretation meets with little favour from expositors in general.]

Verse 50. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom] This is a Hebrew periphrasis for man, and man in his present state of infirmity and decay. Man, in his present state, cannot inherit the kingdom of God; his nature is not suited to that place; he could not, in his present weak state, endure an exceeding great and eternal weight of glory. Therefore, it is necessary that he should die, or be changed; that he should have a celestial body suited to the celestial state.

Verse 51. I shew you a mystery] That is, a thing which you have never known before. But what is this mystery? Why, that we shall not all sleep; we shall not all die; but we shall all be changed: of this the Jews had not distinct notions. For, as flesh and blood cannot inherit glory, and all shall not be found dead at the day of judgment, then all must be changed—undergo such a change that their bodies may become spiritual, like the bodies of those who shall be raised from the dead.

Verse 52. In a moment] In an atom; that is, an indivisible point of time. In the twinkling of an eye; as soon as a man can wink; which expressions show that this mighty work is to be done by the almighty power of God, as he does all his works: He calls, and it is done. The resurrection of all the dead, from the foundation of the world to that time, and the change of all the living then upon earth, shall be the work of a single moment.

At the last trump] This, as well as all the rest of the peculiar phraseology of this chapter, is merely Jewish, and we must go to the Jewish writers to know what is intended. [But there is no allusion here to the seven trumpets, which, according to the Rabbins, were to usher in the seven stages of the Resurrection.]

For the trumpet shall sound] See Zech. ix. 14; Matt. xxiv. 31; John v. 25; 1 Thess. iv. 16, in which latter place, the apostle treats this subject among the Thessalonians, as he does here among the Corinthians.

Shall be raised incorruptible] Fully clothed with a new body, to die no more.

We shall be changed.] That is, those who shall then be found alive.

Verse 53. For this corruptible, &c.] Because flesh and blood cannot inherit glory; therefore, there must be a refinement by death, or a change without it.

Verse 54. Death is swallowed up in victory.] These words are a quotation from Isa. xxv. 8 : He (God) hath swallowed up death in victory ; or, for ever.

Death is here personified and represented as a devouring being, swallowing up all the generations of men ; and by the resurrection of the body and the destruction of the empire of death, God is represented as swallowing him up ; or that eternity gulps him down : so that he is endlessly lost and absorbed in its illimitable waste.

Verse 55. O death, where is thy sting ? O grave, where is thy victory ? These words are generally supposed to be taken from Hos. xiii. 14, where the Hebrew may be read : O death ! I will be thy plagues ; O grave ! I will be thy destruction ; and which the Septuagint translates very nearly as the apostle : O death, where is thy revenge, or judicial process ? O grave, where is thy sting ?

Hades, which we here translate grave, is generally understood to be the place of separate spirits. See the note on Matt. xi. 23.

Verse 56. The sting of death is sin.] The apostle explains himself particularly here : Death could not have entered into the world if sin had not entered first ; it was sin that not only introduced death, but has armed him with all his destroying force ; the goad or dagger of death is sin ; by this both body and soul are slain.

The strength of sin is the law.] The law of God forbids all transgression, and sentences those who commit it to temporal and eternal death. Sin has its controlling and binding power from the law. The law curses the transgressor, and provides no help for him ; and if nothing else intervene, he must, through it, continue ever under the empire of death.

Verse 57. But thanks be to God] What the law could not do because it is law (and law cannot provide pardon), is done by the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ : he has died to slay death ; he has risen again to bring mankind from under the empire of Hades. All this he has done through his mere unmerited mercy ; and eternal thanks are due to God for this unspeakable gift. He has given us the victory over sin, Satan, death, the grave, and hell.

Verse 58. Be ye stedfast] Be settled ; confide in the truth of this doctrine of the resurrection, and everything that pertains to it, as confidently as a man sits down on a seat, which he knows to be solid, firm, and safe ; and on which he has often sat.

Unmoveable] Let nothing shake your faith ; let nothing move you away from this hope of the gospel which is given unto you. What I tell you I receive from God ; your false teachers cannot say so : in a declaration of God you may unshakenly confide.

Your labour is not in vain] Your labour in the Lord is not in vain ; you must not only work, but you must labour—put forth all your strength ; and you must work and labour in the Lord—under his direction, and by his influence ; for without him ye can do nothing. And this labour cannot be in vain ; you shall have a resurrection unto eternal life : not because you have laboured, but because Christ died, and gave you grace to be faithful.

CHAPTER XVI.

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to make a contribution for the relief of the poor Christians at Jerusalem ; and directs to the best mode of doing it, 1-4. Promises to pay them a visit after Pentecost, 5-9. Gives directions about the treatment of Timothy and Apollos, 10-12. And concerning watchfulness, &c., 13, 14. Commends the house of Stephanas, and expresses his satisfaction at the visit paid him by Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, 15-18. Sends the salutations of different persons, 19, 21. Shows the awful state of those who were enemies to Christ, 22. And concludes the epistle with the apostolical benediction, 23, 24.

NOW concerning * the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye.

2 ^b Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

3 And when I come, ^c whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your ^d liberality unto Jerusalem.

* Acts xi. 29, xxiv. 17. Rom. xv. 26. 2 Cor. viii. 4. ix. 1, 12. Gal. ii. 10.—^a Acts xx. 7. Rev. i. 10.—^b 2 Cor. viii. 19.—^c Gr. gify.

Verse 1. The collection for the saints] The Christians living at Jerusalem, we may naturally suppose, were greatly straitened ; as the enmity of their countrymen to the gospel of Christ led them to treat those who professed it with cruelty, and spoil them of their goods : and the apostle hereby teaches that it was the duty of one Christian congregation to help another when in distress.

Verse 2. Upon the first day of the week] We learn from this that the weekly contribution could not be always the same, as each man was to lay by as God had prospered him : now some weeks he would gain more ; others, less. The first day of the week, which is the Christian Sabbath, was the day on which their principal religious meetings were held in Corinth and the churches of Galatia ; and, consequently, in all other places where Christianity had prevailed.

4 * And if it be meet that I go also, they shall go with me.

5 Now I will come unto you, ^e when I shall pass through Macedonia : for I do pass through Macedonia.

6 And it may be that I will abide, yea, and winter with you, that ye may ^f bring me on my journey whithersoever I go.

7 For I will not see you now by the way ; but I

This is a strong argument for the keeping of the Christian Sabbath.

Verse 3. Whomsoever ye shall approve by your letters] Why should Paul require letters of approbation in behalf of certain persons, when he himself should be among them, and could have their characters viva voce ? Some MSS. and several Versions join by letters, to the following words, and read the verse thus : When I come, those whom ye shall approve I will send with letters to bring your liberality to Jerusalem. This seems most natural.

Verse 4. And if it be meet, &c.] If it be a business that requires my attendance, and it be judged proper for me to go to Jerusalem, I will take those persons for my companions.

Verse 5. I will come unto you, when I shall pass through Macedonia] St. Paul was now at Ephesus ; for almost all trust to tarry a while with you, 'if the Lord permit.

8 But I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost.

9 For ^aa great door and effectual is opened unto me, and ^cthere are many adversaries.

10 Now ^aif Timotheus come, see that he may be with you without fear; for ^ahe worketh the work of the Lord, as I also do.

11 'Let no man therefore despise him: but conduct him forth ^ain peace, that he may come unto me; for I look for him with the brethren.

12 As touching our brother ^aApollos, I greatly desired him to come unto you with the brethren: but his will was not at all to come at this time; but he will come when he shall have convenient time.

allow, in opposition to the subscription at the end of this epistle that states it to have been written from Philippi, that it was written from Ephesus. Though Macedonia was not in the direct way from Ephesus to Corinth, yet the apostle intended to make it in his way. And it was because it was not in the direct road, but lay at the upper end of the Ægean sea, and very far out of his direct line, that he says, I do pass through Macedonia—I have purposed to go thither before I go to Corinth.

Verse 6. Yea, and winter with you] He purposed to stay till Pentecost at Ephesus; after that to go to Macedonia, and probably to spend the summer there; and come in the autumn to Corinth, and there spend the winter.

That ye may bring me on my journey] That ye may furnish me with the means of travelling. It appears that, in most cases, the different churches paid his expenses to other churches; where this was not done then he laboured at his business to acquire the means of travelling.

Verse 7. I will not see you now by the way] From Ephesus to Corinth was merely across the Ægean Sea, and comparatively a short passage.

Verse 8. I will tarry at Ephesus] And it is very probable that he did so; and that all these journeys were taken as he himself had projected. See on ver. 5.

Verse 9. A great door and effectual is opened] A great and energetic door is opened to me; that is, God has made a grand opening to me in those parts, which I perceive will require much labour; and besides, I shall have many adversaries to oppose me.

Verse 10. Now, if Timotheus come] Of Timothy we have heard before, chap. iv. 17. And we learn, from Acts xix. 22, that Paul sent him with Erastus from Ephesus to Macedonia. It is evident, therefore, in opposition to the very exceptionable subscription at the end of this epistle, that the epistle itself was not sent by Timothy, as there stated.

That he may be with you without fear] That he may be treated well, and not perplexed and harassed with your divisions and jealousies; for he worketh the work of the Lord—he is divinely appointed, as I also am.

Verse 11. Let no man—despise him] Let none pretend to say that he has not full authority from God to do the work of an evangelist.

But conduct him forth in peace] I believe that this clause should be translated and pointed thus: accompany him upon his journey, that he may come unto me in peace (in safety), as the word is used in Mark v. 34; and Luke xii. 50.

For I look for him with the brethren] This clause should not be understood as if Paul was expecting certain brethren with Timothy; but it was the brethren that were with Paul that were looking for him; I, with the brethren, am looking for him.

Verse 12. As touching our brother Apollos] It appears from this that the brethren, of whom the apostle speaks in the preceding verse, were then with him at Ephesus; I, with the brethren, greatly desired him to come.

But his will was not at all to come] As there had been a faction set up in the name of Apollos at Corinth, he probably thought it not prudent to go thither at this time, lest his presence might be the means of giving it either strength or countenance.

13 ^aWatch ye, ^bstand fast in the faith, quit you like men, ^cbe strong.

14 ^aLet all your things be done with charity.

15 I beseech you, brethren, (ye know ^athe house of Stephanas, that it is ^athe first-fruits of Achaia, and that they have addicted themselves to ^athe ministry of the saints,) 16 ^aThat ye submit yourselves unto such, and to every one that helpeth with us, and ^alaboureth.

17 I am glad of the coming of Stephanas and Fortunatus and Achaicus: ^afor that which was lacking on your part they have supplied.

18 ^aFor they have refreshed my spirit and yours: therefore ^aacknowledge ye them that are such.

Verse 13. Watch ye] You have many enemies; be continually on your guard; be always circumspect:—1. Watch against evil; 2. Watch for opportunities to receive good; 3. Watch for opportunities to do good; 4. Watch over each other in love; 5. Watch, that none may draw you aside from the belief and unity of the gospel.

Stand fast in the faith] Hold in conscientious credence what you have already received as the truth of God; for it is the gospel by which ye shall be saved, and by which ye are now put into a state of salvation, see chap. xv. 1, 2.

Quit you like men] Be not like children tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine; let your understanding receive the truth; let your judgment determine on the absolute necessity of retaining it; and give up life rather than give up the testimony of God.

Be strong] Put forth all the vigour and energy which God has given you in maintaining and propagating the truth, and your spiritual strength will increase by usage. The terms in this verse are all military.

Verse 14. Let all your things be done with charity] Let love to God, to man, and to one another, be the motive of all your conduct.

Verse 16. That ye submit yourselves unto such] That ye have due regard to them, and consider them as especial instruments in the hand of God for countenancing and carrying on His great work. The submission here recommended does not imply obedience, but kind and courteous demeanour.

Verse 17. I am glad of the coming of Stephanas, &c.] It was by these that the Corinthians had sent that letter to the apostle, to answer which was a main part of the design of St. Paul in this epistle.

Fortunatus] This man is supposed to have survived St. Paul; and to be the same mentioned by Clement in his Epistle to the Corinthians, sect. 59, as the bearer of that epistle from Clement at Rome to the Christians at Corinth.

For that which was lacking on your part] This may either refer to additional communications besides those contained in the letter which the Corinthians sent to the apostle, or to some contributions on their part for the support of the apostle in his peregrinations and labours.

Verse 18. They have refreshed my spirit and yours] They have been a means of contributing greatly to my comfort; and what contributes to my comfort must increase yours.

Therefore acknowledge ye them] Pay them particular respect, and let all be held in esteem in proportion to their work and usefulness.

Verse 19. The churches of Asia salute you] i.e., The churches in Asia Minor. Ephesus was in this Asia, and it is clear from this that the apostle was not at Philippi; had he been at Philippi, as the subscription states, he would have said, The churches of Macedonia, not the churches of Asia, salute you.

Aquila and Priscilla] Of these eminent persons we have heard before, see Acts xviii. 2, 18, 26; and Rom. xvi. 3.

With the church that is in their house] That is, the company of believers who generally worshipped there. There were no churches or chapels built at that time; and the assemblies of Christians were necessarily held in private houses. It appears that Aquila and Priscilla devoted their house to this purpose. The house of Philemon was of the same kind; Philem., ver. 2. So was likewise the house of Nymphas, Col. iv. 15. See the note on Rom. xvi. 5.

Verse 20. With an holy kiss.] The ancient patriarchs, and the Jews in general, were accustomed to kiss each other whenever they met; and this was a token of friendship and peace with them, as shaking of hands is with us. The primitive Christians naturally followed this example of the Jews.

Verse 21. The salutation of me Paul with mine own hand.] It is very likely that the apostle wrote this and the following verses with his own hand. The rest, though dictated by him, was written by an amanuensis.

Verse 22. If any man love not the Lord Jesus] This is not said in the way of a wish or imprecation, but as a prediction of what would certainly come upon them if they did not repent, and of what did come on them because they did not repent, but continued to hate and execrate the Lord Jesus; and of what still lies upon them, because they continue to hate and execrate the Redeemer of the world.

Anathema, Maran-atha.] "Let him be accursed; our Lord cometh." I cannot see the reason why these words were left untranslated. The former is Greek, and has been already explained; the latter is Syriac, our Lord is coming; i. e., to execute the judgment denounced. Does not the apostle refer to the last verse in the Bible? Lest I come and smite the land with a curse? And does he not intimate that the Lord was coming to smite the Jewish land with that curse?

Verse 23. The grace of our Lord Jesus] May the favour, influence, mercy, and salvation procured by Jesus Christ, be with you—prevail amongst you, rule in you, and be exhibited by you, in your life and conversation! Amen.

Verse 24. My love be with you all in Christ Jesus.] The pronoun my, is wanting in the Codex Alexandrinus, and in an excellent MS. in the Vatican, written about the eleventh century. This will help us to a better sense, for it either says, May love prevail among you! or, supplying the word God, as in 2 Cor. xiii. 14, The love of God be with you! This gives a sound sense; for the love of God is as much a principle of light, life, and salvation, as the grace of Christ. Amen.] So be it: but this word is wanting in most MSS. of repute, and certainly was not written by the apostle.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EPISTLE

TO THE CORINTHIANS.

IT is a general opinion among learned men that this Epistle was written about a year after the former: and this seems to be supported by the words, chap. ix. 2: Achaia was ready a year ago; for the apostle having given instructions for that collection, to which he refers in these words at the close of the preceding epistle, they would not have had the forwardness there mentioned till a year had elapsed. As the apostle had purposed to stay at Ephesus till Pentecost, 1 Cor. xvi. 8; and he staid some time in Asia after his purpose to leave Ephesus and go to Macedonia, Acts ix. 21, 22; and yet making here his apology for not wintering in Corinth, as he thought to do, 1 Cor. xvi. 6; this epistle must have been written after the winter, and consequently when a new year was begun. It therefore seems to have been written after his second coming to Macedonia, mentioned Acts xx. 3. For, (1.) it was written after he had been at Troas, and had left that place to return to Macedonia: now that was at his second going thither, see chap. ii. 12. (2.) It was written when Timothy was with him: now, when he left Ephesus to go into Macedonia, Timothy went not with him, but was sent before him, Acts xix. 22; but at his second going through Macedonia, Timothy was with him, Acts xx. 4. (3.) He speaks of some Macedonians who were likely to accompany him, chap. ix. 4. Now, at his second going from Macedonia, there accompanied him Aristarchus, Secundus, and Gaius of Thessalonica, the metropolis of Macedonia, Acts xx. 4. (4.) The postscript says that this epistle was written from Philippi, where Paul was till the days of unleavened bread, Acts xx. 6; it therefore seems to have been sent from thence to them by Titus, and some other person, not long before St. Paul's coming to them; which he speaks of as instant, chap. xiii. 1; and that which he was now ready to do, chap. xii. 14; and did, according to Dr. Lightfoot, in his journey from Philippi to Troas; he sailing about from Philippi to Corinth, to make good his promise; whilst the rest that were with him, Acts xx. 4, went directly the next cut to Troas, and there waited for him.

That the first Epistle had produced powerful effects among the Corinthians is evident from what the apostle mentions in this. Titus had met him in Macedonia, and told him of the reformation produced by this epistle, see chap. vii. 5; that the church had excommunicated the incestuous man; that the epistle had overwhelmed them with great distress; had led them to a close examination of their conduct and state; and had filled them with respect and affection for their apostle, &c. Hearing this, St. Paul wrote this second epistle, to comfort, to commend them, and to complete the work which he had begun, by causing them to finish the contribution for the poor saints at Jerusalem; and also to vindicate his own apostolic character, and to unmask the pretended apostle, who had led them so long astray.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE CORINTHIANS.

CHAPTER I

St. Paul encourages them to trust in God in all adversities, from a consideration of the support which he had granted them already in times of afflictions: and expresses his strong confidence of their fidelity, 1-7. Mentions the heavy tribulation which he had passed through in Asia; as also his deliverance, 8-11. Shows in what the exultation of a genuine Christian consists, 12. Appeals to their own knowledge of the truth of the things which he wrote to them, 13, 14. Mentions his purpose of visiting them; and how sincere he was in forming it; and the reason why he did not come, as he had purposed, 15-24.

PAUL, ^aan apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timothy our brother, unto the Church of God, which is at Corinth; ^bwith all the saints which are in all Achaia: 2 ^cGrace be to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ. 3 ^dBlessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort; 4 Who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that Verse 1. Paul, an apostle] Paul, commissioned immediately by Jesus Christ Himself, according to the will of God, to preach the gospel to the Gentiles.

In all Achaia.] The whole of the Peloponnesus, or that country separated from the main land by the Isthmus of Corinth. From this we may learn that this epistle was not only sent to the church at Corinth, but to all the churches in that country.

Verse 2. Grace be to you and peace] See Rom. i. 7.

Verse 3. Blessed be God.] Let God have universal and eternal praise: 1. Because he is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the gift of his endless love to man, John i. 16. 2. Because he is the Father of mercies, the source whence all mercy flows, whether it respect the body or the soul, time or eternity; the source of tender mercy; for so the word implies. And, 3. Because he is the God of all comfort—the Fountain whence all consolation, happiness, and bliss flow to angels and to men.

Verse 4. Who comforteth us] Never leaving us a prey to anxiety, carking care, persecution, or temptation; but, by the comforts of his Spirit, bearing us up in, through, and above, all our trials and difficulties.

That we may be able to comfort them] Even spiritual comforts are not given us for our use alone; they, like all the gifts of God, are given that they may be distributed, or become the instruments of help to others. A minister's trials and comforts are permitted and sent for the benefit of the church.

Verse 5. The sufferings of Christ] Suffering endured for the cause of Christ; such as persecutions, hardships, and privations of different kinds.

Our consolation also aboundeth] We stood as well, as we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God.

5 For as ^ethe sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ.

6 And whether we be afflicted, ^fit is for your consolation and salvation, which ^gis effectual in the enduring of the same sufferings which we also suffer: or whether we be comforted, ^hit is for your consolation and salvation.

1 Pet. i. 3.—^eActs ix. 4. Ch. iv. 10. Col. i. 24.—^fCh. iv. 15.—^gOr, is wrought.

firmly, and as easily, in the heaviest trial, as in the lightest; because the consolation was always proportioned to the trial and difficulty. Is it not as easy for a man to lift one hundred pounds' weight, as it is for an infant to lift a few ounces? The proportion of strength destroys the comparative difficulty.

Verse 6. Which is effectual] There is a strange and unusual variation in the MSS. and Versions in this passage. Perhaps the whole should be read thus: For, if we be afflicted, it is for your encouragement and salvation; and if we be comforted, it is also for your encouragement, which exerted itself by enduring the same sufferings which we also suffer.

This transposition of the middle and last clauses is authorised by the best MSS. and Versions.

Verse 7. And our hope of you is steadfast] We have no doubt of your continuing in the truth; because we see that you have such a full, experimental knowledge of it, that no sufferings or persecutions can turn you aside. And we are sure that, as ye suffer, so shall ye rejoice.

Verse 8. Our trouble which came to us in Asia] To what part of his history the apostle refers we know not.

We were pressed out of measure, above strength] The original is exceedingly emphatic: we were weighed down beyond what is credible, even beyond what any natural strength could support. There is no part of St. Paul's history known to us which can justify these strong expressions except his being stoned at Lystra; if this be not what is here intended, the facts to which he refers are not on record.

Verse 9. We had the sentence of death in ourselves] The tribulation was so violent and overwhelming, that he had no hope of escaping death.

That we should not trust in ourselves] The tribulation

7 And our hope of you is steadfast, knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation.

8 For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that we were pressed out of measure, above strength, inasmuch that we despaired even of life:

9 But we had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead:

10 Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust that he will yet deliver us;

11 Ye also helping together by prayer for us, that for the gift bestowed upon us by the means of many persons, thanks may be given by many on our behalf.

* Rom. viii. 17. 2 Tim. ii. 12.—b Acts xix. 23. 1 Cor. xv. 32. xiv. 9.—c Or, answer.—d Jer. xvii. 5, 7.—e 2 Pet. ii. 9.—f Rom. xv. 30. Phil. i. 19. Philem. 22.—g Ch. iv. 15.—h Ch. ii. 17. iv. 2.—i Cor.

was of such a nature as to take away all expectation of help but from God alone.

But in God which raiseth the dead] This is very like the business at Lystra; and would be sufficient to fix the apostle's reference to that fact could the time and other circumstances serve.

Verse 10. Who delivered us from so great a death] For the circumstances were such that no human power could avail.

Will yet deliver us] Having had such a signal evidence of his interposition already, we will confide in Him with an unshaken confidence that He will continue to support and deliver.

Verse 11. Ye also helping together by prayer] Even an apostle felt the prayers of the Church of God necessary for his comfort and support.

The gift bestowed—by the means of many persons] The blessings communicated by means of their prayers.

Thanks may be given by many] Thus, the prayers of many obtain the gift; and the thanksgivings of many acknowledge the mercy.

The gift, which the apostle mentions, was his deliverance from the dangers and deaths to which he was exposed.

Verse 12. For our rejoicing is this] Our boasting, exultation, subject of glorying.

The testimony of our conscience] That testimony or witness which conscience, under the light and influence of the Spirit of God, renders to the soul of its state, sincerity, safety, &c.

In simplicity] Having one end in view, having no sinister purpose, no bye end to answer.

And godly sincerity] The sincerity of God: that is, such a sincerity as comes from his work in the soul. It here signifies such simplicity of intention, and purity of affection, as can stand the test of the light of God shining upon it, without the discovery being made of a single blemish or flaw.

Not with fleshly wisdom] The cunning and duplicity of man, who is uninfluenced by the Spirit of God, and has his secular interest, ease, profit, pleasure, and worldly honour in view.

But by the grace of God] Which alone can produce the simplicity and godly sincerity before mentioned, and inspire the wisdom that comes from above.

We have had our conversation] We have conducted ourselves. The word properly refers to the whole tenor of a man's life—all that he does, says, and intends; and the object or end he has in view, and in reference to which he speaks, acts, and thinks; and is so used by the best Greek writers. The word conversation is not an unapt Latinism for the Greek term, as conversatio comes from con, together, and verto, I turn; and is used by the Latins in precisely the same sense as the other is by the Greeks, signifying the whole of a man's conduct, the tenor and practice of his life.

In the world] Both among Jews and Gentiles have we always acted as seeing Him who is invisible.

More abundantly to you-ward] That is, We have given the fullest proof of this in our conduct towards you.

Verse 13. Than what ye read] Viz., In the first epistle which he had sent them.

12 For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward.

13 For we write none other things unto you than what ye read or acknowledge; and I trust ye shall acknowledge even to the end;

14 As also ye have acknowledged us in part, that we are your rejoicing, even as ye also are ours in the day of the Lord Jesus.

15 And in this confidence I was minded to come unto you before, that ye might have a second benefit;

16 And to pass by you into Macedonia, and to come again out of Macedonia unto you, and of you to be brought on my way toward Judea.

ii. 4, 13.—J Ch. v. 12.—b Phil. ii. 16. iv. 1. 1 Thess. ii. 19, 20.—i Cor. iv. 19.—m Rom. i. 11.—n Or, grace.—o 1 Cor. xvi. 5, 6.

Or acknowledge] To be the truth of God; and which he hoped they would continue to acknowledge, and not permit themselves to be turned aside from the hope of the gospel.

Verse 14. Have acknowledged us in part] The Greek may signify here, not in part, but some of you; and it is evident, from the distracted state of the Corinthians, and the opposition raised there against the apostle, that it was only a part of them that did acknowledge him, and receive and profit by his epistles and advice.

We are your rejoicing, &c.] You boast of us as the ministers of Christ through whom ye have believed; as we boast of you as genuine converts to the Christian faith, and worthy members of the Church of God.

Verse 15. And in this confidence] Under the conviction or persuasion that this is the case; that ye exult in us as we do in you;

I was minded] I had purposed to come to you before, as he had intimated, 1 Cor. xvi. 5: for he had intended to call on them in his way from Macedonia, but this purpose he did not fulfil; and he gives the reason, ver. 23.

A second benefit] He had been with them once, and they had received an especial blessing in having the seed of life sown among them by the preaching of the gospel; and he had purposed to visit them again that they might have a second blessing, in having that seed watered.

Verse 16. To pass by you into Macedonia] He had purposed to go to Macedonia first, and then from Macedonia return to them, and probably winter in Corinth. Therefore we must understand by you, as implying that he would sail up the Ægean Sea, leaving Corinth to the west; though he might have taken it in his way, and have gone by land through Greece up to Macedonia.

Verse 17. Did I use lightness?] When I formed this purpose, was it without due consideration? and did I abandon it through fickleness of mind?

That with me there should be yea, &c.] That I should act as carnal men, who change their purposes, and falsify their engagements, according as may seem best to their secular interest?

Verse 18. But as God is true] Setting the God of truth before my eyes, I could not act in this way: and as sure as He is true, so surely were my purposes sincere; and it was only my uncertainty about your state that induced me to postpone my visit.

Verse 19. For the Son of God, &c.] If I could have changed my purpose through carnal or secular interest, then I must have had the same interest in view when I first preached the gospel to you, with Silvanus and Timotheus.

Verse 20. For all the promises of God] Had we been light, fickle, worldly-minded persons; persons who could only be bound by our engagements as far as comported with our secular interest, would God have confirmed our testimony among you? Did we not lay before you the promises of God? And did not God fulfil those promises by us—by our instrumentality, to your salvation and his own glory? God is true; therefore every promise of God is true; and consequently each must have its due fulfilment. God will not make use of trifling, worldly men, as the instruments by which he will fulfil his promises; but he has fulfilled them

17 When I therefore was thus minded, did I use lightness? or the things that I purpose, do I purpose ^aaccording to the flesh, that with me there should be yea, yea, and nay, nay?

18 But ^aas God is true, our ^bword toward you was not yea and nay.

19 For ^cthe Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was preached among you by us, even by me, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, was not yea and nay, ^dbut in him was yea.

20 ^eFor all the promises of God in him are yea,

^a Ch. x. 2.—^b Or, preaching.—^c Mark i. 1. Luke i. 35. Acts ix. 20.—^d Heb. xiii. 8.—^e Rom. xv. 8, 9.—^f 1 John ii. 20, 27.—^g Eph. i. 13. iv. 30. 2 Tim. ii. 19. Rev. ii. 17.—^h Ch. v. 5. Eph. i. 14.—

by us; therefore we are just and spiritual men, else God would not have used us.

From what the apostle says here, and the serious and solemn manner in which he vindicates himself, it appears that his enemies at Corinth had made a handle of his not coming to Corinth, according to his proposal, to defame his character, and to depreciate his ministry; but he makes use of it as a means of exalting the truth and mercy of God through Christ Jesus; and of showing that the promises of God not only come by him, but are fulfilled through him.

Verse 21. Now he which stablisheth us with you] It is God that has brought both us and you to this sure state of salvation through Christ; and he has anointed us, giving us the extraordinary influences of the Holy Ghost, that we might be able effectually to administer this gospel to your salvation.

Verse 22. Who hath also sealed us] Not only deeply impressed His truth and image upon our hearts; but, by miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit, attested the truth of our extraordinary unction or calling to the ministry.

And given the earnest of the Spirit] The word properly signifies an earnest of something promised; a part of the price agreed for between a buyer and seller, by giving and receiving of which the bargain was ratified; or a deposit, which was to be restored when the thing promised was given. From the use of the term in Genesis xxxviii. 17, 18, 20, which the apostle puts here in Greek letters, we may at once see his meaning above, and in Eph. i. 14; the Holy Spirit being an earnest in the heart, and an earnest of the promised inheritance means a security given in hand for the fulfilment of all God's promises relative to grace and eternal life. We may learn from this, that eternal life will be given in the great day to all who can produce the pledge. He who is found then with the earnest of God's Spirit in his heart, shall not only be saved from death, but have that eternal life of and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us.

21 Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and ^ahath anointed us, is God;

22 Who ^bhath also sealed us, and ^cgiven the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

23 Moreover, ^dI call God for a record upon my soul, ^ethat to spare you I came not as yet unto Corinth.

24 Not for ^fthat we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy: for ^gby faith ye stand.

which it is the pledge, the earnest, and the evidence. Without this there can be no glory.

Verse 23. I call God for a record upon my soul] The apostle here resumes the subject which he left, ver. 16, and in the most solemn manner calls God to witness, and consequently to punish, if he asserted anything false, that it was through tenderness to them that he did not visit Corinth at the time proposed. As there were so many scandals among them, the apostle had reason to believe that he should be obliged to use the severe and authoritative part of his function in the excommunication of those who had sinned, and delivering them over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, &c.; but to give them space to amend, and to see what effect his epistle might produce (not having heard as yet from them), he purposed to delay his coming. [The passage may be read: I call God to witness against my soul, a very solemn adjuration.]

Verse 24. Not for that we have dominion over your faith] I will not come to exercise my apostolical authority in punishing them who have acted sinfully and disorderly; for this would be to several of you a cause of distress, the delinquents being friends and relatives; but I hope to come to promote your joy, to increase your spiritual happiness, by watering the seed which I have already sowed. This I think to be the meaning of the apostle. The faith which they had already received was preached by the apostles; and, therefore, in a certain sense, according to our meaning of the term, they had a right to propound to them the articles which they ought to believe; and to forbid them, in the most solemn manner, to believe anything else as Christianity which was opposed to those articles. In that sense they had dominion over their faith; and this dominion was essential to them as apostles.

For by faith ye stand.] You believe not in us, but in God. We have prescribed to you, on his authority, what you are to believe; you received the gospel as coming from Him, and ye stand in and by that faith.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle further explains the reasons why he did not pay his intended visit to the Corinthians, 1. And why he wrote to them in the manner he did, 2-5. He exhorts them also to forgive the incestuous person, who had become a true penitent; and therefore he had forgiven him in the name of Christ, 6-11. He mentions the disappointment he felt when he came to Troas in not meeting with Titus, from whom he expected to have heard an account of the state of the Corinthian Church, 12, 13. Gives thanks to God for the great success he had in preaching the gospel, so that the influence of the name of Christ was felt in every place, 14. Shows that the gospel is a savour of life to them that believe, and of death to them that believe not, 15-16. And that he and his brethren preached the pure, unadulterated doctrine of God among the people, 17.

BUT I determined this with myself, *that I would not come again to you in heaviness.

2 For if I make you sorry, who is he then that maketh me glad, but the same which is made sorry by me?

3 And I wrote this same unto you, lest, when I came, ^b I should have sorrow from them of whom I ought to rejoice; ^c having confidence in you all, that my joy is the joy of you all.

4 For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote unto you with many tears; ^d not that ye should be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you.

5 But, ^e if any have caused grief, he hath not ^f grieved me, but in part: that I may not overcharge you all.

6 Sufficient to such a man is this ^g punishment, which was inflicted ^h of many.

7 ⁱ So that contrariwise ye ought rather to forgive

*Ch. i. 23. xii. 20, 21. xiii. 10.—^b Ch. xii. 21.—^c Ch. vii. 16. viii. 22. Gal. v. 10.—^d Ch. vii. 8, 9, 12.—^e 1 Cor. v. 1.—^f Gal. iv. 12.—^g Or, censure.—^h 1 Cor. v. 4, 5. 1 Tim. v. 20.—ⁱ Gal. vi. 1.—Ch.

Verse 1. But I determined this] The apostle continues to give farther reasons why he did not visit them at the proposed time. Because of the scandals that were among them he could not see them comfortably; and therefore he determined not to see them at all till he had reason to believe that those evils were put away.

Verse 2. For if I make you sorry] Should he have come and used his apostolical authority, in inflicting punishment upon the transgressors, this would have been a common cause of distress. And though he might expect that the sound part of the church would be a cause of consolation to him, yet, as all would be overwhelmed with trouble at the punishment of the transgressors, he could not rejoice to see those whom he loved in distress.

Verse 3. And I wrote this same unto you] This I particularly marked in my first epistle to you; earnestly desiring your reformation lest, if I came before this had taken place, I must have come with a rod, and have inflicted punishment on the transgressors.

My joy is the joy of you all.] I know that ye wish my comfort as much as I wish yours.

Verse 4. For out of much affliction, &c.] It is very likely that the apostle's enemies had represented him as a harsh, austere, authoritative man; who was better pleased with inflicting wounds than in healing them. But he vindicates himself from this charge by solemnly asserting that this was the most painful part of his office; and that the writing of his first epistle to them cost him much affliction and anguish of heart, and many tears.

Verse 5. But if any have caused grief] Here he seems to refer particularly to the case of the incestuous person.

Grieved me, but in part] I cannot help thinking that the expressions which we render in part, and which the apostle uses so frequently in these epistles, are to be referred to the people. A part of them had acknowledged the apostle, chap. i. 14; and here, a part of them had given him the cause of grief; and therefore he immediately adds, that I may not overcharge you all: as only a part of you has put me to pain (viz., the transgressor, and those who had taken his part), it would be unreasonable that I should load you all with the blame which attaches to that party alone. [Of the many renderings of this obscure passage, the following seems most probable: If any have caused grief he hath grieved not me, but more or less (that I be not too heavy upon him), all of you.]

Verse 6. Sufficient to such a man is this punishment] That is, the man has already suffered sufficiently. Here he gives a proof of his parental tenderness towards this great transgressor.

Verse 8. That ye would confirm your love toward him.] Now that he has repented, I beseech you to confirm, to ratify, by a public act of the Church, your love to him; give him the fullest proof that you do love him, by forgiving him and restoring him to his place in the Church.

Verse 9. For to this end also did I write] I have written this also, the advices and commands which I now give you, him, and comfort him, lest perhaps such an one should be swallowed up with over-much sorrow.

8 Wherefore I beseech you that ye would confirm your love toward him.

9 For to this end also did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be ^j obedient in all things.

10 To whom ye forgive any thing, I forgive also: for if I forgave any thing, to whom I forgave it, for your sakes forgave I it ^k in the person of Christ;

11 Lest Satan should get an advantage of us: for we are not ignorant of his devices.

12 Furthermore, ^l when I came to Troas to preach Christ's gospel, and ^m a door was opened unto me of the Lord, 13 ⁿ I had no rest in my spirit, because I found not Titus my brother: but taking my leave of them, I went from thence into Macedonia.

14 Now, thanks be unto God, which always canseth

vii. 15. x. 6.—^k Or, in the sight.—^l Acts xvi. 8. xx. 6.—^m 1 Cor. xvi. 9.—ⁿ Ch. vii. 5, 6.

that I might know whether ye be obedient in all things. [The verb refers rather to his former epistle.]

Verse 10. To whom ye forgive any thing] Here he farther shows them that his sole object in the punishment inflicted on the transgressor was his amendment; and therefore promises to ratify, in the name and authority of Christ, the free pardon which he exhorts them to dispense.

In the person of Christ] As I believe Christ acts towards his penitent soul, so do I.

Verse 11. Lest Satan should get an advantage] If the man who has given sufficient proof of the sincerity of his repentance be not restored, he may be overwhelmed with sorrow, and sink into despair; and then the discipline of the church will be represented, not as emendatory, but as leading to destruction.

Verse 13. I had no rest in my spirit] I was so concerned for you, through the love I bear you, that I was greatly distressed because I did not find Titus returned to give me an account of your state.

But taking my leave of them] I went thence into Macedonia, expecting to find him there; and thither he did come, and gave me a joyous account of your state.

Verse 14. Now, thanks be unto God] His coming dispelled all my fears, and was the cause of the highest satisfaction to my mind; and filled my heart with gratitude to God, who is the Author of all good, and who always causes us to triumph in Christ; not only gives us the victory, but such a victory as involves the total ruin of our enemies; and gives us cause of triumphing in him, through whom we have obtained this victory.

A triumph among the Romans, to which the apostle here alludes, was a public and solemn honour conferred by them on a victorious general, by allowing him a magnificent procession through the city.

During the celebration of a triumph all the temples were opened, and every altar smoked with offerings and incense.

St. Paul had now a triumph (but of a widely different kind); his triumph was in Christ, and to Christ he gives all the glory; his sacrifice was that of thanksgiving to his Lord; and the incense offered on the occasion caused the savour of the knowledge of Christ to be manifested in every place. As the smoke of the victims and incense offered on such an occasion would fill the whole city with their perfume, so the odour of the name and doctrine of Christ filled the whole of Corinth and the neighbouring regions; and the apostles appeared as triumphing in and through Christ, over devils, idols, superstition, ignorance, and vice, wherever they came.

Verse 15. For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ] The apostle still alludes to the case of a triumph; the conqueror always represented the person of Jupiter; as even the heathens supposed that God alone could give the victory; and as the punishment of death was inflicted on some of the captives, who had often rebelled and broken leagues and covenants; so others were spared, made tributaries, and often became allies. Alluding to this, the apostle says: We are a sweet savour to God—we have fulfilled his will in faith—us to triumph in Christ; and maketh manifest ^a the savour of his knowledge by us in every place.

15 For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, ^b in them that are saved, and ^c in them that perish:

16 ^d To the one we are the savour of death unto

^a Cant. i. 3.—^b 1 Cor. i. 18.—^c Ch. iv. 3.—^d Luke ii. 34. John ix. 89. 1 Pet. ii. 7, 8.—^e 1 Cor. xv. 10. Ch. iii. 5, 6.—^f Or, deal deceitfully proclaiming the gospel, and fighting against sin. And as he has determined that those who believe shall be saved, and those who believe not shall perish, we are equally acceptable to him though we unsuccessfully preach the gospel to some who obstinately reject it, and so perish, as we are in preaching to others who believe, and are saved.

Verse 16. To the one we are the savour of death unto death. The apostle's meaning is plain: those who believe and receive the gospel are saved; those who reject it, perish. For how can they escape who neglect so great a salvation? The sun which nourishes the tree that is planted in a good soil, decomposes and destroys it if plucked up and laid on the surface.

That the saved, and they that perish, mean those who receive and obey the gospel, and those who reject it and live and die in sin, needs no proof. No other kinds of reprobate and elect, in reference to the eternal world, are known in the Book of God, though they abound in the books of men.

Who is sufficient for these things? Is it the false apostle that has been labouring to pervert you? Or, is it the men to whom God has given an extraordinary commission, and sealed it by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost? That this is the apostle's meaning is evident from the following verse.

death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. And ^e who is sufficient for these things?

fully with.—^a Ch. iv. 2. xi. 13. 2 Pet. ii. 3.—^b Ch. i. 12. iv. 2.—^c Or, of.

Verse 17. For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God. God has made us sufficient for these things by giving us his own pure doctrine, the ministry of reconciliation, which we conscientiously preserve and preach; and we act, not like many among you, who, having received that doctrine, corrupt it; mingling with it their own inventions, and explaining away its force and influence, so as to accommodate it to men of carnal minds.

The word which we render corrupt, signifies acting like an unprincipled vintner; for this class of men have ever been notorious for adulterating their wines, mixing them with liquors of no worth, that thereby they might increase their quantity; and thus the mixture was sold for the same price as the pure wine.

But as of sincerity] See the note on chap. i., ver. 12. We receive the doctrine pure from God; we keep it pure, and deliver it in its purity to mankind. For we speak in Christ—in the things of his gospel, as being in the sight of God—our whole souls and all their motives being known to him. As the unprincipled vintner knows that he adulterates the wine, his conscience testifying this; so we know that we deliver the sincere truth of God, our conscience witnessing that we deliver it to you, as we receive it, by the inspiration of the Spirit of truth.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle shows, in opposition to his detractors, that the faith and salvation of the Corinthians were a sufficient testimony of his divine mission; that he needed no letters of recommendation, the Christian converts at Corinth being a manifest proof that he was an apostle of Christ, 1-3. He extols the Christian ministry, as being infinitely more excellent than that of Moses, 4-12. Compares the different modes of announcing the truth under the law and under the gospel: in the former it was obscurely delivered; and the veil of darkness, typified by the veil which Moses wore, is still on the hearts of the Jews; but when they turn to Christ this veil shall be taken away, 13-16. On the contrary, the gospel dispensation is spiritual; leads to the nearest views of heavenly things; and those who receive it are changed into the glorious likeness of God by the agency of his Spirit, 17, 18.

DO ^a we begin again to commend ourselves? or need we, as some others, ^b epistles of commendation to you, or letters of commendation from you?

2 ^c Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men:

3 Forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be

^a Ch. v. 12. x. 8, 12. xii. 11.—^b Acts xviii. 27.—^c 1 Cor. ix. 2. —^d 1 Cor. iii. 5.—^e Exod. xxiv. 12, xxxiv. 1.

Verse 1. Do we begin again to commend ourselves? By speaking thus of our sincerity, divine mission, &c., is it with a design to conciliate your esteem, or ingratiate ourselves in your affections?

Or need we—epistles of commendation] Are we so destitute of ministerial abilities and divine influence that we need, in order to be received in different churches, to have letters of recommendation? Certainly not.

Letters of commendation] Were frequent in the primitive church; and were also in use in the apostolic church, as we learn from this place. But apostles brought their own testimonials, the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit.

Verse 2. Ye are our epistle] I bear the most ardent love to you. I have no need to be put in remembrance of you by any epistles or other means; ye are written in my heart—I have the most affectionate remembrance of you.

Known and read of all men] For wherever I go I mention you; speak of your various gifts and graces; and praise your knowledge in the gospel.

6 Who also hath made us able ^b ministers of ^c the new testament; not ^d of the letter, but of the spirit: for ^e the letter killeth, ^f but the spirit ^g giveth life.

7 But if ^h the ministration of death, ⁱ written and engraven in stones, was glorious, ^j so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away;

8 How shall not ^k the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious?

9 For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration ^l of righteousness exceed in glory.

10 For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth.

11 For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.

Ye are in our hearts, and Christ has written you there; but yourselves are the epistle of Christ; the change produced in your hearts and lives, and the salvation which you have received, are as truly the work of Christ as a letter dictated and written by a man is his work.

Ministered by us] Ye are the writing, but Christ used me as the pen; Christ dictated, and I wrote; and the divine characters are not made with ink, but by the Spirit of the living God; for the gifts and graces that constitute the mind that was in Christ are produced in you by the Holy Ghost.

Not in tables of stone] Where men engrave contracts, or record events; but in fleshy tables of the heart—the work of salvation taking place in all your affections, appetites, and desires; working that change within that is so signally manifested without.

Verse 4. Such trust have we] We have the fullest conviction that God has thus accredited our ministry; and that ye are thus converted unto him, and are monuments of his mercy, and proofs of the truth of our ministry.

Verse 5. Not that we are sufficient of ourselves] We do not arrogate to ourselves any power to enlighten the mind or change the heart, we are only instruments in the hand of God. Nor was it possible for us apostles to think, to invent, such a scheme of salvation as is the gospel; and, if we even had been equal to the invention, how could we have fulfilled such promises as this scheme of salvation abounds with? God alone could fulfil these promises, and he fulfils only those which he makes himself. All these promises have been amen—ratified and fulfilled to you who have believed on Christ Jesus, according to our preaching; therefore, ye are God's workmanship; and it is only by God's sufficiency that we have been able to do anything.

Verse 6. Who—hath made us able ministers] This is a more formal answer to the question, Who is sufficient for these things? chap. ii. 10. God, says the apostle, has made us able ministers; he has made us sufficient for these things; for he uses the same word in both places. We apostles execute, under the divine influence, what God himself has devised. We are ministers of the new covenant; of this new dispensation of truth, light, and life, by Christ Jesus; a system which not only proves itself to have come from God, but necessarily implies that God himself, by his own Spirit, is a continual agent in it, ever bringing its mighty purposes to pass.

Not of the letter, but of the spirit] The apostle does not mean here, that he states himself to be a minister of the New Testament, in opposition to the Old; and that it is the Old Testament that kills, and the New that gives life; but that the New Testament gives the proper meaning of the Old; for the old covenant had its letter and its spirit, its literal and its spiritual meaning. The Jews rested in the letter, 12 Seeing then that we have such hope, ^a we use great ^b plainness of speech:

13 And not as Moses, ^c which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to ^d the end of that which is abolished:

14 But ^e their minds were blinded; for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament; which veil is done away in Christ.

15 But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart.

16 Nevertheless, ^f when it shall turn to the Lord, ^g the veil shall be taken away.

17 Now ^h the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

18 But we all, with open face beholding ⁱ as in a glass ^j the glory of the Lord, ^k are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as ^l by the Spirit of the Lord.

which not only afforded no means of life, but killed, by condemning every transgressor to death. They did not look at the spirit; did not endeavour to find out the spiritual meaning; and therefore they rejected Christ, who was the end of the law for justification; and so for redemption from death to every one that believes. The new covenant set all these spiritual things at once before their eyes, and showed them the end, object, and design of the law; and thus the apostles who preached it were ministers of that Spirit which gives life.

Verse 7. The ministration of death] Here the apostle evidently intends the law. It was a ministration, or service of death. It was the province of the law to ascertain the duty of man; to assign his duties; to fix penalties for transgressions, &c.; and by it is the knowledge of sin. As man is prone to sin, and is continually committing it, this law was to him a continual ministration of death.

Yet this ministration of death was glorious—was full of splendour; for the apostle refers to the thunderings, and lightnings, and luminous appearances, which took place in the giving of the law; so that the very body of Moses partook of the effulgence in such a manner that the children of Israel could not look upon his face; and he, to hide it, was obliged to use a veil. All this was intended to show the excellency of that law, as an institution coming immediately from God: and the apostle gives it all its heightenings, that he may compare it to the gospel, and thereby prove that, glorious as it was, it had no glory that could be compared with that of the gospel; and that even the glory it had was a glory that was to be done away—to be absorbed, as the light of the stars, planets, and moon, are absorbed in the splendour of the sun.

Verse 8. The ministration of the Spirit] The gospel dispensation, which gives the true spiritual sense of the law.

Be rather glorious?] Forasmuch as the thing signified is of infinitely more consequence than that by which it is signified. The thing bread will preserve a man alive; the word bread can give life to nothing.

Verse 9. The ministration of condemnation] The law, which ascertained sin, and condemned it to just punishment.

The ministration of righteousness] The gospel, the grand business of which was to proclaim the doctrine of justification; and to show how God could be just, and yet the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus.

Exceed in glory] For great, glorious, and awful as the law may be, in its opposition to sin, which is a reproach to man, and a dishonour to God, and in its punishment of sin; yet it must be vastly exceeded by that system which, evidencing an equal abhorrence of sin, finds out a method to forgive it; to take away its guilt from the conscience, and remove all its infection from the soul.

Verse 10. For even that which was made glorious] The law, which was exhibited for a time in great glory and splendour, partly when it was given, and partly by the splendour of God in the tabernacle and first temple; but all this ceased and was done away; was intended to give place to the gospel; and has actually given place to that system: so that now, in no part of the world is that law performed, even by the people who are attached to it and reject the gospel.

The glory that excelleth] The gospel dispensation, giving supereminent displays of the justice, holiness, goodness, mercy, and majesty of God.

Verse 11. For if that which is done away, &c.] Here is another striking difference between the law and the gospel. The former is termed that which is counterworked and abolished; the latter that which continues, which is not for a particular time, place, and people, as the law was; but for ALL times, all places, and all people. As a great, universal, and permanent GOOD vastly excels a good that is small, partial, and transitory; so does the gospel dispensation, that of the law.

Verse 12. We use great plainness of speech] We speak not only with all confidence, but with all imaginable plainness; keeping back nothing; disguising nothing; concealing nothing: and here we differ greatly from the Jewish doctors, and from the Gentile philosophers, who affect obscurity, and endeavour, by figures, metaphors, and allegories, to hide every thing from the vulgar.

Verse 13. And not as Moses] The splendour of Moses' countenance was so great that the Israelites could not bear to look upon his face, and therefore he was obliged to veil his face: this, it appears, he did typically, to represent the types and shadows by which the whole dispensation, of which he was the minister, was covered.

Verse 14. But their minds were blinded] By resting in the letter, shutting their eyes against the light that was granted to them, they contracted a hardness or stupidity of heart. And the veil that was on the face of Moses, which prevented the glory of his face from shining out, may be considered as emblematical of the veil of darkness and ignorance that is on their hearts, and which hinders the glory of the gospel from shining in.

Until this day remaineth the same veil] They are still ignorant of the spiritual meaning and intention of their own law, called here the old covenant.

In the reading of the Old Testament] Here is an evident allusion to the conduct of the Jews in their synagogues: when they read the law they cover their whole head with a veil, which they term the tallith, veil, from talat, to cover; and this voluntary usage of theirs, the apostle tells us, is an emblem of the darkness of their hearts while they are employed in sacred duties.

Which veil is done away in Christ.] It is only by acknowledging Christ that the darkness is removed, and the end and spiritual meaning of the law discerned.

Verse 16. When it shall turn to the Lord] When the Israelitish nation shall turn to the Lord Jesus, the veil shall be taken away; the true light shall shine; and they shall see all things clearly.

There is an evident allusion here to the case of Moses, mentioned Exod. xxiv. 34. When he came from the Lord, and spoke to the Israelites, he put the veil over his face; but when he returned to speak with the Lord, then he took off the veil. The words seem to imply: 1. That there will be a conversion of the Jews to Christianity; and, 2. That this conversion will be en masse; that a time will come when the whole nation of the Jews, in every place, shall turn to Christ; and then the Gentiles and the Jews make one fold, under one Shepherd and Bishop of all souls.

Verse 17. Now the Lord is that Spirit] In verses 6 and 8, the word spirit evidently signifies the gospel; so called because it points out the spiritual nature and meaning of the law; because it produces spiritual effects; and because it is especially the dispensation of the Spirit of God. Here Jesus Christ is represented as that Spirit, because he is the end of the law for justification to every one that believes; and because the residue of the Spirit is with him, and he is the dispenser of all its gifts, graces, and influences.

And where the spirit of the Lord is] Wherever this gospel is received, there the Spirit of the Lord is given; and wherever that Spirit lives and works, there is liberty, not only from Jewish bondage, but from the slavery of sin—from its power, its guilt, and its pollution.

Verse 18. But we all, with open face] The Jews were not able to look on the face of Moses, the mediator of the old covenant, and therefore he was obliged to veil it; but all we Christians, with face uncovered, behold, as clearly as we can see our own natural face in a mirror, the glorious promises and privileges of the gospel of Christ; and while we contemplate, we anticipate them by desire and hope, and apprehend them by faith, and are changed from the glory there represented, to the enjoyment of the thing which is represented, even the glorious image—righteousness and true holiness, of the God of glory.

As by the Spirit of the Lord.] By the energy of that Spirit of Christ which gives life and being to all the promises of the gospel; and thus we are made partakers of the divine nature, and escape all the corruptions that are in the world.

CHAPTER IV.

St. Paul shows the integrity with which he had preached the gospel of Christ, 1, 2. And that, if it was unprofitable to any who had heard it, it was because their unbelieving hearts were blinded, 3, 4. How he preached, and how he was qualified for the work, 5-7. The troubles and difficulties he met with in his labours, and the hope and consolations by which he was supported, 8-15. And the prospect he had of eternal blessedness, 16-18.

Verse 1. Seeing we have this ministry] The gospel, of which he gave that noble account which we read in the preceding chapter.

We faint not] We meet with many tribulations, but are supported in and through all by the grace of the gospel. Instead of we faint not, we act not wickedly is the reading of several MSS.; it certainly makes a very good sense with what goes before and what follows.

Verse 2. But have renounced] We have disclaimed the hidden things of dishonesty; the hidden things of shame; those things which wicked men do; and which they are ashamed to have known, and ashamed to own.

Not walking in craftiness] In subtlety and clever cunning, as the false teachers did, who were accomplished fellows, and capable of anything.

Nor handling the word of God deceitfully] Not using the doctrines of the gospel to serve any secular or carnal purpose; not explaining away their force so as to palliate or excuse sin; not generalizing its precepts so as to excuse many in particular circumstances from obedience, especially in that which most crossed their inclinations.

But by manifestation of the truth] An open, explicit acknowledgment of what we know to be the truth—what we are assured is the gospel of Jesus; concealing nothing; blunting the edge of no truth; explaining spiritual things, not in the words of man's wisdom, but in those taught by the Spirit of God.

Commending ourselves to every man's conscience] This is one characteristic of divine truth: even every man's conscience will acknowledge it, though it speak decidedly against his own practices.

In the sight of God] Whose eye is ever on the heart and conscience of man, and who always bears testimony to his own word.

Verse 3. But if our gospel be hid] Veiled; he refers to the subject that he had treated so particularly in the conclusion of the preceding chapter. If there be a veil on the gospel, it is only to the wilfully blind; and if any man's heart be veiled that hears this gospel, it is a proof that he is among the lost, those who are fully under the power of sin; who have given up themselves to work wickedness; persons who are mere heathens, or live like such, and yet such as Jesus Christ came to seek and save; for the word does not necessarily imply those that will perish eternally, but is a common epithet to point out a man without the gospel and without God in the world. Matt. x. 6, xviii. 11; Luke xix. 10; Matt. xviii. 12; Luke xv. 4.

Verse 4. In whom the god of this world, &c.] But who is meant by the god of this world? It is generally answered, the same who is called the prince of this world, John xvi. 11. But the question recurs, who is the prince of this world? and the answer to both is, SATAN. I must own I feel considerable reluctance to assign the epithet, The God to Satan; and were there not a rooted prejudice in favour of the common opinion, the contrary might be well vindicated, viz., that by the god of this world the Supreme Being is meant, who in his judgment gave over the minds of the unbelieving Jews to spiritual darkness, so that destruction came upon them to the uttermost. We are not willing to attribute the blinding of men's minds to God, because we sometimes forget that he is the God of justice, and may in judgment remove mercies from those that abuse them; but this is repeatedly attributed to him in the Bible, and the expression before us is quite a parallel to Isa. vi. 9. And see the parallel places, Matt. xiii. 14, 15; Mark iv. 12; John xii. 40; and particularly Rom. xi. 8-10.

And as to the expression, this world, we are not to imagine that it necessarily means wicked men, or a wicked age; for it is frequently used to express the whole mundane system, and all that is called time, Matt. xii. 32. In Luke xx. 34, the children of this world, mean simply mankind at large, in their state of probation in this lower world, in opposition to their state in the world to come. Irenæus, Tertullian, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Photius, Theophylact, and August-tine, all plead for the above meaning; and St. Augustine says that it was the opinion of almost all the ancients.

Lest the light of the glorious gospel] That is, they have shut their eyes against the light, and their blindness and stupor are the consequence.

By glorious gospel we are to understand the luminous gospel; that which comes with so much light and evidence to every candid mind.

Who is the image of God] Christ is called, Heb. i. 3, the brightness of God's glory, and the express image of his person.

Verse 5. For we preach not ourselves] We neither proclaim our own wisdom, nor power; we have nothing but what we have received; we do not wish to establish our own authority, nor to procure our own emolument.

But Christ Jesus the Lord] We proclaim the author of this glorious gospel as CHRIST, the MESSIAH, the anointed one; him of whom the prophets wrote; and who is the expectation, as he is the glory, of Israel.

And ourselves your servants] Labouring as fervently and as faithfully for your eternal interests as your most trusty slaves can do for your secular welfare. We belong to Jesus; and are your servants on his account, and by his order.

Verse 6. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness] The apostle refers here, Gen. i. 3.

Hath shined in our hearts] As sure, therefore, as God is the author of the light and the creator of the universe, so sure is he the author of the gospel; it is no human invention; and is as far beyond the power of man's wisdom and might, as the creation of the world is beyond all created power, energy, and skill.

The light of the knowledge] To give us and enable us to give to others, the light of the knowledge of God through Christ.

In the face of Jesus Christ] The light, mercy, holiness, and glory of God, are reflected upon and communicated to us through Jesus Christ; and it is in the appearance and person of Jesus Christ that these blessings are communicated to us.

Verse 7. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels] The original signifies, more literally, vessels made of shells, which are very brittle.

That the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us] ^a God keeps us continually dependent upon himself; we have nothing but what we have received, and we receive every necessary supply just when it is necessary; and have nothing at our own command. The good therefore that is done is so evidently from the power of God, that none can pretend to share the glory with him.

Verse 8. We are troubled on every side] In this and the three following verses the apostle makes allusion to the contests at the Isthmian games; and the terms which he employs in these verses cannot be understood but in reference to those agonistical exercises to which he alludes.

Troubled on every side, &c.] The word belongs clearly to wrestling.

abundant grace might, through the thanksgiving of many, redound to the glory of God.

Perplexed, but not in despair] The word, to be in perplexity, is fit for the wrestler, who being puzzled by his antagonist's skill knows not what to do.

Verse 9. Persecuted, but not forsaken] Or pursued, a term peculiar to the race, when one being foremost others pursue, and get up close after him, endeavouring to outstrip him, but cannot succeed: this is the meaning of not forsaken, not outstripped, or out-gone, as the word implies.

Cast down, but not destroyed.] This also belongs to wrestlers, where he that throws the other first is conqueror. And then, the being not destroyed, signifies that, although they were thrown down—cast into troubles and difficulties, yet they rose again, and surmounted them all.

Verse 10. Always bearing about in the body, &c.] Being every moment in danger of losing our lives in the cause of truth, as Jesus Christ was. We, in a word, bear his cross, and are ready to offer up our lives for him. There is probably an allusion here to the marks, wounds, and bruises which the contenders in those games got, and continued to carry throughout life.

That the life also of Jesus might be made manifest] That in our preservation, the success of our ministry, and the miracles we work, we might be able to give the fullest demonstration that Jesus is risen again from the dead; and that we are strengthened by him to do all these mighty works.

Verse 11. For us which live] And yet, although we are preserved alive, we are in such continual dangers that we carry our life in our hands, and are constantly in the spirit of sacrifice. But the life—the preserving power—of Christ is manifest in our continual support.

Verse 12. Death worketh in us, &c.] We apostles are in continual danger, and live a dying life; while you who have received this gospel from us are in no danger.

Verse 14. Knowing that he which raised up the Lord, &c.] And though we shall at last seal this truth with our blood, we fear not, being persuaded that as the body of Christ was raised from the dead by the power of the Father, so shall our bodies be raised, and that we shall have an eternal life with him in glory.

Verse 15. For all things are for your sakes] We proclaim all these truths, and bear all these sufferings for your sakes, moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory;

18 ^cWhile we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal.

^c Rom. i. 17. viii. 24. Ch. v. 7. Gal. iii. 11. Heb. x. 38. xi. 1.

thinking all our sufferings nothing if we can gain converts to Christ, and build believers up on their most holy faith.

That the abundant grace] The abounding benefit—the copious outpouring of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, by which you have been favoured and enriched, may, through the thanksgiving of many, redound to the glory of God, i. e., that the gratitude of the multitudes which have been converted may keep pace with the blessings which they have received, and abound, as these blessings have abounded.

Verse 16. For which cause we faint not] See on verse 1. The common reading, faint not, appears to agree best with the apostle's meaning.

But though our outward man] That is, our body—that part of us that can be seen, heard, and felt, perish—be slowly consumed by continual trials and afflictions, and be martyred at last;

Yet the inward man] Our soul—that which cannot be felt or seen by others, is renewed—is revived, and receives a daily increase of light and life from God, so that we grow more holy, more happy, and more meet for glory every day.

Verse 17. For our light affliction, &c.] “The lightness of the trial is expressed by the lightness of our affliction; as if he had said, it is even levity itself in such a comparison. On the other hand, the far more exceeding signifies that all hyperboles fall short of describing that weight—eternal glory, so solid and lasting, that you may pass from hyperbole to hyperbole, and yet, when you have gained the last, are infinitely below it.”

Verse 18. While we look not at the things which are seen] While we aim not at the things which are seen; do not make them our object; are not striving to obtain them; for they are not worthy the pursuit of an immortal spirit, because they are seen; they are objects to which the natural eye can reach; and they are temporary; they are to have a short duration, and must have an end. But the things which we make our scope and aim are not seen; they are spiritual, and therefore invisible to the eye of the body; and besides, they are eternal—things that are permanent; that can have no end; they are things which belong to God; holiness, happiness, and the endless communication and fruition of himself.

CHAPTER V.

The apostle's strong hope of eternal glory, and earnest longings after that state of blessedness, 1-4. The assurance that he had of it from the Holy Spirit, and his carefulness to be always found pleasing to the Lord, 5-9. All must appear before the judgment-seat of Christ, 10. Knowing that this awful event must take place, he laboured to convince men of the necessity of being prepared to meet the Lord, being influenced to this work by his love of Christ, 11-13. Jesus Christ having died for all is a proof that all were dead, 14. Those for whom he died should live to him, 15. We should know no man after the flesh, 16. They who are in Christ are new creatures, 17. The glorious ministry of reconciliation, 18-21.

FOR we know that if ^aour earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

2 For in this ^bwe groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven :

3 If so be that ^cbeing clothed we shall not be found naked.

4 For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened : not for that we would be unclothed, but ^dclothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

5 Now ^ehe that hath wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also ^fhath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit.

6 Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord ;

Verse 1. If our earthly house of this tabernacle] The apostle alludes here to the ancient Jewish tabernacle, which, on all removals of the congregation, was dissolved and taken in pieces; and the ark of the covenant, covered with its own curtains, was carried by itself; and when they came to the place of rest, then the dissolved parts of the tabernacle were put together as before. As the tabernacle was taken down in order to be again put together, so the body is to be dissolved in order to be re-edified; that as the ark of the covenant subsisted by itself, while the tabernacle was down, so can the soul, when separated from the body; that as the ark had then its own veil for its covering, Exod. xl. 21, so the soul is to have some vehicle in which it shall subsist till it receives its body at the resurrection.

A building of God] Some think this refers to a certain celestial vehicle with which God invests holy souls on their dismissal from the body; others suppose it relates to the resurrection body; and some imagine that it relates merely to the state of blessedness which the saints shall possess in the kingdom of glory.

Verse 2. For in this we groan] While in this state, and in this body, we are encompassed with many infirmities, and exposed to many trials, so that life is a state of discipline and affliction, and everything within and around us says, "Arise, and depart, for this is not your rest!"

Desiring to be clothed upon with our house] This and the following verses are, in themselves, exceedingly obscure, and can be only interpreted by considering that the expressions used by the apostle are all Jewish, and should be interpreted according to their use of them.

When the apostle says that they earnestly desired to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven, he certainly means that the great concern of all the genuine followers of God was to be fully prepared to enjoy the beatific vision of their Maker and Redeemer.

Verse 3. If so be that being clothed] That is, fully prepared in this life for the glory of God.

We shall not be found naked.] Destitute in that future state of that divine image which shall render us capable of enjoying an endless glory.

Verse 4. For we that are in this tabernacle] We who are in this state of trial and difficulty do groan, being burdened; as if he had said: The whole of human life is a state of suffering.

Not for that we would be unclothed] We do not desire death; nor to die, even with the full prospect of eternal glory before our eyes, an hour before that time which God in his wisdom has assigned.

But clothed upon] To have the fullest preparation for eternal glory. We wish not to die, whatever tribulation we may be called to pass through, till the whole will of God is accomplished in us and by us.

That mortality might be swallowed up of life.] Being fully prepared for the eternal state we shall scarcely be said to die, all that is mortal being absorbed and annihilated by immortality and glory.

8 We are confident, I say, and ^hwilling rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord.

9 Wherefore we ⁱlabour, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him.

10 ^jFor we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; ^kthat every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.

11 Knowing therefore ^lthe terror of the Lord, we persuade men; but ^mwe are made manifest unto God; and I trust also are made manifest in your consciences.

12 For ⁿwe commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion ^oto glory on our behalf, that ye may have somewhat to answer them which glory ^pin appearance, and not in heart.

13 For ^qwhether we be beside ourselves, it is to God: or whether we be sober, it is for your cause.

Verse 5. Now he that hath wrought us for the self-same thing] God has given us our being and our body for this very purpose, that both might be made immortal, and both be glorified together. Or, God himself has given us this insatiable hungering and thirsting after righteousness and immortality.

Verse 6. We are always confident] We are always full of courage; we never despond; we know where our help lies; and, having the earnest of the Spirit, we have the full assurance of hope.

Whilst we are at home in the body, &c.] The original words in this sentence are very emphatic: the one signifies to dwell among one's own people; to be a sojourner among a strange people. Heaven is the home of every genuine Christian, and is claimed by such, see Phil. i. 23. Yet, while here below, the body is the proper home of the soul; but as the soul is made for eternal glory, that glory is its country; and therefore it is considered as being from its proper home while below in the body. As all human souls are made for this glory, therefore all are considered, while here, to be absent from their own country. And it is not merely heaven that they have in view, but the Lord; without whom, to an immortal spirit possessed of infinite desires, heaven would neither be a home nor a place of rest. We see plainly that the apostle gives no intimation of an intermediate state between being at home in the body and being present with the Lord.

Verse 7. For we walk by faith] While we are in the present state, faith supplies the place of direct vision. In the future world we shall have sight—the utmost evidence of spiritual and eternal things; as we shall be present with them and live in them.

Verse 8. We are confident] We are of good courage, notwithstanding our many difficulties; because we have this earnest of the Spirit, and the unfailing testimony of God. And notwithstanding this, we are willing rather to be absent from the body—we certainly prefer a state of glory to a state of suffering, and the enjoyment of the beatific vision to even the anticipation of it by faith and hope; but, as Christians, we cannot desire to die before our time.

Verse 9. Wherefore we labour] We act at all times on the principles of honour; we are, in the proper sense of the word, ambitious to do and say every thing consistently with our high vocation; and, as we claim kindred to the inhabitants of heaven, to act as they do. [A better rendering is: We make it our ambition.]

We may be accepted of him.] To be pleasing to him. This is and will be our heaven, to study to love, please, and serve him from whom we have received both our being and its blessings.

Verse 10. For we must all appear before the judgment-seat] We labour to walk so as to please him, because we know that we shall have to give a solemn account of ourselves before the judgment-seat of Christ; where he, whose religion we profess, will judge us according to its precepts, and according to the light and grace which it affords.

14 For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that ^a if one died for all, then were all dead:

15 And that he died for all, ^b that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again.

16 ^c Wherefore, henceforth know we no man after the flesh: yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, ^d yet now henceforth know we him no more.

17 Therefore if any man ^e be in Christ, ^f he is ^g a new creature: ^h old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.

That every one may receive the things] That each may receive to himself, into his own hand, his own reward and his own wages.

The things done in his body] That is, while he was in this lower state; for in this sense the term body is taken often in this epistle. We may observe also that the soul is the grand agent, the body is but its instrument. And it shall receive according to what it has done in the body.

Verse 11. Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord.] This, I think, is too harsh a translation; it should be rendered, knowing therefore the fear of the Lord; which, strange as it may at first appear, often signifies the worship of the Lord, or that religious reverence which we owe to him, Acts ix. 81; Rom. iii. 18, xiii. 7; 1 Pet. i. 17, ii. 18, iii. 2. The fear of God is the beginning of wisdom; the terror of God confounds and overpowers the soul. We lead men to God through his fear and love, and with the fear of God the love of God is ever consistent; but where the terror of the Lord reigns there can neither be fear, faith, nor love; nay, nor hope either. Men who vindicate their constant declamations on hell and perdition by quoting this, know little of its meaning; and, what is worse, seem to know but little of the nature of man, and perhaps less of the spirit of the gospel of Christ.

But we are made manifest unto God.] God, who searches the heart, knows that we are upright in our endeavours to please him; and because we are fully persuaded of the reality of eternal things, therefore we are fully in earnest to get sinners converted to him.

Manifest in your consciences.] We have reason to believe that you have had such proof of our integrity and disinterestedness that your consciences must acquit us of every unworthy motive, and of every sinister view.

Verse 12. For we commend not ourselves.] St. Paul probably speaks here concerning the false apostle, who had been dividing the church, and endeavouring to raise a party to himself, by vilifying both the apostle and his doctrine.

Verse 13. Beside ourselves.] Probably he was reputed by some to be deranged.

It is to God.] If we do appear, in speaking of the glories of the eternal world, to be transported beyond ourselves, it is through the good hand of our God upon us, and we do it to promote his honour.

Whether we be sober.] Speak of divine things in a more cool and dispassionate manner; it is that we may the better instruct and encourage you.

Verse 14. For the love of Christ constraineth us.] It is the effect produced by this love which bears us away with itself, which causes us to love after the similitude of that love by which we are influenced; and as God so loved the world as to give his Son for it, and as Christ so loved the world as to pour out his life for it, so we, influenced by the very same love, desire to spend, and be spent, for the glory of God, and the salvation of immortal souls.

If one died for all, then were all dead.] The first position the apostle takes for granted, viz., that Jesus Christ died for ALL mankind. This no apostolic man nor primitive Christian ever did doubt or could doubt.

The second position he infers from the first, and justly too; for if all had not been guilty, and consigned to eternal death because of their sin, there could have been no need of his death.

Verse 15. And that he died for all, that they which live, ciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation;

19 To wit, that ^a God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath ^b committed unto us the word of reconciliation.

20 Now then we are ^c ambassadors for Christ, as ^d though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God.

21 For ^e he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made ^f the righteousness of God in him.

&c.] This third position he draws from the preceding: If all were dead, and in danger of endless perdition; and if he died for all, to save them from that perdition; then it justly follows that they are not their own, that they are bought by his blood; and should not live unto themselves, for this is the way to final ruin; but unto him who died for them, and thus made an atonement for their sins, and rose again for their justification.

Verse 16. Know we no man after the flesh.] We esteem no man on account of his family relations, or the stock whence he proceeded, because we see all are shut up in unbelief, and all are children of wrath.

Yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh.] Some of the Judaizing teachers at Corinth might value themselves in having seen Christ in the flesh, which certainly St. Paul did not; hence he takes occasion to say here that this kind of privilege availed nothing; for the old creature, however noble, or well descended in the sight of men, is under the curse; and the new creature only is such as God can approve.

Verse 17. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature.] It is vain for a man to profess affinity to Christ according to the flesh, while he is unchanged in his heart and life, and dead in trespasses and sins; for he that is in Christ, that is, a genuine Christian, having Christ dwelling in his heart by faith, is a new creature; his old state is changed; he was a child of Satan, he is now a child of God; he was a slave of sin, and his works were death; he is now made free from sin, and has his fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. Therefore, old things are passed away.

Behold, all things are become new.] The man is not only mended, but he is new made; he is a new creature, a new creation, a little world in himself: formerly, all was in chaotic disorder; now, there is a new creation, which God himself owns as his workmanship, and which he can look on and pronounce very good.

Verse 18. And all things are of God.] As the thorough conversion of the soul is compared to a new creation, and creation is the proper work of an all-wise Almighty Being; then, this total change of heart, soul, and life, which takes place under the preaching of the gospel, is effected by the power and grace of God.

Who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ.] There is an enmity in the heart of man against sacred things; the grace of Christ alone can remove this enmity.

The ministry of reconciliation.] The office or function of this reconciliation: called, ver. 19, the word, the doctrine of this reconciliation. The word which we render reconciliation, comes from a root signifying to change thoroughly; and the grand object of the gospel is to make a complete change in men's minds and manners; but the first object is the removal of enmity from the heart of man, that he may be disposed to accept of the salvation God has provided for him, on the terms which God has promised. The enmity in the heart of man is the grand hindrance to his salvation.

Verse 19. That God was in Christ.] This is the doctrine which this ministry of reconciliation holds out, and the doctrine which it uses to bring about the reconciliation itself.

Verse 20. We are ambassadors for Christ.] We execute the function of ambassadors in Christ's stead. He came from the Father to mankind on this important embassy. He has left the world, and appointed us in his place.

As though God did beseech you by us] What we say to you we say on the authority of God; our entreaties are his entreaties; our warm love to you, a faint reflection of his infinite love; we pray you to return to God, it is his will that you should do so; we promise you remission of sins, we are authorised to do so by God himself. In Christ's stead we pray you to lay aside your enmity and be reconciled to God; i.e., accept pardon, peace, holiness, and heaven; which are all procured for you by his blood, and offered to you on his own authority.

Verse 21. For he hath made him to be sin for us] He made him who knew no sin (who was innocent) a sin-offering for us. The word, translated sin, occurs here twice: in the first place it means sin, i.e., transgression and guilt; and of Christ it is said, He knew no sin, i.e., was innocent; for not to know sin is the same as to be conscious of innocence. In the second place it signifies a sin-offering, or sacrifice for sin, and answers to the chattaah and chataith of the Hebrew text; which signifies both sin and sin-offering in a great variety of places in the Pentateuch. The Septuagint translate the Hebrew word by ἁμαρτία in ninety-four places in Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, where a sin-offering is meant; and where our version translates the word not sin, but an offering for sin. Had our translators attended to their own method of translating the word in other places where it means the same as here, they would not have given this false view of a passage which has been made the foundation of a most blasphemous doctrine, viz., that our sins were imputed to Christ, and that he was a proper object of the indignation of divine justice, because he was blackened with imputed sin; and some have proceeded so far in this blasphemous career as to say, that Christ may be considered as the greatest of sinners, because all the sins of mankind, or of the elect, as they say, were imputed to him, and reckoned as his own.

That we might be made the righteousness of God in him.] The righteousness of God signifies here the salvation of God, as comprehending justification through the blood of Christ, and sanctification through his Spirit. And all this righteousness, justification, and holiness we receive in, by, for, and through HIM, as the grand sacrificial, procuring, and meritorious cause of these, and every other blessing. Some render the passage: We are justified through him, before God; or, We are justified, according to God's plan of justification, through him.

CHAPTER VI.

We should not receive the grace of God in vain, having such promises of support from Him, 1, 2. We should act so as to bring no disgrace on the gospel, 3. How the apostles behaved themselves, preached, suffered, and rejoiced, 4-10. St. Paul's affectionate concern for the Corinthians, 11-13. He counsels them not to be yoked with unbelievers, and advances several arguments why they should avoid them, 14-16. Exhorts them to avoid evil companions and evil practices, on the promise that God will be their Father, and that they shall be his sons and his daughters, 17, 18.

WE then, as workers together with him,^b beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain.

2 (For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succoured thee: behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.)

3 Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed:

4 But in all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses,

5 In stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labours, in watchings, in fastings;

8 By honour and dishonour, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yet true;

9 As unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and, behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed;

10 As sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet

Verse 1. We then, as workers together with him] The two last words, with him, are not in the text, and some supply the place thus: we then, as workers together with you, and the Armenian version seems to have read it so; but no MS. has this reading, and no other Version. For my own part, I see nothing wanting in the text, if we only suppose the term apostles; we (i.e., apostles) being fellow-workers, also entreat you not to receive the grace of God in vain.

By the grace of God, this grace or benefit of God, the apostle certainly means the grand sacrificial offering of Christ for the sin of the world, which he had just before mentioned in speaking of the ministry of reconciliation. We learn, therefore, that it was possible to receive the grace of God and not ultimately benefit by it; or, in other words, to begin the Spirit and end in the flesh.

Verse 2. For he saith] That is, God hath said it, by the prophet Isaiah, chap. xlix. 8; which place the apostle quotes verbatim et tileratim from the Septuagint. And from this we may at once see what is the accepted time, and what the day of salvation. The Advent of the Messiah was the time of God's pleasure or benevolence, of which all the faithful were in expectation; and the day of salvation, was the time in which this salvation should be manifested and applied. The apostle therefore informs them that this is the time predicted by the prophet; and the ministry of reconciliation being exercised in full force is a proof that the prophecy is fulfilled; and therefore the apostle confidently asserts, Behold, now is this accepted time, now the Messiah reigns, now is the gospel dispensation, and therefore now is the day of salvation; that is, the very time in which the power of God is present to heal, and in which every sinner believing on the Lord Jesus may be saved.

I rather think that this second verse should be read immediately after the last verse of the preceding chapter; as making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things.

11 O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, ^a our heart is enlarged.

12 Ye are not straitened in us, but ^b ye are straitened in your own bowels.

13 Now for a recompence in the same, (^c I speak as unto my children,) be ye also enlarged.

14 ^d Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for ^e what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?

where it now stands it greatly disturbs the connection between the first and the third verses.

Verse 3. Giving no offence] The word signifies a stumbling-block in general, or any thing over which a man stumbles or falls; and here means any transgression or scandal that might take place among the ministers, or the Christians themselves, whereby either Jews or Gentiles might take occasion of offence, and vilify the gospel of Christ.

Verse 4. But in all things approving ourselves] The apostle now proceeds to show how conscientiously himself and his fellow-labourers acted, in order to render the ministry of reconciliation effectual to the salvation of men.

In afflictions] This may signify the series of persecutions and distresses in general; the state of cruel suffering in which the Church of God and the apostles then existed.

In necessities] Straits and difficulties; including all that want and affliction which arose from the impoverished state of the church.

In distresses] The word implies, being reduced to a narrow place, driven to a corner, hemmed in on every side, as the Israelites were at the Red Sea; the sea before them, Pharaoh and his host behind them, and Egyptian fortresses on either hand.

Verse 5. In stripes, in imprisonments] Of these the history of the Acts of the Apostles gives ample testimony; and there were doubtless many instances of persecution, in various forms, which are not on record.

In tumults] Insurrections raised against them because of the gospel. It is more natural to understand the word thus, than of agitations, or tossings to and fro, in consequence of their unsettled state of life; or because of persecution, which obliged them to flee from place to place.

In labours] Both with our own hands to provide for ourselves the necessities of life, that we might not be chargeable to others; and in labours to spread the gospel of God through all countries where his providence opened our way.

In watchings] Passing many nights without sleep or rest.

In fastings] Partly constrained through want of food; and partly voluntary, as a means of obtaining an increase of grace both for ourselves and for the churches.

Verse 6. By pureness] In simplicity of intention, and purity of affection; together with that chastity and holiness of life which the gospel enjoins.

By knowledge] Of the divine mysteries.

By long-suffering] Under all provocations.

By kindness] To our most virulent persecutors, and to all men.

By the Holy Ghost] There are doubts among learned men whether the apostle here means that SPIRIT who is called the Third Person of the Holy Trinity; or some grace, disposition, or quality of the soul, which was thus denominated, as implying a spirit wholly purified, and fitted to be a habitation of God. There does not appear to me any reason why we should depart from the usual meaning of the term.

By love unfeigned] Love without hypocrisy; such as disposed us at all times to lay down our life for the brethren, and to spend and be spent for the glory of God and the good of mankind.

Verse 7. By the word of truth] The doctrine of truth received immediately from God, and faithfully and affectionately preached to men.

By the power of God] Confirming this doctrine, not only by the miracles which we were enabled to work, but also by 15 And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?

16 And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for 'ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, 'I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

17 ^b Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, 18 ^c And will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.

the application of that truth to the souls of the people by the energy of God.

By the armour of righteousness] Such as that described by the apostle, Eph. vi. 13-17.

On the right hand and on the left] We have the doctrine of truth, and the power of God, as an armour to protect us on all sides, every where, and on all occasions.

Verse 8. By honour and dishonour] By going through both; sometimes respected, sometimes despised.

By evil report and good report] Sometimes praised, at other times calumniated.

As deceivers] Said to carry about a false doctrine for our secular emolument,

And yet true] Demonstrated by the nature of the doctrine, as well as by our life and conversation, that we are true men; having nothing in view but God's glory and the salvation of the world.

Verse 9. As unknown] Persons who are to be suspected as harbouring dark designs; persons of neither birth, parentage, nor respectable connexions in life;

And yet well known] Proved by our whole conduct to have no such designs, and demonstrated to be holy, upright, and useful, by the whole train of our peregrinations, through which we can be readily traced from place to place; having preached openly, and done nothing in a corner.

As dying] Through continual dangers, fatigues, and persecutions;

And, behold, we live] We are preserved by the mighty power of God in the greatest dangers and deaths.

As chastened] As though we were disobedient children,

And not killed] Though we continue in the very same line of conduct that is supposed to bring on us those chastisements, and which, if it were criminal, would justly expose us to death for incorrigible obstinacy; but our preservation is a proof that we please God.

Verse 10. As sorrowful] Considerate men supposing, from our persecuted state and laborious occupation, that we must be the most miserable of all men.

Yet always rejoicing] Having the consolation of God's Spirit at all times, and a glorious prospect of a blessed immortality.

As poor] Destitute of all worldly goods and secular interest.

Yet making many rich] By dispensing to them the treasures of salvation; making them rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom.

As having nothing] Being the most abject of the poor,

And yet possessing all things] That are really necessary for the preservation of our lives. The man who possesses a contented spirit possesses all things; for he is satisfied with every dispensation of the providence of God; and "a contented mind is a continual feast."

Verse 11. O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you] I speak to you with the utmost freedom and fluency, because of my affection for you.

Our heart is enlarged] It is expanded to take you and all your interests in; and to keep you in the most affectionate remembrance.

Verse 12. Ye are not straitened in us] That is, Ye have not a narrow place in our affections: the metaphor here is taken from the case of a person pent up in a small or narrow place, where there is scarcely room to breathe.

Ye are straitened in your own bowels] The bowels are used in scripture to denote the most tender affections.

II. CORINTHIANS.

Verse 13. Now for a recompence in the same] That you may, in some sort, repay me for my affection towards you, I speak to you as unto my children, whom I have a right to command, be ye also enlarged—love me as I love you.

Verse 14. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers] This is a military term: keep in your own ranks; do not leave the Christian community to join in that of the heathens.

Some apply this exhortation to pious persons marrying with those who are not decidedly religious and converted to God. That the exhortation may be thus applied I grant; but it is certainly not the meaning of the apostle in this place. Nevertheless, common sense and true piety show the absurdity of two such persons pretending to walk together in a way in which they are not agreed.

For what fellowship, &c.] As righteousness cannot have communion with unrighteousness, and light cannot dwell with darkness; so Christ can have no concord with Belial, nor can be that believeth have any with an infidel.

Verse 16. What agreement hath the temple of God with idols?] Nothing could appear more abominable to a Jew than an idol in the temple of God; here, then, could be no agreement; the worship of the two is wholly incompatible.

Ye are the temple of the living God] God intends to make the heart of every believer his own house.

I will dwell in them, and walk in them] The words are very emphatic: I will inhabit in them. I will not be as a wayfaring man, who turns aside to tarry as for a night, but I will take up my constant residence with them; I will dwell in and among them.

I will be their God] They shall have no other God, they shall have none besides me; and if they take me for their God, I will be to them all that an infinite, eternal, and self-sufficient Being can be to his intelligent offspring.

Verse 17. Wherefore come out from among them] Is it not plain from this and the following verse that God would be their God only on the ground of their taking him for such, and that this depended on their being separated from the works and workers of iniquity?

Verse 18. Will be a Father unto you] I will act towards you as the most affectionate father can act towards his most tender and best beloved child.

And ye shall be my sons and daughters] Ye shall all be of the household of God, the family of heaven; ye shall be holy, happy, and continually safe.

Saith the Lord Almighty.] The Lord, the Governor of all things.

CHAPTER VII.

The apostle's inference from the preceding exhortation, 1. He presses them to receive him with affection, because of his great love towards them, 2-4. He tells them what distress he felt on their account in Macedonia till he had met with Titus, and heard of their prosperity, 5-7. He rejoices that his first epistle was made the means of their reformation, 8, 9. States how they were affected by his letter, and the process of their reformation, 10, 11. Shows why he had written to them, 12. Rejoices that his boasting of them to Titus is found to be a truth; and takes occasion to mention the great affection of Titus for them, and his own confidence in them, 13-16.

HAVING ^a therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.

2 Receive us; we have wronged no man, we have corrupted no man, ^b we have defrauded no man.

3 I speak not this to condemn you; for ^c I have said before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you.

^a Ch. vi. 17, 18. 1 John iii. 8. Isa. i. 16. viii. 13. xxix. 23. 1 Thess. v. 23. 1 Tim. iv. 8.—^b Acts xx. 33. Ch. xii. 17.—^c Ch. vi. 11, 12.—^d Ch. iii. 12.—^e 1 Cor. i. 4. Ch. i. 14.—^f Ch. i. 4. Phil. ii.

Verse 1. Having therefore these promises] The promises mentioned in the three last verses of the preceding chapter, to which this verse should certainly be joined.

Let us cleanse ourselves] Let us apply to him for the requisite grace of purification; and avoid everything in spirit and practice which is opposite to the doctrine of God, and which has a tendency to pollute the soul.

Filthiness of the flesh] The apostle undoubtedly means drunkenness, fornication, adultery, and all such sins as are done immediately against the body; and by filthiness of the spirit, all impure desires, unholy thoughts, and polluting imaginations. If we avoid and abhor evil inclinations, and turn away our eyes from beholding vanity, incentives to evil being thus lessened (for the eye affects the heart), there will be the less danger of our falling into outward sin. And if we avoid all outward occasions of sinning, evil propensities will certainly be lessened. All this is our work under the common aids of the grace of God.

4 ^a Great is my boldness of speech toward you, ^a great is my glorying of you: 'I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation.

5 For, ^a when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but ^b we were troubled on every side; ^c without were fightings, within were fears.

6 Nevertheless ^d God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by ^e the coming of Titus;

7 And not by his coming only, but by the conso-

Perfecting holiness] Getting the whole mind of Christ brought into the soul. This is the grand object of a genuine Christian's pursuit.

Verse 2. Receive us] This address is variously understood. Receive us into your affections—love us as we love you. Receive us as your apostles and teachers; we have given you full proof that God hath both sent and owned us. Receive, comprehend, what we now say to you, and carefully mark it.

We have wronged no man] We have never acted contrary to the strictest justice.

We have corrupted no man] With any false doctrine or pernicious opinion.

We have defrauded no man.] Of any part of his property. But what have your false teachers done?

Verse 3. I speak not this to condemn you] I do not speak to reproach but to correct you. I wish you to open your eyes and see how you are corrupted, spoiled, and impoverished.

lation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind toward me; so that I rejoiced the more.

8 For though I made you sorry with a letter, I do not repent, * though I did repent: for I perceive that the same epistle hath made you sorry, though it were but for a season.

9 Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry ^b after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing.

10 For ^c godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of: ^d but the sorrow of the world worketh death.

11 For behold this self-same thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you; yea, what clearing of yourselves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, what vehement desire; yea, what zeal; yea, what revenge! In all things ye have approved yourselves to be clear in this matter.

12 Wherefore, though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong, ^e but that our care for you in the sight of God might appear unto you.

13 Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit ^f was refreshed by you all.

14 For if I have boasted anything to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so our boasting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth.

15 And his ^g inward affection is more abundant toward you, whilst he remembereth ^h the obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling ye received him.

16 I rejoice, therefore, that ⁱ I have confidence in you in all things.

by those whom ye have incautiously preferred to the true apostles of Jesus Christ.

To die and live with you.] An expression which points out the strongest affection, as in cases where love blinds us to the faults of those whom we love, and causes us to prefer them to all others.

Verse 4. Great is my boldness of speech.] He seems to refer to the manner in which he spoke of them to others.

Great is my glorying of you.] They had probably been very loving and affectionate previously to the time in which they were perverted by their false apostle.

I am filled with comfort.] My affection for you has still the most powerful ascendancy in my soul.

I am exceeding joyful.] I superabound in joy; I have a joy beyond expression.

In all our tribulation.] Under all our tribulations, I feel inexpressible joy on your account.

Verse 5. When we were come into Macedonia.] St. Paul, having left Ephesus, came to Troas, where he stopped some time; afterwards he came to Macedonia, whence he wrote this epistle.

Our flesh had no rest.] So exceedingly anxious was he to know the success of his first epistle to them.

Without were fightings.] The oppositions of Pagans, Jews, and false brethren.

Within were fears.] Uncertain conjectures relative to the success of his epistle.

Verse 6. Comforted us by the coming of Titus.] Who brought him a most satisfactory account of the success of his epistle, and the good state of the Corinthian Church.

Verse 8. I do not repent, though I did repent.] I am not sorry that I have written that letter, because I find it has completely answered the end for which it was sent.

Verse 9. Ye sorrowed to repentance.] We see that a man may sorrow and yet not repent.

Made sorry after a godly manner.] It was not a sorrow because ye were found out, and thus solemnly reprimanded, but a sorrow because ye had sinned against God, and which consideration caused you to grieve more than the apprehension of any punishment.

Damage by us in nothing.] Your repentance prevented that exercise of my apostolic duty, which would have consigned your bodies to destruction, that your souls might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Verse 10. For godly sorrow.] That which has the breach of God's holy law for its object.

Worketh repentance.] A thorough change of mind unto salvation, because the person who feels it cannot rest till he finds pardon through the mercy of God.

But the sorrow of the world worketh death.] Sorrow for lost goods, lost friends, death of relatives, &c., when it is poignant and deep, produces diseases, increases those that already exist, and often leads men to lay desperate hands on themselves.

Verse 11. What carefulness it wrought in you.] Carefulness of obeying my directions, ver. 15; yea, what clearing of yourselves from guilt by inflicting censures on the guilty person, and putting away evil from among you, 1 Cor. xv. 18; yea, what indignation against him who had dishonoured his profession, and defiled the church; yea, what fear of my displeasure, and the rod which I threatened, 1 Cor. iv. 21; yea, what vehement desire to rectify what was amiss in this matter, ver. 7; yea, what zeal for me; yea, what revenge in punishing the delinquent.

In all things, &c.] In the whole of your conduct in this affair since ye have received my letter, ye have approved yourselves to be clear; not only to be clear of contumacy and obstinate persistence in your former conduct, but to have done all in the compass of your power to rectify the abuses which had crept in among you. The Corinthians were not clear, i.e., innocent or void of blame in the fact, but they were clear of all blame in their endeavours to remove the evil.

Verse 12. Not for his cause that had done the wrong.] Viz., the incestuous person.

Nor for his cause that suffered wrong.] Some think the apostle means himself; others, that he means the church at Corinth, the singular being put for the plural; others, the family of the incestuous person; and others, the father of the incestuous person.

But that our care for you—might appear.] It was not to get the delinquent punished, nor merely to do justice to those who had suffered in this business, that the apostle wrote his epistle to them, but that they might have the fullest proof of his fatherly affection for them, and his concern for the honour of God.

Verse 13. For the joy of Titus.] Titus, who had now met St. Paul in Macedonia, gave him the most flattering accounts of the improved state of the Corinthian Church.

Verse 15. And his inward affection.] Those bowels of his—his most tender affection.

Whilst he remembereth the obedience of you all.] This is a very natural picture; he represents Titus as overjoyed, even while he is delivering his account of the Corinthian Church. He expatiated on it with extreme delight, and thereby showed at once both his love for St. Paul and his love for them.

With fear and trembling ye received him.] Ye revered his authority; ye were obedient to his directions; and ye dreaded lest anything should be undone or ill done which he had delivered to you in the name of God.

Verse 16. I have confidence in you, in all things.] It appears that the apostle was now fully persuaded, from the accounts given by Titus, that every scandal had been put away from this church; that the faction which had long distracted and divided them was nearly broken; that all was on the eve of being restored to its primitive purity and excellence; and that their character was now so firmly fixed, that there was no reason to apprehend that they should be again tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

II. CORINTHIANS.

CHAPTER VIII.

The apostle stirs them up to make a collection for the poor Christians at Jerusalem, by the very liberal contributions of the people of Macedonia, for the same purpose, who were comparatively a poor people, 1-5. He tells them that he had desired Titus to finish this good work among them which he had begun; hoping that as they abounded in many excellent gifts and graces, they would abound in this also, 6-8. He exhorts them to this by the example of Jesus Christ, who, though rich, subjected himself to voluntary poverty, that they might be enriched, 9. He shows them that this contribution, which had been long ago begun, should have been long since finished, 10. And that they should do every thing with a ready and willing mind, according to the ability which God had given them; that abundance should not prevail on the one hand, while pinching poverty ruled on the other; but that there should be an equality, 11-14. He shows, from the distribution of the manna in the wilderness, that the design of God was, that every member of his spiritual household should have the necessaries of life, 15. He tells them that he had now sent Titus, and another with him, to Corinth, to complete this great work, 16-22. The character which he gives of Titus and the others employed in this business, 23, 24.

MOREOVER, brethren, we do you to wit of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia;

2 How that, in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and ^atheir deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their ^bliberality.

3 For to their power (I bear record), yea, and beyond their power, they were willing of themselves;

4 Praying us with much intreaty that we would receive the gift, and take upon us ^cthe fellowship of the ministering to the saints.

5 And this they did, not as we hoped, but first gave their ownelves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God;

6 Inasmuch that ^dwe desired Titus, that as he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same ^egrace also.

* Mark xii. 44.—^b Gr. simplicity. Ch. ix. 11.—^c Acts xi. 29. xxiv. 17. Rom. xv. 25, 26. 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 3, 4. Ch. ix. 1.—^d Ver. 17. Ch. xii. 18.—^e Or, gift. Ver. 4, 10.—^f 1 Cor. i. 5. xii. 13.—^g Ch. ix. 8.—

[Verse 1. Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit] We make known unto you. This is plain and intelligible, the other is not so; and the form is now obsolete.

[The grace of God bestowed] Dr. Whitby has made it fully evident that the expression grace of God signifies the charitable contribution made by the churches in Macedonia, to which they were excited by the grace or influence of God upon their hearts; and that the verb cannot signify bestowed on, but given in. This charity is styled the grace of God, either from its exceeding greatness (as the cedars of God and mountains of God signify great cedars and great mountains, Psalm xxxvi. 6, lxxx. 10); or rather it is so called as proceeding from God, who is the dispenser of all good, and the giver of this disposition; for the motive of charity must come from him.

Verse 2. In a great trial of affliction] The Macedonians, though both poor and persecuted, rejoiced exceedingly that an opportunity was afforded them of doing good to their more impoverished and more persecuted brethren.

Verse 3. For to their power, &c.] In their liberality they had no rule but their ability; they believed they were bound to contribute all they could; and even this rule they transgressed, for they went beyond their power—they deprived themselves for a time of the necessaries of life, in order to give to others who were destitute even of necessaries.

Verse 4. Praying us with much intreaty] We had not to solicit them to this great act of kindness; they even entreated us to accept their bounty, and to take the wants of the poor in Judea.

Verse 5. Not as we hoped] They far exceeded our expectations for they consecrated themselves entirely to the work of God; giving themselves and all they possessed first unto the Lord; and then, as they saw that it was the will of God that they should come especially forward in this charitable work, they gave themselves to us, to assist to the uttermost

7 Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see ^athat ye abound in this grace also.

8 ^bI speak not by commandment, but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.

9 For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^cthat, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.

10 And herein ^dI give my advice: for ^ethis is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be ^fforward ^ga year ago.

11 Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have.

in providing relief for the suffering Christians in Judea. [Expected is a better rendering than hoped.]

Verse 6. That we desired Titus] Titus had probably laid the plan of this contribution when he was before at Corinth, according to the direction given by the apostle, 1 Cor. xvi. 1, &c.

Verse 7. As ye abound in every thing] See the note on 1 Cor. i. 5. In faith, crediting the whole testimony of God; in utterance, in doctrine, knowing what to teach; knowledge of God's will, and prudence to direct you in teaching and doing it; in diligence, to amend all that is wrong among you, and to do what is right; and in love to us, whom now ye prize as the apostles of the Lord, and your pastors in him.

[Abound in this grace also.] Be as eminent for your charitable disposition as ye are for your faith, doctrine, knowledge, diligence, and love.

Verse 8. I speak not by commandment] I do not positively order this: I assume no right or authority over your property; what you devote of your substance to charitable purposes must be your own work, and a free-will offering.

[The forwardness of others] Viz., the churches of Macedonia, which had already exerted themselves so very much in this good work.

Verse 9. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ] This was the strongest argument of all; and it is urged home by the apostle with admirable address.

That, though he was rich] The possessor, as he was the creator, of the heavens and the earth; for your sakes he became poor—he emptied himself, and made himself of no reputation, and took upon himself the form of a servant, and humbled himself unto death, even the death of the cross; that ye, through his poverty—through his humiliation and death, might be rich—might regain your forfeited inheritance, and be enriched with every grace of his Holy Spirit, and brought at last to his eternal glory.

Verse 10. Herein I give my advice] For I speak not by way of commandment, verse 8.

12 For^a if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

13 For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened:

14 But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want; that their abundance also may be a supply for your want, that there may be equality:

15 As it is written, ^b He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack.

16 But thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you.

17 For indeed he accepted the ^c exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you.

18 And we have sent with him ^d the brother, whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches;

^a Mark xii. 43, 44. Luke xxi. 3.—^b Exod. xvi. 18.—^c Ver. 6.—^d Ch. xii. 18.—^e 1 Cor. xvi. 3, 4.—^f Or, gift. Ver. 4, 6, 7. Ch. ix. 8.

For this is expedient for you] It is necessary you should do this to preserve a consistency of conduct; for ye began this work a year ago, and it is necessary that ye should complete it as soon as possible.

Not only to do, but also to be forward] Literally, to do and to will; but as the will must be before the deed; the latter verb must be taken here in the sense of delight, as it frequently means in the Old and New Testaments.

Verse 11. A readiness to will, so there may be a performance] Ye have willed and purposed this; now perform it.

Out of that which ye have] Give as God has enabled you; and give as God has disposed you. He requires each man to do as he can; and accepts the will where the means are wanting to perform the deed.

Verse 12. According to that a man hath] According to his real property; not taking that which belongs to his own family, and is indispensably necessary for their support; and not taking that which belongs to others, viz., what he owes to any man.

Verse 13. That other men be eased] I do not design that you should impoverish yourselves in order that others may live affluently.

Verse 14. But by an equality] That you may do to those who are distressed now as, on a change of circumstances, you would wish them to do to you.

That there may be equality] That ye may exert yourselves so in behalf of those poor people that there may be between you an equality in the necessaries of life; your abundance supplying them with that of which they are utterly destitute.

Verse 15. He that had gathered much, had nothing over] See the note on Exod. xvi. 18.

Verse 17. He accepted the exhortation] I advised him to visit you and excite you to this good work, and I found that he was already disposed in his heart to do it; God put this earnest care in the heart of Titus for you, ver. 18.

Verse 18. The brother, whose praise is in the gospel] Who this brother was we cannot tell; some suppose it was St. Luke, who wrote a gospel, and who was the companion of St. Paul in several of his travels; others think it was Silas;

19 And not that only, but who was also ^e chosen of the churches to travel with us with this ^f grace, which is administered by us ^g to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind.

20 Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us:

21 ^h Providing for honest things, not only in the sight of the Lord, but also in the sight of men.

22 And we have sent with them our brother, whom we have oftentimes proved diligent in many things; but now much more diligent, upon the great confidence which ⁱ I have in you.

23 Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner and fellow-helper concerning you: or our brethren be inquired of, they are ^j the messengers of the churches, and the glory of Christ.

24 Wherefore shew ye to them, and before the churches, the proof of your love, and of our ^k boasting on your behalf.

—^e Ch. iv. 15.—^f Rom. xii. 17. Phil. iv. 8. 1 Pet. ii. 12.—^g Or, he hath.—^h Phil. ii. 25.—ⁱ Ch. vii. 14. ix. 2.

others, Barnabas; others, Mark; and others, Apollos.

Verse 19. Chosen of the churches to travel with us] Appointed by a show of hands. This appointment, by the suffrage of the churches, seems to refer more to St. Luke than any one else; unless we suppose he refers to the transaction, Acts xv. 40, 41, and then it would appear that Silas is the person intended.

Your ready mind] Your willingness to relieve them. But, instead of your, our, is the reading of almost all the best MSS. and all the Versions. This is, doubtless, the true reading.

Verse 20. Avoiding this, that no man should blame us] Taking this prudent caution to have witnesses of our conduct, and such as were chosen by the churches themselves, that we might not be suspected of having either embezzled or misapplied their bounty.

Verse 21. Providing for honest things] Taking care to act so as not only to be clear in the sight of God, but also to be clear in the sight of all men; avoiding even the appearance of evil.

Verse 22. We have sent with them] Titus, and probably, Luke; our brother, probably Apollos.

Now much more diligent] Finding that I have the fullest confidence in your complete reformation and love to me, he engages in this business with alacrity, and exceeds even his former diligence.

Verse 23. Whether any do inquire of Titus] Should it be asked, Who is this TITUS? I answer, he is my companion, and my fellow-labourer in reference to you; chap. ii. 13, vii. 6, 7. Should any inquire, Who are these brethren, Luke and Apollos? I answer, They are apostles of the churches, and intensely bent on promoting the glory of Christ.

Verse 24. Wherefore shew ye to them, and before the churches, &c.] Seeing they are persons every way worthy in themselves, and coming to you on such an important occasion, and so highly recommended, receive them affectionately; and let them thus see that the very high character I have given of you is not exaggerated, and that you are as ready in every work of charity as I have stated you to be.

CHAPTER IX.

St. Paul intimates that so ready were the Corinthians to make this charitable contribution, that it was scarcely necessary for him to write, 1, 2. But lest they should not be ready when he came, he had sent the brethren, Titus, &c., beforehand; lest, if any of the Macedonians should come with him, they should find them not prepared, though he had boasted so much of their ready mind, 3-5. He gives them directions how they shall contribute; and the advantage to be gained by it, in the fulfilment of the promises of God, 6-11. He shows them that by this means the poor shall be relieved, God glorified, their Christian temper manifested, and the prayers of many engaged in their behalf, 12-14. And concludes with giving thanks to God for His unspeakable gift, 15.

FOR as touching ^a the ministering to the saints, it is superfluous for me to write to you:
 2 For I know ^b the forwardness of your mind, ^c for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that ^d Achaia was ready a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many.

3 Yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready.

4 Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, ye) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting.

5 Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your ^e bounty, ^f whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness.

6 ^h But this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully.

7 Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; ⁱ not grudgingly, or of necessity: for ^j God loveth a cheerful giver.

Verse 1. It is superfluous for me to write to you] I need not enlarge, having already said enough.

Verse 2. I know the forwardness of your mind] You have already firmly purposed to contribute to the support of the poor and suffering saints.

That Achaia was ready a year ago] The whole of the Morea was anciently called Achaia, the capital of which was Corinth.

Your zeal hath provoked very many.] Hearing that the Corinthians was so intent on the relief of the sufferers in Palestine, other churches, and especially they of Macedonia, came forward the more promptly and liberally.

Verse 3. Yet have I sent the brethren] Titus and his companions, mentioned in the preceding chapter.

Verse 5. Whereof ye had notice before] Instead of spoken of before, several MSS. and Versions have what was promised before. The sense is not very different; probably the latter reading was intended to explain the former.

Bounty, and not as of covetousness.] Had they been backward, strangers might have attributed this to a covetous principle; as it would appear that they were loth to give up their money, and that they parted with it only when they could not for shame keep it any longer.

Verse 6. He which soweth sparingly] This is a plain maxim: no man can expect to reap but in proportion as he has sowed. And here almsgiving is represented as a seed sown, which shall bring forth a crop.

Verse 8. God is able to make all grace abound] We have already seen, chap. viii. 1, that the word in the connexion in which the apostle uses it in these chapters, signifies a charitable gift; here it certainly has the same meaning: God is able to give you, in his mercy, abundance of temporal good; that, having a sufficiency, ye may abound in every good work.

Verse 9. He hath dispersed abroad] Here is still the allusion to the sower. He sows much; not at home merely, or among those with whom he is acquainted, but abroad—among the strangers, whether of his own or of another nation. The quotation is taken from Ps. cxii. 9.

He hath given to the poor] This is the interpretation of he hath scattered abroad; and therefore it is said, his righteousness remaineth for ever—his good work is had in remembrance before God. By righteousness the Jews understand alms-giving. See the note on Matt. vi. 1.

8 ^k And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work:

9 (As it is written, ^l He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness remaineth for ever.

10 Now he that ^m ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your ⁿ righteousness;)

11 Being enriched in every thing to all ^o bountifulness, ^p which causeth through us thanksgiving to God.

12 For the administration of this service not only ^q supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings unto God;

13 Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they ^r glorify God for your professed subjection unto the gospel of Christ, and for your liberal ^s distribution unto them, and unto all men;

14 And by their prayer for you, which long after you for the exceeding ^t grace of God in you.

15 Thanks be unto God ^u for his unspeakable gift.

Verse 10. Now he that ministereth seed to the sower] The sower, as we have already seen, is he that gives alms of what he hath; and God, who requires him to give these alms, is here represented as providing him with the means.

The word, he that ministereth, is very emphatic; it signifies he who leads up the chorus; it means also to join to, associate, to supply or furnish one thing after another so that there be no want or chasm. Thus God is represented, in the course of his providence, associating and connecting causes and effects; keeping everything in its proper place and state of dependance on another, and all upon himself; so that summer and winter, heat and cold, seed-time and harvest, regularly succeed each other. Thus God leads up this grand chorus of causes and effects: provides the seed to the hand of the sower; gives him skill to discern the times when the earth should be prepared for the grain, and when the grain should be sowed; blesses the earth, and causes it to bring forth and bud, so that it may again minister seed to the sower and bread to the eater; and, by a watchful providence, preserves everything. The figure is beautiful, and shows us the grand system of causes and effects, all directed by and under the immediate guidance and government of God himself.

The fruits of your righteousness] Your beneficence; see the note on Matt. vi. 1, already referred to.

Verse 11. Being enriched in everything] Observe, Why does God give riches? That they may be applied to his glory, and the good of men. Why does he increase riches? That those who have them may exercise all bountifulness.

Verse 12. For the administration of this service] The poor are relieved, see the hand of God in this relief, and give God the glory of his grace.

Verse 13. By the experiment of this ministration] In this, and in the preceding and following verses, the apostle enumerates the good effects that would be produced by their liberal almsgiving to the poor saints at Jerusalem.

Verse 14. The exceeding grace of God in you.] By the superabounding or transcending grace, of God, which was in them, the apostle most evidently means the merciful and charitable disposition which they had towards the suffering saints.

Verse 15. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.] Some contend that Christ only is here intended; others, that the almsgiving is meant.

CHAPTER X.

The apostle vindicates himself against the aspersions cast on his person by the false apostle; and takes occasion to mention his spiritual might and authority, 1-6. He shows them the impropriety of judging after the outward appearance, 7. Again refers to his apostolical authority, and informs them that when he again comes among them he will show himself in his deeds as powerful as his letters intimated, 8-11. He shows that these false teachers sat down in other men's labours, having neither authority nor influence from God to break up new ground, while he and the apostles in general had the regions assigned to them through which they were to sow the seed of life; and that he had never entered into any place where the work was made ready to his hand by others, 12-16. He concludes with intimating that the glorying of those false apostles was bad; that they had nothing but self commendation; and that they who glory should glory in the Lord, 17, 18.

NOW 'I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness and gentleness of Christ, who^b in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you:

2 But I beseech you, that I may not be bold when I am present with that confidence, wherewith I think to be bold against some, which^c I think of us as if we walked according to the flesh.

3 For though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh:

4 ('For the weapons^d of our warfare are not carnal, but^e mighty^f through God to the pulling down of strongholds;)

5 Casting down^g imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ;

6 And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience, when^h your obedience is fulfilled.

Verse 1. I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness] Having now finished his directions and advices relative to the collection for the poor, he resumes his argument relative to the false apostle, who had gained considerable influence by representing St. Paul as despicable in his person, his ministry, and his influence.

Who in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold toward you] He seems to quote these as the words of his calumniator. The insinuation is, that when there was danger or opposition at hand, St. Paul acted with great obsequiousness, fearing for his person and authority, lest he should lose his secular influence.

Verse 2. Some, which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh.] Acting as a man who had worldly ends in view, and would use any means in order to accomplish them.

Verse 3. Though we walk in the flesh] That is: Although I am in the common condition of human nature, and must live as a human being, yet I do not war after the flesh—I do not act the coward or the poltroon, as they insinuate.

Verse 4. The weapons of our warfare] The apostle often uses the metaphor of a warfare to represent the life and trials of a Christian minister.

Are not carnal.] Here he refers to the means used by the false apostle in order to secure his party; he calumniated St. Paul, traduced the truth, preached false and licentious doctrines, and supported these with sophistical reasonings.

But mighty through God.] Our doctrines are true and pure, they come from God and lead to him, and he accompanies them with his mighty power to the hearts of those who hear them; and the strongholds—the apparently solid and cogent reasoning of the philosophers, we, by these doctrines, pull down; and thus the fornications of heathenism are destroyed, and the cause of Christ triumphs wherever we come; and we put to flight the armies of the aliens.

Verse 5. Casting down imaginations] Reasonings or opinions. The Greek philosophers valued themselves especially on their ethic systems, in which their reasonings appeared to be very profound and conclusive; but they were 7 Do ye look on things after the outward appearance? If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's, let him of himself think this again, that, as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's.

8 For though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, which the Lord hath given us for edification, and not for your destruction, I should not be ashamed:

9 That I may not seem as if I would terrify you by letters.

10 For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful; but his bodily presence is weak, and his speech contemptible.

11 Let such an one think this, that, such as we are in word by letters when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present.

12 For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves: but they, measuring themselves by obliged to assume principles which were either such as did not exist, or were false in themselves, as the whole of their mythologic system most evidently was; truly, from what remains of them, we see that their metaphysics were generally bombast; and as to their philosophy, it was in general good for nothing.

Every high thing] Even the pretendedly sublime doctrines, for instance, of Plato, Aristotle, and the Stoics in general, fell before the simple preaching of Christ crucified.

The knowledge of God.] The doctrine of the unity and eternity of the Divine Nature, which was opposed by the plurality of their idols, and the generation of their gods, and their men-made deities. It is amazing how feeble a resistance heathenism made, by argument or reasoning, against the doctrine of the gospel! It instantly shrunk from the divine light, and called on the secular power to contend for it!

Bringing into captivity every thought] HEATHENISM could not recover itself; in vain did its thousands of altars smoke with reiterated hecatombs, their demons were silent, and their idols were proved to be nothing in the world.

The obedience of Christ] Subjection to idols was annihilated by the progress of the gospel among the heathens; and they soon had but one Lord, and his name one.

Verse 6. And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience] I am ready, through this mighty armour of God, to punish those opposers of the doctrine of Christ, and the disobedience which has been produced by them.

When your obedience is fulfilled.] When you have, in the fullest manner, discountenanced those men, and separated yourselves from their communion. The apostle was not in haste to pull up the tares, lest he should pull up the wheat also.

Verse 7. Do ye look on things after the outward appearance?] Do not be carried away with appearances; do not be satisfied with show and parade.

If any man trust to himself that he is Christ's] Here, as in several other places of this and the preceding epistle, the themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, ^aare not wise.

13 ^bBut we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the ^crule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.

14 For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you: ^dfor we are come as far as to you also in preaching the gospel of Christ:

^aOr, understand it not.—^bVer. 15.—^cOr, line.—^d1 Cor. iii. 5, 10. iv. 15. ix. 1.—^eRom. xv. 20.—^fOr, magnified in you.—^gOr, rule.—

any or certain person, most evidently refers to the false apostle, who made so much disturbance in the church.

Let him of himself] Without any authority, certainly, from God; but, as he arrogates to himself the character of a minister of Christ, let him acknowledge that even so we are Christ's ministers; and that I have, by my preaching, and the miracles which I have wrought, given the fullest proof that I am especially commissioned by him.

Verse 8. For though I should boast, &c.] I have a greater authority and spiritual power than I have yet shown, both to edify and to punish; but I employ this for your edification in righteousness, and not for the destruction of any delinquent.

Verse 9. That I may not seem, &c.] This is an elliptical sentence, and may be supplied thus: I have not used this authority; nor will I add any more concerning this part of the subject, lest I should seem, as my adversary has insinuated, to wish to terrify you by my letters.

Verse 10. For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful] He boasts of high powers, and that he can do great things.

But his bodily presence is weak] When you behold the man, you would find him a feeble, contemptible mortal; and when ye hear him speak, his speech, probably, his doctrine, is good for nothing; his person, matter, and manner, are altogether uninteresting, unimpressive, and too contemptible to be valued by the wise and the learned. This seems to be the spirit and design of this slander.

Verse 11. Such as we are in word] A threatening of this kind would doubtless alarm the false apostle; and it is very likely that he did not await the apostle's coming, as he would not be willing to try the fate of Elymas.

Verse 12. We dare not make ourselves, &c.] As if he had said: I dare neither associate with, nor compare myself to, those who are full of self-commendation. Some think this to be an ironical speech.

But they, measuring themselves by themselves] As they dare not compare themselves with the true apostles of Christ, they compare themselves with each other; and, as they have no perfect standard, they can have no excellence; nor can they ever attain true wisdom, which is not to be had from looking at what we are, but to what we should be; and if without a directory, what we should be will never appear, and consequently our ignorance must continue.

Verse 13. Things without our measure] There is a great deal of difficulty in this and the three following verses, and there is a great diversity among the MSS.; and which is the true reading can scarcely be determined. Our Version is perhaps the plainest that can be made of the text. By the measure mentioned here, it seems as if the apostle meant the commission he received from God to preach the gospel to the Gentiles; a measure or district that extended through all Asia Minor and Greece, down to Achaia, where Corinth was situated, a measure to reach even unto you. But the expressions in the verses are all agonistical, and taken from the stadium or race-course in the Olympic and Isthmian Games. The measure was the length of the course; and the rule or line, ver. 15 and 16, was probably the same with the white line, which marked out the boundaries of the stadium;

15 Not boasting of things without our measure, that is, of other men's labours; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly, 16 To preach the gospel in the regions beyond you, and not to boast in another man's line of things made ready to our hand.

17 ^aBut he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.

18 For ^bnot he that commendeth himself is approved, but ^cwhom the Lord commendeth.

—^aIsa. lxx. 16. Jer. ix. 24. 1 Cor. i. 31.—^bProv. xxvii. 2.—^cRom. ii. 29. 1 Cor. iv. 5.

and the verbs reach unto, stretch out, &c., are all references to the exertions made to win the race.

Verse 14. For we stretch not ourselves beyond] We have not proceeded straight from Macedonia through Thessaly, and across the Adriatic gulf into Italy, which would have led us beyond you westward; but knowing the mind of our God we left this direct path, and came southward through Greece down into Achaia, and there we planted the gospel. The false apostle has therefore got into our province, and entered into our labours, and there boasts as if the conversion of the heathen Achaians had been his own work.

Verse 15. Not boasting of things without our measure] We speak only of the work which God has done by us; for we have never attempted to enter into other men's labours, and we study to convert those regions assigned to us by the Holy Spirit. We enter the course lawfully, and run according to rule.

We shall be enlarged by you] The original probably signifies here to be praised or commended; and the sense would be this: We hope that shortly, on your gaining an increase of true religion, after your long distractions and divisions, you will plainly see that we are the true messengers of God to you; and that in all your intercourse with your neighbours, or foreign parts, you will speak of this gospel preached by us as a glorious system of saving truth; and that, in consequence, the heathen countries around you will be the better prepared to receive our message; and thus our rule or district will be abundantly extended.

Verse 16. To preach the gospel in the regions beyond you] He probably refers to those parts of the Morea, such as Sparta, &c., that lay southward of them, and to Italy, which lay on the west; for it does not appear that he considered his measure or province to extend to Libya, or any part of Africa.

Not to boast in another man's line] So very scrupulous was the apostle not to build on another man's foundation, that he would not even go to those places where other apostles were labouring. He appears to think that every apostle had a particular district or province of the heathen world allotted to him, and which God commissioned him to convert to the Christian faith. No doubt every apostle was influenced in the same way; and this was a wise order of God; for by these means the gospel was more quickly spread through the heathen provinces than it otherwise would have been.

Verse 17. He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord.] Even the genuine apostle, who has his commission immediately from God himself, takes no praise to himself from the prosperity of his work, but gives it all to God. How little cause then have your uncommissioned men to boast, to whom God has assigned no province, and who only boast in another man's line of things made ready to their hands!

Verse 18. Not he that commendeth himself] Not the person who makes a parade of his own attainments; who preaches himself, and not Christ Jesus the Lord; and, far from being your servant for Christ's sake, affects to be your ruler; not such a one shall be approved of God, by an especial blessing on his labours; but he whom the Lord commendeth, by giving him the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit, and converting the heathen by his ministry.

CHAPTER XI.

The apostle apologizes for expressing his jealousy relative to the true state of the Corinthians, still fearing lest their minds should have been drawn aside from the simplicity of the gospel, 1-3. From this he takes occasion to extol his own ministry, which had been without charge to them, having been supported by the churches of Macedonia while he preached the gospel at Corinth, 4-11. Gives the character of the false apostles, 12-15. Shows what reasons he has to boast of secular advantages of birth, education, divine call to the ministry, labours in that ministry, grievous persecutions, great sufferings, and extraordinary hazards, 16-33.

WOULD to God ye could bear with me a little in ^amy folly: and indeed ^bbear with me.

2 For I am ^cjealous over you with godly jealousy: for ^dI have espoused you to one husband, ^ethat I may present you ^fas a chaste virgin to Christ.

3 But I fear, lest by any means, as ^gthe serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds ^hbe corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

4 For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached; or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received; or ⁱanother gospel, which ye have not accepted; ye might well bear ^jwith him.

5 For I suppose ^kI was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles.

Verse 1. Would to God ye could bear with] As the word God is not mentioned here, it would have been much better to have translated the passage literally thus: I wish ye could bear a little with me.

In my folly] In my seeming folly; for, being obliged to vindicate his ministry, it was necessary that he should speak much of himself, his sufferings, and his success.

Verse 2. I am jealous over you, &c.] The apostle evidently alludes either to the shoshabinim or paranymphs among the Hebrews, whose office is largely explained in the notes on John iii. 29.

That I may present you as a chaste virgin] The allusion is still kept up; and there seems to be a reference to Lev. xxi. 14, that the high priest must not marry any one that was not a pure virgin.

Verse 3. As the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety] This is a strong reflection on the false apostle and his teaching: he was subtle, and by his subtlety he was enabled to corrupt the minds of the people from the simplicity of the gospel of Christ; or, to follow the metaphor, he had seduced the pure, chaste, well educated virgin, from her duty, affection, and allegiance to her one only true husband, the high priest, Jesus Christ. And here he seems to intimate that the serpent had seduced the mind of Eve from her affections and allegiance to Adam, her true husband; and certainly from God, her creator and governor.

Verse 4. For if he that cometh] The false apostle, who came after St. Paul had left Corinth.

Preacheth another Jesus] Who can save more fully and more powerfully than that Jesus whom I have preached.

Or if ye receive another spirit] And if in consequence of believing in this new Saviour ye receive another Spirit, the gifts, graces, and consolations of which are greater than those which ye have received from the Holy Ghost, which has been given to you on your believing on the Christ whom we preached.

Or another gospel] Containing more privileges, spiritual advantages, and stronger excitements to holiness, than that which we have preached and which ye have accepted, ye might well bear with him. This would be a sufficient reason why you should not only bear with him, but prefer him to me.

Verse 5. I was not—behind the very chiefest apostles.]

8 I robbed other churches, taking wages of them, to do you service.

9 And when I was present with you, and wanted, ^pI was chargeable to no man: for that which was lacking to me ^qthe brethren which came from Macedonia supplied: and in all things I have kept myself ^rfrom being burdensome unto you, and so will I keep myself.

That is: The most eminent of the apostles have not preached Christ, ministered the Spirit, explained and enforced the doctrines of the gospel in a more powerful and effectual manner than I have done.

Verse 6. But though I be rude in speech] Though I speak like a common, unlettered man, in plain unadorned phrase, studying none of the graces of eloquence; yet I am not unskilled in the most profound knowledge of God, of spiritual and eternal truths, of the nature of the human soul, and the sound truths of the gospel-system: ye yourselves are witnesses of this, as in all these things I have been thoroughly manifested among you.

Verse 7. Have I committed an offence in abasing myself] Have I transgressed in labouring with my hands that I might not be chargeable to you? and getting my deficiencies supplied by contributions from other churches, while I was employed in labouring for your salvation?

Verse 8. I robbed other churches] This part of the sentence is explained by the latter, taking wages to do you service. The word signifies the pay of money and provisions given daily to a Roman soldier.

Verse 9. And when I was present with you] For when I was with you, and was in want, I was chargeable to no man.

The brethren which came from Macedonia] He probably refers to the supplies which he received from the church at Philippi, which was in Macedonia.

Verse 10. As the truth of Christ is in me] The truth of Christ is in me. That is: I speak as becomes a Christian man, and as influenced by the gospel of Christ. It is a solemn form of asseveration, if not to be considered in the sense of an oath.

In the regions of Achaia.] The whole of the Peloponnesus, or Morea, in which the city of Corinth stood.

Verse 11. Wherefore?] Why have I acted thus? and why do I propose to continue to act thus? is it because I love you not, and will not permit you to contribute to my support? God knoweth the contrary; I do most affectionately love you.

Verse 12. But what I do, &c.] I act thus that I may cut off occasion of glorying, boasting, or calumniating from them—the false prophets and his partisans, who seek occasion—who would be glad that I should become chargeable to you, 12 But what I do, that I will do, * that I may cut off occasion from them which desire occasion; that wherein they glory, they may be found even as we.

13 For such ^b are false apostles, ^c deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ.

14 And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into ^d an angel of light.

15 Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ^e ministers of righteousness; ^f whose end shall be according to their works.

16 * I say again, Let no man think me a fool; if otherwise, yet as a fool ^g receive me, that I may boast myself a little.

17 That which I speak, ^h I speak it not after the Lord, but as it were foolishly, ⁱ in this confidence of boasting.

18 ^k Seeing that many glory after the flesh, I will glory also.

19 For ye suffer fools gladly, ^l seeing ye yourselves are wise.

that it might in some sort vindicate them who exact much from you; for they bring you into bondage, and devour you, ver. 20.

Nothing could mortify these persons more than to find that the apostle did take nothing, and was resolved to take nothing; while they were fleeing the people.

Verse 13. For such are false apostles] Persons who pretend to be apostles, but have no mission from Christ.

Deceitful workers] They do preach and labour, but they have nothing but their own emolument in view.

Transforming themselves] Assuming as far as they possibly can, consistently with their sinister views, the habit, manner, and doctrine of the apostles of Christ.

Verse 14. And no marvel] And no wonder; it need not surprise you what the disciples do, when you consider the character of the master.

Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.] As in ver. 3, the apostle had the history of the temptation and fall of man particularly in view, it is very likely that here he refers to the same thing. In whatever form Satan appeared to our first mother, his pretensions and professions gave him the appearance of a good angel; and by pretending that Eve should get a great increase of light, that is, wisdom and understanding, he deceived her, and led her to transgress.

Verse 15. Whose end shall be according to their works.] A bad way leads to a bad end. The way of sin is the way to hell.

Verse 16. Let no man think me a fool] As the apostle was going to enter into a particular detail of his qualifications, natural, acquired, and spiritual; and particularly of his labours and sufferings; he thinks it necessary to introduce the discourse once more as he did, ver. 1.

Verse 17. I speak it not after the Lord] Were it not for the necessity under which I am laid to vindicate my apostleship, my present glorying would be inconsistent with my Christian profession of humility, and knowing no one after the flesh.

Verse 18. Seeing that many glory after the flesh] Boast of external and secular things.

Verse 19. Ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise.] A very fine irony. Ye are so profoundly wise as to be able to discern that I am a fool. Well, it would be dishonourable to you as wise men to fall out with a fool; you will therefore gladly bear with his impertinence and foolishness because of your own profound wisdom.

Verse 20. For ye suffer] As you are so meek and gentle as to submit to be brought into bondage, to have your property devoured, your goods taken away, yourselves laid in the dust, so that others may exalt themselves over you, yea, and will bear from those the most degrading indignity; then, of course, you will bear with one who has never insulted, defrauded, devoured, taken of you, exalted himself 20 For ye suffer, ^a if a man bring you into bondage, if a man devour you, if a man take of you, if a man exalt himself, if a man smite you on the face.

21 I speak as concerning reproach, ^b as though we had been weak. Howbeit ^c whereinsoever any is bold (I speak foolishly), I am bold also.

against you, or offered you any kind of indignity; and who only wishes you to bear his confident boasting, concerning matters which he can substantiate.

Verse 21. I speak as concerning reproach] It is necessary that I should show that such men have not even one natural good that they can boast of beyond me.

Verse 22. Are they Hebrews?] Speaking the sacred language, and reading in the congregation from the Hebrew scriptures? the same is my own language.

Are they Israelites?] Regularly descended from Jacob, and not from Esau? I am also one.

Are they the seed of Abraham?] Circumcised, and in the bond of the covenant? So am I.

Verse 23. Are they ministers of Christ?] So we find that these were professors of Christianity.

I am more] More of a minister of Christ than they are, and have given fuller proofs of it.

In labours more abundant] Far from sitting down to take my ease in a church already gathered into Christ; I travel incessantly, preach everywhere, and at all risks, in order to get the heathen brought from the empire of darkness into the kingdom of God's beloved Son.

In stripes above measure] Being beaten by the heathen, who had no particular rule according to which they scourged criminals; and we find, from Acts xvi. 22, 23, that they beat Paul unmercifully, with many stripes.

In prisons more frequent] See Acts xxi. 11, and the whole of the apostle's history; and his long imprisonment of at least two years at Rome, Acts xxviii.

In deaths oft.] That is, in the most imminent dangers. See 1 Cor. xv. 31; 2 Cor. iv. 11.

Verse 24. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one.] That is, he was five times scourged by the Jews, whose law (Deut. xxv. 3) allowed forty stripes; but they, pretending to be lenient, and to act within the letter of the law, inflicted but thirty-nine.

Verse 25. Thrice was I beaten with rods] This was under the Roman government, as their victors beat criminals in this way. We hear of the apostle's being treated thus once namely at Philippi, Acts xvi. 22.

Once was I stoned] Namely, at Lystra, Acts xiv. 19, &c. A night and a day I have been in the deep] To what this refers we cannot tell; it is generally supposed that in some shipwreck not on record the apostle had saved himself on a plank, and was a whole day and night on the sea, tossed about at the mercy of the waves.

Verse 26. In journeyings often] He means the particular journeys which he took to different places, for the purpose of propagating the gospel.

In perils of waters] Exposed to great dangers in crossing rivers; for of rivers the original must be understood.

Of robbers] Judea itself, and perhaps every other country, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren;

27 In weariness and painfulness, ^ain watchings often, ^bin hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness.

28 Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, ^cthe care of all the churches.

was grievously infested by banditti of this kind; and no doubt the apostle in his frequent peregrinations was often attacked, but, being poor and having nothing to lose, he passed unhurt, though not without great danger.

In perils by mine own countrymen] The Jews had the most rooted antipathy to him, because they considered him an apostate from the true faith, and also the means of perverting many others.

In perils by the heathen] In the heathen provinces whither he went to preach the gospel.

In perils in the city] The different seditions raised against him; particularly in Jerusalem, to which Ephesus and Damascus may be added.

Perils in the wilderness] Uninhabited countries through which he was obliged to pass in order to reach from city to city.

Perils in the sea] The different voyages he took in narrow seas, such as the Mediterranean, about dangerous coasts, and without compass.

False brethren] Persons who joined themselves to the church, pretending faith in Christ, but intending to act as spies, hoping to get some matter of accusation against him. He no doubt suffered much also from apostates.

Verse 27. In weariness and painfulness] Had not St. Paul been deeply convinced of the truth and absolute necessity of the Christian religion, he could not have continued to expose himself to such hardships.

Verse 28. Beside those things that are without] Independently of all these outward things, I have innumerable troubles, and mental oppressions.

Which cometh upon me] This continual press of business; this insurrection of cases to be heard, solved, and determined, relative to the doctrine, discipline, state, persecution, and supply of all the churches.

30 If I must needs glory, ^aI will glory of the things which concern mine infirmities.

31 ^bThe God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is blessed for evermore, knoweth that I lie not.

32 ^cIn Damascus the governor under Aretas, the king, kept the ^dcity of the Damascenes with a garrison, desirous to apprehend me:

Verse 29. Who is weak] What church is there under persecution, with which I do not immediately sympathize? or who, from his weakness in the faith, and scrupulousness of conscience, is likely to be stumbled, or turned out of the way, to whom I do not condescend and whose burden I do not bear?

Who is offended] Or likely to be turned out of the way, and I burn not with zeal to restore and confirm him? This seems to be the sense of these different questions.

Verse 30. I will glory—which concern mine infirmities.] I will not boast of my natural or acquired powers; neither in what God has done by me; but rather in what I have suffered for him.

Verse 31. The God and Father of our Lord] Here is a very solemn asseveration; an appeal to the ever blessed God for the truth of what he asserts. St. Paul's appeal to God is in the same spirit as his most earnest prayer.

Verse 32. In Damascus the governor under Aretas] For the transaction to which the apostle refers see Acts ix. 23. As to king Aretas, there were three of this name. The third, who is the person supposed to be referred to here, was the father-in-law of Herod Antipas, of whom see the notes, Acts ix. 23, &c.

The governor] Who this ethnarch was we cannot tell. The word ethnarch signifies the governor of a province, under a king or emperor.

Desirous to apprehend me] The enemies of the apostle might have represented him to the governor as a dangerous spy, employed by the Romans.

Verse 33. Through a window in a basket] Probably the house was situated on the wall of the city. See the notes on this history, Acts ix. 23-25.

CHAPTER XII.

St. Paul mentions some wonderful revelations which he had received from the Lord, 1-5. He speaks of his sufferings in connexion with these extraordinary revelations, that his character might be duly estimated, 6. That he might not be too much exalted, a messenger of Satan is sent to buffet him; his prayer for deliverance, and the divine answer, 7-9. He exults in sufferings and reproaches, and vindicates his apostleship, 10-13. Promises to come and visit them, 14, 15. Answers some objections, 16-18. And expresses his apprehensions that when he visits them he shall find many evils and disorders among them, 19-21.

IT is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. ^aI will come to visions and revelations of the Lord.

2 I knew a man ^bin Christ about fourteen years ago, (whether in the body I cannot tell; or

^a Gr. For I will come.—^b Rom. xvi. 7. Ch. v. 17. Gal. i. 22.

Verse 1. It is not expedient for me] The plain meaning of the apostle, in this and the preceding chapter, in reference to glorying is, that though to boast in any attainments, or in what God did by him, was in all possible cases to be avoided, as being contrary to the humility and simplicity of the gospel; yet the circumstances in which he was found, in reference to the Corinthian Church, and his detractors there, rendered it absolutely necessary; not for his personal vindication, whether out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth:) such an one ^ccaught up to the third heaven.

3 And I knew such a man, (whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth:)

cation, but for the honour of the gospel, the credit of which was certainly at stake.

I will come to visions] Symbolical representations of spiritual and celestial things, in which matters of the deepest importance are exhibited to the eye of the mind by a variety of emblems, the nature and properties of which serve to illustrate those spiritual things.

Revelations] A manifestation of things not before known, heard unspeakable words, which it is not ^a lawful for a man to utter.

5 Of such an one will I glory: ^b yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities.

6 For ^c though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

7 And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a ^d thorn in the flesh, ^e the messenger of Satan, to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure.

8 ^f For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me.

9 And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly, therefore, ^g will I rather glory in my infirmities, ^h that the power of Christ may rest upon me.

^a Or, possible.—^b Ch. xi. 30.—^c Ch. x. 8. xi. 16.—^d See Ezek. xxviii. 24. Gal. iv. 13, 14.—^e Job ii. 7. Luke xiii. 16.—^f See Deut. iii. 23. 27. Matt. xxvi. 44.—^g Ch. xi. 30.—^h 1 Pet. iv. 14.—ⁱ Rom. v. 3. Ch. vii. 4.—^j Ch. xiii. 4.—^k Ch. i. 1, 16, 17.—^l Ch. xi. 5. Gal. ii.

and such as God alone can make known, because they are a part of his own inscrutable counsels.

Verse 2. I knew a man in Christ] I knew a Christian, or a Christian man; for to such alone God now revealed himself, for vision and prophecy had been shut up from the Jews.

Fourteen years ago] Allowing this epistle to have been written some time in the year 57, fourteen years counted backward will lead this transaction to the year 42 or 43, which was about the time that Barnabas brought Paul from Tarsus to Antioch, Acts xi. 25, 26, and when he and Paul were sent by the Church of Antioch with alms to the poor Christians at Jerusalem. It is very possible that, on this journey, or while in Jerusalem, he had this vision, which was intended to be the means of establishing him in the faith, and supporting him in the many trials and difficulties through which he was to pass. This vision the apostle had kept secret for fourteen years.

Whether in the body I cannot tell] That the apostle was in an ecstasy or trance, something like that of Peter, Acts x. 9, &c., there is reason to believe; but we know that his being carried literally into heaven was possible to the Almighty. But as he could not decide himself, it would be ridiculous in us to attempt it.

Caught up to the third heaven.] He appeared to have been carried up to this place; but whether bodily he could not tell, or whether the spirit were not separated for the time, and taken up to the third heaven, he could not tell.

The third heaven—The Jews talk of seven heavens, and Mohammed has received the same from them; but these are not only fabulous but absurd.

In the sacred writings three heavens only are mentioned. The first is the atmosphere, what appears to be intended by rekia, the firmament or expansion, Gen. i. 6. The second, the starry heaven, where are the sun, moon, planets, and stars; but these two are often expressed under the one term shamayim, the two heavens, or expansions; and in Gen. i. 17, they appear to be both expressed by rekia hashshamayim, the firmament of heavens. And, thirdly, the place of the blessed, or the throne of the divine glory, probably expressed by the words shemei hashshamayim, the heavens of heavens. But on these subjects the Scripture affords us but little light: and on this distinction the reader is not desired to rely.

Ascending to heaven, or being caught up to heaven, is a form of speech among the Jewish writers, to express the highest degrees of inspiration. They often say of Moses that he ascended on high, ascended on the firmament, ascended to heaven; where it is evident they mean only by it that he was favoured with the nearest intimacy with God, and the highest revelations relative to his will, &c. If we may understand St. Paul thus, it will remove much of the difficulty from this place; and perhaps the unspeakable words, ver. 4, are thus to be understood. He had the most sublime communications from God, such as would be improper to mention; though it is very likely that we have the substance

10 Therefore ⁱ I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: ^j for when I am weak, then am I strong.

11 I am become ^k a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for ^l in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though ^m I be nothing.

12 ⁿ Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds.

13 ^o For what is it wherein you were inferior to other churches, except it be that ^p I myself was not burdensome to you? forgive me ^q this wrong.

14 ^r Behold, the third time I am ready to come to you; and I will not be burdensome to you: for ^s I seek not yours, but you: ^t for the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children.

15 And ^u I will very gladly spend and be spent of these in his epistles. Indeed, the two epistles before us seem, in many places, to be the effect of most extraordinary revelations.

Verse 4. Caught up into paradise] Among Christian writers paradise generally means the place of the blessed, or the state of separate spirits. Whether the third heaven and paradise be the same place we cannot absolutely say; they probably are not; and it is likely that St. Paul, at the time referred to, had at least two of these raptures.

Which it is not lawful for a man to utter.] It is probable that the apostle refers to some communication concerning the divine nature and the divine economy, of which he was only to make a general use in his preaching and writing. No doubt that what he learned at this time formed the basis of all his doctrines.

Verse 5. Of such an one will I glory] Through modesty he does not mention himself, though the account can be understood of no other person; for, did he mean any other, the whole account would be completely irrelevant.

Verse 6. I shall not be a fool] Who that had got such honour from God would have been fourteen years silent on the subject?

Lest any man should think of me above] It is a rare gift to discern when to speak, and when to be silent; and to know when enough is said on a subject, neither too little nor too much.

Verse 7. And lest I should be exalted] There were three evils to be guarded against: 1. The contempt of his gifts and call by his enemies. 2. The overweening fondness of his friends. And, 3. Self-exaltation.

A thorn in the flesh] The word signifies a stake; and it is used to signify the most oppressive afflictions. Whatever it was, it was in the flesh, i. e., of an outward kind. It was neither sin nor sinfulness, for this could not be given him to prevent his being exalted above measure; for sin never had and never can have this tendency. What this thorn in the flesh might be has given birth to a multitude of conjectures: Tertullian thought it the ear-ache; Chrysostom, the head-ache; Cyprian, many and grievous bodily torments. I believe the apostle to refer simply to the distresses he had endured through the opposition he met with at Corinth; which were as painful and grievous to him as a thorn in his flesh, or his being bound to a stake; for, if he could have devoted himself to destruction, Rom. ix. 3, for his rebellious and unbelieving countrymen, what must he have suffered on account of an eminent church being perverted and torn to pieces by a false teacher? God permitted this to keep the apostle humble, and at last completely delivered the church out of the hands and influence of this deceiver; none, not even the incestuous person, having been turned finally out of the way by the false doctrines there preached.

The messenger of Satan] Another mode of expressing what he calls the thorn in the flesh; and he seems most plainly to refer to the false apostle at Corinth. SATAN, the *for^b you; though^c the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved.

16 But be it so, ^dI did not burden you; nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile.

17 ^dDid I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?

18 ^dI desired Titus, and with him I sent a ^ebrother. Did Titus make a gain of you? walked we not in the same spirit? walked we not in the same steps?

19 ^hAgain, think ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? ⁱwe speak before God in Christ: but adversary of God's truth, sent a man to preach lies at the same place, and turn the Church of God into his own synagogue; and by his teaching lies and calumnies the apostle was severely buffeted. We need seek no other sense for these expressions. Many, however, think that the apostle had really some bodily infirmity that rendered him contemptible, and was the means of obstructing the success of his ministry; and that the false apostle availed himself of this to set St. Paul at nought, and to hold him out to ridicule.

No infirmity of body nor corporeal sufferings can affect and distress a minister of the gospel, equally to the perversion or scattering of a flock, which were the fruit of innumerable labours, watchings, fastings, prayers, and tears.

Verse 8. I besought the Lord] That is, Christ, as the next verse absolutely proves, and the Socinians themselves confess. And if Christ be an object of prayer in such a case as this, or indeed in any case, it is a sure proof of his divinity; for only an Omniscent Being can be made an object of prayer.

Thrice] Several suppose this to be a certain number for an uncertain; as if he had said, I often besought Christ to deliver me from this tormentor: or, which is perhaps more likely, the apostle may refer to three solemn, fixed, and fervent applications made to Christ at different times; at the last of which he received the answer which he immediately subjoins.

Verse 9. My grace is sufficient for thee] Thou shalt not be permitted to sink under these afflictions. Thy enemies shall not be able to prevail against thee.

My strength is made perfect in weakness.] The more, and the more violently, thou art afflicted and tried, being upheld by my power, and prospered in all thy labours, the more eminently will my power be seen and acknowledged.

Will I rather glory in my infirmities] Therefore, his infirmities do not mean his corruptions, or sins, or sinfulness of any kind; for it would be blasphemous for any man to say, I will rather glory that God leaves my corruptions in me, than that he should take them away.

That the power of Christ may rest upon me.] That it may overshadow me as a tent or tabernacle; affording me shelter, protection, safety, and rest.

Verse 10. Therefore I take pleasure] I not only endure them patiently, but am pleased when they occur; for I do it for Christ's sake—on his account; for on his account I suffer. For when I am weak—most oppressed with trials and afflictions, then am I strong; God supporting my mind with his most powerful influences, causing me to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Verse 11. I am become a fool in glorying] It is not the part of a wise or gracious man to boast; but ye have compelled me—I have been obliged to do it, in order to vindicate the cause of God.

I ought to have been commended of you] You should have vindicated both myself and my ministry against the detractors that are among you.

Though I be nothing.] Though I have been thus set at nought by your false apostle; and though, in consequence of what he has said, some of you have been ready to consider me as nothing—what we call good for nothing. This must be the meaning of the apostle, as the following verses prove.

Verse 12. The signs of an apostle were wrought among you] I have given the fullest proof of my divine mission by various signs, wonders, and miracles, and by that patience which I have manifested towards you: though I had power from God to inflict punishment on the transgressors, I have in every case forborne to do it.

I we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying.

20 For I fear, lest, when I come, I shall not find you such as I would; and that ^kI shall be found unto you such as ye would not: lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults:

21 And lest, when I come again, my God ^lwill humble me among you, and that I shall bewail many ^mwhich have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness and ⁿfornication and lasciviousness which they have committed.

x. 33.—^k1 Cor. iv. 21. Ch. x. 2. xiii. 2, 10.—Ch. ii. 1, 4.—Ch. xii. 2.—^l1 Cor. v. 1.

Verse 13. For what is it wherein you were inferior] This is a fine, forcible, yet delicate stroke. It was your duty and your interest to have supported your apostle; other churches have done so: I did not require this from you: in this respect all other churches are superior to you. I am the cause of your inferiority, by not giving you an opportunity of ministering to my necessities: forgive me the wrong I have done you.

Verse 14. The third time I am ready] That is, this is the third time that I am ready—have formed the resolution, to visit you.

I seek not yours, but you] I seek your salvation, I desire not your property; others have sought your property, but not your salvation.

For the children ought not to lay up for the parents] You may have many teachers, but you have but one FATHER; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel, see 1 Cor. iv. 15. Ye are my children, and I am your father.

Verse 15. And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you] I will continue to act as a loving father, who spends all he has upon his children, and expends his own strength and life in providing for them the things necessary for their preservation and comfort.

Though the more abundantly I love you] I will even act towards you with the most affectionate tenderness, though it happen to me, as it often does to loving fathers, that their disobedient children love them less, in proportion as their love to them is increased.

Verse 16. But be it so, I did not burden you] That is: You grant that I did not burden you, that I took nothing from you, but preached to you the gospel freely; but you say that, BEING CRAFTY, I caught you with guile, i. e., getting from you, by means of others, what I pretended to be unwilling to receive immediately from yourselves.

Many persons suppose that the words, being crafty, I caught you with guile, are the words of the apostle, and not of his slanderers; and therefore have concluded that it is lawful to use guile, deceit, &c., in order to serve a good and religious purpose. This doctrine is abominable; and the words are most evidently those of the apostle's detractors, against which he defends his conduct in the two following verses.

Verse 17. Did I make a gain of you] Did any person I ever sent to preach the gospel to you, or help you in your Christian course, ever get anything from you for me? Produce the proof if you can.

Verse 18. I desired Titus] He was actuated by the same spirit, and he walked in the same steps.

Verse 19. Think ye that we excuse ourselves] That we make an apology for our conduct; or, that I have sent Titus and that brother to you because I was ashamed or afraid to come myself?

We speak before God in Christ] I have not done so; I speak the truth before God; he is judge whether I was actuated in this way by any sinister or unworthy motive.

For your edifying.] Whatever I have done in this or any other way, I have done for your edifying; not for any emolument to myself or friends.

Verse 20. I fear, lest, when I come] I think the present time is used here for the past; the apostle seems most evidently to be giving them the reason why he had not come to them according to his former purposes, and why he sent Titus and his companion. If this verse be understood in this way all difficulty will vanish; otherwise, what is here said does seem to contradict what is said, chap. vii. 6, 16, &c.; as well as many things both in the eighth and ninth chapters. [But there is no authority for the suggested emendation.]

Verse 21. Have sinned already Who have sinned before; who were some of the first offenders, and have not yet repented.

Of the uncleanness, &c.] There must have been a total relaxation of discipline, else such abominations could not have been tolerated in the Christian Church. And although what is here spoken could only be the case of a few; yet the many were ill-disciplined, else these must have been cast out.

CHAPTER XIII.

The apostle again says that this is the third time he has purposed to come and see them; and threatens that he will, by the power of Christ, punish every incorrigible sinner, 1-4. Exhorts them to examine themselves, whether they be in the faith, 5, 6. Prays that they may do no evil, 7. And shows how ardently he wished their complete restoration to unity and purity, 8, 9. Tells them for what reason he writes to them, 10. Bids them farewell, 11. Gives them some directions, and concludes with his apostolical benediction, 12-14.

THIS is ^a the third time I am coming to you. ^b In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established.

2 ^c I told you before, and foretel you, as if I were present, the second time; and being absent now I write to them ^d which heretofore have sinned, and to all other, that, if I come again, ^e I will not spare;

3 Since ye seek a proof of Christ ^f speaking in me, which to you-ward is not weak, but is mighty ^g in you.

4 ^h For though he was crucified through weakness, yet ⁱ he liveth by the power of God. For ^j we also are weak ^k in him, but we shall live with him by the power of God toward you.

Verse 1. This is the third time I am coming to you. These words are nearly the same with those, chap. xii. 14; and probably refer to the purpose which he had twice before formed of seeing them. But the latter clause seems to attach a different meaning to the passage; at least so it has been understood by some learned men. [The latter clause simply indicates the preciseness of his disciplinary action. It should be according to the letter of the law, Deut. xix. 15.]

Verse 2. I will not spare I will inflict the proper punishment on every incorrigible offender. It does appear, from all the apostle's threatenings, that he was possessed of a miraculous power, by which he could inflict punishment on offenders; that he could deliver the body to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, 1 Cor. iv. 21, v. 5. What he says he told them before, probably relates to 1 Cor. iv. 21: Shall I come with a rod, &c.

Verse 3. Since ye seek a proof of Christ The conversion of the Corinthians was to themselves a solid proof that Christ spoke by the apostle; and therefore he could, with great propriety, say that this power of Christ, far from being weak, was mighty among them.

Verse 4. For though he was crucified through weakness It is true Christ was crucified, and his crucifixion appeared to be the effect of his weakness; yet even this was not so; he gave up his life, none could take it away from him; and in his last struggle, had he even been deficient in power, he could have had more than twelve legions of angels to support him against the high-priest's mob, Matt. xxvi. 53; but how then could the scripture be fulfilled? And had he not died, how could the human race have been saved?

Yet he liveth by the power of God. Though he appeared

5 ^l Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, ^m how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be ⁿ reprobates?

6 But I trust that ye shall know that we are not reprobates.

7 Now I pray to God that ye do no evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though ^o we be as reprobates.

8 For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.

9 For we are glad, ^p when we are weak, and ye are strong: and this also we wish, ^q even your perfection.

to be crucified through his own weakness, yet he now liveth by the power of God; exerting an almighty energy by which all things are subject to him.

We also are weak in him Because we are on Christ's side we appear to you as weak as he did to the Jews; but it is not so, for we live with him—under the same influence, and partaking of the same life; manifesting by our preaching and miracles the power of God towards you.

Verse 5. Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith Try yourselves; pierce your hearts; bore yourselves through-out; try yourselves by what I have written, and see whether ye retain the true faith of the gospel.

Prove your own selves. Put yourselves to the test, as you would try gold or silver, suspected of adulteration.

Know ye not your own selves Are ye not full of wisdom and understanding? And is it not as easy to find out a spurious faith as it is easy to detect a base coin? There is an assay and touchstone for both. If base metal be mixed with the pure, you can readily detect it; and as easily may you know that you are in the faith, as you can know that base metal is mixed with pure. Does Jesus Christ dwell in you? You have his Spirit, his power, his mind, if ye be Christians; and the Spirit of Christ bears witness with your spirit that ye are the children of God. And this is the case except ye be reprobates; base counterfeit coin; mongrel Christians.

Verse 6. Ye shall know that we are not reprobates. Ye have had, and ye shall have, the fullest proof that I have preached true faith among you; and that God has confirmed it by his testimony; and thus that I am proved and manifested to be what I ought to be, and shown to be approved of God.

Verse 7. I pray to God that ye do no evil That ye do lest being present * I should use sharpness, ^b according to the power which the Lord hath given me to edification, and not to destruction.

11 Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, ^c be of one mind, live in peace; and the God of love ^d and peace shall be with you.

12 * Greet one another with an holy kiss.

* Tit. i. 13.—^b Ch. x. 8.—^c Rom. xii. 16, 18. xv. 5. 1 Cor. i. 10. Phil. ii. 2. iii. 16. 1 Pet. iii. 8.—^d Rom. xv. 33.—^e Rom. xvi. 16.

not persist in that course which will oblige me to use the power of Christ, with which I am endued, to punish you.

Not that we should appear approved] We do not wish to give this proof that we are approved of God, by inflicting this punishment on the transgressors.

But that ye should do that which is honest] That ye may do that which is right and seemly, though we should be, in consequence of that, as reprobates—as persons not approved of God; because your reformation will prevent the exercise of this power, which would otherwise have given an awful proof that we are approved of God.

Verse 8. For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.] As we are the apostles of God, we cannot bring to you any false doctrine; and, as we profess to be under the influence of God's Spirit, we cannot do anything that is opposed to that truth, or which might be prejudicial to it.

Verse 9. For we are glad, when we are weak] It will give me indescribable pleasure that I should still appear to be poor, despicable, and destitute of this extraordinary power with which God has clothed me, so that you be strong in all the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit.

And this also we wish, even your perfection.] We cannot be satisfied that persons, with such eminent endowments, and who have once received the truth as it is in Jesus, should be deficient in any of the graces that constitute the mind of Christ; such as brotherly love, charity, harmony, unity, and order.

Verse 10. Therefore I write these things] I only threaten you now, by this epistle, to put you on your guard, and lead you to reformation before I visit you; that I may not then have to use sharpness, a cutting off, employing thus my apostolical authority to inflict punishment; a power which God has given me, rather to be employed in your edification than in your destruction.

Verse 11. Finally] All that remains for me now to write is, to wish you all manner of happiness, and so to take my leave.

Be perfect] Be compact; get into joint again; let unity and harmony be restored.

Be of good comfort] Receive admonition; for the verb

13 All the saints salute you.

14 'The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and ^a the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.

The second epistle to the Corinthians was written from Philippi, a city of Macedonia, by Titus and Lucas.

signifies to admonish, beg, entreat, and also to comfort. Receive admonition, that ye may receive comfort. If ye take my advice, ye shall have consolation; if ye do not, ye will have nothing but misery and woe.

Be of one mind] Think the same; let there be no dissensions among you. Be of the same creed, and let disputes about religion, which should be the bond of peace, for ever subside.

Live in peace] Cultivate peace; or, as he says elsewhere, Follow peace, and pursue it, Heb. xii. 14.

And the God of love and peace shall be with you.] And if HE be not there, yourselves and the devil make the whole assembly.

Verse 12. Greet one another with an holy kiss.] Use every means by which a good understanding may be brought about. Let the spirit of friendship live among you, and encourage its continuance by every friendly act.

Verse 13. All the saints] In the primitive church a saint and a Christian were the same thing; for the Christian religion calls every man to be holy.

Verse 14. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ] All the favour and beneficence that come from and through the Redeemer of the world; as the LORD, the ruler and governor of all things; as Jesus, the Saviour of all men by his passion and death; as Christ, the distributor of all that divine unction which enlightens, comforts, harmonizes, and purifies the mind.

And the love of God] GOD, your Maker, in that infinite love which induced him to create the world, and form man in his own image and in his own likeness, that he might be capable of knowing, loving, and enjoying him for ever: and God in the fullest manifestations of that love which caused him to give his only begotten Son, to the end that they who believe on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. May this God of love, and this love of God, be ever with you!

And the communion of the Holy Ghost] May that Holy Spirit, that divine and eternal energy which proceeds from the Father and the Son; that heavenly fire that gives light and life, that purifies and refines, sublimates and exalts, comforts and invigorates, make you all partakers with himself!

TO THE

G A L A T I A N S.

G*ALATIA* was anciently a part of Phrygia and the neighbouring countries. It had its name from the Gauls who, having in several bodies invaded Asia Minor, as Pausanias (Attic., cap. iv.) relates, conquered this country, and settled in it. As these were mixed with various Grecian families, the country was also called Gallogræcia, see Justin, lib. xxiv. 4; xxv. 2; xxvii. 3; and Strabo, xiv. Under the reign of Augustus Cæsar, about the year of Rome 727, and 26 years before our Lord, it was reduced into the form of a Roman colony, and was governed by a proprætor, appointed by the emperor.

This country is bounded on the east by Cappadocia; on the west by Bithynia; on the south by Pamphylia; and on the north by the Euxine Sea. These are its limits, according to Strabo, which some think too extensive; but the different provinces of Asia Minor being subject to continual contentions and inroads, very frequently changed their boundaries as well as their masters, and were seldom at one stay.

The religion of the ancient Galatæ was extremely corrupt and superstitious; and they are said to have worshipped the mother of the gods under the name of Agdistis, and to have offered sacrifices of the prisoners they took in war.

They are mentioned by historians as a tall and valiant people, who went nearly naked; and used for arms only a sword and buckler. The impetuosity of their attack is stated to have been irresistible; and this generally made them victorious.

It appears, from the Acts of the Apostles, that St. Paul visited this country more than once. Two visits to this region are particularly marked in the Acts, viz., the first about A. D. 53, Acts xvi. 6: "Now when they had gone through Phrygia and the region of Galatia," &c.; the second about A. D. 56, Acts xviii. 23: "He went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples."

As to the precise time in which this epistle was written, there have been various opinions among learned men. Some of the ancients believed it to be the very first written of all St. Paul's epistles. Others have supposed that it was written after his second journey to Galatia, Acts xviii. 23, which in the Chronology I have placed in A. D. 54; and others, with more probability, after his first journey, see Acts xvi. 6, which I place in A. D. 53. That it was written soon after one of the apostle's visits to that region, seems evident from the following complaint: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that hath called you," chap. i. 6; it has been therefore conjectured that only one or two years had elapsed from that time, and that the epistle must have been written about A. D. 52 or 53.

PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

Every thing considered, I feel no hesitation to place this epistle in the 52nd or 53rd year of our Lord; either the end of the former, or the beginning of the latter.

From the complexion of this epistle it appears to have been written to the Jews who were dispersed in Galatia, see Acts ii. 9. And although, in chap. iv. 8, it is said that the persons to whom the apostle writes did not know God, and did service to them which by nature were no gods; this must be understood of those who had been proselytes to the Jewish religion, as the 9th verse sufficiently shows; for after they had been converted to Christianity, they turned AGAIN to the weak and beggarly elements.

These Galatians were doubtless converted by St. Paul, see Acts xvi. 6; xviii. 23; but after his departure from them, some teachers had got in among them who endeavoured to persuade them, and successfully too, that they should be circumcised and keep the Mosaic law. See chap. i. 6, iv. 9, 10, 21, v. 1, 2, vi. 12. And the apostle labours to bring them back from the errors of these false teachers.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

GALATIANS

CHAPTER I

St. Paul shows that he was especially called of God to be an apostle, 1. Directs his epistle to the churches through the regions of Galatia, 2. Commends them to the grace of Christ, who gave himself for their sins, 3-5. marvels that they had so soon turned away from the grace of the gospel of Christ, to what falsely pretended to be another gospel, 6, 7. Pronounces him accursed who shall preach any other doctrine than that which he had delivered to them, 8, 9. Shows his own uprightness, and that he received his doctrine from God, 10-12. Gives an account of his conversion and call to the apostleship, 13-17. How three years after his conversion he went up to Jerusalem, and afterwards went through the regions of Syria and Cilicia, preaching the faith of Christ to the great joy of the Christian churches in Judea, 18-24.

PAUL, an apostle, (* not of men, neither by man, but ^b by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, ^c who raised him from the dead;)
2 And all the brethren ^d which are with me,
* unto the churches of Galatia :

3 ^e Grace be to you and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ.

4 * Who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us ^h from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father :

^a Ver. 11, 12.—^b Acts ix. 6. xxii. 10, 15, 21. xxvi. 16. Tit. i. 3.—^c Acts ii. 24.—^d Phil. ii. 22. iv. 21.—^e 1 Cor. xvi. 1.—^f Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. 2 Cor. i. 2. Eph. i. 2. Phil. i. 2. Col. iii. 2. 1 Thess. i. 1. 2 Thess. i. 2. 2 John 3.—^g Matt. xx. 28. Rom. iv. 25. Ch.

Verse 1. Paul, an apostle, not of men] Not commissioned by any assembly or council of the apostles.

Neither by man] Nor by any one of the apostles; neither by James, who seems to have been president of the apostolic council at Jerusalem; nor by Peter, to whom, in a particular manner, the keys of the kingdom were intrusted.

But by Jesus Christ] Having his mission immediately from Christ himself, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead, see Acts xxii, 14, 15.

Verse 2. And all the brethren which are with me] It is very likely that this refers to those who were his assistants in preaching the gospel, and not to any private members of the church.

Churches of Galatia] Galatia was a region or province of Asia Minor; there was neither city nor town of this name.

Verse 4. Who gave himself for our sins] Who became a sin-offering to God in behalf of mankind, that they might be saved from their sins.

Deliver us from this present evil world] These words cannot mean created nature, or the earth and its productions, nor even wicked men. The former we shall need while we live, the latter we cannot avoid; indeed they are those who, when converted, form the Church of God; and the followers of God must live and labour among them, in order to their conversion. The apostle, therefore, must mean the Jews, and their system of carnal ordinances; and the whole of their ecclesiastical economy, which was a burden neither they nor their fathers were able to bear, Acts xv. 10. The apostle takes occasion, in the very commencement of the 5 To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

6 I marvel that ye are so soon removed ¹ from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel :

7 ¹ Which is not another; but there be some ^k that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ.

8 But though ¹ we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

ii. 20. Tit. ii. 14.—^h See Isa. lxxv. 17. John xv. 19. xvii. 14. Heb. ii. 5. vi. 5. 1 John v. 19.—ⁱ Ch. v. 8.—^j 2 Cor. xi. 4.—^k Acts xv. 1, 24. 2 Cor. ii. 17. xi. 13. Ch. v. 10, 12.—¹ 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

epistle, to inform the Galatians that it was according to the will and counsel of God that circumcision should cease, and all the other ritual parts of the Mosaic economy; and that it was for this express purpose that Jesus Christ gave himself a sacrifice for our sins, because the law could not make the comers thereunto perfect. [The original will not bear this interpretation. The passage must be understood of the corrupting influences of the world and its works.]

Verse 6. I marvel that ye are so soon removed] But mutability itself has not a more apt subject to work upon than the human heart; the alternate workings of different passions are continually either changing the character, or giving it a different colouring. Reason, not passion, the word of God, not the sayings of men, should alone be consulted in the concerns of our salvation.

From him that called you] The apostle seems here to mean himself. HE called them into the grace of Christ. [Unquestionably the reference is to God the Father.]

Another gospel] In the very earliest ages of the Christian Church there were several spurious gospels in circulation, and it was the multitude of these false or inaccurate relations that induced St. Luke to write his own, see Luke i. 1. We have the names of more than seventy of these spurious narratives still on record. In some of these gospels, the necessity of circumcision, and subjection to the Mosaic law in unity with the gospel, were strongly inculcated. And to one of these the apostle seems to refer.

Verse 7. Which is not another] It is not gospel, i. e. good tidings, for it loads you again with the burdens from which the genuine gospel has disencumbered you. Instead of giv-

9 As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you ^a than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

10 For ^b do I now ^c persuade men, or God? or ^d do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.

11 ^e But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man.

12 For ^f I neither received it of man, neither was I taught ^g it, but ^h by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

13 For ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that ⁱ beyond measure I persecuted the church of God, and ^j wasted it:

14 And profited in the Jews' religion above many my ^k equals in mine own nation, ^l being more exceedingly zealous ^m of the traditions of my fathers.

15 ⁿ But when it pleased God, ^o who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace,

16 ^p To reveal his Son in me, that ^q I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with ^r flesh and blood:

17 Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus.

18 ^s Then after three years ^t I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

19 But ^u other of the apostles saw I none, save ^v James the Lord's brother.

20 Now the things which I write unto you, ^w behold, before God, I lie not.

21 ^x Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia;

22 And was unknown by face ^y unto the churches of Judea which ^z were in Christ:

23 But they had heard only, That he which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed.

24 And they glorified God in me.

I conferred not with flesh and blood] A periphrasis for man, any man, a human being, or beings of any kind.

Verse 17. Neither went I up to Jerusalem] He had his call so immediately and pointedly from God himself, that he had no need of the concurrence even of the apostles.

But I went into Arabia] That part of Arabia which was contiguous to Damascus, over which Aretas was then king. Of this journey into Arabia we have no other account.

Verse 18. After three years I went up to Jerusalem] These three years may be reckoned either from the departure of Paul from Jerusalem, or from his return from Arabia to Damascus.

To see Peter] To become personally acquainted with Peter; for this is the proper import of the verb, from which we have the word history, which signifies a relation of things from personal knowledge and actual acquaintance.

And abode with him fifteen days] It was not, therefore, to get religious knowledge from him that he paid him this visit.

Verse 19. James the Lord's brother] In this place JAMES, the Lord's brother, is mentioned thus to distinguish him from JAMES, the brother of John.

Verse 20. Before God, I lie not] To prove that he had not learned the gospel from the assembly of the apostles at Jerusalem, nor consequently received his commission from them.

Verse 21. Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria, &c.] See Acts ix. 25, 26, 30.

Verse 22. And was unknown by face] I was not personally acquainted with any of the churches of Judaea; I knew only those at Jerusalem.

Verse 23. They had heard only] As a persecutor of the Church of Christ, I was well known; and as a convert to Christ I was not less so.

Verse 24. They glorified God in me] Hearing now that I preached that faith which before I had persecuted and endeavoured to destroy, they glorified God for the grace which had wrought my conversion.

ing you peace, it troubles you; instead of being a useful supplement to the gospel of Christ, it perverts that gospel.

Verse 8. But though we, or an angel] That gospel which I have already preached to you is the only true gospel; were I to preach any other, I should incur the curse of God.

Let all those who, from the fickleness of their own minds, are ready to favour the reveries of every pretended prophet and prophetess who starts up, consider the awful words of the apostle.

Verse 9. Let him be accursed.] Perhaps this is not designed as an imprecation, but a simple direction; for the word here may be understood as implying that such a person should be separated from the communion of the church.

Verse 10. Do I now persuade men, or God?] The words may be rendered to court or solicit the favour of God, as the after clause sufficiently proves. While the apostle was a persecutor of the Christians, he was the servant of men, and pleased men. When he embraced the Christian doctrines, he became the servant of God, and pleased Him.

Verse 12. I neither received it of man] No man taught me what I have preached to you.

But by the revelation of Jesus Christ.] Being commissioned by himself alone; receiving the knowledge of it from Christ crucified.

Verse 13. Ye have heard of my conversation] My manner of life; the mode in which I conducted myself.

Beyond measure I persecuted the church] See Acts ix. 1, 2, xxi. 4, and the notes there.

Verse 14. And profited in the Jews' religion] He was more profoundly skilled in the traditions of the Fathers than most of his fellow-students were, or, as the word may mean, his contemporaries.

Verse 15. Who separated me from my mother's womb] Who preserved me by his providence when I was a helpless infant, and saved me by his grace when I was an adult persecutor.

Verse 16. To reveal his Son in me] To make me know Jesus Christ, and the power of his resurrection.

That I might preach him among the heathen] For it was to the Gentiles, and the dispersed Jews among the Gentiles, that St. Paul was especially sent.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle mentions his journey to Jerusalem with Barnabas and Titus, 1. Shows that he went thither by revelation; and what he did while there, and the persons with whom he had intercourse, 2-8. How the apostles gave him the right hand of fellowship, 9, 10. How he opposed Peter at Antioch, and the reason why, 11-14. Shews that the Jews as well as the Gentiles must be justified by faith, 15-16. They who seek this justification should act with consistency, 17, 18. Gives his own religious experience, and shows, that through the law he was dead to the law, and crucified with Christ, 19, 20. Justification is not of the law, but by the faith of Christ, 21.

THEN fourteen years after, ^a I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also.

2 And I went up by revelation, ^b and communicated unto them that gospel which I preach among the Gentiles; but ^c privately to them which were of reputation, lest by any means ^d I should run, or had run, in vain.

3 But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumcised:

4 And that because of false ^e brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our ^f liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, ^g that they might bring us into bondage:

5 To whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour; that ^h the truth of the gospel might continue with you.

6 But of those ⁱ who seemed to be somewhat,

Verse 1. Then fourteen years after] There is a considerable difference among critics concerning the time specified in this verse; the apostle is however generally supposed to refer to the journey he took to Jerusalem, about the question of circumcision, mentioned in Acts xv. 4, &c.

Verse 2. I went up by revelation] This either means, that he went up at that time by an express revelation from God, or that having received the gospel by revelation from God, to preach Christ among the Gentiles, he went up according to that revelation, and told what God had done by him among the Gentiles.

But privately to them which were of reputation] To the chief men; those who were highest in reputation among the apostles.

Lest by any means] It was necessary that he should give the apostolic council the fullest information that he had acted according to the divine mind in every respect, and had been blessed in his deed.

Verse 3. But neither Titus, who was with me] His account was so satisfactory to the apostles, that they not only did not require him to insist on the necessity of circumcision among the Gentiles, but did not even require him to have Titus, who was a Greek, circumcised; though that might have appeared expedient, especially at Jerusalem, to have prevented false brethren from making a handle of his uncircumcision, and turning it to the prejudice of the gospel in Judea.

To spy out our liberty] The apostle saw that while such men were in the assembly it was better not to mention his mission among the Gentiles, lest, by means of those false brethren, occasion should be given to alterations and disputes; therefore, he took the opportunity, by private conferences, to set the whole matter, relative to his work among the Gentiles, before the chief of the apostles.

Verse 5. To whom we gave place by subjection] So fully satisfied was he with his divine call, and that he had in preaching among the Gentiles acted in strict conformity to it, that he did not submit in the least to the opinion of those Judaizing teachers; and therefore he continued to insist on the exemption of the Gentiles from the necessity of submitting to Jewish rites; that the truth of the gospel—this whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: ^j God accepteth no man's person: for they who seemed to be somewhat ^k in conference added nothing to me;

7 But contrariwise, ^l when they saw that the gospel of the uncircumcision ^m was committed unto me, as the gospel of the circumcision was unto Peter;

8 (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apostleship of the circumcision, ⁿ the same was ^o mighty in me toward the Gentiles;)

9 And when James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be ^p pillars, perceived ^q the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship; that we should go unto the heathen, and they unto the circumcision.

10 Only they would that we should remember the poor; ^r the same which I also was forward to do.

11 ^s But when Peter was come to Antioch, I with-grand doctrine, that the Gentiles are admitted by the gospel of Christ to be fellow-heirs with the Jews, might continue; and thus the same doctrine is continued with you Gentiles.

Verse 6. Those who seemed to be somewhat] Those who were of acknowledged reputation; so the words should be understood, see ver. 2. Perhaps this verse had better be translated thus: But there is no difference between those who were of acknowledged reputation and myself; God accepts no man's person; but, in the conferences which I held with them, they added nothing to me—gave me no new light; did not attempt to impose on me any obligation, because they saw that God had appointed me my work, and that his counsel was with me.

Verse 7. But contrariwise] They saw plainly that my doctrine was the same as their own, coming immediately from the same source; and therefore gave to me and to Barnabas the right hand of fellowship.

Verse 8. For he that wrought effectually] He gave us both those talents which were suited to our work, and equal success in our different departments.

Verse 9. James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars] Who were known to be very eminent, and acknowledged as chief men among the apostles.

The right hands of fellowship] Giving the right hand to another was the mark of confidence, friendship, and fellowship.

Verse 10. Only they would that we should remember the poor] They did not attempt to give us any new injunctions, only wished us to remember the poor in Judea; but this was a thing to which we were previously disposed.

Verse 11. When Peter was come to Antioch] There has been a controversy whether Peter should not be read Kephas; and whether this Kephas was not a different person from Peter the apostle.

That Peter the apostle is meant, the most sober and correct writers of antiquity maintain; and though some of the Catholic writers have fixed the whole that is here reprehensible on one Kephas, one of the seventy disciples, yet the most learned of their writers, and of their Popes, believe that St. Peter is meant.

Verse 12. Before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles] Here was Peter's fault. He was cou-stood him to the face, because he was to be blamed.

12 For, before that certain came from James, ^a he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision.

13 And the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried away with their dissimulation.

14 But when I saw that they walked not uprightly, according to ^b the truth of the gospel, I said unto Peter ^c before them all, ^d If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compellest thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

15 ^e We who are Jews by nature, and not ^f sinners of the Gentiles,

16 ^g Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but ^h by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for ⁱ by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.

17 But if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found ^j sinners, is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid.

18 For if I build again the things which I destroyed, I make myself a transgressor.

19 For I ^k through the law ^l am dead to the law, that I might ^m live unto God.

20 I am ⁿ crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh ^o I live by the faith of the Son of God, ^p who loved me, and gave himself for me.

21 I do not frustrate the grace of God: for ^q if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain.

^a Acts x. 28. xi. 3.—^b Ver. 5.—^c 1 Tim. v. 20.—^d Acts x. 28. xi. 3.—^e Acts xv. 10. 11.—^f Matt. ix. 11. Eph. ii. 8. 12.—^g Acts xiii. 38. 39.—^h Rom. i. 17. iii. 28. viii. 3. Ch. iii. 21. vinced that God had pulled down the middle wall of partition that had so long separated the Jews and Gentiles, and he acted on this conviction, associating with the latter and eating with them; but when certain Jews came from James, who it appears considered the law still to be in force, lest he should place a stumbling-block before them he withdrew from all commerce with converted Gentiles, and acted as if he himself believed the law to be still in force, and that the distinction between the Jews and the Gentiles should still be kept up.

Verse 13. And the other Jews dissembled likewise] So powerful was the torrent of such an example, that the gentle, loving-hearted Barnabas was carried away by their dissimulation, with their hypocrisy—feigning to be what they really were not.

Verse 14. That they walked not uprightly] They did not walk with a straight step—they did not maintain a firm footing. [Our translation is more correct.]

According to the truth of the gospel] According to that true doctrine, which states that Christ is the end of the law for justification to every one that believes; and that such are under no obligation to observe circumcision and the other peculiar rites and ceremonies of the law.

If thou, being a Jew, livest] This was a cutting reproof. He had been circumstantially scrupulous in everything relative to the law; and it required a miracle to convince him that the Gentiles were admitted, on their believing in Christ, to become members of the same church; in consequence of this, he went in with the Gentiles and ate with them as he would with Jews. But now, fearing them of the circumcision, he withdrew from this fellowship.

Verse 15. We who are Jews by nature] We who belong to the Jewish nation—who have been born, bred, and educated Jews.

And not sinners of the Gentiles] The Greek word often signifies a heathen, merely one who had no knowledge of the true God. But among the nations or Gentiles many Jews sojourned, who in scripture are known by the name of Hellenists, and these were distinguished from those who were termed sinners of the Gentiles—heathens, in our common sense of the word; while the others, though living among them, were worshippers of the true God, and addicted to no species of idolatry.

Verse 16. Knowing that a man is not justified] See the notes on Rom. i. 17. iii. 24, 27, and viii. 3. Neither the works of the Jewish law, nor of any other law, could justify any man; and if justification or pardon could not have been attained in some other way, the world must have perished.

1 Thess. v. 10. Heb. ix. 14. 1 Pet. iv. 2.—ⁿ Rom. vi. 6. Ch. v. 24. vi. 14.—^o 2 Cor. v. 15. 1 Thess. v. 10. 1 Pet. iv. 2.—^p Ch. i. 4. Eph. v. 2. Tit. ii. 14.—^q Ch. iii. 21. Heb. vii. 11. See Rom. xi. 6. Ch. v. 4.

Justification by faith, in the boundless mercy of God, is as reasonable as it is scriptural and necessary.

Verse 17. But if, while we seek to be justified] If, while we acknowledge that we must be justified by faith in Christ, we ourselves are found sinners, enjoining the necessity of observing the rites and ceremonies of the law, which never could and never can justify, and yet, by submitting to circumcision, we lay ourselves under the necessity of fulfilling the law, which is impossible, we thus constitute ourselves sinners; is, therefore, Christ the minister of sin?—Christ, who has taught us to renounce the law, and expect justification through his death? God forbid that we should either act so, or think so!

Verse 18. For if I build again the things which I destroyed] If I act like a Jew, and enjoin the observance of the law on the Gentiles, which I have repeatedly asserted and proved to be abolished by the death of Christ, then I make myself a transgressor, by not observing the law in that way in which I appear to enjoin the observance of it upon others.

Verse 19. For I through the law am dead to the law] In consequence of properly considering the nature and requisitions of the law, I am dead to all hope and expectation of help or salvation from the law, and have been obliged to take refuge in the gospel of Christ.

Verse 20. I am crucified with Christ] I am as truly dead to all expectation of justification by the law, as Christ was dead when he gave up the ghost upon the cross.

Yet not I] It is not of my natural life I speak, nor of any spiritual things which I myself have procured; but Christ liveth in me. God made man to be a habitation of his own Spirit: the law cannot live in me so as to give me a divine life; it does not animate, but kill; but Christ lives in me; he is the soul of my soul; so that I now live to God. But this life I have by the faith of the Son of God—by believing on Christ as a sacrifice for sin; for he loved me, and because he did so he gave himself for me—made himself a sacrifice unto death, that I might be saved from the bitter pains of death eternal.

Verse 21. I do not frustrate] I do not condemn, despise, or render useless, the grace of God—the doctrine of Christ crucified; which I must do if I preach the necessity of observing the law.

For if righteousness] If justification and salvation come by an observance of the law, then Christ is dead in vain; his death is useless if an observance of the law can save us; but no observance of the law can save us, and therefore there was an absolute necessity for the death of Christ.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle inquires how they could be so foolish as to renounce the gospel of Christ and turn back to the law, after having heard, received, and suffered so much for the gospel, 1-5. Asserts the doctrine of justification by faith, on the example of Abraham, 6-9. Shows that all who are under the law are under the curse, from which Christ alone redeems us; and the promise made to Abraham comes to the Gentiles, who believe, 10-14. For the covenant is not made by the works of the law, but by promise, 15-18. The law was given to show the sinfulness of sin, and to act as a schoolmaster till Christ should come, 19-25. It is by faith only that any become children of God, 26. And under the gospel, all those distinctions which subsisted under the law are done away; and genuine believers, whether Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, are one in Christ Jesus, and accounted the genuine children of Abraham, 27-29.

O FOOLISH Galatians, ^a who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey ^b the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you?

2 This only would I learn of you, Received ye ^c the Spirit by the works of the law, ^d or by the hearing of faith?

3 Are ye so foolish? ^e having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the ^f flesh?

4 ^g Have ye suffered ^h so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain.

5 He therefore ⁱ that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

6 Even as ^j Abraham believed God, and it was ^k accounted to him for righteousness.

Verse 1. O foolish Galatians] O infatuated people; you make as little use of reason as those who have none; you have acted in this business as those do who are fascinated—they are led blindly and unresistingly on to their own destruction.

That ye should not obey the truth] This clause is wanting in the most important MSS. and Fathers. It should certainly be expunged.

Among you?] These words, which are wanting in several MSS., appear to disturb the sense, and have obliged commentators to have recourse to a sort of technical meaning, viz., "The doctrine of the gospel had been so fully preached among these people that it might be said Jesus Christ had been crucified among them; so fully had his sufferings been detailed, and the design of them pointed out." [There is no difficulty, if the words be joined to the verb "set forth."] Are ye seeking to complete that spiritual religion, and to perfect these spiritual gifts, by the carnal rite of circumcision?

Verse 2. Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law] This may refer to the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, which were very common in the apostolic church. It may refer to the spirit of adoption, and consequently to their sonship.

Verse 3. Are ye now made perfect by the flesh?] Are ye seeking to complete that spiritual religion, and to perfect these spiritual gifts, by the carnal rite of circumcision?

Verse 4. Have ye suffered so many things in vain?] Though it is possible that the Galatians had suffered some persecution for the truth of Christ, yet it is as likely that the apostle refers to the benefits which they had received. Ye have received faith, the pardon of your sins, the gift of the Holy Spirit, and with it many extraordinary gifts and graces; and have ye suffered the loss of all these things? Have ye received all these in vain? if yet in vain—if it be credible that ye have sacrificed so many excellent benefits for an imaginary good.

Verse 5. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit] The apostle means himself: he had been the means of conveying the Holy Spirit to them, and by that Spirit he wrought miracles among them; and he did all this, not as a Jew (for as such he had no power), but he did all as a believer in Christ. [The most reliable critics refer the passage to God.]

7 Know ye therefore, that ^l they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham.

8 And ^m the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, "In thee shall all nations be blessed."

9 So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham.

10 For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse: for it is written, ⁿ Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.

11 But ^p that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, ^q The just shall live by faith.

12 And ^r the law is not of faith: but, ^s The man that doeth them shall live in them.

Verse 6. Abraham believed God] Abraham, while even uncircumcised, believed in God, and his faith was reckoned to him for justification; and Abraham is called the father of the faithful, or of believers. If, then, he was justified without the deeds of the law, he was justified by faith; and if he was justified by faith, long before the law was given, then the law is not necessary to salvation.

Verse 8. The scripture, foreseeing] As God intended to justify the heathen through faith, he preached the gospel that contains the grand display of the doctrine of salvation by faith, before, to Abraham, while he was in his heathen state; and thus he is called the father of believers.

Verse 9. They which be of faith] All who believe, as Abraham has believed, are made partakers of Abraham's blessings.

Verse 10. As many as are of the works of the law] Hence, every Jew is necessarily under the curse of God's broken law; and every sinner is under the same curse, though he be not a Jew, who does not take refuge in the salvation provided for him by the gospel.

Verse 11. But that no man is justified by the law] By the observance of the law, suppose he had even continued in all things that are written in it to do them, is evident; for the prophet Habakkuk, chap. ii. 4, has declared, under the direct influence of the Spirit of God, The just shall live by faith; or, he who is just by faith shall live: therefore this justification comes not by works, or the observance of the law, but by faith.

Verse 12. And the law is not of faith] It promises no forgiveness to believing, but requires obedience. It is not, What do you believe? but, What have you done? The man that doeth them perfectly, at all times, and in all places, he shall live in them; but if in any case he fails, he forfeits his life.

Verse 13. Christ hath redeemed us] Hath bought us with a price, viz., his blood, or life.

Being made a curse for us] Being made an atonement for our sins; for whatever was offered as an atonement for sin was considered as bearing the punishment due to sin, and the person who suffered for transgression was considered

13 * Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us : for it is written, ^b Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree :

14 * That the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive ^c the promise of the Spirit through faith.

15 Brethren, I speak after the manner of men ; * Though it be but a man's ' covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man disannulleth, or addeth thereto.

16 Now * to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many ; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is ^b Christ.

17 And this I say, That the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, ' which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul, , that it should make the promise of none effect.

18 For, if ^a the inheritance be of the law, ' it is no more of promise : but God gave it to Abraham by promise.

19 Wherefore then serveth the law ? ^a It was added because of transgressions, till ^a the seed should come to whom the promise was made ; and it was ^a ordained by angels in the hand ^b of a mediator.

Verse 14. That the blessing of Abraham] That is, justification or the pardon of sin, with all other blessings consequent on it, such as peace with God, spiritual life, and eternal glory.

Might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ] So we find that he was made a curse for us, that the blessings promised to Abraham might be given to them who believe on him, as having been made a curse, i. e., an expiatory victim for them.

The promise of the Spirit] The spirit of adoption, sonship with God ; and the Spirit of God to attest that sonship. And all this was through faith.

Verse 15. I speak after the manner of men] I am about to produce an example taken from civil transactions. If it be confirmed—if an agreement or bond be signed, sealed, and witnessed, and, in this country, being first duly stamped.

No man disannulleth] It stands under the protection of the civil law, and nothing can be legally erased or added.

Verse 16. Now to Abraham and his seed] The promise of salvation by faith was made to Abraham and his posterity.

He saith not, And to seeds] It was one particular kind of posterity which was intended : *but as of one—*which is Christ, i. e., to the spiritual head, and all believers in him, who are children of Abraham, because they are believers, ver. 7. But why does the apostle say, not of seeds, as of many ? To this it is answered, that Abraham possessed in his family two seeds, one natural, viz., the members of his own household ; and the other spiritual, those who were like himself because of their faith. The promises were not of a temporal nature ; had they been so, they would have belonged to his natural seed ; but they did not ; therefore they must have belonged to the spiritual posterity.

Verse 17. Confirmed before of God in Christ] i. e., The promise of justification, &c., made to believers in Christ Jesus, who are the spiritual seed of Christ, as they are children of Abraham, from the similitude of their faith.

20 Now a mediator is not a mediator of one ; * but God is one.

21 Is the law then against the promises of God ? God forbid : * for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law.

22 But * the scripture hath concluded * all under sin, * that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.

23 But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed.

24 Wherefore * the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, * that we might be justified by faith.

25 But, after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.

26 For * ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.

27 For * as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, * have put on Christ.

28 ^a There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female : for ye are all ^b one in Christ Jesus.

29 And ^a if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and ^a heirs according to the promise.

Four hundred and thirty years after] God made a covenant with Abraham that the Messiah should spring from his posterity. This covenant stated that justification should be obtained by faith in the Messiah. The Messiah did not come till 1911 years after the making of this covenant, and the law was given 430 years after the covenant with Abraham, therefore the law, which was given 1481 years before the promise to Abram could be fulfilled (for so much time elapsed between the giving of the law and the advent of Christ), could not possibly annul the Abrahamic covenant. This argument is absolute and conclusive.

Verse 18. For if the inheritance be of the law] See the preceding arguments, in which this is proved.

Verse 19. Wherefore then serveth the law ?] If the law does not annul the Abrahamic covenant, and cannot confer salvation on its votaries, why did God give it ? This was a very natural objection, and must arise in the mind of any Jew who had paid attention to the apostle's reasoning.

It was added because of transgressions] It was given that we might know our sinfulness, and the need we stood in of the mercy of God. The law is the right line, the straight edge, that determines the obliquity of our conduct. Till the seed should come] The law was to be in force till the advent of the Messiah. After that it was to cease.

It was ordained by angels] The ministry of angels was certainly used in giving the law, see Ps. lxxviii. 17 ; Acts vii. 53 ; and Heb. ii. 2 ; but they were only instruments for transmitting ; Moses was the mediator between God and the people, Deut. v. 5.

Verse 20. A mediator is not a mediator of one] As a mediator signifies a middle person, there must necessarily be two parties, between whom he stands, and acts in reference to both, as he is supposed to have the interests of both equally at heart.

This verse is allowed to be both obscure and difficult ; and it is certain that there is little consent among learned men and critics in their opinions concerning it.

But God is one.] He is the one God, who is the Father of the spirits of all flesh ; the God of the Gentiles as well as the God of the Jews. The sense of the whole is : Moses was the mediator of one part of Abraham's seed, viz., the Israelites ; but of the other seed, the Gentiles, he was certainly not the mediator ; for the mediator of that seed, according to the promise of God, and covenant made with Abraham, is Christ.

But God, who made the promise that in one should all the families of the earth be blessed, is ONE; the God of the other party, the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews, seeing he is ONE GOD, who will justify the circumcision by faith, and the uncircumcision through faith. Rom. iii. 30.

Verse 21. Is the law then against the promises of God? Is it possible that the intervention of the law, in reference to one part of the Abrahamic seed, should annul the promise made to the other? It is impossible.

For if there had been a law, &c.] If any law or rule of life could have been found out that would have given life—saved sinners from death, and made them truly happy, then righteousness—justification, should have been by that law.

Verse 22. But the scripture hath concluded] The scripture hath shut them up—put them in prison, and locked them up, till the time should come in which the sentence of the law should be executed upon them.

That the promise of justification, by faith of Jesus Christ, might be given to them that believe.

Verse 23. But before faith came] Before the gospel was published.

We were kept under the law, shut up] We were kept as in a strong hold, locked up, unto the faith—the religion of the Lord Jesus, which should afterwards be revealed. See Rom. xi. 32.

Verse 24. The law was our schoolmaster] The law was our pedagogue unto Christ. The pedagogue is not the schoolmaster, but the servant who had the care of the children to lead them to and bring them back from school, and had the care of them out of school hours. Thus the law did not teach us the living, saving knowledge; but, by its rites and ceremonies, and especially by its sacrifices, it directed us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

Verse 25. But, after that faith is come] It is worthy of remark that, as the LAW is used by St. Paul to signify, not only the law, properly so called, but the whole of the Mosaic economy, so the FAITH is used by him to express, not merely the act of believing in Christ, but the whole of the gospel.

Verse 26. For ye, who have believed the gospel, are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus.] But no man is a child of God by circumcision, nor by any observance of the Mosaic law.

Verse 27. As many of you as have been baptized into Christ] To put on, or to be clothed with one, is to assume the person and character of that one; and they who do so are bound to act his part, and to sustain the character which they have assumed. The profession of Christianity is an assumption of the character of Christ; he has left us an example that we should follow his steps, and we should, as Christians, have that mind in us which was in him.

Verse 28. There is neither Jew nor Greek] Under the gospel all distinctions are done away, as either helping or hindering; all are equally welcome to Christ, and all have an equal need of him.

Neither male nor female] Between the privileges of men and women there was a great disparity among the Jews. Under the blessed spirit of Christianity, they have equal rights, equal privileges, and equal blessings; and, let me add, they are equally useful.

Verse 29. And if ye be Christ's] Or, as several good MSS. read, If ye be one in Christ.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle shows that, as an heir in nonage is under tutors and guardians, so were the Galatians while under the law; and, as the heir when he comes of age is no longer under guardians, so they, when the gospel came, arrived at full maturity, and were redeemed from the law, 1-3. He shows, further, that when the fulness of the time came God sent forth his Son, that we might obtain the adoption of sons, and have the strongest evidence of that adoption, 4-6. Those who are children of God are heirs of heaven, 7. He compares their former and latter state, and shows the reason he had to fear that his labour on their behalf was in vain, 8-11. He mentions his trials among them, and their kindness to him, 12-16. Shows his tender affection for them, and exhorts them to return to the gospel, 17-20. Shows the excellence of the gospel beyond that of the law, by the allegory of Mount Sinai and Jerusalem, 21-27. Shows also that the believing Gentiles are children of the promise, as Isaac was; and have been elected in the place of the Jews, who have been cast out according to the scriptures, 28-31.

NOW I say, That the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be Lord of all;

2 But is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father.

Verse 1. The heir, as long as he is a child] Though he be appointed by his father's will heir of all his possessions, yet till he arrive at the legal age he is master of nothing, and does not differ from one of the common domestics.

Verse 2. But is under tutors] Guardians and governors; those who have the charge of the family. These words are nearly similar; but we may consider the first as executor, the last as the person who superintends the concerns of the family and estate till the heir become of age; such as we call trustee.

Until the time appointed of the father.] The time mentioned in the father's will or testament.

3 Even so we, when we were children, ^awere in bondage under the ^belements of the world:

4 But ^cwhen the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, ^dmade ^eof a woman, ^fmade under the law,

Isa. vii. 14. Mic. v. 3. Matt. i. 23. Luke i. 31. ii. 7. —^f Matt. v. 17. Luke ii. 27.

Verse 3. Even so we] The whole Jewish people were in a state of nonage while under the law.

The elements of the world] The apostle intimates that the law was not the science of salvation, it was only the elements or alphabet of it; and in the gospel this alphabet is composed into a most glorious system of divine knowledge: but as the alphabet is nothing of itself, unless compounded into syllables, words, sentences, and discourses; so the law, taken by itself, gives no salvation; it contains indeed the outlines of the gospel, but it is the gospel alone that fills up these outlines.

Verse 4. When the fulness of the time was come] The time which God in his infinite wisdom counted best; in which all his counsels were filled up.

Made under the law] In subjection to it, that in him all its designs might be fulfilled, and by his death the whole might be abolished; the law dying when the Son of God expired upon the cross.

Verse 5. To redeem them] To pay down a price for them, and thus buy them off from the necessity of observing circumcision, offering brute sacrifices, performing different ablutions, &c. &c.

That we might receive the adoption of sons.] Which adoption we could not obtain by the law; for it is the gospel only that puts us among the children, and gives us a place in the heavenly family. On the nature of adoption see the notes on Rom. viii. 15.

Verse 6. And because ye are sons] By faith in Christ Jesus, being redeemed both from the bondage and curse of the law; GOD—the Father, called generally the first person of the glorious TRINITY, hath sent forth the SPIRIT—the Holy Ghost, the third person of that Trinity, of his SON—Jesus Christ, the second person of the Trinity—crying, Abba, Father! the fullest and most satisfactory evidence that God the Father, Son, and Spirit, had become their portion. See the notes on Mark xiv. 36, and on Rom. viii. 15.

Verse 7. Thou art no more a servant] Thou who hast believed in Christ art no longer a slave, either under the dominion of sin or under obligation to the Mosaic ritual; but a son of God, adopted into the heavenly family.

And if a son, then an heir] Having a right to the inheritance, because one of the family, for none can inherit but the children; but this heirship is the most extraordinary of all: it is not an heirship of any tangible possession, either in heaven or earth; it is not to possess a part or even the whole of either, it is to possess Him who made all things; not God's works, but God himself: heirs of GOD through Christ.

Verse 8. When ye knew not God] From this verse it appears that there were some who had been converted from heathenism; unless we suppose that the apostle here particularly addresses those who had been proselytes to Judaism and thence converted to Christianity; which appears to be most likely from the following verses.

Verse 9. Now, after that ye have known God] After having been brought to the knowledge of God as your Saviour.

Or rather are known of God] Are approved of him, having received the adoption of sons.

To the weak and beggarly elements] After receiving all this, will ye turn again to the ineffectual rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law—rites too weak to counteract your sinful habits, and too poor to purchase pardon and eternal life for you?

13 Ye know how ^a through infirmity of the flesh I preached the gospel unto you ^b at the first:

14 And my temptation which was in my flesh ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me ^c as an angel of God, ^d even as Christ Jesus.

15 ^e Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? for I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me.

16 Am I therefore become your enemy, ^f because I tell you the truth?

17 ^g They ^h zealously affect you, but not well; yea, they would exclude ⁱ you, that ye might affect them.

18 But it is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing, and not only when I am present with you.

19 ^j My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you, 20 I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for ^k I stand in doubt of you.

Verse 10. Ye observe days] Ye superstitiously regard the sabbaths and particular days of your own appointment.

And months] New moons; times—festivals, such as those of tabernacles, dedication, passover, &c.

Years.] Annual atonements, sabbatical years, and jubilees.

Verse 11. I am afraid of you] Lest all my pains and labour in your conversion have been thrown away.

Verse 12. Be as I am] Thoroughly addicted to the Christian faith and worship, from the deepest conviction of its truth.

For I am as ye are] I was formerly a Jew, and as zealously addicted to the rites and ceremonies of Judaism as ye are, but I am saved from that mean and unprofitable dependence.

Ye have not injured me at all.] I do not thus earnestly entreat you to return to your Christian profession because your perversion has been any loss to me, nor because your conversion can be to me any gain.

Verse 13. Ye know how through infirmity] The apostle seems to say that he was much afflicted in body when he first preached the gospel to them. This might have been only an occasional affliction, while labouring in that part of Asia Minor; and not a continual and incurable infirmity, as some have too hastily conjectured.

Verse 14. And my temptation which was in my flesh] On this verse there are a great many various readings, as there are various opinions.

The word which we translate temptation, signifies trial of any kind. The verse therefore may be read, "Ye despised not the trial, which was in my flesh;" or, "Ye despised not your trial, which was in my flesh," i. e., what my flesh suffered on your account, the afflictions I passed through in consequence of my severe labours on your account. You did not consider me less an apostle of God on account of my sinking for a time under the weight of my work. This appears to me to be the simple meaning of the apostle, and that he neither alludes to a bodily nor mental infirmity, which generally or periodically afflicted him, as some have imagined. Nor does he appear at all to speak of the same case as that mentioned, 2 Cor. xii. 7, where I wish the reader to consult the notes.

Verse 15. Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? Ye spake of should be in italics, there being no corresponding word in the Greek text. Perhaps there is not a sentence in the New Testament more variously translated than this. What was then your blessedness! Or, How great was your happiness at that time! Or, What blessings did ye then pour on me! It is worthy of remark that, instead of what, several MSS. and some of the Fathers have where. According to these authorities the text should be read thus: Where then is your blessedness? Having renounced the gospel, you have lost your happiness. What have your false 21 Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?

22 For it is written, that Abraham had two sons; * the one by a bond-maid, ^b the other by a free woman.

23 But he who was of the bond woman ^c was born after the flesh; ^d but he of the free woman was by promise.

24 Which things are an allegory: for these are the two ^e covenants; the one from the mount ^f Sinai, ^g which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar.

25 For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and ^h answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children.

26 But ⁱ Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.

teachers given you to compensate the loss of communion with God, or that Spirit of adoption, that Spirit of Christ, by which you cried Abba, Father!

If, however, we understand the words as implying the benedictions they then heaped on the apostle, the sense will be sufficiently natural, and agree well with the concluding part of the verse; for I bear you record, that, if possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me.

Dearer than one's eyes, or to profess to give one's eyes for the sake of a person, appears to have been a proverbial expression, intimating the highest tokens of the strongest affection.

Verse 17. They zealously affect you, but not well] These false teachers endeavour to conciliate your esteem, but not on honest or true principles; they work themselves into your good graces; they wish you to place all your affection upon themselves.

They would exclude you] They wish to shut you out from the affection of your apostle, that you might affect them, that you might love them alone, hear them alone, abide by their directions only, and totally abandon him who called you into the grace of the gospel of Christ.

Verse 18. It is good to be zealously affected] It is well to have a determined mind and an ardent heart in reference to things which are laudable and good. [But this changes the sense of the verb as given in verse 17.]

Not only when I am present] You were thus attached to me when I was among you, but now ye have lost both your reverence and affection for me.

Verse 19. My little children] My beloved children. Until Christ be formed in you] Till you once more receive the Spirit and unction of Christ in your hearts, from which you are fallen, by your rejection of the spirit of the gospel.

Verse 20. I desire to be present with you] I wish to accommodate my doctrine to your state; I know not whether you need stronger reprehension, or to be dealt with more leniently.

I stand in doubt of you] I have doubts concerning your state; the progress of error and conviction among you, which I cannot fully know without being among you.

Verse 21. Ye that desire to be under the law] Ye who desire to incorporate the Mosaic institutions with Christianity, and thus bring yourselves into bondage to circumcision, and a great variety of oppressive rites.

Do ye not hear the law?] It is evident that the word law is used in two senses in this verse. It first means the Mosaic institutions; secondly, the Pentateuch, where the history is recorded to which the apostle refers.

Verse 23. Was born after the flesh] Ishmael was born according to the course of nature, his parents being both of a proper age, so that there was nothing uncommon or supernatural in his birth.

By promise] The birth of Isaac was supernatural; it was the effect of an especial promise of God; and it was only on the ground of that promise that it was either credible or possible.

Verse 24. Which things are an allegory] They are to be 27 For it is written, Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband.

28 Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are ^k the children of promise.

29 But as then ^l he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the spirit, ^m even so it is now.

30 Nevertheless what saith ⁿ the scripture? ^o Cast out the bond-woman and her son: for ^p the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman.

31 So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, ^q but of the free.

understood spiritually; more being intended in the account than meets the eye.

For these are the two covenants] These signify two different systems of religion; the one by Moses, the other by the Messiah.

The one from the mount Sinai] On which the law was published; which was typified by Hagar, Abraham's bond-maid.

Which gendereth to bondage] For as the bond-maid or slave could only gender—bring forth her children in a state of slavery, and subject also to become slaves, so all that are born and live under those Mosaic institutions are born and live in a state of bondage—a bondage to various rites and ceremonies; under the obligation to keep the whole law, yet, from its severity and their frailness, obliged to live in the habitual breach of it, and in consequence exposed to the curse which it pronounces.

Verse 25. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia] This is the common reading; but it is read differently in some of the most respectable MSS., Versions, and Fathers; for this Sinai is a mountain of Arabia; the word Agar being omitted.

Answereth to Jerusalem] Hagar, the bond-maid, bringing forth children in a state of slavery, points out, or bears a similitude to, Jerusalem in her present state of subjection; which, with her children—her citizens, is not only in bondage to the Romans, but in a worse bondage to the law, to its oppressive ordinances, and to the heavy curse which it has pronounced against all those who do not keep them.

Verse 26. But Jerusalem which is above] The apostle still follows the Jewish allegory, showing not only how the story of Hagar and Sarah, Ishmael and Isaac, was allegorized, but pointing out also that even Jerusalem was the subject of allegory; for it was a maxim among the rabbins, that "Whatsoever was in the earth, the same was also found in heaven; for there is no matter, howsoever small, in this world, that has not something similar to it in the spiritual world."

Is free, which is the mother of us all] There is a spiritual Jerusalem, of which this is the type; and this Jerusalem, in which the souls of all the righteous are, is free from all bondage and sin: or by this, probably, the kingdom of the Messiah was intended; and this certainly answers best to the apostle's meaning, as the subsequent verse shows. There is an earthly Jerusalem, but this earthly Jerusalem typifies a heavenly Jerusalem: the former, with all her citizens, is in bondage; the latter is a free city, and all her inhabitants are free also. And this Jerusalem is our mother; it signifies the Church of Christ, the metropolis of Christianity, or rather the state of liberty into which all true believers are brought. The word of all, is omitted by almost every MS. and Version of antiquity and importance, and by the most eminent of the Fathers who quote this place; it is undoubtedly spurious, and the text should be read thus: But Jerusalem, which is above, is free, which is our mother.

Verse 27. Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not] This quotation from Isai. liv. 1, is certainly a promise which relates to the conversion of the Gentiles, as the following clause proves; for the desolate—the Gentile world, hath many more children—is a much larger and more numerous church than she—Jerusalem, the Jewish state, which hath a husband—has been so long in covenant with God, living under his continual protection, and in possession of a great variety of spiritual advantages; and especially those offered to her by the gospel, which she has rejected, and which the Gentiles have accepted.

Verse 28. Now we] Who believe in the Lord Jesus, are the children of promise—are the spiritual offspring of the Messiah, the seed of Abraham, in whom the promise stated that all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

Verse 29. But as then he] Ishmael, who was born after the flesh—whose birth had nothing supernatural in it, but was according to the ordinary course of nature, Persecuted him] Isaac, who was born after the Spirit—who had a supernatural birth, according to the promise, and through the efficacy, of the Holy Spirit giving effect to that promise—Sarah shall have a son, Gen. xvii. 16-21; xxi. 1, &c.

Persecuted him; the persecution here referred to is that mentioned, Gen. xxi. 9. It consisted in mocking his brother Isaac.

Even so it is now.] So the Jews, in every place, persecute the Christians; and show thereby that they are rather of the posterity of Hagar than of Sarah.

Verse 30. What saith the scripture?] (In Gen. xxi. 10.) Cast out the bond-woman and her son: and what does this imply in the present case? Why, that the present Jerusalem and her children shall be cast out of the favour of God, and shall not be heirs with the son of the free woman—shall not inherit the blessings promised to Abraham, because they believe not in the promised seed.

Verse 31. So then] We—Jews and Gentiles, who believe on the Lord Jesus, are not children of the bond-woman—are not in subjection to the Jewish law, but of the free; and, consequently, are delivered from all its bondage, obligation, and curse.

CHAPTER V.

The apostle exhorts the Galatians to stand fast in the liberty of the gospel, and not by receiving circumcision bring themselves into a yoke of bondage, 1-4. Shows the superior excellence of Christianity, 5, 6. Mentions their former steadiness, and warns them against the bad doctrine which was then preached among them, 7-9. Expresses his confidence that they will yet return; and shows that he who perverted them shall bear his own punishment, 10-12. States that they are called to liberty, and that love is the fulfilling of the law, 13, 14. Warns them against dissensions, and enumerates the fruits of the flesh, which exclude those who bear them from the kingdom of God, 15-21. Enumerates also the fruits of the Spirit, which characterize the disciples of Christ, 22-24. Exhorts them to live in the Spirit, and not provoke each other, 25, 26.

Stand therefore in ^a the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again ^b with the yoke of bondage.

2 Behold, I Paul say unto you, that ^c if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing.

3 For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, ^d that he is a debtor to do the whole law.

4 ^e Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ^f ye are fallen from grace.

5 For we through the Spirit ^g wait for the hope of righteousness by faith.

Verse 1. Stand fast therefore in the liberty] Hold fast your Christian profession; it brings spiritual liberty: on the contrary, Judaism brings spiritual bondage.

The liberty mentioned by the apostle is freedom from Jewish rites and ceremonies, called properly here the yoke of bondage; and also liberty from the power and guilt of sin, which nothing but the grace of Christ can take away.

Verse 2. If ye be circumcised] By circumcision you take on you the whole obligation of the Jewish law, and consequently profess to seek salvation by means of its observances; and therefore Christ can profit you nothing; for, by seeking justification by the works of the law, you renounce justification by faith in Christ.

Verse 3. He is a debtor to do the whole law.] Lays himself, by receiving circumcision, under the obligation to fulfil all its precepts, ordinances, &c.

Verse 4. Christ is become of no effect unto you] It is vain for you to attempt to unite the two systems. You must have 6 For ^h in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but ⁱ faith which worketh by love.

7 Ye ^j did run well; ^k who ^l did hinder you, that ye should not obey the truth?

8 This persuasion cometh not of him ^m that calleth you.

9 ⁿ A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

10 ^o I have confidence in you, through the Lord, that ye will be none otherwise minded: but ^p he that troubleth you ^q shall bear his judgment, who-soever he be.

11 ^r And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumcision, the law and no Christ, or Christ and no law, for your justification.

Ye are fallen from grace.] They had been brought into the grace of the gospel; and now, by re-adopting the Mosaic ordinances, they had apostatized from the gospel as a system of religion, and had lost the grace communicated to their souls, by which they were preserved in a state of salvation.

Verse 5. For we, Christians, through the Spirit] Through the operation of the Holy Ghost, under this spiritual dispensation of the gospel, wait for the hope of righteousness—expect that which is the object of our hope, on our being justified by faith in Christ.

Verse 6. For in Jesus Christ] Nothing now avails in the sight of God but that faith, which is made active, or energetic, by love. God acknowledges no faith, as of the operation of his Spirit, that is not active or obedient; but the principle of all obedience to God, and beneficence to man, is love; therefore faith cannot work unless it be associated *why do I yet suffer persecution? then is ^b the offence of the cross ceased.

12 * I would they were even cut off ^d which trouble you.

13 For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only * use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but ^b by love serve one another.

14 For * all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, ^b Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

15 But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not consumed one of another.

16 This I say then, ^b Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.

17 For ^a the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other; ^c so that ye cannot do the things that ye would.

18 But, ^m if ye be led of the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

with love. Love to God produces obedience to his will: his love to man worketh no ill; but, on the contrary, every act of kindness. Faith which does not work by love is either circumcision or uncircumcision, or whatever its possessor may please to call it; it is, however, nothing that will stand him in stead when God comes to take away his soul: It availeth nothing. This humble, holy, operative, obedient love, is the grand touchstone of all human creeds and confessions of faith.

Verse 7. Ye did run well] Ye once had the faith that worked by love—ye were genuine, active, useful Christians. Who did hinder] Who prevented you from continuing to obey the truth? Ye could only be turned aside by your own consent.

Verse 8. This persuasion] Of the necessity of your being circumcised and obeying the law of Moses, is not of him that calleth you.

Verse 9. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.] A proverbial expression, very aptly applied to those who receive the smallest tincture of false doctrine, relative to the things essential to salvation, which soon influences the whole conduct, so that the man becomes totally perverted.

Verse 10. I have confidence in you] I now feel a persuasion from the Lord that ye will be aware of the danger to which ye are exposed, that ye will retreat in time, and recover the grace which ye have lost.

But he that troubleth you] The false teacher, who sowed doubtful disputations among you, and thus has troubled the repose of the whole church, shall bear his judgment—shall meet with the punishment he deserves, for having sown his tares among God's wheat.

Verse 11. If I yet preach circumcision] Were I a friend to this doctrine, the offence of the cross—preaching salvation only through the sacrifice of Christ, would soon cease; because, to be consistent with myself, if I preached the necessity of circumcision I must soon cease to preach Christ crucified, and then the Jews would be no longer my enemies.

Verse 12. I would they were even cut off which trouble you.] As the persons who were breeding all this confusion in the churches of Galatia were members of that church, the apostle appears to me to be simply expressing his desire that they might be cut off or excommunicated from the church. In opposition to the notion of excommunication, it might be asked: "Why should the apostle wish these to be excommunicated when it was his own office to do it?" To this it may be answered: The apostle's authority was greatly weakened among that people by the influence of the false teachers, so that in all probability he could exercise no ecclesiastical function; he could therefore only express his wish.

Verse 13. Ye have been called unto liberty] A total freedom from all the burdensome rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Only use not that liberty for an occasion to the flesh. By flesh, here, we may understand all the unrenewed

19 Now ^a the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness,

20 Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, 21 Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that ^a they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

22 But ^b the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, ^c gentleness, ^d goodness, ^e faith, 23 Meekness, temperance: ^f against such there is no law.

24 And they that are Christ's ^a have crucified the flesh with the ^b affections and lusts.

25 ^a If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit.

26 ^a Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

desires and propensities of the mind; whatsoever is not under the influence and guidance of the Holy Spirit of God.

By love serve one another.] When necessary, as slaves serve their masters.

Verse 15. If ye bite and devour one another] Nothing is so destructive to the peace of man, and to the peace of the soul, as religious disputes; where they prevail, religion in general has little place.

Verse 16. Walk in the Spirit] Get back that Spirit of God which you have grieved and lost; take up that spiritual religion which you have abandoned.

Ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.] If the Spirit of God dwell in and rule your heart, the whole carnal mind will be destroyed.

Verse 17. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit] God still continues to strive with you, notwithstanding your apostasy, showing you whence you have fallen, and exciting you to return to him; but your own obstinacy renders all ineffectual; and, through the influence of these different principles, you are kept in a state of self-opposition and self-distraction, so that you cannot do the things that ye would.

Verse 18. But, if ye be led of the Spirit] Ye will not feel those evil propensities which now disgrace and torment you; but they must prevail while you are not under the influence of the grace and Spirit of Christ.

Verse 19. Now the works of the flesh are manifest] By flesh we are to understand the evil and fallen state of the soul, no longer under the guidance of God's Spirit and right reason, but under the animal passions.

Adultery] Illicit connexion with a married person.

Fornication] Illicit connexion between single or unmarried persons; yet often signifying adultery also.

Uncleanness] Whatever is opposite to purity; probably meaning here, as in Rom. i. 24, 2 Cor. xii. 21, unnatural practices.

Lasciviousness] Whatever is contrary to chastity; all lewdness.

Verse 20. Idolatry] Worshipping of idols; frequenting idol festivals.

Witchcraft] The original signifies a drug or poison; because in all spells and enchantments, whether true or false, drugs were employed.

Hatred] Aversions and antipathies, when opposed to brotherly love and kindness.

Variance] Contentions, where the principle of hatred proceeds to open acts; hence contests, altercations, lawsuits, and disputes in general.

Emulations] Envy or emulations; that is, strife to excel at the expense of another; lowering others to set up one's self; unholy zeal, fervently adopting a bad cause, or supporting a good one by cruel means.

Wrath] Turbulent passions, disturbing the harmony of the mind, and producing domestic and civil broils and inquietudes.

Strife] Disputations, janglings, logomachies, or strife about words.

Seditions] Divisions into separate factions; parties, whether in the church or state.

Heresies] Factions; parties in the church separating from communion with each other, and setting up altar against altar.

Verse 21. Envyings] "Pain felt, and malignity conceived, at the sight of excellence or happiness."

Murders] Murder signifies the destruction of human life; and as he who hates his brother in his heart is ready to take away his life, so he is called a murderer.

Drunkenness] Taking more wine or any kind of inebriating liquor than is necessary for health; whatever unfits for public, domestic, or spiritual duties; even the cares of the world, when they intoxicate the mind. See on Rom. xiii. 13.

Revellings] Lascivious feastings, with obscene songs, music, &c. See on Rom. xiii. 13.

And such like] All that proceeds from the evil passions of a fallen spirit, besides those above specified; and all that the law of God specifies and condemns.

Of the which I tell you before] When I first preached the gospel to you.

As I have also told you in time past] When I paid my second visit to you; for the apostle did visit them twice.

Shall not inherit] They are not children of God, and therefore cannot inherit the kingdom which belongs only to the children of the divine family.

Verse 22. But the fruit of the Spirit] Both flesh—the sinful dispositions of the human heart, and spirit—the changed or purified state of the soul, by the grace and Spirit of God, are represented by the apostle as trees, one yielding good, the other bad fruit.

Love] An intense desire to please God, and to do good to mankind; the very soul and spirit of all true religion; the fulfilling of the law, and what gives energy to faith itself.

Joy] The exultation that arises from a sense of God's mercy communicated to the soul in the pardon of its iniquities, and the prospect of that eternal glory of which it has the foretaste in the pardon of sin.

Peace] The calm, quiet, and order, which take place in the justified soul. Peace is the first sensible fruit of the pardon of sin.

Long-suffering] Long-mindedness, bearing with the frailties and provocations of others; bearing up also through all the troubles and difficulties of life without murmuring or repining, and thus deriving benefit from every occurrence. Gentleness] Benignity, affability; a very rare grace, often wanting in many who have a considerable share of Christian excellence.

Goodness] The perpetual desire and sincere study to do good to the bodies and souls of men to the utmost of our ability.

Faith] Fidelity—punctuality in performing promises, conscientious carefulness in preserving what is committed to our trust, in restoring it to its proper owner, in transacting the business confided to us, neither betraying the secret of our friend, nor disappointing the confidence of our employer.

Verse 23. Meekness] Mildness, indulgence towards the weak and orring, patient suffering of injuries without feeling a spirit of revenge, an even balance of all tempers and passions, the entire opposite to anger.

Temperance] Continence, self-government or moderation, principally with regard to sensual or animal appetites. Moderation in eating, drinking, sleeping, &c.

Against such there is no law.] Those, whose lives are adorned by the above virtues, cannot be condemned by any law, for the whole purpose and design of the moral law of God is fulfilled in those who have the Spirit of God, producing in their hearts and lives the preceding fruits.

Verse 24. And they that are Christ's] All genuine Christians have crucified their sensual appetites; they have nailed them to the cross of Christ, where they have expired with him. Rom vi. 6.

Verse 25. If we live in the Spirit] If we profess to believe a spiritual religion, let us walk in the Spirit—let us show in our lives and conversation that the Spirit of God dwells in us.

Verse 26. Let us not be desirous of vain glory] Let us not be vain glorious—boasting of our attainments; vaunting ourselves to be superior to others; or seeking honour from those things which do not possess moral good; in birth, riches, eloquence, &c., &c.

Provoking one another] What this may refer to we cannot tell; whether to the Judaizing teachers, endeavouring to set themselves up beyond the apostle, and their attempts to lessen him in the people's eyes, that they might secure to themselves the public confidence, and thus destroy St. Paul's influence in the Galatian Churches; or whether to some other matter in the internal economy of the church, we know not. But the exhortation is necessary for every Christian, and for every Christian Church.

CHAPTER VI.

The apostle teaches them to be tender and affectionate towards any who, through surprise and the violence of temptation, had fallen into sin; and to bear each other's burdens, 1, 2. To think humbly of themselves, and to conclude concerning their own character rather from the evidence of their works than from any thing else, 3-5. To minister to the support of those who instruct them in righteousness, 6. He warns them against self-deception, because whatever a man soweth that he shall reap, 7, 8. Exhorts them not to be weary in well doing, and to embrace every opportunity to do good, 9, 10. Intimates that his love to them led him to write this whole epistle with his own hand, 11. Points out the object that those had in view who wished them to be circumcised, 12, 13. He exults in the cross of Christ, and asserts that a new creation of the soul is essential to its salvation; and wishes peace to them who act on this plan, 14-16. States that he bears in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, 17. And concludes with his apostolical benediction, 18.

BRETHREN, ^aif ^ba man be overtaken in a fault, ye ^cwhich are spiritual restore such an one ^din the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, ^elest thou also be tempted.

by the hand of a skillful and tender surgeon into its place.
In the spirit of meekness] Use no severity nor haughty carriage towards him ; as the man was suddenly overtaken, he is already deeply humbled and distressed, and needs much encouragement and lenient usage.

Considering thyself] Looking to thyself ; as he fell through a moment of unwatchfulness, look about, that thou be not surprised.

Lest thou also be tempted.] From the consideration of what we are, what we have been, or what we may be, we should learn to be compassionate.

Verse 2. Bear ye one another's burdens] Have sympathy ; feel for one another ; and consider the case of a distressed brother as your own.

And so fulfil the law of Christ.] That law or commandment, Ye shall love one another ; or that, Do unto all men as ye would that they should do unto you.

Verse 3. If a man think himself to be something] There are no people more censorious or uncharitable than those among some religious people who pretend to more light and a deeper communion with God. They are generally carried away with a sort of sublime, high-sounding phraseology, which seems to argue a wonderfully deep acquaintance with divine things ; stripped of this, many of them are like Samson without his hair.

Verse 4. Prove his own work] The only rule for a Christian is the word of Christ ; the only pattern for his imitation is the example of Christ. He should not compare himself with others ; they are not his standard.

Verse 5. Every man shall bear his own burden.] All must answer for themselves, not for their neighbours. The greater offences of another will not excuse thy smaller crimes.

Verse 6. Communicate unto him that teacheth.] We do not expect that a common schoolmaster will give up his time to teach our children their alphabet without being paid for it ; and can we suppose that it is just for any person to sit under the preaching of the gospel in order to grow wise unto salvation by it, and not contribute to the support of the spiritual teacher ?

Verse 7. Be not deceived] Neither deceive yourselves, nor permit yourselves to be deceived by others.

God is not mocked.] Ye cannot deceive him, and he will not permit you to mock him with pretended instead of real services.

Whatsoever a man soweth] Darnel will not produce wheat, nor wheat darnel.

Verse 8. He that soweth to his flesh] According as your present life is, so will be your eternal life ; whether your sowing be to the flesh or to the Spirit, so will your eternal reaping be. To sow, here, means transacting the concerns of a man's natural life. To reap, signifies his enjoyment or punishment in another world. Probably by flesh and Spirit the apostle means Judaism and Christianity.

Verse 9. Let us not be weary] Well-doing is easier in lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ.

13 For neither they themselves who are circumcised keep the law ; but desire to have you circumcised, that they may glory in your flesh.

14 ^a But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^b by whom the world is ^c crucified unto me, and I unto the world.

15 For ^d in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but ^e a new creature.

16 ^f And as many as walk ^g according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon ^h the Israel of God.

17 From henceforth let no man trouble me ; for ⁱ I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.

18 Brethren, ^j the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your Spirit. Amen.

itself than ill-doing ; and the danger of growing weary in the former arises only from the opposition to good in our own nature, or the outward hindrances we may meet with from a gainsaying and persecuting world.

In due season we shall reap] As the husbandman, in ploughing, sowing, and variously labouring in his fields, is supported by the hope of a plentiful harvest, which he cannot expect before the right and appointed time ; so every follower of God may be persuaded that he shall not be permitted to pray, weep, deny himself, and live in a conformity to his Maker's will, without reaping the fruit of it in eternal glory.

Verse 10. As we have—opportunity] While it is the time of sowing let us sow the good seed ; and let our love be, as the love of Christ is, free, manifested to all.

Verse 11. Ye see how large a letter] Some think he refers to the length of the epistle, others to the largeness of the letters in which this epistle is written, others to the inadequacy of the apostle's writing. I conclude that what the apostle says must be understood of the length of the epistle, in all probability the largest he had ever written with his own hand ; though several, much larger, had been dictated by him, but they were written by his scribe or amanuensis.

Verse 12. A fair show in the flesh] The Jewish religion was general in the religion of Galatia, and it was respectable, as it appears that the principal inhabitants were either Jews or proselytes. As it was then professed and practised among the Jews, this religion had nothing very grievous to the old man ; an unrenewed nature might go through all its observances with little pain or cross-bearing. On the other hand, Christianity could not be very popular ; it was too strict.

Verse 13. Neither they themselves who are circumcised] They receive circumcision and profess Judaism, not from a desire to be conformed to the will of God ; but Judaism was popular, and the more converts the false teachers could make, the more occasion of glorying they had.

Verse 14. But God forbid that I should glory] In the grand doctrine, that justification and salvation are only through Christ crucified, he having made an atonement for the sin of the world by his passion and death. And I glory also in the disgrace and persecution which I experience through my attachment to this crucified Christ.

By whom the world is crucified unto me] Jewish rites and Gentile vanities are equally insipid to me ; I know them to be empty and worthless.

Verse 15. In Christ Jesus] Under the dispensation of the gospel, of which he is head and supreme, neither circumcision—nothing that the Jew can boast of, nothing that the Gentile can call excellent, availeth anything—can in the least contribute to the salvation of the soul.

But a new creature.] But a new creation ; not a new creature merely (for this might be restrained to any new power or faculty), but a total renewal of the whole man, of all the powers and passions of the soul.

GALATIANS.

Verse 16. As many as walk according to this rule] This canon, viz., that redemption is through the sacrifice of Christ; that circumcision and uncircumcision are equally unavailable; and that none can be saved without being created anew. This is the grand canon or rule in Christianity.

The Israel of God.] The true Christians, called here the Israel of God, to distinguish them from Israel according to the flesh.

Verse 17. I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.] The stigmata of which the apostle speaks here, may be understood as implying the scars of the wounds which he had received in the work of the ministry; and that he had such scars, we may well conceive, when we know that he had been scourged, stoned, and maltreated in a variety of ways. Or, the apostle may allude to the stigmata or marks with which servants and slaves were often impressed, in order to ascertain whose property they were.

The first sense appears to be the best: "I have suffered already sufficiently; I am suffering still; do not add any more to my afflictions."

Verse 18. The grace] Favour, benevolence, and continual influence of the Lord Jesus, be with your spirit—may it live in your heart, enlighten and change your souls, and be conspicuous in your life!

Amen.] So let it be; and the prayer which I offer up for you on earth, may it be registered in heaven.

TO THE

EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

E P H E S I A N S.

E*PHEBUS* was a city of Ionian, in Asia Minor, and once the metropolis of that part of the world. The ancient city was situated at the mouth of the river Cayster, on the shore of the Ægean Sea, about 50 miles south of Smyrna. The Ephesus in which St. Paul founded a church, and which for a time flourished gloriously, was not the ancient Ephesus; for that was destroyed, and a new city of the same name was built by Lysimachus.

It is, however, a doubt with many learned men, whether this epistle was sent to the church at Ephesus. They think that the proper direction is, The Epistle of St. Paul to the Laodiceans; and suppose it to be the same which the apostle mentions, Col. iv. 16.

It must be allowed that the arguments in favour of this theory are both plausible and strong; and yet almost the whole of antiquity is in favour of the epistle having been sent originally to the Church at Ephesus. Puzzled with these two considerations, some critics have pointed out a middle way. They suppose that several copies of this epistle were directed to no particular church, but were intended for all the churches in Asia Minor; and that different copies might have different directions, from this circumstance, that St. Paul, in writing the first verse, Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ, to the saints which are, left a blank after are, which was in some cases filled up with in Ephesus; in others, with in Laodicea; though there might be one copy expressly sent by him to the Church of the Laodiceans, while he wished that others should be directed to the different churches through Asia Minor. That there were copies which had no place specified, we learn from St. Basil; and the arguments in favour of Laodicea are certainly the strongest; the circumstance that the apostle salutes no person, agrees well with Laodicea, where he had never been, Col. ii. 1; but cannot agree with Ephesus, where he was well known, and where, in preaching the gospel, he had spent three years. See Acts xx. 31.

As this point is very dubious, and men of great abilities and learning have espoused different sides of the question, I judge myself incompetent to determine any thing; my notes are constructed as though no controversy existed.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE EPHESIANS.

CHAPTER I.

The apostle's salutation to the church, 1, 2. He blesses God for calling the Gentiles to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, by whose sacrificial death both they and the Jews find redemption, 3-7. He shows that it was through the great abundance of God's wisdom and goodness that the Gentiles were called into a state of salvation, and that they should receive the Holy Spirit as the earnest of their inheritance, 8-15. He praises God for their conversion, and prays that they may be farther enlightened, that they may see the glory of Christ, and partake of the blessings procured by his passion and exaltation, 16-23.

PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ ^a by the will of God, ^b to the saints which are at Ephesus, ^c and to the faithful in Christ Jesus:

2 ^d Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 ^e Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly ^f places in Christ:

4 According as ^g he hath chosen us in him ^h before the foundation of the world, that we should ⁱ be holy and without blame before him in love:

5 ^j Having predestinated us unto ^k the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, ^l according to the good pleasure of his will,

6 To the praise of the glory of his grace, ^m wherein he hath made us accepted in ⁿ the Beloved:

7 ^o In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to ^p the riches of his grace;

8 Wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence;

9 ^q Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure ^r which he hath purposed in himself:

10 That in the ^s dispensation of ^t the fulness of times, ^u he might gather together in one ^v all things in Christ, both which are in ^w heaven, and which are on earth; ^x even in him;

Verse 1. To the saints which are at Ephesus] Saint properly signifies a holy person, and such the gospel of Christ requires every man to be, and such every true believer is, both in heart and life; but saint appears to have been an ordinary denomination of a believer in Christ in those primitive times, as the term Christian is now. Yet many had the name that had not the thing.

The faithful in Christ Jesus] The believers—the persons who received Christ as the promised Messiah, and the Saviour of the world, and continued in the grace which they had received.

Verse 3. With all spiritual blessings] With the pure doctrines of the gospel, and the abundant gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, justifying, sanctifying, and building us up on our most holy faith.

In heavenly places] In heavenly things, such as those mentioned above; they were not yet in heavenly places, but they had an abundance of heavenly things to prepare them for heavenly places. Some think the word should be understood as signifying blessings of the most exalted or excellent kind, such as are spiritual in opposition to those that are earthly, such as are eternal in opposition to those that are temporal; and all these in, through, and by CHRIST.

Verse 4. According as he hath chosen us in him] The Jews considered themselves an elect or chosen people, and wished to monopolise the whole of the divine love and beneficence. The apostle here shows that God had the Gentiles as much in the contemplation of his mercy and goodness as he had the Jews; and the blessings of the gospel, now so freely dispensed to them, were the proof that God had thus chosen them, and that his end in giving them the gospel was the same which he had in view by giving the law to the Jews, viz., that they might be holy and without blame before him. The words are a metaphor taken from the perfect and immaculate sacrifices which the law required the people to bring to the altar of God.

Verse 5. Having predestinated us] The verb signifies to define beforehand, and circumscribe by certain bounds or limits; and is originally a geographical term, but applied also to anything concluded, or determined, or demonstrated. Here the word is used to point out God's fixed purpose or predetermination to bestow on the Gentiles the blessing of the adoption of sons by Jesus Christ, which adoption had been before granted to the Jewish people; and, without circumcision, or any other Mosaic rite, to admit the Gentiles to all the privileges of his church and people. And the apostle marks that all this was fore-determined by God, as he had fore-determined the bounds and precincts of the land which he gave them according to the promise made to their fathers; that the Jews had no reason 11 *In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, *being predestinated according to *the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will:

12 *That we should be to the praise of his glory, *who first *trusted in Christ.

13 In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard *the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, *ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise, 14 *Which is the earnest of our inheritance, *until the redemption of *the purchased possession, *unto the praise of his glory.

15 Wherefore I also, *after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, *Acts xx. 32. xxvi. 18. Rom. viii. 17. Col. i. 12. iii. 24. Tit. iii. 7. to complain, for God had formed this purpose before he had given the law, or called them out of Egypt (for it was before the foundation of the world, ver. 2); and that, therefore, the conduct of God in calling the Gentiles now—bringing them into his church, and conferring on them the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, was in pursuance of his original design; and if he did not do so, his eternal purposes could not be fulfilled.

If therefore God, before the foundation of the Jewish economy, had determined that the Gentiles, in the fulness of time, should be called to and admitted into all the privileges of the Messiah's kingdom, then the exclusive salvation of the Jews was chimerical; and what God was doing now, by the preaching of the apostles in the Gentile world, was in pursuance of his original design. But why is the word fore-determined, limited, or circumscribed, used here? Merely in reference to the settlement of the Israelites in the Promised Land. God assigned to them the portions which they were to inherit; and these portions were described, and their bearings, boundaries, vicinities to other portions, extent and length, as exactly ascertained as they could be by the most correct geographical map. As his dealings with them were typical of what he intended to do in the calling and salvation of the Gentiles; so he uses the terms by which their allotment and settlement were pointed out to show that, what he had thus designed and typified, he had now fulfilled according to the original predetermination; the Gentiles having now the spiritual inheritance which God had pointed out by the grant made of the Promised Land to the children of Israel. This is the grand key by which this predestination business is unlocked.

Verse 6. To the praise of the glory of his grace] The glory of his grace, for his glorious or illustrious grace, according to the Hebrew idiom.

Wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved] The translation with which he has graciously favoured us through the Beloved, is at once more literal and more intelligible. In the Beloved must certainly mean in Christ.

Verse 7. In whom we have redemption] Christ's blood was the redemption price paid down for our salvation: and this was according to the riches of his grace; as his grace is rich or abundant in benevolence, so it was manifested in benevolence to mankind, in their redemption by the sacrifice of Christ, the measure of redeeming grace being the measure of God's own eternal goodness.

Verse 8. Wherein he hath abounded] That is, in the dispensation of mercy and goodness by Christ Jesus.

In all wisdom and prudence] Giving us apostles the most complete instructions in heavenly things by the inspiration of his Spirit; and at the same time prudence, that we might know when and where to preach the gospel, so that it might be effectual to the salvation of those who heard it.

Verse 9. Having made known unto us the mystery] That the Gentiles should ever be received into the Church of God, and have all the privileges of the Jews, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, and perform the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish law was a mystery—a hidden thing

16 *Cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers;

17 That *the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, *may give unto you the Spirit of wisdom and revelation, *in the knowledge of him:

18 *The eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is *the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his *inheritance in the saints,

19 And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, *according to the working *of his mighty power,

20 Which he wrought in Christ, when *he raised him from the dead, and *set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, which had never been published before; and now revealed only to the apostles.

Good pleasure] That benevolent design which he had purposed in himself, not being induced by any consideration from without.

Verse 10. In the dispensation of the fulness of times] The original word, which is the same as our word economy, means here the dispensation of the gospel, that plan by which God has provided salvation for a lost world; and according to which he intends to gather all believers, both Jews and Gentiles, into one church under Jesus Christ, their head and governor.

The fulness of times—By this phrase we are to understand either the gospel dispensation, which is the consummation of all preceding dispensations, and the last that shall be afforded to man; or, that advanced state of the world which God saw to be the most proper for the full manifestation of those benevolent purposes, which he had formed in himself, relative to the salvation of the world by Jesus Christ.

That he might gather together in one] The original word means to bring different sums together, and fractions of sums, so as to reduce them under one denomination; to recapitulate the principal matters contained in a discourse.

All things—which are in heaven, and which are on earth] This clause is variously understood: some think, by things in heaven the Jewish state is meant; and by things on earth the Christian. But there are others who imagine that the things in heaven mean the angelical hosts; and the things on earth, believers of all nations, who shall all be joined together at last in one assembly to worship God throughout eternity. And some think that the things in heaven mean the saints who died before Christ's advent, and who are not to be made perfect till the resurrection, when the full power and efficacy of Christ shall be seen in raising the bodies of believers, and uniting them with their holy souls, to reign in his presence for ever. And some think that, as the Hebrew phrase shamayim vehaaretz, the heavens and the earth, signifies all creatures, the words in the text are to be understood as signifying all mankind, without discrimination of peoples, kindreds, or tongues; Jews, Greeks, or barbarians.

I believe that the forming one church out of both Jews and Gentiles is that to which the apostle refers. This agrees with what is said, chap. ii. 14-17.

Verse 11. In whom] Christ Jesus; also us—believing Jews, have obtained an inheritance—what was promised to Abraham and his spiritual seed, viz., the adoption of sons, and the kingdom of heaven, signified by the privileges under the Mosaic dispensation, and the possession of the promised land.

Being predestinated] God having determined to bring both Jews and Gentiles to salvation, not by works, nor by any human means or schemes, but by Jesus Christ; that salvation being defined and determined before in the divine mind, and the means by which it should be brought about all being according to his purpose, who consults not his creatures, but operates according to the counsel of his own will, that being ever wise, gracious, and good.

21 *Far above all ^bprincipality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come;

22 And *hath put all things under his feet, and

*Phil. ii. 9, 10. Col. ii. 10. Heb. i. 4.—^bRom. viii. 38. Col. i. 16. ii. 15.—^cPs. viii. 6. Matt. xxviii. 18. 1 Cor. xv. 27. Heb. ii. 8.—^dCh. iv. 15, 16. Col. i. 18. Heb. ii. 7.—^eRom. xii. 5. 1 Cor.

Thus there was nothing fortuitous in the Christian scheme; all was the result of infinite counsel and design. See on verse 5.

Verse 12. That we] Jews, now apostles and messengers of God, to whom the first offers of salvation were made, and who were the first that believed in Christ.

Should be to the praise of his glory] By being the means of preaching Christ crucified to the Gentiles, and spreading the gospel throughout the world.

Verse 13. In whom also (through whom, Christ Jesus), after that ye had believed] That he was the only Saviour, and that through his blood redemption might be obtained, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise; that is: The Holy Spirit, which is promised to them who believe on Christ Jesus, was given to you, and thus you were ascertained to be the children of God; for God has no child who is not a partaker of the Holy Ghost, and he who has this Spirit has God's seal that he belongs to the heavenly family. It was customary among all nations, when a person purchased goods of any kind, to mark with his seal that which he had bought, in order that he might know it, and be able to claim it if mixed with the goods of others; to this custom the apostle may here allude: but it was also customary to set a seal upon what was dedicated to God, or what was to be offered to him in sacrifice.

Verse 14. Which is the earnest of our inheritance] This Holy Spirit, sealing the soul with truth and righteousness, is the earnest, foretaste, and pledge of the heavenly inheritance. And he who can produce this earnest—this witness of the Spirit, in the day of judgment, shall have an abundant entrance into the holiest.

The redemption of the purchased possession] That is, till the time when the body and soul are redeemed from all their miseries, and glorified in the kingdom of heaven.

Verse 15. Faith in the Lord Jesus] Cordial reception of the Christian religion, amply proved by their love to all the saints—to all the Christians.

Verse 16. Making mention of you] While praying for the prosperity of the Christian cause generally, he was led, from his particular affection for them, to mention them by name before God.

Verse 17. That the God of our Lord Jesus] Jesus Christ, as man and mediator, has the Father for his God and Father; and it is in reference to this that he himself says: I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God, John xx. 17.

The Father of glory] The author and giver of that glory which you expect at the end of your Christian race. This may be a Hebraism for glorious Father, but the former appears to be the best sense.

Verse 18. The eyes of your understanding being enlightened] The understanding is that power or faculty in the soul by which knowledge or information is received, and the recipient power is here termed the EYES of the understanding.

Instead of of your understanding, of your heart, is the reading of several MSS., Versions, and Fathers. This is undoubtedly the true reading.

The hope of his calling] That you may clearly discern the glorious and important objects of your hope, to the enjoyment of which God has called or invited you.

The riches of the glory of his inheritance] That you may understand what is the glorious abundance of the spiritual things to which you are entitled, in consequence of being made children of God.

gave him ^a*to-be* the head over all things to the church, 23 *Which is his body, 'the fulness of him * that filleth all in all.

xii. 12, 27. Ch. iv. 12. v. 23, 30. Col. i. 18, 24.—^cCol. ii. 10.—^d1 Cor. xii. 6. Ch. iv. 10. Col. iii. 11.

Verse 19. The exceeding greatness of his power] This is to be understood of that might which is to be exerted in raising the body at the last day; as it will require the same power or energy which he wrought in Christ, when he raised his body from the grave, to raise up the bodies of all mankind; the resurrection of the human nature of Christ being a proof of the resurrection of mankind in general.

According to the working of his mighty power] According to the energy of the power of his might. We may understand these words thus: MIGHT is the state or simple efficiency of this attribute in God; POWER is this might or efficiency in action; ENERGY is the quantum of force, momentum, or velocity, with which the power is applied. Though they appear to be synonymous terms they may be thus understood: passive power is widely different from power in action; and power in action will be in its results according to the energy or momentum with which it is applied. The resurrection of the dead is a stupendous work of God; it requires his might in sovereign action; and when we consider that all mankind are to be raised and changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, then the momentum, or velocity, with which the power is to be applied must be inconceivably great.

Verse 20. Set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places] The right hand is the place of friendship, honour, confidence, and authority.

Verse 21. Far above all principality] Some think the reference here is to the different orders among good and evil angels; he is superior to all the former, and rules all the latter. Others think the apostle refers to earthly governments; and as principality, the first word, signifies the most sovereign and extensive kind of dominion; and lordship, the last word, signifies the lowest degree of authority; hence we are to understand that to our Lord, in his human nature, are subjected the highest, the intermediate, and the lowest orders of beings in the universe. Others imagine that the apostle has in view, by whatsoever is named in this world, all the dignitaries of the Jewish Church; and by what is named in the world to come, all the dignities that should be found in the Christian church.

It is certain that the apostle means that all created power, glory, and influence, are under Christ; and hence it is added:

Verse 22. And hath put all things under his feet] All beings and things are subject to him, whether they be thrones, dominions, principalities, or powers, Col. i. 16-18, and ii. 10.

Verse 23. Which is his body] As he is head over all things, he is head to the church; and this church is considered as the body of which he is especially the head; and from him, as the head, the church receives light, life, and intelligence.

The fulness of him] That in which he especially manifests his power, goodness, and truth. Some understand the fulness here as signifying the thing to be filled; so the Christian Church is to be filled by him, whose fulness fills all his members, with all spiritual gifts and graces.

How, in any other sense, the church can be said to be the fulness of him who fills all in all, is difficult to say. However, as Jesus Christ is represented to be the head, and the church the body under that head, the individuals being so many members in that body; and as it requires a body and members to make a head complete; so it requires a church or general assembly of believers, to make up the body of Christ.

Verse 1. And you hath he quickened] DEATH is often used by all writers, and in all nations, to express a state of extreme misery. The Ephesians, by trespassing and sinning, had brought themselves into a state of deplorable wretchedness, as had all the heathen nations; and having thus sinned against God, they were condemned by him, and might be considered as dead in law—incapable of performing any legal act, and always liable to the punishment of death, which they had deserved, and which was ready to be inflicted upon them.

Trespasses may signify the slightest deviation from the line and rule of moral equity, as well as any flagrant offence; for these are equally transgressions, as long as the sacred line that separates between vice and virtue is passed over.

Sins may probably mean here habitual transgression; sinning knowingly and daringly.

Verse 2. Wherein in time past ye walked] There is much force in these expressions; the Ephesians had not sinned casually, or now and then, but continually; they walked in trespasses and sins: and this was not a solitary case, all the nations of the earth acted in the same way; it was the course of this world, according to the life, mode of living, or successive ages of this world. The Greek word, the literal meaning of which is constant duration, is often applied to things which have a complete course, as the Jewish dispensation, a particular government, and the term of human life; so, here, the whole of life is a tissue of sin, from the cradle to the grave; every human soul, unsaved by Jesus Christ, continues to transgress. And the nominally Christian world is in the same state to the present day.

The prince of the power of the air] Satan is termed prince of the power of the air because the air is supposed to be a region in which malicious spirits dwell, all of whom are under the direction and influence of Satan, their chief.

The spirit that now worketh] The operations of the prince of the aerial powers are not confined to that region; he has another sphere of action, viz., the wicked heart of man, and in this he works with energy.

Children of disobedience] Perhaps a Hebraism for disobedient children; but, taken as it stands here, it is a strong expression in which disobedience appears to be personified, and wicked men exhibited as her children; the prince of the power of the air being their father, while disobedience is their mother.

Verse 3. Among whom also we all had our conversation] We Jews, as well as you Gentiles, have lived in transgressions and sins; this was the course of our life; we lived in sin, walked in sin, it was woven through our whole constitution, it tinged every temper, polluted every faculty, and perverted every transaction of life. The lusts—the evil, irregular, and corrupt affections of the heart, showed themselves in the perversion of the mind as well as in our general conduct. The mind was darkened by the lusts of the flesh, and both conjoined to produce acts of unrighteousness.

And were by nature the children of wrath] The words in the text have often been quoted to prove the doctrine of original sin; but, though that doctrine be an awful truth, it is not, in my opinion, intended here; it is rather found in the preceding words, the lusts of the flesh, and the desires of the flesh and of the mind. The apostle appears to speak of sinful habits; and as we say HABIT is a second nature, and as these persons acted from their originally corrupt nature—from the lusts of the flesh and of the mind, they thus became, by their vicious habits, or second nature, children of wrath—persons exposed to perdition, because of the impurity of their hearts and the wickedness of their lives.

Verse 4. But God, who is rich in mercy] It required much mercy to remove so much misery, and to pardon such transgressions.

His great love] God's infinite love is the ground-work of our salvation; in reference to us that love assumes the form of mercy, and that mercy provides the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. And therefore the apostle adds, ver. 5: By grace ye are saved—it is by God's free mercy in Christ that ye are brought into this state of salvation.

Verse 5. Even when we were dead in sins] Dead in our souls; dead towards God; dead in law; and exposed to death eternal.

Hath quickened us together with Christ] God has given us as complete a resurrection from the death of sin to a life of righteousness, as the body of Christ has had from the grave.

Verse 6. And hath raised us up together—in Christ] Or rather, by Christ; his resurrection being the proof that he had made the full atonement, and that we might be justified by his blood.

Verse 7. That in the ages to come] This observation of the apostle is of great use and importance; because we are authorised to state, in all the successive ages of the world, that he who saved the sinners at Ephesus is ever ready to save all who, like them, repent of their sins, and believe in Christ Jesus.

Verse 8. For by grace are ye saved, through faith] This salvation is in no sense of yourselves, but is the free gift of God; and not of any kind of works; so that no man can boast as having wrought out his own salvation, or even contributed anything towards it.

But whether are we to understand faith or salvation as being the gift of God? This question is answered by the Greek text: "By this grace ye are saved through faith; and this (this salvation) not of you; it is the gift of God, not of works: so that no one can boast." But it may be asked: Is not faith the gift of God? Yes, as to the grace by which it is produced; but the grace or power to believe, and the act of believing, are two different things. Without the grace or power to believe, no man ever did or can believe; but with that power, the act of faith is a man's own. God never believes for any man, no more than he repents for him; the penitent, through this grace enabling him, believes for himself: nor does he believe necessarily or impulsively when he has that power; the power to believe may be present long before it is exercised, else, why the solemn warnings with which we meet everywhere in the word of God, and threatening against those who do not believe? Is not this a proof that such persons have the power but do not use it? They believe not, and therefore are not established. This, therefore, is the true state of the case: God gives the power, man uses the power thus given, and brings glory to God: without the power no man can believe; with it, any man may.

Verse 10. For we are his workmanship] So far is this salvation from being our own work, or granted for our own works' sake, that we are ourselves not only the creatures of God, but our new creation was produced by his power; for we are created in Christ Jesus unto good works.

Which God hath before ordained] For which God before prepared us, that we might walk in them. This preparing must refer to the time when God began the new creation in their hearts; for from the first inspiration of God upon the soul it begins to love holiness; and obedience to the will of God is the very element in which a holy or regenerated soul lives.

Verse 11. Wherefore remember] That ye may ever see and feel your obligations to live a pure and holy life, and be unfeignedly thankful to God for your salvation.

Verse 12. That at that time ye were without Christ] Not only were not Christians, but had no knowledge of the Christ or Messiah, and had no title to the blessings which were to proceed from him.

Aliens from the commonwealth of Israel] By your birth, idolatry, &c., alienated from the civil and religious privileges of the Jewish people.

Strangers from the covenants of promise] Having no part in the promise of the covenant made with Abraham, whether considered as relating to his natural or spiritual seed; and no part in that of the covenant made at Horeb with the Israelites, when a holy law was given them, and God condescended to dwell among them, and to lead them to the promised land.

Having no hope] Either of the pardon of sin or of the resurrection of the body, nor indeed of the immortality of the soul.

Without God in the world] They had gods many, and lords many; but in no Gentile nation was the true God known: nor indeed had they any correct notion of the divine nature.

Verse 13. Ye who sometimes were far off] To be far off, and to be near, are sayings much in use among the Jews; and among them, to be near, signifies, 1. To be in the approbation or favour of God; and to be far off, signifies to be under his displeasure. 2. Every person who offered a sacrifice to God was considered as having access to him by the blood of that sacrifice. 3. Being far off signified the state of the Gentiles as contra-distinguished from the Jews who were nigh: Isa. lvii. 19.

Verse 14. For he is our peace] Jesus Christ has died for both Jews and Gentiles, and has become a peace-offering, shalom, to reconcile both to God and to each other.

Who hath made both one] Formed one church out of the believers of both people.

The middle wall of partition] This expression can refer only to that most marked distinction which the Jewish laws and customs made between them and all other nations whatsoever.

When, at the death of Christ, the veil of the temple was rent from the top to the bottom, it was an emblem that the way to the holiest was laid open and that the people at large, both Jews and Gentiles, were to have access to the holiest by the blood of Jesus.

Verse 15. Having abolished in his flesh] By his incarnation and death he not only made an atonement for sin, but he appointed the doctrine of reconciliation to God, and of love to each other, to be preached in all nations; and thus glory was brought to God in the highest, and on earth, peace and good will were diffused among men.

The enmity of which the apostle speaks was reciprocal among the Jews and Gentiles. [The reference is perhaps to the law, which was the root of the enmity.]

The law of commandments] Contained in, or rather concerning, ordinances; which law was made merely for the purpose of keeping the Jews a distinct people, and pointing out the Son of God till he should come.

To make in himself] To make one church out of both people, which should be considered the body of which Jesus Christ is the head. Thus he makes one new man—one new church; and thus he makes and establishes peace.

Verse 16. That he might reconcile both—in one body] That the Jews and Gentiles, believing on the Lord Jesus, might lay aside all their causes of contention, and become one spiritual body, or society of men, influenced by the Spirit, and acting according to the precepts of the gospel.

Having slain the enmity thereby] Having, by his death upon the cross, made reconciliation between God and man, and by his Spirit in their hearts removed the enmity of their fallen, sinful nature.

Verse 17. And came and preached peace] Proclaimed the readiness of God to forgive and save both Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 18. For through him] Christ Jesus, we both—Jews and Gentiles, have access by one Spirit—through the influence of the Holy Ghost, unto the Father—God Almighty. This text is a plain proof of the Holy Trinity.

Verse 19. Ye are no more strangers] In this chapter the church of God is compared to a city, which has a variety of privileges, rights, &c., founded on regular charters and grants. The Gentiles, having believed in Christ, are all incorporated with the believing Jews in this holy city. Formerly, when any of them came to Jerusalem, being strangers, they had no kind of rights whatever; nor could they, as mere heathens, settle among them. Again, if any of them, convinced of the errors of the Gentiles, acknowledged the God of Israel, but did not receive circumcision, he might dwell in the land, but he had no right to the blessings of the covenant; such might be called sojourners—persons who have no property in the land, and may only rent a house for the time being.

Fellow-citizens with the saints] The saints spoken of here are the converted or Christianized Jews.

Of the household of God] The house of God is the temple; the temple was a type of the Christian Church; this is now become God's house; all genuine believers are considered as being domestics of this house, the children and servants of God Almighty, having all equal rights, privileges, and advantages; as all, through one Spirit, by the sacred Head of the family, had equal access to God, and each might receive as much grace and as much glory as his soul could possibly contain.

Verse 20. And are built upon the foundation] Following the same metaphor, comparing the Church of Christ to a city, and to the temple, the believing Ephesians are represented as parts of that building; the living stones out of which it is principally formed, 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5, having for foundation the ground-plan, specification, and principle on which it was builded, the doctrine taught by the prophets in the Old Testament, and the apostles in the New. Jesus Christ being that corner-stone, the chief angle or foundation corner-stone, the connecting medium by which both Jews and Gentiles were united in the same building.

Verse 21. In whom] By which foundation corner-stone, Christ Jesus, all the building, composed of converted Jews and Gentiles, fitly framed together, properly jointed and connected together, groweth unto a holy temple—is continually increasing, as new converts from Judaism or heathenism flock into it. It is not a finished building, but will continue to increase, and be more and more perfect, till the day of judgment.

Verse 22. In whom ye also are builded] The apostle now applies the metaphor to the purpose for which he produced it, retaining however some of the figurative expressions. As the stones in a temple are all properly placed so as to form a complete house, and be a habitation for the Deity that is worshipped there, so ye are all, both believing Jews and Gentiles, prepared by the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, under the influence of the Spirit of Christ, to become a habitation of God, a church in which God shall be worthily worshipped, and in which he can continually dwell.

CHAPTER III

Paul, a prisoner for the testimony of Jesus, declares his knowledge of what had been a mystery from all ages, that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs and of the same body with the Jews, 1-6. Of which doctrine he was made a minister, that he might declare the unsearchable riches of Christ, and make known to principalities and powers this eternal purpose of God, 7-12. He desires them not to be discouraged on account of his tribulations, 13. His prayer that they might be filled with all the fulness of God, 14-19. His doxology, 20, 21.

FOR this cause I Paul, * the prisoner of Jesus Christ ^b for you Gentiles, Ver. 8.—^e Acts xxii. 17, 21. xxvi. 17, 18.—^f Gal. i. 12.—^g Rom. xvi. 25.

Verse 1. For this cause] Because he maintained that the Gentiles were admitted to all the privileges of the Jews, and all the blessings of the New Covenant, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, the Jews persecuted him, and caused him to be imprisoned, first at Cæsarea, where he was obliged to appeal to the Roman emperor, in consequence of which he was sent prisoner to Rome. See Acts xxi. 21-28, &c.

Verse 2. If ye have heard of the dispensation] The compound participle which is commonly translated if indeed, in several places means since indeed, seeing that, and should be translated so in this verse, and in several other places of the New Testament.

By the dispensation of the grace of God we may understand, either the apostolic office and gifts granted to St. Paul, for the purpose of preaching the gospel among the Gentiles, see Rom. i. 5; or the knowledge which God gave him of that gracious and divine plan which he had formed for the conversion of the Gentiles. For the meaning of the word economy see the note on chap. i. 10.

Verse 8. By revelation he made known unto me] Instead of he made known, was made known is doubtless the true reading.

8 Unto me, ^awho am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that ^bI should preach among the Gentiles ^cthe unsearchable riches of Christ;

9 And to make all men see what is the fellowship of ^dthe mystery, ^ewhich from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, ^fwho created all things by Jesus Christ:

Verse 4. Whereby, when ye read] When ye refer back to them.

Ye may understand my knowledge] Ye may see what God has given me to know concerning what has been hitherto a mystery—the calling of the Gentiles, and the breaking down the middle wall between them and the Jews, so as to make both one spiritual body, and on the same conditions.

Verse 5. Which in other ages was not made known] That the calling of the Gentiles was made known by the prophets in different ages of the Jewish Church is exceedingly clear; but it certainly was not made known in that clear and precise manner in which it was now revealed by the Spirit unto the ministers of the New Testament: nor was it made known unto them at all, that the Gentiles should find salvation without coming under the yoke of the Mosaic law, and that the Jews themselves should be freed from the yoke of bondage; these were discoveries totally new, and now revealed for the first time by the Spirit of God.

Verse 6. That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs] This is the substance of that mystery which had been hidden from all ages, and which was now made known to the New Testament apostles and prophets, and more particularly to St. Paul.

Verse 7. Whereof I was made a minister] A deacon, a servant acting under and by the direction of the great master, Jesus Christ; from whom, by an especial call and revelation, I received the apostolic gifts and office, and by the energy, the in-working, of his power, this gospel which I preached was made effectual to the salvation of vast multitudes of Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 8. Less than the least of all saints] As the design of the apostle was to magnify the grace of Christ in the salvation of the world, he uses every precaution to prevent the eyes of the people from being turned to anything but Christ crucified; and although he was obliged to speak of himself as the particular instrument which God had chosen to bring the Gentile world to the knowledge of the truth, yet he does it in such a manner as to show that the excellency of the power was of God, and not of him; and that, highly as he and his fellow-apostles were honoured, they had the heavenly treasure in earthen vessels.

The unsearchable riches of Christ] The word is exceedingly well chosen here; it refers to the footsteps of God, the plans he had formed, the dispensations which he had published, and the innumerable providences which he had combined, to prepare, mature, and bring to full effect and view his gracious designs in the salvation of a ruined world, by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of his Son. There were in these schemes and providences such riches—such an abundance, such a variety, as could not be comprehended even by the naturally vast, and, through the divine inspiration, unparallelably capacious mind of the apostle.

Verse 9. And to make all men see] And to illuminate all; to give information both to Jews and Gentiles; to afford them a sufficiency of light, so that they might be able distinctly to discern the great objects exhibited in this gospel.

What is the fellowship of the mystery] Instead of fellowship, dispensation or economy is the reading of the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers. This word is far more congenial to the scope of the apostle's declaration in this place; he wished to show them the economy of that mystery of bringing Jews and Gentiles to salvation by faith in Christ Jesus, which God from the beginning of the world had kept hidden in his own infinite mind, and did not think proper to reveal even when he projected the creation of the world, which had respect to the economy of human redemption. And although the world was made by Jesus Christ, the great Redeemer, yet at that period this revelation of the power of God, the design of saving men, whose fall infinite wisdom had foreseen, was not then revealed.

Who created all things by Jesus Christ] The words, by Jesus Christ, are wanting in several MSS., Versions, and Fathers. The text should be read: Which from the beginning of the world had been hidden in God, who created all things. No inferiority of Christ can be argued from a clause of whose spuriousness there is the strongest evidence.

Verse 10. That now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places] Who are these principalities and powers? Some think evil angels are intended, because they are thus denominated, chap. vi. 12. Others think good angels are meant; for as these heavenly beings are curious to investigate the wondrous economy of the gospel, though they are not its immediate objects, see 1 Pet. i. 12, it is quite consistent with the goodness of God to give them that satisfaction which they require. Others imagine the Jewish rulers and rabbins are intended, particularly those of them who were converted to Christianity, and who had now learnt from the preaching of the gospel what, as Jews, they could never have known. This sort of phraseology is frequent among the Jews, and indeed not seldom used in the New Testament.

By the church] That is, by the Christians, and by the wonderful things done in the church; and by the apostles, who were its pastors.

The manifold wisdom of God] That multifarious and greatly diversified wisdom of God; laying great and infinite plans, and accomplishing them by endless means, through the whole lapse of ages.

Verse 11. According to the eternal purpose] According to the purpose concerning the periods. This seems to refer to the complete round of the Jewish system, and to that of the gospel. God purposed that the Jewish dispensation should commence at such a time, and terminate at such a time; that the gospel dispensation should commence when the Jewish ended, and terminate only with life itself; and that the results of both should be endless. This is probably what is meant by the above phrase. [The ordinary interpretation is more probable.]

Which he purposed in Christ Jesus] Which he made or constituted in or for Christ Jesus. The manifestation of Christ, and the glory which should follow, were the grand objects which God kept in view in all his dispensations.

Verse 12. In whom we have boldness] By whom we, Gentiles, have this liberty of speech; so that we may say any thing by prayer and supplication, and this introduction into the divine presence by faith in Christ. It is on the ground of such scriptures as these that we conclude all our prayers in the name, and for the sake, of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Verse 13. I desire that ye faint not] “I suffer my present imprisonment on account of demonstrating your privileges, of which the Jews are envious: I bear my afflictions patiently, knowing that what I have advanced is of God, and thus I give ample proof of the sincerity of my own conviction. The sufferings, therefore, of your apostle are honourable to you and to your cause; and far from being any cause why you should faint, or draw back like cowards, in the day of distress, they should be an additional argument to induce you to persevere.”

Verse 14. For this cause I bow my knees] That you may not faint, but persevere, I frequently pray to God, who is our God and the Father of our Lord Jesus.

Verse 15. Of whom the whole family] Believers in the Lord Jesus Christ on earth, the spirits of just men made perfect in a separate state, and all the holy angels in heaven, make but one family, of which God is the Father and Head. St. Paul does not say, of whom the families, as if each order formed a distinct household; but he says family, because they are all one, and of one. And all this family is named—derives its origin and being, from God.

Verse 16. That he would grant you] This prayer of the apostle is one of the most grand and sublime in the whole oracles of God. No paraphrase can do it justice, and few commentators seem to have entered into its spirit; perhaps deterred by its unparalleled sublimity.

According to the riches of his glory] According to the measure of his own eternal fulness; God's infinite mercy and goodness being the measure according to which we are to be saved.

To be strengthened with might] Ye have many enemies, owning and strong; many trials, too great for your natural strength; many temptations, which no human power is able successfully to resist; many duties to perform, which cannot be accomplished by the strength of man; therefore you need divine strength.

By his Spirit] This fountain of spiritual energy can alone supply the spiritual strength which is necessary for this spiritual work and conflict.

In the inner man] In the soul. Every man is a compound being; he has a body and a soul. The outward man is that alone which is seen and considered by men; the inward man is that which stands particularly in reference to God and eternity.

Verse 17. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith] Paul, having considered the church at Ephesus completely formed, as to every external thing, prays that God may come down and dwell in it. And as there could be no indwelling of God but by Christ, and no indwelling of Christ but by faith, he prays that they may have such faith in Christ, as shall keep them in constant possession of his love and presence.

That ye, being rooted and grounded in love] Here is a double metaphor; one taken from agriculture, the other, from architecture. As trees, they are to be rooted in love—this is the soil in which their souls are to grow; into the infinite love of God their souls by faith are to strike their roots, and from this love derive all that nourishment which is essential for their full growth. As a building, their foundation is to be laid in this love. Here is the ground on which alone the soul, and all its hopes and expectations, can be safely founded. In this, as its proper soil, it grows. On this, as its only foundation, it rests.

Verse 18. May be able to comprehend with all saints] These words are so exceedingly nervous and full of meaning, that it is almost impossible to translate them. The first word signifies that they might be thoroughly able, by having been strengthened with might, by God's power. The second word may be translated, that ye may fully catch, take in, and comprehend, this wonderful mystery of God.

What is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height] Here the apostle still keeps up the metaphor, comparing the Church of God to a building; and as, in order to rear a proper building, formed on scientific principles, a ground plan and specification must be previously made, according to which the building is to be constructed, the apostle refers to this; for this must be thoroughly understood, without which the building could not be formed.

But what can the apostle mean by the breadth, length, knowledge, that ye might be filled ^a with all the fulness of God.

20 Now ^b unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly ^c above all that we ask or think, ^d according to the power that worketh in us, 21 ^e Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

depth, and height, of the love of God? Imagination can scarcely frame any satisfactory answer to this question. It takes in the eternity of God. GOD IS LOVE; and in that, an infinity of breadth, length, depth, and height, is included; or rather all breadth, length, depth, and height, are lost in this immensity. It comprehends all that is above, all that is below, all that is past, and all that is to come. In reference to human beings, the love of God, in its BREADTH, is a girdle that encompasses the globe; its LENGTH reaches from the eternal purpose of the mission of Christ, to the eternity of blessedness which is to be spent in his ineffable glories; its DEPTH reaches to the lowest fallen of the sons of Adam; and to the deepest depravity of the human heart; and its HEIGHT to the infinite dignities of the throne of Christ.

Verse 19. To know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge] The gift of Christ to man is the measure of God's love; the death of Christ for man is the measure of Christ's love.

But how can the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, be known? Many have laboured to reconcile this seeming contradiction. If we take the verb in a sense in which it is frequently used in the New Testament, to approve, acknowledge, or acknowledge with approbation, and the noun to signify comprehension, then the difficulty will be partly removed: "That ye may acknowledge, approve, and publicly acknowledge that love of God which surpasseth knowledge."

But it is more likely that the word which we translate knowledge, signifies here science in general, and particularly that science of which the rabbins boasted, and that in which the Greeks greatly exulted. When the apostle prays that they may know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge, he may refer to all the boasted knowledge of the Jewish doctors, and to all the greatly extolled science of the Greek philosophers. To know the love of Christ, infinitely surpasseth all other science.

That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God.] Among all the great sayings in this prayer, this is the greatest. To be FILLED with God is a great thing; to be filled with the FULLNESS of God is still greater; but to be filled with ALL the fulness of God, utterly bewilders the sense and confounds the understanding.

Most people, in quoting these words, endeavour to correct or explain the apostle, by adding the word communicable, but this is as idle as it is useless and impertinent. To be filled with all the fulness of God, is to have the whole soul filled with meekness, gentleness, goodness, love, justice, holiness, mercy, and truth. And as, what God fills, neither sin nor Satan can fill; consequently, it implies that the soul shall be emptied of sin, that sin shall neither have dominion over it, nor a being in it. It is impossible for us to understand these words in a lower sense than this. But how much more they imply (for more they do imply) I cannot tell.

Verse 20. Now unto him] Having finished his short, but most wonderfully comprehensive and energetic prayer, the apostle brings in his doxology, giving praise to Him from whom all blessings come, and to whom all thanks are due.

That is able to do exceeding abundantly] God is omnipotent, therefore he is able to do all things, and able to do superabundantly above the greatest abundance.

All that we ask or think] We can ask every good of which we have heard, every good which God has promised in his word; and we can think of, or imagine, goods and blessings beyond all that we have either read of or seen: yea, we can imagine good things to which it is impossible for us to give a name; we can go beyond the limits of all human descriptions; we can imagine more than even God has specified in his word; and can feel no bounds to our imagination of good, but impossibility and eternity: and after all, God is able to do more for us than we can ask or think; and his ability here is so necessarily connected with his willingness, that the one indisputably implies the other; for, of what consequence would it be to tell the Church of God that he had power to do so and so, if there were not implied an assurance that he will do what his power can, and what the soul of man needs to have done?

According to the power that worketh in us] All that he can do, and all that he has promised to do, will be done according to what he has done, by that power of the Holy Ghost, which worketh strongly in us—acts with energy in our hearts, expelling evil, purifying and refining the affections and desires, and implanting good.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle exhorts them to walk worthy of their vocation, and to live in peace and unity, 1-6. Shows that God has distributed a variety of gifts, and instituted a variety of offices in his church, for the building up and perfecting of the body of Christ, 7-13. Teaches them the necessity of being well instructed and steady in divine things, 14. Teaches how the body or Church of Christ is constituted, 15, 16. Warns them against acting like the Gentiles, of whose conduct he gives a lamentable description, 17-19. Points out how they had been changed, in consequence of their conversion to Christianity, 20, 21. Gives various exhortations relative to the purification of their minds; their conduct to each other, and to the poor, 22-28. Shows them that their conversation should be chaste and holy, that they might not grieve the Spirit of God; that they should avoid all bad tempers, be kindly affectioned one to another, and be of a forgiving spirit, 29-32.

I THEREFORE, ^a the prisoner ^b of the Lord,) beseech you that ye ^c walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called,
 2 ^d With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love;
 3 Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit ^e in the bond of peace.
 4 ^f There is one body and ^g one Spirit, even as ye are called in one ^h hope of your calling;

Verse 1. Beseech you that ye walk] Ye have your liberty, and may walk; I am deprived of mine, and cannot. This is a fine stroke, and wrought up into a strong argument. You who are at large can show forth the virtues of him who called you into his marvellous light; I am in bondage, and can only exhort others by my writing, and show my submission to God by my patient suffering.

The vocation wherewith ye are called] Their vocation, or calling, took in their Christian profession, with all the doctrines, precepts, privileges, duties, &c., of the Christian religion.

Verse 2. With all lowliness] Subjection or humility of mind.

Meekness] The opposite to anger and irritability of disposition.

Long-suffering] Long-mindedness—never permitting a trial or provocation to get to the end of your patience.

Forbearing one another] Sustaining one another—helping to support each other in all the miseries and trials of life; or, it may mean that, through the love of God working in our hearts, we should bear with each other's infirmities.

Verse 3. Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace] By the unity of the Spirit we are to understand, not only a spiritual unity, but also a unity of sentiments, desires, and affections, such as is worthy of and springs from the Spirit of God. By the bond of peace we are to understand a peace or union, where the interests of all parties are concentrated, cemented, and sealed; the Spirit of God being the seal upon this knot.

Verse 4. There is one body] Viz., of Christ, which is his church.

One Spirit] The Holy Ghost, who animates this body.

Verse 5. One Lord] Jesus Christ, who is the governor of this church.

One faith] One system of religion, proposing the same objects to the faith of all.

One baptism] Administered in the name of the Holy Trinity; indicative of the influences, privileges, and effects of the Christian religion.

Verse 6. One God] The Fountain of all being, self-existent and eternal; and Father of all, both Jews and Gentiles, because he is the Father of the spirits of all flesh.

Who is above all] Who is over all; as the King of kings, and Lord of lords.

And through all] Pervading everything; being present with everything; providing for all creatures; and by his energy supporting all things.

And in you all.] By the energy of his Spirit, enlightening, quickening, purifying, and comforting; in a word, making your hearts the temples of the Holy Ghost.

Verse 7. Unto every one of us is given grace] The free gift, which we receive from Christ, is according to the office or function which he has given us to fulfil; and the office is according to that free gift, each suited to the other.

Verse 8. Wherefore he saith] The reference seems to be to Ps. lxxviii. 18, which, however it may speak of the removal of the tabernacle, appears to have been intended to point out the glorious ascension of Christ after his resurrection from the dead.

When he ascended up on high] The whole of this verse, as it stands in the Psalm, seems to refer to a military triumph. Take the following paraphrase: Thou hast ascended on high: the conqueror was placed in a very elevated chariot. Thou hast led captivity captive: the conquered kings and generals were usually bound behind the chariot of the conqueror, to grace the triumph. Thou hast received gifts for (Paul, given gifts unto) men: at such times, the conqueror was wont to throw money among the crowd. Even to the rebellious: those who had fought against him now submit unto him, and share his munificence; for it is the property of a hero to be generous. That the Lord God might dwell among them: the conqueror being now come to fix his abode in the conquered provinces, and subdue the people to his laws.

Verse 9. But that he also descended] The person who ascended is the Messiah, and his ascension plainly intimates his descent; that is, his incarnation, humiliation, death, and resurrection.

Verse 10. He that descended] And he who descended so low is the same who has ascended so high. His abasement was unparalleled; so also is his exaltation.

That he might fill all things.] That he might be the fountain whence all blessings might flow; dispensing all good things to all his creatures, according to their several capacities and necessities; and, particularly, fill both converted Jews and Gentiles with all the gifts and graces of his Holy Spirit.

Verse 11. He gave some, apostles] He established several offices in his church; furnished these with the proper officers; and, to qualify them for their work, gave them the proper gifts.

Verse 12. For the perfecting of the saints] For the complete instruction, purification, and union of all who have believed in Christ Jesus, both Jews and Gentiles.

For the work of the ministry] All these various officers, and the gifts and graces conferred upon them, were judged necessary, by the great Head of the Church, for its full instruction in the important doctrines of Christianity.

Edifying of the body] Its thorough instruction in divine things, and its being filled with faith and holiness.

Verse 13. In the unity of the faith] Jews and Gentiles being all converted according to the doctrines laid down in the faith—the Christian system.

The knowledge of the Son of God] A true understanding of the mystery of the incarnation.

Unto a perfect man] One thoroughly instructed; the whole body of the church being fully taught, justified, sanctified, and sealed.

Measure of the stature] The full measure of knowledge, love, and holiness, which the gospel of Christ requires.

Verse 14. Be no more children] The child is ignorant, 16 *From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

17 This I say, therefore, and testify in the Lord, that *ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk, *in the vanity of their mind,

18 *Having the understanding darkened, *being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the *blindness of their heart;

19 *Who being past feeling, *have given themselves over unto lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness.

weak, and unsteady, tossed about in the nurse's arms, or whirled round in the giddy sports or mazes of youth; this seems to be the apostle's allusion. Being tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, refers to some kind of ancient play, but what I cannot absolutely determine; probably to something similar to a top, or to our paper kite. [The original word involves the idea of waves, and evidently refers to inconstancy.]

By the sleight of men] The words refer to the arts used by gamblers, who employ false dice that will always throw up one kind of number, which is that by which those who play with them cannot win.

Cunning craftiness] "By cunning, for the purpose of using the various means of deception." From this it seems that various arts were used, both by the Greek sophists and Judaizing teachers to render the gospel of none effect, or to adulterate and corrupt it.

Verse 15. But, speaking the truth in love] This truth, as it is the doctrine of God's eternal love to mankind, must be preached in love. Scolding and abuse from the pulpit or press, in matters of religion, are truly monstrous.

Grow up into him] This is a continuance of that metaphor taken from the members of a human body receiving nourishment equally, and growing up, each in its due proportion to other parts, and to the body in general.

Verse 16. From whom the whole body] This verse is another proof of the wisdom and learning of the apostle. Not only the general ideas here are anatomical, but the whole phraseology is the same. The articulation of the bones, the composition and action of the muscles, the circulation of the fluids, carrying nourishment to every part, and depositing some in every place, the energy of the system in keeping up all the functions, being particularly introduced, and the whole terminating in the general process of nutrition, increasing the body, and supplying all the waste that had taken place in consequence of labour, &c.

Verse 17. Walk not as other Gentiles walk] In this and the following verses the apostle gives a most awful account of the conduct of the heathens who were without the knowledge of the true God.

1. They walked in the vanity or foolishness of their mind. Want of genuine wisdom is that to which the apostle refers, and it was through this that the Gentiles became addicted to every species of idolatry.

2. Verse 18. Having the understanding darkened] Having no means of knowledge, the heart naturally dark, became more and more so by means of habitual transgression; every thing in the Gentile system having an immediate tendency to blind the eyes and darken the whole soul.

3. Being alienated from the life of God] Their moral state became so wretched that they are represented as abhorring everything spiritual and pure, for this is the import of the word (which we translate alienated) in some of the best Greek writers.

4 Blindness of their heart.] Because of the callousness of their hearts. Callous signifies a thickening of the outward skin of any particular part, especially on the hands and feet, by repeated exercise or use, through which such parts are rendered insensible.

5. Verse 19. Who being past feeling.] The verb signifies, 1. To throw off all sense of shame, and to be utterly devoid of pain, for committing unrighteous acts. 2. To be desperate, having neither hope nor desire of reformation; in a word, to be without remorse, and to be utterly regardless of conduct, character, or final blessedness.

6. Have given themselves over unto lasciviousness.] Lasciviousness is here personified; and the Gentiles in question are represented as having delivered themselves over to her jurisdiction.

7. To work all uncleanness with greediness.] This is a complete finish of the most abandoned character; to do an unclean act is bad, to labour in it is worse, to labour in all uncleanness is worse still; but to do all this in every case to the utmost extent, with a desire exceeding time, place, opportunity, and strength, is worst of all, and leaves nothing more profligate or more abandoned to be described or imagined.

Verse 20. But ye have not so learned Christ.] Ye have received the doctrines of Christianity, and therefore are taught differently; ye have received the spirit of Christ, and therefore are saved from such dispositions.

Verse 21. If so be that ye have heard him.] Seeing that, since indeed, ye have heard us proclaim his eternal truth; we have delivered it to you as we received it from Jesus.

Verse 23. And be renewed in the spirit of your mind.] The mind is to be renovated; and not only its general complexion, but the very spirit of it; all its faculties and powers must be thoroughly, completely, and universally renewed.

Verse 24. Put on the new man.] Get a new nature; for in Christ Jesus—under the Christian dispensation, neither circumcision avails anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation.

Which after God is created in righteousness.] Here is certainly an allusion to the creation of man. From the apostle we learn what Moses meant by the image of God; it was righteousness and the truth of holiness. It is not this or the other degree of moral good which the soul is to receive by Jesus Christ, it is the whole image of God; it is to be formed according to God; the likeness of the Divine Being is to be traced upon his soul, and he is to bear that as fully as his first father Adam bore it in the beginning.

Verse 25. Wherefore putting away lying.] All falsity, all prevarication, because this is opposite to the truth as it is in Jesus, ver. 21, and to the holiness of truth, ver. 24.

Speak every man truth with his neighbour.] Truth was but of small account among many of even the best heathens, for they taught that on many occasions a lie was to be preferred to the truth itself.

Verse 26. Be ye angry, and sin not.] We can never suppose that the apostle delivers this as a precept, if we take the words as they stand in our version. Perhaps the sense is, Take heed that ye be not angry, lest ye sin; for it would be very difficult, even for an apostle himself, to be angry and not sin. If we consider anger as implying displeasure simply, then there are a multitude of cases in which a man which is good, that he may have * to give ¹ to him that needeth.

29 ^m Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but ⁿ that which is good ^o to the use of edifying, ^p that it may minister grace unto the hearers.

30 And ^q grieve not the holy Spirit of God, ^r whereby ye are sealed unto the day of ^s redemption.

may be innocently, yea, laudably angry; for he should be displeased with everything which is not for the glory of God and the good of mankind. But, in any other sense, I do not see how the words can be safely taken.

Let not the sun go down upon your wrath.] Do not go to sleep with any unkind or unbrotherly feeling; anger, continued in, may produce malice and revenge. No temper of this kind can consist with peace of conscience, and the approbation of God's Spirit in the soul.

Verse 27. Neither give place to the devil.] Your adversary will strive to influence your mind, and irritate your spirit; watch and pray that he may not get any place in you, or ascendancy over you.

As the word is sometimes used to signify a calumniator, tale-bearer, whisperer, or backbiter (see in the original, 1 Tim. iii. 11; 2 Tim. iii. 3; and Tit. ii. 3); here it may have the same signification: Do not open your ear to the tale-bearer, to the slanderer, who comes to you with accusations against your brethren, or with surmisings and evil-speakings. [This is never the sense of the word when in the singular, and with the article.]

Verse 28. Let him that stole steal no more.] Stealing, over-reaching, defrauding, purloining, &c., are consistent with no kind of religion that acknowledges the true God. If Christianity does not make men honest, it does nothing for them. Those who are not saved from dishonesty fear not God, though they may dread man.

Verse 29. Let no corrupt communication.] Any word or thing obscene, any thing that injures virtue, countenances vice, or scoffs at religion. In the parallel place, Col. iv. 6, the apostle exhorts that our speech may be seasoned with salt, to preserve it from putrefaction.

But that which is good to the use of edifying.] To be good for a thing is a Græcism, as well as an Anglicism, for to be fit, proper, suitable, &c.

That it may minister grace.] Never wound modesty, truth, or religion with your discourse; endeavour to edify those with whom you converse; and, if possible, speak so as to please them.

Verse 30. Grieve not the holy Spirit of God.] By giving way to any wrong temper, unholiness, or unrighteous action.

Whereby ye are sealed.] The Holy Spirit in the soul of a believer is God's seal, set on his heart to testify that he is God's property, and that he should be wholly employed in God's service.

Verse 31. Let all bitterness.] Those who are consensious, who are unmerciful to the failings of others, who have fixed a certain standard by which they measure all persons in all circumstances, and unchristianize every one that does not come up to this standard, these have the bitterness against which the apostle speaks.

And wrath.] More properly anger, which may be considered the commencement of the passion.

Anger.] More properly wrath—the passion carried to its highest pitch, accompanied with injurious words and outrageous acts, some of which are immediately specified.

And clamour.] Loud and obstreperous speaking, brawling, railing, boisterous talk, often the offspring of wrath.

And evil speaking.] Blasphemy; that is, injurious speaking—words which tend to hurt those of whom or against whom they are spoken.

With all malice] All malignity; as anger produces wrath, and wrath clamour, so all together produces malice; that is, settled, sullen, fell wrath, which is always looking out for opportunities to revenge itself by the destruction of the object of its indignation.

Verse 32. Be ye kind one to another] Study good breeding and gentleness of manners. A Christian cannot be a savage, and he need not be a boor.

Tender-hearted] Compassionate; having the bowels easily moved (as the word implies) to commiserate the state of the wretched and distressed.

Forgiving one another] Be as ready to forgive on repentance and acknowledgement, as God was, for Christ's sake, to forgive you when you repented of your sins, and took refuge in his mercy.

CHAPTER V.

Christians should imitate their heavenly Father, and walk in love, after the example of Christ, 1, 2. They should avoid all uncleanness, impurity, covetousness, and foolish jesting, and idolatry, because these things exclude from the kingdom of God, 3-7. The Ephesians were once in darkness, but being now light in the Lord, they are exhorted to walk in that light, and bring forth the fruits of the Spirit; and to have no fellowship with the workers of iniquity, whose evil deeds are manifested by the light, 8-13. All are exhorted to awake; to walk circumspectly; to redeem the time; and to learn what the will of the Lord is, 14-17. The apostle gives particular directions relative to avoiding excess of wine, 18. To singing and giving thanks, 19, 20. Submission to each other, 21. To husbands, that they should love their wives, as Christ loved the church, for by the marriage union, the union between Christ and the church is pointed out; and wives are exhorted to reverence their husbands, 22-33.

BE ye therefore followers of God, as dear children;

2 And walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour.

3 But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints;

4 Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient: but rather giving of thanks.

5 For this ye know, that no whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God.

6 Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience.

7 Be not ye therefore partakers with them:

8 For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light;

9 (For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth;)

10 Proving what is acceptable unto the Lord.

Verse 1. Be ye therefore followers of God] The word which we translate followers, signifies such as personate others, assuming their gait, mode of speech, accent, carriage, &c.; and it is from this Greek word that we have the word mimic. Though this term is often used in a ludicrous sense, yet here it is to be understood in a very solemn and proper sense. Let your whole conduct be like that of your Lord; imitate him in all your actions, words, spirit, and inclinations; imitate him as children do their beloved parents, and remember that you stand in the relation of beloved children to him.

Verse 2. An offering] An oblation, an eucharistic offering; the same as minchah, Lev. ii. 1, &c., which is explained to be an offering made unto the Lord of fine flour, with oil and frankincense. It means, any offering by which gratitude was expressed for temporal blessings received from the bounty of God.

A sacrifice] A sin-offering, a victim for sin; the same as zebach, which almost universally means that sacrificial act in which the blood of an animal was poured out as an atonement for sin.

For a sweet-smelling savour.] The sweet-smelling savour refers to the burnt-offerings, the fumes of which ascended from the fire in the act of burning; and as such odours are grateful to man, God represents himself as pleased with them, when offered by an upright worshipper according to his own appointment.

Verse 3. But fornication] It is probable that the three terms used here by the apostle refer to different species of the same thing. The word fornication may imply not only fornication but adultery also, as it frequently does; uncleanness may refer to all abominable and unnatural lusts; and covetousness to excessive indulgence in that which, moderately used, is lawful. If, however, simple covetousness, i. e., the love of gain, be here intended, it shows from the connexion in which it stands (for it is linked with fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness) how degrading it is to the soul of man, and how abominable it is in the eye of God. In other places it is ranked with idolatry, for the man who has an inordinate love of gain makes money his god.

Let it not be once named] Let no such things ever exist among you, for ye are called to be saints.

Verse 4. Neither filthiness] Anything base or vile in words or acts.

11 And ^a have no fellowship with ^b the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather ^c reprove them.

12 ^d For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret.

13 But ^e all things that are ^f reprov'd are made manifest by the light: for whatsoever doth make manifest is light.

14 Wherefore ^g he saith, ^h Awake, thou that sleepest, and ⁱ arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.

18 And ^p be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit;

19 Speaking to yourselves ^q in psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord;

20 ^r Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, ^s in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ;

21 ^t Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God.

22 ^u Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, ^v as unto the Lord.

23 For ^w the husband is the head of the wife, even as ^x Christ is the head of the church: and he is the Saviour of ^y the body.

24 Therefore, as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands ^z in every thing.

Foolish talking] Scurrility, buffoonery, ridicule, or what tends to expose another to contempt.

Nor jesting] Artfully turned discourses or words; double entendres; chaste words which, from their connexion, and the manner in which they are used, convey an obscene or offensive meaning. It also means jests, puns, witty sayings, and mountebank repartees of all kinds.

Which are not convenient] They do not come up to the proper standard; they are utterly improper in themselves, and highly unbecoming in those who profess Christianity.

But rather giving of thanks] Decent and edifying discourse or thanksgiving to God. Prayer or praise is the most suitable language for man; and he who is of a trifling, light disposition, is ill fitted for either.

Verse 6. Let no man deceive you] Suffer no man to persuade you that any of these things are innocent, or that they are unavoidable frailties of human nature; they are all sins and abominations in the sight of God; those who practise them are children of disobedience; and on account of such practices the wrath of God—divine punishment, must come upon them.

Verse 7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them] Do not act as your fellow-citizens do; nor suffer their philosophy, with vain words, with empty and illusive doctrines, to lead you astray from the path of truth.

Verse 8. For ye were sometimes (formerly) darkness] While ye lived in darkness, ye lived in these crimes.

But now are ye light in the Lord] Now ye have the light—the wisdom and teaching which comes from God.

Verse 9. For the fruit of the Spirit] Instead of Spirit, the best MSS., and Versions, together with several of the Fathers, read light, which is supposed by most critics to be the true reading, because there is no mention made of the Spirit in any part of the context. The fruit of the light, i. e., of the gospel, is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth. Goodness, in the principle and disposition; righteousness, the exercise of that goodness in the whole conduct of life; truth, the director of that principle, and its exercise, to the glorification of God and the good of mankind.

Verse 10. Proving what is acceptable] Ye shall be able to please him well in all things.

Verse 11. Have no fellowship] Have no religious connexion whatever with heathens or their worship.

Unfruitful works of darkness] Probably alluding to the mysteries among the heathens, and the different lustrations and rites through which the initiated went in the caves and dark recesses where these mysteries were celebrated.

Rather reprove them.] Bear a testimony against them; convince them that they are wrong; confute them in their vain reasons; reprove them for their vices, which are flagrant, while pretending to superior illumination.

Verse 12. For it is a shame even to speak] This no doubt refers to the Eleusinian and Bacchanalian mysteries, which were performed in the night and darkness, and were known to be so impure and abominable, especially the latter, that the Roman Senate banished them both from Rome and Italy.

Verse 13. But all things that are reprov'd] The apostle speaks against these mysteries as he speaks against fornication, uncleanness, and covetousness; but by no means either borrows expression or similitude from them to illustrate divine truths: for, as it would be a shame even to speak of those things, surely it would be an abomination to allude to them in the illustration of the doctrines of the gospel.

Verse 14. Wherefore he saith] Some think this saying is taken from Isa. xxvi. 19. Others that it is from Isa. lx. 1-3. But these passages neither give the words nor the meaning of the apostle. It seems more natural to understand the words he saith, as referring to the light, i. e., the gospel, mentioned ver. 13: Wherefore he saith, Awake thou, &c.; that is: This is the general, the strong commanding voice of the gospel in every part. [The suggested emendation does not accord with Pauline usage. The words cited occur substantially in Isa. lx. i. seq.]

Verse 15. Walk circumspectly] The original word signifies correctly, accurately, consistently, or perfectly. Be ye, who have received the truth, careful of your conduct; walk by the rule which God has given you; do this as well in little as in great matters; exemplify your principles, which are holy and good, by a corresponding conduct; do not only profess, but live the gospel.

Not as fools, but as wise] The heathens affected to be called wise men. Pythagoras was perhaps the first who corrected this vanity, by assuming the title of a lover of wisdom; hence our term philosopher, used now in a much prouder sense than that in which the great Pythagoras wished it to be applied. The apostle here takes the term and applies it to the Christian; and, instead of it, gives the empty Gentile philosopher the title of without wisdom, fool.

Verse 16. Redeeming the time] Buying up those moments which others seem to throw away; steadily improving every present moment, that ye may, in some measure, regain the time ye have lost.

Some think there is an allusion here to the case of debtors, who, by giving some valuable consideration to their creditors, obtain farther time for paying their debts.

Verse 17. Wherefore be ye not unwise] Do not become madmen. Here is a most evident allusion to the orgies of Bacchus, in which his votaries acted like madmen; running about, tossing their heads from shoulder to shoulder, appearing to be in every sense completely frantic. [But this is straining the sense of the original.]

But understanding what the will of the Lord is.] Get a thorough understanding of this; acquaint yourselves with God's will, that ye may know how to glorify him.

Verse 18. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess] This 26 That he might sanctify and cleanse it ^awith the washing of water ^bby the word;

27 ^cThat he might present it to himself a glorious church, ^dnot having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; ^ebut that it should be holy and without blemish.

28 So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife loveth himself.

29 For no man ever yet hated his own flesh; but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church:

^aJohn iii. 5. Tit. iii. 5. Heb. x. 22. 1 John v. 6.—^bJohn xv. 3. xvii. 17.—^c2 Cor. xi. 2. Col. i. 22.—^dCant. iv. 7.—^eCh. i. 4.—^fGen. ii. 23. Rom. xii. 5. 1 Cor. vi. 15. xii. 27.—^gGen.

is a farther allusion to the Bacchanalian mysteries; in their his votaries got drunk, and ran into all manner of excesses.

But be filled with the Spirit] The heathen priests pretended to be filled with the influence of the god they worshipped; and it was in these circumstances that they gave out their oracles. The apostle exhorts the Ephesians not to resemble these, but, instead of being filled with wine, to be filled with the Spirit of God; in consequence of which, instead of those discoveries of the divine will to which in their drunken worship the votaries of Bacchus pretended, they should be wise indeed, and should understand what the will of the Lord is.

Verse 19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms] Psalms may probably mean those of David.

Hymns] Extemporaneous effusions in praise of God, uttered under the influence of the divine Spirit, or a sense of his especial goodness.

Songs] Odes; premeditated and regular poetic compositions; but, in whatever form they were composed, we learn that they were all spiritual—tending to magnify God and edify men.

Singing and making melody in your heart] The heart always going with the lips. It is a shocking profanation of divine worship to draw nigh to God with the lips, while the heart is far from him.

Verse 20. Giving thanks always] God is continually loading you with his benefits; you deserve nothing of his kindness; therefore give him thanks for his unmerited bounties.

God and the Father] That is: God, who is your Father, and the Father of mercies.

In the name of our Lord Jesus] He is the only mediator; and through him alone can ye approach to God; and it is for his sake only that God will hear your prayers or receive your praises.

Verse 21. Submitting—one to another] Let no man be so tenacious of his own will or his opinion in matters indifferent, as to disturb the peace of the church; in all such matters give way to each other, and let love rule.

In the fear of God.] Setting him always before your eyes, and considering that he has commanded you to love one another, and to bear one another's burdens; and that what you do in this or any other commanded case, you do as unto the Lord. Instead of in the fear of God, in the fear of CHRIST, is the reading of the best MSS.

Verse 22. Wives submit yourselves unto your own husbands] As the Lord, viz., Christ is the head or governor of the church, and the head of the man, so is the man the head or governor of the woman. The husband should not be a tyrant, and the wife should not be the governor.

As unto the Lord.] The word church seems to be necessarily understood here; that is: Act under the authority of your husbands, as the church submits to the Lord, so let wives submit to their husbands.

Verse 23. He is the Saviour of the body.] As Christ exercises authority over the church so as to save and protect it, so let the husband exercise authority over his wife by protecting, comforting, and providing her with every necessary and comfort of life, according to his power.

Verse 24. In every thing.] That is, every lawful thing; for it is not intimated that they should obey their husbands in anything criminal, or anything detrimental to the interests of their souls.

Verse 25. Husbands love your wives] But how did Christ love the church? He gave himself for it—he laid down his life for it. So then husbands should, if necessary, lay down 30 For ^awe are members of his body, of his flesh and of his bones.

31 ^bFor this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they ^ctwo shall be one flesh.

32 This is a great mystery: but I speak concerning Christ and the church.

33 Nevertheless, ^dlet every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself; and the wife see that she ^ereverence her husband.

ii. 24. Matt. xix. 5. Mark x. 7, 8.—^a1 Cor. vi. 16.—^bVer. 25. Col. iii. 19.—^c1 Pet. iii. 6.

their lives for their wives: and there is more implied in the words than mere protection and support; for, as Christ gave himself for the church to save it, so husbands should, by all means in their power, labour to promote the salvation of their wives, and their constant edification in righteousness. Thus we find that the authority of the man over the woman is founded on his love to her, and this love must be such as to lead him to risk his life for her.

Verse 26. That he might sanctify and cleanse it] There is certainly an allusion here to the ancient method of purifying women, who were appointed to be consorts to kings; twelve months, it appears, were in some instances spent in this purification. See the case of Esther, chap. ii. 12; see also Psal. xlv. 13, 14; Ezek. xvi. 7-14.

With the washing of water] Baptism, accompanied by the purifying influence of the Holy Spirit.

By the word] The doctrine of Christ crucified, through which baptism is administered, sin cancelled, and the soul purified from all unrighteousness; the death of Christ giving efficacy to all.

Verse 27. That he might present it to himself] It was usual to bring the royal bride to the king in the most sumptuous apparel; and is there not here an allusion to Ps. xlv. 13, 14? This presentation here spoken of by the apostle will take place on the last day.

A glorious church] Every way splendid and honourable, because pure and holy.

Not having spot] No blemish on the face; no spots upon the garment; the heart and life both holy.

Wrinkle] No mark of superannuation or decay. The word is commonly applied to wrinkles on the face, indicative of sickness or decrepitude.

Holy and without blemish] In every sense holy, pure, and perfect. And it is in this life that all this purification is to take place; for none shall be presented at the day of judgment to him who has not here been sanctified, cleansed, washed, made glorious, having neither spot, wrinkle, blemish, nor any such thing.

Verse 28. As their own bodies.] For the woman is, properly speaking, a part of the man.

Verse 29. No man ever yet hated his own flesh] And this is a natural reason why he should love his wife, and nourish and cherish her.

Verse 30. We are members of his body] That is, we are united to him by one Spirit in the closest intimacy, even similar to that which the members have with the body.

Verse 31. Shall be joined unto his wife] He shall be glued or cemented to her; and, as a well-glued board will sooner break in the whole wood than in the glued joint, so death alone can part the husband and wife; and nothing but death should dissolve their affection.

Verse 32. This is a great mystery] This mystery is great. By mystery, here, we may understand a natural thing by which some spiritual matter is signified, which signification the Spirit of God alone can give. So, here, the creation and union of Adam and Eve were intended, in the design of God, to point out the union of Christ and the Church: a union the most important that can be conceived; and therefore the apostle calls it a great mystery.

Verse 33. Nevertheless] Moreover, or therefore, on the consideration of God's design in the institution of marriage, let every one of you love his wife as himself, because she is both naturally and by a divine ordinance a part of himself.

That she reverence her husband.] Let the wife ever consider the husband as her head; and this he is, not only by nature, but also by the ordinance of God.

CHAPTER VI.

Children should obey their parents, that they may live long and be happy, 1-3. Parents should be tender towards their children, 4. Servants should show all obedience and fidelity to their masters, 5-8. And masters should treat their servants with humanity, 9. All should be strong in the Lord, and be armed with his armour, because of their wily, powerful, and numerous foes, 10-13. The different parts of the Christian armour enumerated, 14-17. The necessity of all kinds of prayer and watchfulness, 18-20. Tychicus is commissioned to inform the Ephesians of the apostle's affairs, 21, 22. The apostolic benediction and farewell, 23, 24.

CHILDREN, *obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right.

2 ^b Honour thy father and mother, (which is the first commandment with promise,)

3 That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth.

4 And ^c ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but ^d bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

5 ^e Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, ^f with fear and trembling, ^g in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ;

Verse 1. Children, obey your parents] This is a duty with which God will never dispense; he commands it, and one might think that gratitude, from a sense of the highest obligations, would most strongly enforce the command.

In the Lord] This may mean, on account of the commandment of the Lord; or, as far as the parents' commands are according to the will and word of God. For surely no child is called to obey any parent if he give unreasonable or unscriptural commands.

Verse 4. Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath] He who corrects his children according to God and reason will feel every blow on his own heart more sensibly than his child feels it on his body. Parents are called to correct, not to punish, their children. Those who punish them do it from a principle of revenge; those who correct them do it from a principle of affectionate concern.

Bring them up, &c.] Nurish them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord. The mind is to be nourished with wholesome discipline and instruction, as the body is with proper food.

Verse 5. Servants, be obedient] Though the word frequently signifies a slave or bondman, yet it often implies a servant in general, or any one bound to another, either for a limited time, or for life. Even a slave, if a Christian, was bound to serve him faithfully by whose money he was bought, howsoever illegal that traffic may be considered.

According to the flesh] Your masters in secular things; for they have no authority over your religion, not over your souls.

With fear and trembling] Because the law gives them a power to punish you for every act of disobedience.

In singleness of your heart] Not merely through fear of punishment, but from a principle of uprightness, serving them as you would serve Christ.

Verse 6. Not with eye-service] Not merely in their presence, when their eye is upon you, as unfaithful and hypocritical servants do, without consulting conscience in any part of their work.

Doing the will of God] Seeing that you are in the state of servitude, it is the will of God that you should act conscientiously in it.

Verse 7. With good will] With cheerfulness; do not take up your service as a cross, or bear it as a burden; but take it as coming in the order of God's providence, and a thing that is pleasing to him.

Verse 8. Whatsoever good thing any man doeth] Though your masters should fail to give you the due reward of your fidelity and labour, yet, as ye have done your work as unto the Lord, he will take care to give you the proper recompense.

Whether he be bond] A slave, bought with money;

6 ^b Not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart;

7 With good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men;

8 ^c Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free.

9 And ye ^d masters, do the same things unto them, ^e forbearing ^f threatening: knowing that ^g your ^h Master also is in heaven; ⁱ neither is there respect of persons with him.

Or free.] A person who has hired himself of his own free accord.

Verse 9. Ye masters, do the same things unto them] Act in the same affectionate, conscientious manner towards your slaves and servants, as they do towards you.

Forbearing threatening] If they should transgress at any time, lean more to the side of mercy than justice; and when ye are obliged to punish, let it be as light and as moderate as possible; and let revenge have no part in the chastisement, for that is of the devil, and not of God.

Knowing that your Master also is in heaven] You are their masters, God is yours. As you deal with them, so God will deal with you.

Verse 10. Be strong in the Lord] You must have strength, and strength of a spiritual kind, and such strength too as the Lord himself can furnish; and you must have this strength through an indwelling God, the power of his might working in you.

Verse 11. Put on the whole armour of God] The panoply which is mentioned here refers to the armour of the heavy troops among the Greeks; those who were to sustain the rudest attacks, who were to sap the foundations of walls, storm cities, &c. Their ordinary armour was the shield, the helmet, the sword, and the greaves, or brzen boots. To all these the apostle refers below.

The wiles of the devil] The methods of the devil; the different means, plans, schemes, and machinations which he uses to deceive, entrap, enslave, and ruin the souls of men. A man's method of sinning is Satan's method of ruining his soul.

Verse 12. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood] Our wrestling or contention is not with men like ourselves: flesh and blood is a Hebraism for men, or human beings.

Against principalities] Chief rulers; beings of the first rank and order in their own kingdom.

Powers] Authorities, derived from, and constituted by the above.

The rulers of the darkness of this world] The rulers of the world; the emperors of the darkness of this state of things.

Spiritual wickedness] The spiritual things of wickedness; or, the spiritualities of wickedness; highly refined and sublimed evil; disguised falsehood in the garb of truth; antinomianism in the guise of religion.

In high places] In the most sublime stations. But who are these of whom the apostle speaks?

By principalities, &c., we are to understand different orders of evil spirits, who are all employed under the devil, their great head, to prevent the spread of the gospel in the world, and to destroy the souls of mankind.

10 Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and ^ain the power of his might.

11 ^bPut on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.

12 For we wrestle not against ^cflesh ^dand blood, but against ^eprincipalities, against powers, against ^fthe rulers of the darkness of this world, against ^gspiritual wickedness in ^hhigh places.

13 ⁱWherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand ^jin the evil day, and ^khaving done all, to stand.

14 Stand therefore, ^lhaving your loins girt about with truth, and ^mhaving on the breast-plate of righteousness;

15 ⁿAnd your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace;

16 Above all, taking ^othe shield of faith, where-with ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked.

17 And ^ptake the helmet of salvation, and ^qthe sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God:

18 ^rPraying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and ^swatching thereunto with all perseverance, and ^tsupplication for all saints;

19 ^uAnd for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth ^vboldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel,

The spiritual wickednesses are supposed to be the angels which kept not their first estate; who fell from the heavenly places, but are ever longing after and striving to regain them; and which have their station in the regions of the air.

Verse 13. Wherefore] Because ye have such enemies to contend with, take unto you—assume, as provided and prepared for you, the whole armour of God; which armour if you put on and use, ye shall be both invulnerable and immortal.

And having done all, to stand.] And having conquered all, stand: this is a military phrase, and is repeatedly used in this sense by the best Greek writers.

Verse 14. Stand therefore] Having got all the pieces of it together, and the defensive parts put on, they were then to gird them close to their bodies with the girdle; and instead of a fine ornamented belt, such as the ancient warriors used, they were to have truth. The gospel of Jesus Christ is the truth of God; unless this be known and conscientiously believed, no man can enter the spiritual warfare with any advantage or prospect of success. Truth may be taken here for sincerity; for if a man be not conscious to himself that his heart is right before God, and that he makes no false pretences to religion, in vain does he enter the spiritual lists.

The breast-plate of righteousness] Here righteousness may imply a consciousness of justification through the blood of the cross; the principle of righteousness or true holiness implanted in the heart; and a holy life, a life regulated according to the testimonies of God. As the breast-plate defends the heart and lungs, and all those vital functionaries that are contained in what is called the region of the thorax; so this righteousness, this life of God in the soul of man, defends everything on which the man's spiritual existence depends. While he possesses this principle, and acts from it, his spiritual and eternal life is secure.

Verse 15. Your feet shod] The greaves were deemed of essential importance in the ancient armour; if the feet or legs are materially wounded, a man can neither stand to resist his foe, pursue him if vanquished, nor flee from him should he have the worst of the fight.

That the apostle has obedience to the gospel in general in view, there can be no doubt; but he appears to have more than this, a readiness to publish the gospel. Isa. lii. 7.

The preparation of the gospel] The word which we translate preparation, is variously understood: some think it means an habitual readiness in walking in the way prescribed by the gospel; others, that firmness and solidity which the gospel gives to them who conscientiously believe its doctrines; others, those virtues and graces which in the first planting of Christianity were indispensably necessary to those who published it.

Verse 16. Above all (over all the rest of the armour), taking the shield of faith] In this word the apostle alludes to the great oblong shield, or scutum, which covers the whole body. And as faith is the grace by which all others are preserved and rendered active, so it is properly represented here under the notion of a shield, by which the whole body is covered and protected.

The fiery darts of the wicked.] It is probable that the apostle alludes to the darts called falarica, which were headed with lead, in or about which some combustible stuff was placed that took fire in the passage of the arrow through the air, and often burnt up the enemy's engines, ships, &c.; they were calculated also to stick in the shields and set them on fire. To quench or extinguish such fiery darts the shields were ordinarily covered with metal on the outside, and thus the fire was prevented from catching hold of the shield.

The fiery darts of the wicked, or the devil, are evil thoughts, and strong injections, as they are termed, which in the unregenerate inflame the passions, and excite the soul to acts of transgression. While the faith is strong in Christ it acts as a shield to quench these.

Verse 17. Take the helmet of salvation] Or, as it is expressed, 1 Thess. v. 8, And for an helmet, the hope of salvation. On the crest and other parts of the helmet were a great variety of emblematical figures, and it is very likely the apostle refers to helmets which had on them an emblematical representation of hope; viz. that the person should be safe who wore it, that he should be prosperous in all his engagements, and ever escape safe from battle. The hope of continual safety and protection, built on the promises of God, to which the upright follower of Christ feels he has a divine right, protects the understanding from being darkened, and the judgment from being confused by any temptations of Satan, or subtle arguments of the sophistical ungodly. He who carries Christ in his heart cannot be cheated out of the hope of his heaven.

The sword of the Spirit] The sword of which St. Paul speaks is, as he explains it, the word of God; that is, the revelation which God has given of himself, or what we call the Holy Scriptures. This is called the sword of the Spirit, because it comes from the Holy Spirit, and receives its fulfilment in the soul through the operation of the Holy Spirit. An ability to quote this on proper occasions, and especially in times of temptation and trial, has a wonderful tendency to cut in pieces the snares of the adversary.

Verse 18. Praying always] As it was the custom of the Grecian armies, before they engaged, to offer prayers to the gods for their success, the apostle shows that these spiritual warriors must depend on the Captain of their salvation, and pray with all prayer, i. e., incessantly, being always in the spirit of prayer, so that they should be ever ready for public, private, mental, or ejaculatory prayer, always depending on HIM who can alone save, and who alone can destroy.

When the apostle exhorts Christians to pray with all prayer, we may at once see that he neither means spiritual nor formal prayer, in exclusion of the other. Praying refers to the state of the spirit as well as to the act.

With all prayer] Refers to the different kinds of prayer that is performed in public, in the family, in the closet, in minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things :

22 Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts.

business, on the way, in the heart without a voice, and with the voice from the heart. All these are necessary to the genuine Christian; and he whose heart is right with God will be frequent in the whole.

And supplication] There is a difference between prayer and supplication. Some think the former means prayer for the attainment of good; the latter, prayer for averting evil. Supplication however seems to mean prayer continued in, strong and incessant pleadings, till the evil is averted, or the good communicated. There are two things that must be attended to in prayer: 1. That it be in every time, season, or opportunity; 2. That it should be in or through the Spirit—that the heart should be engaged in it, and that its infirmities should be helped by the Holy Ghost.

Watching thereunto] Being always on your guard lest your enemies should surprise you.

With all perseverance] The word implies stretching out the neck, and looking about, in order to discern an enemy at a distance.

For all saints] For all Christians; for this was the character by which they were generally distinguished.

Verse 19. And for me, that utterance may be given unto me] This phrase signifies permission and power to defend one's self in a court of justice; and this sense of the phrase is perfectly applicable to the case of St. Paul, who was an ambassador in bonds (ver. 20), and expected to be called to a public hearing, in which he was not only to defend himself, but to prove the truth and excellency of the Christian religion.

The mystery of the gospel] The whole doctrine of Christ, not fully revealed previously to that time.

Verse 20. An ambassador in bonds] An ambassador being the representative of the king, his person was in all civilized countries held sacred. Contrary to the rights of nations, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

24 Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ ^b in ^c sincerity. Amen.

Written from Rome unto the Ephesians by Tychicus.

^c Or, with incorruption.

this ambassador of the King of Heaven was put in chains! As I ought to speak.] As becomes the dignity and importance of the subject.

Tychicus, a beloved brother] We learn, from Acts xx. 4, that Tychicus was of Asia, and that he was a useful companion of St. Paul.

Verse 22. Whom I have sent—for the same purpose] Namely, that the Ephesians might know his affairs, and those of the Church at Rome: messengers of this kind frequently passed between the churches in those ancient times.

Comfort your hearts.] By showing you how powerfully he was upheld in all his tribulations, and how God turned his bonds to the furtherance of the gospel. This must have been great consolation to all the followers of God; and particularly to those in Ephesus or Laodicea, or to whomsoever the epistle was directed.

Verse 23. Peace be to the brethren] If the epistle were really sent to the Ephesians, a people with whom the apostle was intimately acquainted, it is strange that he mentions no person by name.

Peace] All prosperity, and continual union with God and among yourselves; and love to God and man, the principle of all obedience and union; with faith continually increasing and growing stronger and stronger, From God the Father, as the fountain of all our mercies, and the Lord Jesus Christ, through whose sacrifice and mediation they all come.

Verse 24. Grace be with all them] May the divine favour, and all the benedictions flowing from it, be with all them who love our Lord Jesus Christ, who has so loved us as to give his life to redeem ours, and to save us unto life eternal.

In sincerity.] In incorruptibility. Many profess to love our Lord Jesus who are corrupt in all their ways; on these the grace or favour of God cannot rest; they profess to know him, but in works deny him.

P*HILIPPI* was a town of Macedonia, in the territory of the Edones, on the confines of Thrace, and very near the northern extremity of the Ægean Sea. It was a little eastward of mount Pangæus, and about midway between Nicopolis on the east, and Thessalonica on the west. It was at first called Crenides, and afterwards Datus; but Philip, king of Macedonia, and father of Alexander, having taken possession of it and fortified it, called it Philippi, after his own name. Julius Cæsar planted a colony here, which was afterwards enlarged by Augustus; and hence the inhabitants were considered as freemen of Rome.

The gospel was preached first here by St. Paul. About the year of our Lord 53, St. Paul had a vision in the night; a man of Macedonia appeared to him and said, Come over to Macedonia and help us. He was then at Troas in Mysia; from thence he immediately sailed to Samothracia, came the next day to Neapolis, and thence to Philippi. There he continued for some time, and converted Lydia, a seller of purple, from Thyatira; and afterwards cast a demon out of a Pythoness, for which he and Silas were persecuted, cast into prison, scourged, and put into the stocks: but the magistrates afterwards finding that they were Romans, took them out of prison and treated them civilly.

The Philippians were greatly attached to their apostle, and testified their affection by sending him supplies, even when he was labouring for other churches; and they appear to have been the only church that did so.

There is not much controversy concerning the date of this epistle; it was probably written in the end of A.D. 62, and about a year after that to the Ephesians.

It is written in a very pleasing and easy style; everywhere bearing evidence of that contented state of mind in which the apostle then was, and of his great affection for the people. It appears that there were false apostles, or Judaizing teachers, at Philippi, who had disturbed the peace of the church; against these he warns them, exhorts them to concord, comforts them in their afflictions for the gospel, returns them thanks for their kindness to him, tells them of his state, and shows a great willingness to be a sacrifice for the faith he had preached to them. There is a divine unction in this epistle which every serious reader will perceive.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

PHILIPPIANS

CHAPTER I.

Paul, in conjunction with Timothy, addresses himself to the saints at Philippi, and gives them his apostolical benediction, 1, 2. Thanks God for their conversion and union, and expresses his persuasion that God will continue his work among them, 3-6. Tells them of his strong affection for them, and prays that they may be filled with the salvation of God, 7-11. Shows them how much his persecution had contributed to the success of the gospel, 12-14. Informs them that there were some at Rome who preached the gospel from unworthy motives; yet he was convinced that this, which was designed to injure him, should turn to his advantage, 15-19. Mentions his uncertainty whether he should be liberated or martyred, and his perfect readiness to meet either; yet, on the whole, expresses a hope that he should again visit them, 20-26. Exhorts them to a holy life, and comforts them under their tribulations, 27-30.

PAUL and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints ^a in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons;

Verse 8. For God is my record] I call God to witness that I have the strongest affection for you, and that I love you with the same kind of tender concern with which Christ loved the world when he gave himself for it; for I am even ready to be offered on the sacrifice and service of your faith, chap. ii. 17.

Verse 9. This I pray] This is the substance of all my prayers for you, that your love to God, to one another, and to all mankind, may abound yet more and more; that it may be like a river, perpetually fed with rain and fresh streams, so that it continues to swell and increase till it fills all its banks, and floods the adjacent plains.

In knowledge] Of God's nature, perfections, your own duty and interest, his work upon your souls, and his great designs in the gospel.

And in all judgment] In all spiritual or moral feeling; that you may at once have the clearest perception and the fullest enjoyment of those things which concern your salva-

Verse 1. Paul and Timotheus] St. Paul joined Timothy's name to his own, not because he was in any part the author of this epistle, but because he was probably the apostle's amanuensis, though the subscription to the epistle gives this office to Epaphroditus.

Bishops and deacons] The overseers of the Church of God, and those who ministered to the poor, and preached occasionally.

Verse 3. Upon every remembrance] As often as you recur to my mind, so often do I thank God for the great work wrought among you.

Verse 4. Always in every prayer] I pray often for you, and have great pleasure in doing it, seeing what God has already wrought among you.

Verse 5. For your fellowship in the gospel] This signifies not only their attention to the gospel, their readiness to continue it, and persevere in it, but also their unity and affection among themselves. Some understand the word as expressing their liberality to the apostle, and to the gospel in general; for the term may not only be applied to communion among themselves, but to communications to others.

Verse 7. It is meet for me to think this] It is just that I should think so, because I have you in my heart—you live in my warmest love and most affectionate remembrance.

13 So that my bonds^e in Christ are manifest^f in all^g the palace, and^h in all other places;

14 And many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear.

15 Some indeed preach Christ even of envy andⁱ strife, and some also of good will:

16 The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds;

17 But the other of love, knowing that I am set for^j the defence of the gospel.

tion; that ye may not only know but feel that you are of God, by the spirit which he has given you; and that your feeling may become more exercised in divine things, so that it may be increasingly sensible and refined.

Verse 10. That ye may approve things that are excellent] To the end that ye may put to proof the things that differ, or, the things that are more profitable. By the pure and abundant love which they received from God they would be able to try whatever differed from the teaching they had received, and from the experience they had in spiritual things.

That ye may be sincere] The word which we translate sincerity, is compounded of two Greek words signifying the splendour of the sun, and I judge; a thing which may be examined in the clearest and strongest light, without the possibility of detecting a single flaw or imperfection.

Without offence] Neither offending God nor your neighbour; neither being stumbled yourselves, nor the cause of stumbling to others.

Till the day of Christ] Till he comes to judge the world, or, till the day in which you are called into the eternal world.

Verse 11. Being filled with the fruits of righteousness] By righteousness, we may understand here the whole work of the Spirit of God in the soul of a believer; and by the fruits of righteousness, all holy tempers, holy words, and right actions.

Unto the glory and praise of God.] God being honoured when the work of his grace thus appears to men in the fruits of righteousness; and God is praised by all the faithful when his work thus appears.

Verse 12. That the things which happened unto me] As the Philippians loved him greatly, he felt it right to give them this information relative to his state, and how God had turned his bonds to the advantage of that cause on account of which he was bound.

Verse 13. My bonds—are manifest in all the palace] In consequence of the public defence which he was obliged to make, his doctrines must be fully known in the court, and throughout the whole city, as on his trial he would necessarily explain the whole.

Verse 15. Some—preach Christ even of envy and strife] The word preach is not to be taken here as implying that the different persons mentioned were what we call preachers of the gospel: all that we can understand from St. Paul's use of the word is, that they proclaimed Christ as the promised Messiah, espoused the Christian cause, and contended, whether in public or private, that this Jesus was the Christ; but nothing of this kind appears to have been intended in reference to the conversion of sinners.

Some also of good will] Some, through mere benevolence to the apostle, both espoused his doctrine and vindicated his cause.

Verse 16. Preach Christ of contention] The Judaizing teachers, they also preach Christ; they acknowledge that Jesus is the Christ or promised Messiah, and preach him as such.

Not sincerely] Not chastely, garbling the gospel; not 18 What then? notwithstanding every way, whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached; and I therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice.

19 For I know that this shall turn to my salvation^k through your prayer, and the supply of^l the Spirit of Jesus Christ, 20 According to my^m earnest expectation and my hope, thatⁿ in nothing I shall be ashamed; but that^o with all boldness, as always, so now also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death.

21 For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.

22 But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour: yet what I shall choose I wot not.

23 For^p I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to^q depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better:

24 Nevertheless, to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.

^k Ch. ii. 3.—^l Ver. 7.—^m 2 Cor. i. 11.—ⁿ Rom. viii. 9.—^o Rom. viii. 19.—^p Rom. v. 5.—^q Eph. vi. 19, 20.—^r 2 Cor. v. 8.—^s 2 Tim. iv. 6.

speaking the whole truth, but just what served their purpose; and at the same time they denounced the apostle as an enemy to the divine institutions, because he spake against circumcision.

Verse 17. The other of love] Through a sincere desire, not only to make known the way of salvation to the people, but also to vindicate and help the apostle, because they considered him as appointed by God to preach and defend the gospel.

Verse 18. What then?] It is a matter of little importance to me how Christ is preached, provided he be preached.

Verse 19. This shall turn to my salvation] That is: It will be the means of my temporal safety; of my deliverance; for so the word is here to be understood. The Jews had denounced the apostle as an enemy to Cæsar; but he knew that, when the gospel should be fully known, the Romans would see that he could be no enemy to Cæsar, who proclaimed a prince whose kingdom was not of this world; and who had taught, in the most unequivocal manner, that all Christians were to give tribute to whom tribute was due, and while they feared God to honour also the king, though that king was Nero.

The supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ] The word which we translate supply, signifies also furnishing what ever is necessary. The Spirit of God he expected to help his infirmities, and to furnish him with all the wisdom, prudence, strength of reason, and argument, which might be necessary for him in the different trials he had to pass through with his persecutors, and the civil powers, at whose judgment-seat he stood.

Verse 21. For to me to live is Christ] Whether I live or die, Christ is gain to me. While I live I am Christ's property and servant, and Christ is my portion; if I die—if I be called to witness the truth at the expense of my life, this will be gain; I shall be saved from the remaining troubles and difficulties in life, and be put immediately in possession of my heavenly inheritance.

Verse 22. But if I live in the flesh] Should I be spared longer, I shall labour for Christ as I have done; and this is the fruit of my labour, that Christ shall be magnified by my longer life, ver. 20.

Yet what I shall choose I wot not.] Had I the two conditions left to my own choice, whether to die now and go to glory, or whether to live longer in persecutions and affliction (glorifying Christ by spreading the gospel), I could not tell which to prefer.

Verse 23. For I am in a strait betwixt two] Viz., the dying now, and being immediately with God; or living longer to preach and spread the gospel, and thus glorify Christ among men.

Having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ] It appears to be a metaphor taken from the commander of a vessel in a foreign port, who feels a strong desire to set sail and get to his own country and family; but this desire is counterbalanced by a conviction that the general interests of the voyage may be best answered by his longer stay in the port

25 And ^ahaving this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all, for your furtherance and joy of faith;

26 That ^byour rejoicing may be more abundant in Jesus Christ for me, by my coming to you again.

27 Only ^clet your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ; that, whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, ^dthat ye stand fast in one spirit, ^ewith one mind

^aCh. ii. 24.—^b2 Cor. i. 14. v. 12.—^cEph. iv. 1. Col. i. 10. 1 Thess. ii. 12. iv. 1.—^dCh. iv. 1.—^e1 Cor. i. 10.—^fJude 3.—

where his vessel now rides; for he is not in dock, he is not aground, but rides at anchor in the port, and may any hour weigh and be gone. Such was the condition of the apostle: he was not at home, but although he was abroad it was on his employer's business; he wishes to return, and is cleared out and ready to set sail, but he has not received his last orders from his owner, and whatever desire he may feel to be at home he will faithfully wait till his final orders arrive.

Which is far better] The original words are very emphatic.

Verse 24. To abide in the flesh] It would certainly be gain to myself to die, but it will be a gain to you if I live.

Verse 25. Having this confidence, I know that I shall abide] Convinced that it is necessary that I should live longer, for the spreading and defence of the gospel, I am persuaded that I shall now be liberated.

For your furtherance] In the way of righteousness.

And joy of faith] And happiness in that way.

Verse 26. That your rejoicing may be more abundant]

Men rejoice more in recovering a thing that was lost, than they do in a continual possession of what is of much greater value.

Verse 27. Let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel] The apostle considers the Church at Philippi as a free or imperial city, which possesses great honours, dignities, and privileges; and he exhorts them to act, worthy of or suitably to those honours and privileges. This is the idea that is expressed by the original word, act according to the nature of your political situation, the citizenship and privileges which you possess in consequence of your being free inhabitants of Christ's imperial city, the Church.

^astriving together for the faith of the gospel;

28 And in nothing terrified by your adversaries: ^bwhich is to them an evident token of perdition, ^cbut to you of salvation, and that of God.

29 For unto you ^dit is given in the behalf of Christ, ^enot only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake;

30 ^fHaving the same conflict ^gwhich ye saw in me, and now hear to be in me.

^a2 Thess. i. 5.—^bRom. viii. 17. 2 Tim. ii. 11.—^cActs v. 41. Rom. v. 3.—^dEph. iv. 8.—^eCol. ii. 1.—^fActs xvi. 19, &c. 1 Thess. ii. 2.

In one spirit] Being all of one mind under the influence of the Holy Ghost.

Striving together] Wrestling together, not in contention with each other, but in union against the enemies of the gospel faith—the doctrine of Christ crucified, and freedom from all Mosaic rites and ceremonies, as well as from sin and perdition, through his passion and sacrifice.

Verse 28. In nothing terrified by your adversaries] So it appears that the Church at Philippi was then under persecution.

Which is to them] Some very judicious critics consider the relation here as referring to the faith of the gospel, which they, the heathen, considered to be a token of perdition to all them who embraced it; but, as the apostle says, it was to them, the Philippians, on the contrary, the most evident token of salvation; for, having embraced the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, they were incontestably in the way to eternal blessedness. [The relation clearly refers to the bold stand of the Philippian Christians.]

Verse 29. Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ] To you it is graciously given; it is no small privilege that God has so far honoured you as to permit you to suffer on Christ's account.

Verse 30. Having the same conflict] When Paul preached the gospel at Philippi he was grievously persecuted, as we learn from Acts xvi. 19-40, being stripped, scourged, thrown into prison, even into the dungeon, and his feet made fast in the stocks. This was the conflict they had seen in him; and now they heard that he had been sent prisoner to Rome as an evil doer, and that he was at present in bonds, and shortly to be tried for his life before the Roman emperor, to whom he had been obliged to appeal.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle beseeches them, by various considerations, to live in unity and in the spirit of the gospel, loving each other; and each to prefer his brother to himself, 1-4. He exhorts them to be like-minded with Christ, who, though in the form of God, and equal with God, made himself of no reputation, and humbled himself to the death of the cross for the salvation of man; in consequence of which he was highly exalted, and had a name above every name; to whose authority every knee should bow, and whose glory every tongue should acknowledge, 5-11. They are exhorted to work out their own salvation through his power who works in them, that they may be blameless, and that the apostle's labour may not be in vain, 12-16. He expresses his readiness to offer his life for the gospel, 17, 18. Intends to send Timothy to them, of whom he gives a very high character; yet hopes to see them himself shortly, 19-24. In the meantime sends Epaphroditus, who had been near death, and whom he begs them to receive with especial tenderness, 25-30.

IF there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, ^a if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any ^b bowels and mercies;

2 ^c Fulfil ye my joy, ^d that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.

3 ^e Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory; but ^f in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.

4 ^g Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.

5 ^h Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus;

6 Who, ⁱ being in the form of God, ^j thought it not robbery to be equal with God;

7 ^k But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form ^l of a servant, and ^m was made in the ⁿ likeness of men:

Verse 1. If there be therefore any consolation] The if does not express any doubt here, but on the contrary is to be considered as a strong affirmation; as there is consolation in Christ, as there is comfort of love, &c.

The word translated here consolation, is in other places rendered exhortation, and is by several critics understood so here; as if he had said: If exhorting you in the name of Christ have any influence with you, &c. It is extremely difficult to give the force of these expressions; they contain a torrent of most affecting eloquence; the apostle pouring out his whole heart to a people whom with all his heart he loved, and who were worthy of the love even of an apostle.

If any comfort of love] If the followers of Christ, by giving proofs of their ardent love to each other in cases of distress, alleviate the sufferings of the persecuted;

If any fellowship of the Spirit] If there be an intimate relation established among all Christians, by their being made mutual partakers of the Holy Ghost;

If any bowels and mercies] If you, as persons whom I have brought to God at the hazard of my life, feel sympathetic tenderness for me now, in a farther state of suffering;

Verse 2. Fulfil ye my joy] Ye ought to complete my joy, who have suffered so much to bring you into the possession of these blessings, by being like minded with myself, having the same love to God, his cause, and me, as I have to him, his cause, and you.

Verse 3. Let nothing be done through strife] Never be opposed to each other; never act from separate interests; ye are all brethren, and of one body; therefore let every member feel and labour for the welfare of the whole.

Verse 4. Look not every man on his own things] Do nothing through self-interest in the things of God; do not arrogate to yourselves gifts, graces, and fruits which belong to others; ye are all called to promote God's glory and the salvation of men.

Verse 5. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus] Christ laboured to promote no separate interest; as man, he studied to promote the glory of God and the welfare and salvation of the human race.

Verse 6. Who, being in the form of God] "By the form of God we are to understand that visible glorious light in which the Deity is said to dwell, 1 Tim. vi. 16, and by which he manifested himself to the patriarchs of old, Deut. v. 22, 24; which was commonly accompanied with a numerous retinue of angels, Ps. lxxviii. 17, and which in scripture is called The Similitude, Num. xii. 8; The Face, Psa. xxxi. 16; The Presence, Exod. xxxiii. 15; and, The Shape of God, John v. 27. This interpretation is supported by the term form here used, which signifies a person's external shape or appearance, and not his nature or essence. Thus we are told, Mark xvi. 12, that Jesus appeared to his disciples in another shape or form. And, Matt. xvii. 2, he was transfigured before them—his outward appearance or form was 8 And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and ^a became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.

9 Wherefore God also ^b hath highly exalted him, and ^c given him a name which is above every name:

10 ^d That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth;

11 And ^e that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

12 Wherefore, my beloved, ^f as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with ^g fear and trembling;

13 For ^h it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure.

14 Do all things ⁱ without murmurings and ^j disputings; changed. Farther, this interpretation agrees with the fact: the form of God, that is, his visible glory and the attendance of angels, as above described, the Son of God enjoyed with his Father before the world was, John xvii. 5; and on that, as on other accounts, he is the brightness of his Father's glory, Heb. i. 3. Of this he divested himself when he became flesh; but, having resumed it after his ascension, he will come with it in the human nature to judge the world. So he told his disciples, Matt. xvi. 27."

Thought it not robbery to be equal with God] If we take these words as they stand here, their meaning is, that, as he was from the beginning in the same infinite glory with the Father, to appear in time—during his humiliation, as God and equal with the Father, was no encroachment on the divine prerogative; for, as he had an equality of nature, he had an equality of rights.

But the word which we translate robbery, has been supposed to imply a thing eagerly to be seized, coveted, or desired; and on this interpretation the passage has been translated: Who, being in the form of God, did not think it a matter to be earnestly desired to appear equal to God; but made himself of no reputation, &c. I prefer this sense of the word before that given in our text, which does not agree so well with the other expressions in the context.

Verse 7. But made himself of no reputation] He emptied himself—did not appear in his glory, for he assumed the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of man.

Verse 8. And being found in fashion as a man] This clause should be joined to the preceding, and thus translated: Being made in the likeness of men, and was found in fashion as a man.

He humbled himself] Laid himself as low as possible: 1. In emptying himself—laying aside the effulgence of his glory. 2. In being incarnate—taking upon him the human form. 3. In becoming a servant—assuming the lowest innocent character, that of being the servant of all. 4. In condescending to die, to which he was not naturally liable, as having never sinned, and therefore had a right in his human nature to immortality, without passing under the empire of death. 5. In condescending, not only to death, but to the lowest and most ignominious kind of death, the death of the cross; the punishment of the meanest of slaves and worst of felons. What must sin have been in the sight of God, when it required such abasement in Jesus Christ to make an atonement for it, and undo its influences and malignity!

Verse 9. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him] From which it appears that no creature of God is so far exalted and so glorious as the man Christ Jesus, human nature being in him dignified infinitely beyond the angelic nature; and that this nature has an authority and pre-eminence which no being, either in heaven or earth, enjoys. In a word, as man was in the beginning at the head of all the creatures of God, Jesus Christ, by assuming human nature, 15 That ye may be blameless and ^a harmless, ^b the sons of God, without rebuke, ^c in the midst of ^d a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ^e ye shine as lights in the world;

17 Yea, and if ^a I be ^b offered upon the sacrifice ^c and service of your faith, ^d I joy, and rejoice with you all.

18 For the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice with me.

19 ^a But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send ^b Timothy shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state.

20 For I have no man ^a like-minded, ^b who will naturally care for your state.

suffering and dying in it, has raised it to its pristine state. And this is probably what is here meant by this high exaltation of Christ, and giving him a name which is above every name. But if we refer to any particular epithet, then the name JESUS or Saviour must be that which is intended; as no being either in heaven or earth can possess this name as he who is the Redeemer of the world does, for he is the only Saviour; none has or could redeem us to God but he; and throughout eternity he will ever appear as the sole Saviour of the human race.

Verse 10. That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow] In a word, that all the spirits of just men made perfect, now in a state of blessedness; all human beings still in their state of probation on earth; and all that are in the shades below, who have, through their own fault, died without having received his salvation, should acknowledge him.

Others by things in heaven understand the holy angels; by things on earth, human beings generally; and by things under the earth, fallen spirits of every description. Perhaps the three expressions are designed to comprehend all beings of all kinds, all creatures; as it is usual with the Hebrews, and indeed with all ancient nations, to express, by things in heaven, things on earth, and things under the earth, all beings of all kinds; universal nature. But intelligent beings seem to be those which are chiefly intended by the words of the apostle: for it appears that nothing less than absolute rule over angels, men, and devils, can be designed in these extraordinary words, and by confessing him to be Lord we may understand that worship which all intelligent creatures are called to pay to God manifested in the flesh; for all should honour the Son even as they honour the Father.

Verse 12. As ye have always obeyed] Continue to act on the same principles and from the same motives; having the same disposition which was in Christ; labouring so as to promote his glory.

With fear and trembling] Considering the difficulty of the work, and danger of miscarriage.

Verse 13. For it is God which worketh in you] Every holy pious resolution, good word, and good work, must come from him; therefore work with him, and work out your own salvation.

To will and to do] God gives power to will, man wills through that power; God gives power to act, and man acts through that power. Without the power to will, man can will nothing; without the power to work, man can do nothing. God neither wills for man, nor works in man's stead, but he furnishes him with power to do both; he is therefore accountable to God for these powers.

Of his good pleasure.] Every good is freely given of God; no man deserves anything from him; and as it pleaseth him, so he deals out to men those measures of mental and corporeal

23 Him therefore I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me.

26 ^a For he longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because that ye had heard that he had been sick.

27 For indeed he was sick nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him; and not on him only, but on me also, lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow.

28 I sent him therefore the more carefully, that, when ye see him again, ye may rejoice, and that I may be the less sorrowful.

29 Receive him therefore in the Lord with all gladness; and ^a hold ^b such in reputation:

energy which he sees to be necessary; giving to some more, to others less, but to all what is sufficient for their salvation.

Verse 14. Do all things without murmurings] Without grumblings and altercations. Be patient in, and contented with, your work; and see that ye fall not out by the way.

Verse 15. That ye may be blameless] In yourselves, and harmless to others.

The sons of God] Showing by your holy conduct that ye are partakers of the divine nature.

Without rebuke] Persons against whom no charge of transgression can justly be laid.

A crooked and perverse] Probably referring to the Jews, who were the chief opponents and the most virulent enemies which the Christian Church had.

Among whom ye shine] It is evident that the apostle, by lights in the world, refers to the sun and moon particularly, and perhaps to the heavenly bodies in general.

Verse 16. Holding forth the word of life] An allusion, some think, to those towers which were built at the entrance of harbours, on which fires were kept during the night to direct ships into the port.

That I have not run in vain] This appears to be a part of the same metaphor; and alludes to the case of a weather-beaten mariner who has been long tossed on a tempestuous sea, in hazy weather and dark nights, who has been obliged to run on different tacks, and labour intensely to keep his ship from foundering, but is at last, by the assistance of a luminous fire on the top of a tower, directed safely into port. [The reference is rather to the stadium.]

Verse 17. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service] The metaphor appears still to be carried on. As it was customary for the weather-beaten mariner, when he had gained his port, to offer a sacrifice to God, of some particular animal which he had vowed when in his state of danger, and this was considered to be a religious service; the apostle, pursuing the idea, states himself to be willing to become the libation (for so much the word imports) that was to be poured upon the sacrifice.

Verse 18. For the same cause also do ye joy] Should I be thus offered, as I shall rejoice in it, do ye also rejoice that I am counted worthy of this high honour.

Verse 20. For I have no man like-minded] None of all my fellow-helpers in the gospel have the same zeal and affectionate concern for your prosperity in every respect as he has.

Verse 21. For all seek their own] This must relate to the persons who preached Christ of envy and strife, chap. i. 15; and even those who preached the gospel out of good will might not be fit for such an embassy as this, which required many sacrifices, and consequently much love and zeal to be able to make them.

Verse 22. Ye know the proof of him, that, as a son with the father, he hath served with me. Timothy was not a servant to the apostle, but he had served with him. They both laboured together in the word and doctrine; for apostles and Christian bishops in those times laboured as hard as their deacons.

Verse 23. How it will go with me. His trial appears to have been approaching, and of its issue he was doubtful.

Verse 27. Lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow. The sorrows of his death, added to the sorrow he endured on account of his sickness; or he may refer to his own state of affliction, being imprisoned and maltreated.

Verse 28. The more carefully. With the more haste or dispatch; because, having suffered so much on account of his apprehended death, they could not be too soon comforted by seeing him alive and restored.

Verse 29. Receive him therefore in the Lord. For the Lord's sake receive him, and as the Lord's servant; and hold such zealous, disinterested, and holy preachers in reputation—honour those whom ye perceive God hath honoured.

Verse 30. For the work of Christ. Preaching the gospel, and ministering to the distressed.

Not regarding his life. Risking his life, is the reading of the best MSS. His frequent and intense preaching, and labouring to supply the apostle's wants, appear to have brought him nigh to the gates of death.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle exhorts the Philippians to rejoice in the Lord, 1. And to beware of false teachers, 2. Shows that Christians are the true circumcision, who worship God in the Spirit, 3. And that himself had more reason to trust in the flesh than any of the Jews, 4-6. But that he counted all things loss for Christ, 7-11. He longs after a conformity to Christ in his death, and presses onward to the attainment of his high calling, 12-14. Exhorts them to be like-minded, 15-17. Warns them against certain persons who were enemies to the cross of Christ, 18, 19. Shows the nature of their heavenly privileges, and the resurrection and glorification of the human body, 20, 21.

FINALLY, my brethren, *rejoice in the things to you, to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe.

2 ^b Beware of dogs, beware of ^c evil workers, ^d beware of the concision.

3 For we are ^e the circumcision, ^f which worship God in the spirit, and ^g rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh:

Verse 1. Rejoice in the Lord. Be always happy; but let that happiness be such as you derive from the Lord.

To write the same things. Those which he had formerly preached to them or to other churches.

For you it is safe. It is much better to have these divine things committed to writing than confined to memory. By the latter they may be either lost or corrupted, by the former they will be preserved.

Verse 2. Beware of dogs. The Jews, who have here the same appellation which they formerly gave the Gentiles: because the Gentiles were not included in the covenant they called them dogs; and themselves, the children of the most High. Now, they are cast out of the covenant and the Gentiles taken in; therefore they are the dogs, and the Gentiles the children.

Evil workers. Judaizing teachers, who endeavoured to pervert the gospel.

The concision. The cutting or excision; not the circumcision: the word is used by the apostle to degrade the pretensions which the Jews made to sanctify by the cutting in their flesh. Circumcision was an honourable thing, for it was a sign of the covenant; but as they now had rejected the new covenant, their circumcision was rendered uncircumcision, and is termed a cutting, by way of degradation.

Verse 3 We are the circumcision. We, who have embraced the faith of Christ crucified, are now entered into the new covenant, having no confidence in the flesh—in any outward rite or ceremony prescribed by the Jewish institutions.

Verse 4. Though I might also have confidence. If any of them have any cause to boast in outward rites and privileges, I have as much; yea, more.

Verse 5. Circumcised the eighth day. This was the time that the law required the males to be circumcised.

Of the stock of Israel. Regularly descended from the patriarch Jacob.

Of the tribe of Benjamin. The most favourite son of that patriarch.

An Hebrew of the Hebrews. Though born in a heathen country, Tarsus, yet both my parents were Hebrews.

Touching the law, a Pharisee. One that belonged to that sect which, of all others, was most scrupulously attached to it.

Verse 6. Touching the righteousness. And as to that plan of justification, which justification the Jews say is to be obtained by an observance of the law, I have done everything so conscientiously from my youth up, that in this respect I am blameless.

Verse 7. But what things were gain. The credit and re-righteousness, which is of the law, but *that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith:

10 That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and ^bthe fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death;

11 If by any means I might ^cattain unto the resurrection of the dead.

12 Not as though I had already ^dattained, either were already ^eperfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

13 Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, ^fforgetting those things which are behind, and ^greaching forth unto those things which are before, 14 ^hI press toward the mark for the prize of ⁱthe high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

spect which I had, as being zealously attached to the law, and to the traditions of the elders, I counted loss for Christ—I saw that this could stand me in no stead, that Christ crucified could alone profit me.

Verse 8. I count all things but loss] Not only my Jewish privileges, but all others of every kind.

The excellency of the knowledge of Christ] That superior light, information, and blessedness, which come through the gospel of Jesus Christ.

I have suffered the loss of all things] Some translate for whom I have thrown away all things—I have made a voluntary choice of Christ, his cross, his poverty, and his reproach; and for these I have freely sacrificed all I had from the world, and all I could expect from it.

And do count them but dung] The word means the vilest dross or refuse of anything; the worst excrement. The word shows how utterly insignificant and unavailing, in point of salvation, the apostle esteemed everything but the gospel of Jesus.

Verse 9. And be found in him] Be found a believer in Christ.

But that which is through the faith of Christ] That justification which is received by faith through the atonement made by Christ.

The righteousness which is of God] God's method of justifying sinners through faith in his Son.

Verse 10. The power of his resurrection] In having this body of my humiliation raised from death, and made like unto his glorious body. This seems to be the sole meaning of the apostle; for it is in virtue of Christ's resurrection that we are to be raised incorruptible and immortal.

And the fellowship of his sufferings] No creature can have fellowship with him in his vicarious sufferings; as a martyr to the truth, St. Paul wished to imitate him.

Verse 11. The resurrection of the dead] That is, the resurrection of those who, having died in the Lord, rise to glory and honour; and hence St. Paul uses a peculiar word which occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. This glorious resurrection, and perhaps peculiarly glorious in the case of martyrs, is that to which St. Paul aspired.

Verse 12. Not as though I had already attained] For I have not yet received the prize; I am not glorified, for I have not finished my course; and I have a conflict still to maintain, and the issue will prove whether I should be crowned.

Either were already perfect] Nor am I yet perfect; I am not yet crowned, in consequence of having suffered martyrdom. The apostle here alludes to the Olympic Games, and this word is the proof; it is spoken of those who have completed their race, reached the goal, and are honoured with the prize.

St. Paul, therefore, is not speaking here of any deficiency minded, God shall reveal even this unto you.

16 Nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, ¹let us walk ²by the same rule, ³let us mind the same thing.

17 Brethren, ⁴be followers together of me, and mark them which walk, so as ⁵ye have us for an ensample.

18 (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are ⁶the enemies of the cross of Christ:

19 ⁷Whose end is destruction, ⁸whose God is their belly, and ⁹whose glory is in their shame, ¹⁰who mind earthly things.)

20 For ¹¹our conversation is in heaven; ¹²from whence also we ¹³look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ:

21 ¹⁴Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, ¹⁵according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

in his own grace or spiritual state; he speaks of his not having terminated his course by martyrdom, which he knew would, sooner or later, be the case. This he considered as the perfection of his whole career, and was led to view everything as imperfect or unfinished till this had taken place.

But I follow after] But I pursue; several are gone before me in this glorious way, and have obtained the crown of martyrdom; I am hurrying after them.

That I may apprehend] That I may receive those blessings to which I am called by Christ Jesus. There is still an allusion here to the stadium, and exercises there: the apostle considers Christ as the judge in the games, who proclaimed the victor, and distributed the prizes.

Verse 13. I count not myself to have apprehended] Whatever gifts, graces, or honours I may have received from Jesus Christ, I consider everything as incomplete till I have finished my course, got this crown, and have my body raised and fashioned after his glorious body.

This one thing I do] This is the concern, as it is the sole business, of my life.

Forgetting those things which are behind] If others think they have time to loiter or trifle, I have none: time is flying; eternity is at hand; and my all is at stake.

Reaching forth] The Greek word points out the strong exertions made in the race; every muscle and nerve is exerted, and he puts forth every particle of his strength in running. He was running for life, and running for his life.

Verse 14. I press toward the mark] I pursue along the line; this is a reference to the white line that marked the ground, in the stadium, from the starting place to the goal, on which the runners were obliged to keep their eye fixed; for they who transgressed or went beyond this line did not run lawfully, and were not crowned, even though they got first to the goal. [This is doubtful.]

For the prize of the high calling of God] The reward which God from above calls me, by Christ Jesus, to receive. The apostle still keeps in view his crown of martyrdom and his glorious resurrection.

Verse 15. As many as be perfect] The word perfect is taken here in the same sense in which it is taken, 1 Cor. xiv. 20, ii. 6; Eph. iv. 13; Heb. v. 14.

If in any thing ye be otherwise minded] If any of you have yet remaining any doubts relative to Jewish ordinances, or their expediency in Christianity, God shall reveal even this unto you.

Verse 16. Whereto we have already attained] The MSS., Versions, and Fathers of the Alexandrian recension or edition, read the verse thus: Whereunto we have already attained, let us walk; or, according to what we have already attained, let us regulate our life.

Verse 17. Brethren, be followers—of me] In the things of Christ let me be your line; and my writing, preaching, and conduct, your rule.

And mark them] Still alluding to the line in the stadium; keep your eye steadily fixed on those who walk—live, as ye have us—myself, Timothy, and Epaphroditus, for an example.

Verse 18. For many walk, &c.] The Judaizing teachers continue to preach, who wish to incorporate circumcision, and other ordinances of the law, with the gospel.

They are the enemies of the cross of Christ] They rather attribute justification to the Levitical sacrifices, than to the sacrificial death of Christ; and thus they are enemies to that cross, and will not suffer persecution for its sake.

Verse 19. Whose end is destruction] This is the issue of their doctrine and of their conduct.

Verse 20. Our conversation is in heaven] Our city, or citizenship, or civil rights. The word properly signifies the administration, government, or form of a republic or state. It signifies also a republic, a city, or the inhabitants of any city or place; or a society of persons living in the same place, and under the same rules and laws.

Verse 21. Who shall change our vile body] Who will re-fashion, or alter the fashion and condition of, the body of our humiliation; this body that is dead—adjudged to death because of sin, and must be putrefied, dissolved, and decomposed.

That it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body] That it may bear a similar form to the body of his glory. That is: The bodies of true believers shall be raised up at the great day in the same likeness, immortality, and glory, of the glorified humanity of Jesus Christ; and be so thoroughly changed, as to be not only capable through their immortality of eternally existing, but also of infinite spiritual enjoyments at the right hand of God.

According to the working] According to that energy by which he can bring all things under subjection to himself. Thus we find that the resurrection of the body is attributed to that power which governs and subdues all things; for nothing less than the energy that produced the human body at the beginning, can restore it from its lapsed and degraded state into that state of glory which it had at its creation, and render it capable of enjoying God throughout eternity.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle exhorts them to stand fast in the Lord, 1. And beseeches Euodias and Syntyche to be of one mind in divine things, 2. And requests his true yoke-fellow to help them to a good understanding, 3. Gives them directions concerning their temper and frame of mind, 4-7. And how to act in all respects as becomes the purity and excellence of the gospel, as they had heard from and seen in him, 8, 9. Thanks them for their attention to him in his captivity, in sending him what was necessary for his support, though he had learned to be contended in all situations in life, 10-14. Mentions particular cases in which they had ministered to him; promises them, through the riches of glory in Christ, a supply of all their spiritual wants; and renders thanks to God, 15-20. Salutes all the saints, and those particularly of the emperor's household, 21, 22. And concludes with his usual apostolical benediction, 23.

THEREFORE, my brethren, dearly beloved and ^a longed for, ^b my joy and crown, so ^c stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved.

2 I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche, ^d that they be of the same mind in the Lord.

3 And I intreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, help those women which ^e laboured with me in the gospel, with Clement also, and with other my fellow-labourers, whose names are in ^f the book of life.

afterwards Bishop of Rome, and who wrote an epistle to the Corinthians, which is still extant.

Whose names are in the book of life.] Who are genuine Christians; who are enlisted or enrolled in the armies of the Lord, and have received a title to eternal glory.

Verse 4. Rejoice in the Lord alway] Be continually happy; but this happiness you can find only in the Lord. The apostle repeats the exhortation, to show, not only his earnestness, but also that it was God's will that it should be so, and that it was their duty as well as interest.

Verse 5. Let your moderation be known] The word is of very extensive signification; but moderation is expressive enough as a general term.

The Lord is at hand.] A phrase something similar to the Maranatha of 1 Cor. xvi. 22: The Lord is Judge, and is at hand to punish.

Verse 1. Therefore, my—beloved] This verse most unquestionably belongs to the preceding chapter.

Verse 2. I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche] These were two pious women, as it is generally supposed, who were deaconesses in the Church at Philippi, and who in some points of doctrine and discipline had disagreed. But it is more likely that Euodias was a woman, and Syntyche a man, and probably the husband of Euodias; and that it is Syntyche whom the apostle calls true yoke-fellow in the next verse. [This conjecture is most improbable. It is far more likely that they were the "women" referred to in the next verse.]

Verse 3. Help those women which laboured with me] Some think the women here were Euodias and Syntyche; but I rather incline to the opinion that Syntyche was a male, and Euodias his wife. [See above.]

With Clement also] Supposed to be the same who was 8 Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, ^b whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

9 ^c Those things, which ye have both learned, and received, and heard, and seen in me, do: and ^d the God of peace shall be with you.

10 But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at the last ^e your care of me ^f hath flourished again; wherein ye were also careful, but ye lacked opportunity.

11 Not that I speak in respect of want: for I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, ^g therewith to be content.

12 ^h I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound: every where and in all things I am instructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need.

13 I can do all things ⁱ through Christ which strengtheneth me.

14 Notwithstanding, ye have well done that ^j ye did communicate with my affliction.

* Or, venerable.—^b 1 Thess. v. 22.—^c Ch. iii. 17.—^d Rom. xv. 83. xvi. 29. 1 Cor. xiv. 33. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. 1 Thess. v. 23. Heb. xiii. 20.—^e 2 Cor. xi. 9.—^f Or, is revived.—^g 1 Tim. vi. 6, 8.—^h 1 Cor. iv. 11. 2 Cor. vi. 10. xi. 27.—ⁱ John xv. 5. 2 Cor. xii. 9.—^j Ch. i. 7.—

Verse 6. Be careful for nothing] Be not anxiously solicitous; do not give place to carking care, let what will occur; for anxiety cannot change the state or condition of any thing from bad to good, but will infallibly injure your own souls.

By prayer and supplication] God alone can help you; he is disposed to do it, but you must ask by prayer and supplication; without this he has not promised to help you.

Verse 7. And the peace of God] That harmonizing of all passions and appetites which is produced by the Holy Spirit, and arises from a sense of pardon and the favour of God;

Shall keep your hearts] Shall keep them in a strong place or castle. Your hearts—the seat of all your affections and passions, and minds—your understanding, judgment, and conscience, through Christ Jesus.

Verse 8. Whatsoever things are true] All that is agreeable to unchangeable and eternal truth.

Whatsoever things are honest] Whatever is grave, decent, and venerable.

Whatsoever things are just] Whatsoever is agreeable to justice and righteousness.

Whatsoever things are pure] Whatsoever is chaste.

Whatsoever things are lovely] Whatsoever is amiable on its own account and on account of its usefulness to others, whether in your conduct or conversation.

Whatsoever things are of good report] Whatsoever things the public agree to acknowledge as useful and profitable to men.

If there be any virtue] If they be calculated to promote the general good of mankind, and are thus praiseworthy;

Think on these things] Esteem them highly, recommend them heartily, and practise them fervently.

Verse 9. Those things, which ye have—learned] From my preaching and writing;

And received] By faith, as a revelation from God;

And seen in me] While living and labouring among you;

Do] Take them for the rule of your faith and practice.

Verse 10. But I rejoiced in the Lord] It was God that gave them the power, and directed their hearts to use it.

Hath flourished again] They had helped him before, chap. ii. 25; they had ceased for a time, and now they began again. The metaphor is taken from the reviviscence of flowers in spring which seemed dead in winter. For the time in which they were apparently remiss he makes a delicate apology: Ye were careful, but ye lacked opportunity; or rather ye had not ability, ye wanted the means; as the word sometimes implies.

For I have learned] How true is the proverb, A contented mind is a continual feast! What do we get by murmuring and complaining?

15 Now, ye Philippians, know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, ^k no church communicated with me, as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only.

16 For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity.

17 Not because I desire a gift; but I desire ^l fruit that may abound to your account.

18 But ^m I have all, and abound: I am full, having received ⁿ of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, ^o an odour of a sweet smell, ^p a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God.

19 But my God ^q shall supply all your need, ^r according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus.

20 ^s Now unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

21 Salute every saint in Christ Jesus. The ^t brethren which are with me greet you.

22 All the saints salute you, ^u chiefly they that are of Caesar's household.

23 ^v The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

Verse 12. I know—how to be abased] I have passed through all these states; I know how to conduct myself in each, and how to extract good from all. See here the state to which God permitted his chief apostle to be reduced! And see how powerfully the grace of Christ supported him under the whole!

Verse 13. I can do all things] It was not a habit which he had acquired by frequent exercise, it was a disposition which he had by grace; and he was enabled to do all by the power of an indwelling Christ.

Verse 14. Ye have well done] Though I have learnt all these important lessons, and am never miserable in want, yet ye have done well in sending me relief in the time of affliction.

Verse 16. For even in Thessalonica] While labouring to plant the church there, he was supported partly by working with his hands, 1 Thess. ii. 9, 2 Thess. iii. 7-9; and partly by the contributions sent him from Philippi.

Verse 17. Not because I desire a gift] I do not speak thus to incite you to send me a farther gift.

Verse 18. I have all] Ye have now sent me so much by Epaphroditus, that I abound in all the necessaries of life.

An odour of a sweet smell] With what ye have done to me, his servant, God is well pleased.

Verse 19. My God shall supply all your need] As you have given to me in my distress, God will never suffer you to want without raising up help to you, as he raised you up for help to me.

According to his riches] His fulness is infinite; and through Christ, whose followers we are, he will dispense every requisite blessing of providence, grace, and glory, to you.

Verse 21. Salute every saint] Remember to present my affectionate wishes to every Christian at Philippi.

The brethren which are with me] Those who were fellow-labourers with him, generally supposed to be Aristarchus, Mark, Justus, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas.

Verse 22. All the saints] All the Christians now at Rome. They that are of Caesar's household] Nero was at this time Emperor of Rome: a more worthless, cruel, and diabolical wretch never disgraced the name or form of man; yet in his family there were Christians: but whether this relates to the members of the imperial family, or to guards, or courtiers, or to servants, we cannot tell. If even some of his slaves were converted to Christianity, it would be sufficiently marvellous. Converts to Christianity in this family there certainly were; and this shows how powerfully the divine word had been preached and spread.

COLOSSE, or rather Colassa (see on chap. i. 1), was a city of Phrygia Pacatiana, now a part of Natolia, in Asia Minor, seated on an eminence on the river Ilycus, a branch of the Mæander. It was situated between Laodicea and Hierapolis, and at an equal distance from either.

The ancient city has been extinct for nearly eighteen hundred years; for about the tenth year of the Emperor Nero, about a year after the writing of this epistle, not only Colosse, but Laodicea and Hierapolis were destroyed by an earthquake, according to Eusebius; and the city which was raised in the place of the former was called Chonos or Konos, which name it now bears. [The present Chone is about three miles south of the ruins of Colosse.]

The epistle to this city appears to have been written about the same time with that to the Philippians, viz., towards the end of the year 62, and in the ninth of the Emperor Nero.

When, or by whom, Christianity was first preached at Colosse, and a church founded there, we cannot tell; but it is most likely that it was by St. Paul himself, and during the three years in which he dwelt at Ephesus.

From a great similarity in the doctrine and phraseology of this epistle to that written to the Ephesians, this to the Colossians has been considered an epitome of the former, as the Epistle to the Galatians has been considered an abstract of that to the Romans.

Whether the Colossians, to whom the apostle addresses this epistle, were Jews or Gentiles, cannot be absolutely determined. It is most probable that they were a mixture of both; but that the principal part were converted Jews is most likely.

The language of this epistle is bold and energetic, the sentiments are grand, and the conceptions vigorous and majestic. The phraseology is in many places Jewish; and the reason is obvious: the apostle had to explain subjects which never had a name in any other language. The mythology of the Gentiles could not furnish terms to explain the theology of the Jews; much less, the more refined and spiritual system of Christianity.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

COLOSSIANS.

CHAPTER I.

The salutation of Paul and Timothy to the Church at Colosse, 1, 2. They give thanks to God for the good estate of that church, and the wonderful progress of the gospel in every place, 3-6; having received particulars of their state from Epaphroditus, which not only excited their gratitude, but led them to pray to God that they might walk worthy of the gospel; and they give thanks to Him who had made them meet for an inheritance among the saints in light, 7-12. This state is described as a deliverance from the power of darkness, and being brought into the kingdom of God's dear Son, 13, 14. The glorious character of Jesus Christ, and what he has done for mankind, 15-20. The salvation which the Colossians had received, and of which the apostle had been the minister and dispenser, 21-26. The sum and substance of the apostle's preaching, and the manner in which he executed his ministry, 27-29.

PAUL, ^aan apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother,

2 To the saints ^band faithful brethren in Christ which are at Colosse: ^cGrace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 ^dWe give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, Verse 1. Paul, an apostle—by the will of God] Signifying that he had derived his commission from an express volition or purpose of the Almighty.

And Timotheus] He has been considered as the amanuensis or scribe of the apostle.

Verse 2. To the saints] Those who professed Christianity. See the note on Eph. i. 1.

Verse 3. We give thanks to God] Who is the author of all good; and from whom the grace, which has produced your conversion, has sprung by his mission of Christ Jesus.

Verse 4. Since we heard of your faith] This is very similar to Eph. i. 15.

Verse 5. For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven] The hope is here used for the object of hope; as every person that is born of God hopes for the resurrection of his body, and the glorification of both it and his soul in the realms of eternal blessedness.

In the word of the truth of the gospel] In the doctrine of that gospel of your salvation which is the truth of God. Heathenism knew nothing of the resurrection of the body, and had very indistinct and uncertain notions of the immortality of the soul.

Verse 6. And bringeth forth fruit] After bringeth forth fruit, many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, add and increaseth.

4 ^aSince we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of ^bthe love which ye have to all the saints:

5 For the hope ^cwhich is laid up for you in heaven, whereof ye heard before in the word of the truth of the gospel;

6 Which is come unto you, ^das it is in all the world; and ^ebringeth forth fruit, as it doth also in you, since the day ye heard of it, and knew ^fthe grace of God in truth:

It had not only brought forth fruit, but was multiplying its own kind; every fruit containing seed, and every seed producing thirty, sixty, or a hundred-fold. This reading is very important, and undoubtedly genuine.

Verse 7. As ye also learned of Epaphras—who is for you] Some think that he is the same with Epaphroditus, Epaphras being a contraction of that name. That he was a Colossian is evident from chap. iv. 12: Epaphras, who is one of you; and some think that he was the first who preached the gospel among these people.

Verse 8. Your love in the Spirit] Of this love of theirs in the Spirit, and particularly towards the apostle, Epaphras gave full proof, not only by describing to the apostle the affection they felt for him, but in presenting to him those supplies which their love to him caused them to furnish.

Verse 9. That ye might be filled] Nothing could satisfy the apostle, either for himself or his hearers, but the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of peace.

Verse 10. That ye might walk worthy of the Lord] Suitably to your Christian profession, exemplifying its holy doctrines by a holy and useful life.

Unto all pleasing] Doing everything in the best manner, in the most proper time, and in a becoming spirit.

According to his glorious power] According to that 10 ⁱ That ye might walk worthy of the Lord ^j unto all pleasing, ^k being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God;

11 ^l Strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, ^m unto all patience and long-suffering ⁿ with joyfulness; sufficiency of strength which may be expected from him who has all power both in the heavens and in the earth.

Unto all patience] Believing, hoping, and enduring all things.

With joyfulness] Feeling the continual testimony that ye please God, which will be a spring of perpetual comfort.

Verse 12. Giving thanks unto the Father.] Knowing that ye have nothing but what ye have received from his mere mercy.

Which hath made us meet] Who has qualified us to be partakers, &c.

Of the inheritance] A plain allusion to the division of the promised land by lot among the different families of the twelve Israelitish tribes. This was a type of the kingdom of God, in which portions of eternal blessedness are dispensed to the genuine Israelites; to them who have the circumcision of the heart by the Spirit, whose praise is of God, and not of man.

Of the saints in light] Light, in the sacred writings, is used to express knowledge, felicity, purity, comfort, and joy of the most substantial kind; here it is put to point out the state of glory at the right hand of God.

Verse 13. Delivered us from the power of darkness] Darkness is here personified, and is represented as having power, authority, and sway; all Jews and Gentiles, which had not embraced the gospel, being under this authority and power.

Translated us into the kingdom, &c.] The government of the Son of his love; the person whom, in his infinite love, he has given to make an atonement for the sin of the world.

Verse 14. In whom we have redemption] Who has paid down the redemption price, even his own blood, that our sins might be cancelled, and we made fit to be partakers of the inheritance among the saints in light.

The clause, Through his blood, is omitted by most MSS. of weight and importance; and by most Versions and Greek Fathers. Yet that we have redemption any other way than through the sacrifice of Christ, the scriptures declare not.

The forgiveness of sins] The taking away of sins; all the power, guilt, and infection of sin.

Verse 15. Who is the image of the invisible God] The counterpart of God Almighty; and if the image of the invisible God, consequently nothing that appeared in him, could be that image; for if it could be visible in the Son, it could also be visible in the Father; but if the Father be invisible, consequently his image in the Son must be invisible also.

The first-born of every creature] I suppose this phrase to mean the same as that, Philip. ii. 9: God hath given him a name which is above every name; he is as man at the head of all the creation of God; nor can he with any propriety be considered as a creature, having himself created all things, and existed before anything was made. If it be said that God created him first, and that he, by a delegated power from God, created all things, this is most flatly contradicted by the apostle's reasoning in the 16th and 17th verses. The phraseology is Jewish; and as the Jews apply it to the Supreme Being merely to denote his eternal pre-existence, and to point him out as the cause of all things; it is most evident that St. Paul uses it in the same way, and illustrates his meaning in the following words, which would be absolutely absurd if we could suppose that by the former he intended to convey any idea of the inferiority of Jesus Christ. [Ellicott's rendering is: "Begotten antecedently to everything that was created." The word undoubtedly involves the doctrine of the Eternal Sonship of Christ, which Dr. Clarke repudiates.]

Verses 16, 17. For by him were all things created, &c.] Four things are here asserted: 1. That Jesus Christ is the Creator of the universe; of all things visible and invisible; of all things that had a beginning, whether they exist in time or in eternity. 2. That whatsoever was created was created for himself; that he was the sole end of his own work. 3. That he was prior to all creation, to all beings, whether in the visible or invisible world. 4. That he is the preserver and governor of all things; for by him all things consist.

Now, allowing St. Paul to have understood the terms which he used, he must have considered Jesus Christ as being truly and properly God.

But considering him as writing under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, then we have, from the plain grammatical meaning of the words which he has used, the fullest demonstration (for the Spirit of God cannot lie) that he who died for our sins and rose again for our justification, and in whose blood we have redemption, was God over all. And as God alone can give salvation to men, and God only can remit sin; hence with the strictest propriety we are commanded to believe on the Lord Jesus, with the assurance that we shall be saved.

Verse 18. He is the head of the body] What the apostle has said in the two preceding verses refers to the divine nature of Jesus Christ; he now proceeds to speak of his human nature, and to show how highly that is exalted beyond all created things, and how, in that, he is head of the church—the author and dispenser of light, life, and salvation, to the Christian world.

death, after having died a natural death, and in such circumstances as precluded the possibility of deception.

That in all—he might have the pre-eminence] That he might be considered, in consequence of his mediatorial office, as possessing the first place in and being chief over all the creation of God.

Verse 19. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell] As the words, the Father, are not in the text, some have translated the verse thus: For in Him it seemed right that all fulness should dwell; that is, that the majesty, power, and goodness of God should be manifested in and by Christ Jesus, and thus by him the Father reconciles all things to himself. ["The fulness of the Godhead was pleased to dwell."—Ellicott.]

Verse 20. To reconcile all things unto himself] The enmity was on the part of the creature; though God is angry with the wicked every day, yet he is never unwilling to be reconciled.

Things in earth, or things in heaven.] If this phrase be not a kind of collective phrase to signify all the world, or all mankind, the things in heaven may refer to those persons who died under the Old Testament dispensation, and who could not have a title to glory but through the sacrificial death of Christ; and the apostle may have intended to show that without this sacrifice no human beings could be saved, not only those who were then on the earth, but even those who had died before the incarnation. Probably herein the apostle means the Jews and the Gentiles; the state of the former being always considered a sort of divine or celestial state, while that of the latter was reputed to be merely earthly, without any mixture of spiritual or heavenly good. [There can be little doubt that the expression refers simply to the unlimited efficacy of the sacrifice of Christ extending, we know not how, to all things in heaven and earth.]

Verse 21. And you, that were sometime alienated] This is spoken particularly of the Gentiles. The word which we render to alienate, to give to another, to estrange, expresses the state of the Gentiles: while the Jews, at least by profession, were dedicated to God, the Gentiles were alienated, that is, given up to others. [There is no ground for the distinction.]

Enemies in your mind] The mind is taken here for all the soul, heart, affections, passions, &c.

Verse 22. In the body of his flesh] By Christ's assumption of a human body, and dying for man, he has made an atonement for sin, through which men become reconciled to God and to each other.

Unblameable] Having filled you with his Spirit, and written his law in your hearts, so that his love, shed abroad in your hearts, becomes the principle and motive of every action.

And unproveable] For, being filled with love, joy, peace, meekness, gentleness, and goodness, against these there is ^a the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, ^b to fulfil the word of God;

26 Even ^c the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, ^d but now is made manifest to his saints:

no law; and as they were called to love God with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength, and their neighbour as themselves, the whole spirit and design of the law was fulfilled in them, for love is the fulfilling of the law.

In his sight] At the day of judgment.
Verse 23. And be not moved away] Not permitting yourselves to be seduced by false teachers.

The hope of the gospel] The resurrection of the body, and the glorification of it and the soul together, in the realms of blessedness. This is properly the gospel hope.

To every creature which is under heaven] A Hebraism for the whole human race, and particularly referring to the two grand divisions of mankind, the Jews and Gentiles; to both of these the gospel had been preached, and to each, salvation by Christ had been equally offered.

Verse 24. Rejoice in my sufferings for you] St. Paul always considers his persecutions, as far as the Jews were concerned in them, as arising from this simple circumstance—his asserting that God had chosen the Gentiles, and called them to enjoy the very same privileges with the Jews, and to constitute one church with them.

That which is behind of the afflictions of Christ] I have still some afflictions to pass through before my race of glory be finished; afflictions which fall on me on account of the gospel; such as Christ bore from the same persecuting people.

It is worthy of remark that the apostle does not say the passion of Christ, but simply the afflictions; such as are common to all good men who bear a testimony against the ways and fashions of a wicked world. In these the apostle had his share, in the passion of Christ he could have none. He trod the wine-press alone, of the people there were none with him.

Verse 25. According to the dispensation] According to the gospel economy or institution; the scheme or plan of salvation by Christ crucified.

To fulfil the word of God] The Greek may be translated fully to preach the doctrine of God.

Verse 26. The mystery which hath been hid] The mystery is this: that God had designed to grant the Gentiles the same privileges with the Jews, and make them his people who were not his people.

Made manifest to his saints] It is fully known to all who have embraced the doctrine of Christ crucified; to all Christians.

Verse 27. The riches of the glory] God manifests to these how abundantly glorious this gospel is among the Gentiles; and how effectual is this doctrine of Christ crucified to the salvation of multitudes.

Verse 29. Whereunto I also labour] No verbal translation can convey the sense of the original words, God worked energetically in St. Paul, and he wrought energetically with God; and all this was in reference to the salvation of mankind.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle shows his great concern for the Church at Colosse and at Laodicea; and exhorts them to steadfastness in the faith, and to beware of being seduced by specious and enticing words, 1-5. And to walk in Christ, as they had been taught, and to abound in faith and holiness, 6, 7. To beware of false teachers, who strove to pervert the gospel, and to lead their minds from him in whom the fulness of the Godhead dwells; with whom they were filled; by whom they had received spiritual circumcision; and into whom they were baptized and were quickened, and raised from a death of sin to a life of righteousness, 8-12. He points out their former state, and the great things which Christ had done for them, 13-15. Warns them against particular tenets of the Judaizing teachers relative to meats, drinks, holidays, festivals, and the specious pretences of deceivers, 16-19. And shows that all the things taught by these, though they had a show of wisdom, yet perished in the using, and were the commandments and doctrines of men, 20-23.

FOR I would that ye knew what great ^a conflict ^b I have for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh;

Verse 1. What great conflict] The word which we here render conflict, is to be understood as implying earnest care and solicitude, accompanied, undoubtedly, with the most fervent application to the throne of grace in their behalf.

Laodicea] A city of Asia Minor, on the borders of Caria, Phrygia, and Lydia.

As many as have not seen my face in the flesh] It is most likely that the apostle speaks collectively; that he had the most earnest concern, not only for the welfare of those churches with which he was acquainted, such as Colosse and Laodicea, but also for those to whom he was not personally known.

Verse 2. That their hearts might be comforted] That they might have continual happiness in God, having constant affiance in him.

Being knit together in love] The word signifies being united, as the beams or the timbers of a building, by mortices and pins. The visible Church of Christ cannot be in union with God unless it have unity in itself, and without love this unity is impossible.

Unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding] That is, that they might have the most indubitable certainty of the truth of Christianity, of their own salvation, and of the general design of God to admit the Gentiles into his church.

And of the Father, and of Christ] There is the strongest presumption that these words are glosses which have crept into the text, and are of no authority.

Verse 3. In whom are hid] Or rather in which; referring to the mystery mentioned above. In this glorious scheme of Christianity, all the treasures—the abundance and excellency of wisdom and knowledge are contained.

Verse 4. Lest any man should beguile you] The word means to deceive by sophistry or subtle reasoning, in which all the conclusions appear to be fairly drawn from the premis, but the premises are either assumed without evidence, or false in themselves; but this not being easily discovered, the unthinking or unwary are carried away by the conclusions which are drawn from these premises. And this result is clearly intimated by the term, enticing words, plausible conclusions or deductions from this mode of reasoning.

Verse 5. For though I be absent in the flesh] The whole verse shows that this church was sound in doctrine, and strict in discipline. They had steadfast faith in Christ, and regular order or discipline among themselves.

Verse 6. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus] Seeing ye have embraced the doctrine of Christ, continue to hold it fast, and not permit yourselves to be turned aside by sophistical or Judaizing teachers.

Verse 7. Rooted and built up in him] They are to be rooted; as the good seed had been already sown, it is to take root, and the roots are to spread far, wide, and deep. They are to be grounded; as the foundation has already been laid, they are to build thereon. In the one case, they are to bear much fruit; in the other, they are to grow up to be a habitation of God through the Spirit.

Abounding therein with thanksgiving] No limitation is ever set to the operations of God on the soul, or to the growth of the soul in the knowledge, love, and image of God.

Verse 8. Beware lest any man spoil you] The word signifies to rob or spoil of their goods, as if by violence or rapine.

Philosophy and vain deceit] Or, the vain or empty deceit of philosophy; such philosophizing as the Jewish and Gentile teachers used.

After the rudiments of the world] According to the doctrine of the Jewish teachers; or, according to the Mosaic institutions, as explained and glossed by the Scribes, Pharisees, and Rabbins in general. [The term has a more general sense.]

Not after Christ] Not according to the simple doctrine

13 ^a And you, being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses; 14 ^b Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross;

Verse 9. For in him dwelleth all the fulness] This is opposed to the vain or empty doctrine of the Gentile and Jewish philosophers: there is a fulness in Christ suited to the empty, destitute state of the human soul, but in the philosophy of the Jews and Gentiles nothing like this was found; nor indeed in the more refined and correct philosophy of the present day. No substitute has ever been found for the grace of the Lord Jesus, and those who have sought for one have disquieted themselves in vain.

Bodily.] Truly, really; in opposition to typically, figuratively. There was a symbol of the divine presence in the Hebrew tabernacle, and in the Jewish temple; but in the body of CHRIST, the Deity, with all its plenitude of attributes, dwelt really and substantially. [Critics give a deeper meaning to the original term.]

Verse 10. And ye are complete in him] And ye are filled with him. Our word complete quite destroys the connexion subsisting in the apostle's ideas. The philosophy of the world was empty, but there was a fulness in Christ; the Colossians were empty—spoiled and deprived of every good, while following the empty philosophy and groundless traditions of Jewish and Gentile teachers; but since they had received Christ Jesus they were filled with him. This is the true meaning of the word, and by this the connexion and assemblage of ideas in the apostle's mind are preserved.

Verse 11. In whom also ye are circumcised] By the circumcision of Christ, the operation of his grace and Spirit may be intended; the law required the circumcision of the flesh, the gospel of Christ required the circumcision of the heart.

Verse 12. Buried with him in baptism] Alluding to the immersions practised in the case of adults, wherein the person appeared to be buried under the water, as Christ was buried in the heart of the earth. His rising again the third day, and their emerging from the water, was an emblem of the resurrection of the body; and, in them, of a total change of life.

The faith of the operation of God] They were quickened, changed, and saved, by means of faith in Christ Jesus; which faith was produced by the operation or energy of God.

Verse 13. The uncircumcision of your flesh] This must refer to that part of the Colossian Church which was made up of converted heathens, for the heathens alone were uncircumcised.

Verse 14. Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances] By the hand-writing of ordinances the apostle most evidently means the ceremonial law; this was against them, for they were bound to fulfil it; and it was contrary to them, as condemning them for their neglect and transgression of it. This law God himself has blotted out.

Nailing it to his cross] There may be reference here to some ancient mode of annulling legal obligations, by nailing them to a post; but I do not recollect at present an instance or example. Antiquated laws are said to have been thus abrogated. [This interpretation is very doubtful.]

Verse 15. And having spoiled principalities and powers]

Here is an allusion to the treatment of enemies when conquered: they are spoiled of their armour, and they are exhibited with contumely and reproach to the populace, especially when the victor has the honour of a triumph; to the former of which there is an allusion in the words which may be translated, making a public exhibition of them; and to the latter, in the words, triumphing over them. And the principalities and powers refer to the emperors, kings, and generals taken in battle, and reserved to grace the victor's triumph. It is very likely that by the principalities and powers, over whom Christ triumphed, the apostle means the rulers and chiefs in the sanhedrin and synagogues, who had great authority among the people, both in making constitutions and explaining traditions. [This is too limited. The reference is undoubtedly to spiritual beings and intelligences.]

In it.] The words refer rather to Christ than to the cross, if indeed they be genuine; of which there is much reason to doubt, as the Versions and Fathers differ so greatly in quoting them.

Verse 16. Let no man—judge you in meat, or in drink] The apostle speaks here in reference to some particulars of the hand-writing of ordinances which had been taken away, viz., the distinction of meats and drinks, what was clean, and what unclean, according to the law; and the necessity of observing certain holidays or festivals, such as the new moons and particular sabbaths, or those which should be observed with more than ordinary solemnity; all these had been taken out of the way and nailed to the cross, and were no longer of moral obligation. There is no intimation here that the sabbath was done away, or that its moral use was superseded, by the introduction of Christianity. I have shown elsewhere that, Remember the sabbath-day, to keep it holy, is a command of perpetual obligation, and can never be superseded but by the final termination of time.

Verse 17. Which are a shadow] All these things were types, and must continue in force till the Christ, whom they represented, came; the apostle therefore says that the body—the substance or design of them was of Christ—pointed him out, and the excellent blessings which he has procured.

Verse 18. Let no man beguile you] Let no man take the prize from you which the brave, or judge in the contests, has assigned you, in consequence of your having obtained the victory. This is an allusion to the Olympic and Isthmian Games, and to the prizes assigned to those who had obtained the victory in one or more of the contests which these took place.

In a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels] The whole passage has been paraphrased thus: Let no man spoil you of the prize adjudged to you, who delights in mortifying the body, and walking with the apparent modesty of an angel, affecting superior sanctity in order to gain disciples; intruding into things which he has not seen; and, notwithstanding his apparent humility, his mind is carnal, and he is puffed up with a sense of his superior knowledge and piety. It is very likely that the apostle alludes to the Essenes, who were remarkably strict and devout, spent a principal part of their time in the contemplation of the Divine Being, abstained from all sensual gratifications, and affected to live the life of angels upon earth. Many have understood the passage as referring to the adoration of angels, which seems to have been practised among the Jews, who appear to have considered them as a sort of mediators between God and man. But this interpretation is not so likely as the foregoing. [Ellicot translates the passage: "Let no man beguile you of your reward, desiring to do it in false lowliness and worshipping of the angels, &c."]

Verse 19. And not holding the Head] Not acknowledging Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of mankind, and the only Head or chief of the Christian Church, on whom every member of it depends, and from whom each derives both light and life.

Verse 20. From the rudiments of the world] We have often seen that the world and this world signify the Jewish dispensation, or the rites, ceremonies, and services performed under it.

Verse 21. Touch not; taste not; handle not] These are forms of expression very frequent among the Jews.

Verse 22. Which all are to perish with the using] The different kinds of meats were made for the body, and go with it into corruption: in like manner, all the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion now perish, having accomplished the end of their institution; namely, to lead us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

After the commandments and doctrines of men?] These words should follow the 20th verse, of which they form a part; and it appears from them that the apostle is here speaking of the traditions of the elders, and the load of cumbersome ceremonies which they added to the significant rites prescribed by Moses.

Verse 23. Which things have indeed a show of wisdom] All these prescriptions and rites have indeed the appearance of wisdom, and are recommended by plausible reasons; but they form a worship which God has not commanded.

What is termed here will-worship, signifies simply a mode of worship which a man chooses for himself, independently of the revelation which God has given. The whole system of Deism is a worship founded in the will or caprices of man, and not in the wisdom or will of God; and it is just as profitable to body and soul as that of which the apostle speaks. To refuse to receive God's teaching in order to prefer our own fancies, is to light a farthing candle as a substitute for the noonday sun.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle exhorts the Colossians to heavenly-mindedness after the example of Christ, that they may be prepared to appear with him in glory, 1-4. Exhorts them also to mortify their members, and calls to their remembrance their former state, 5-7. Shows how completely they were changed from that state, and gives them various directions relative to truth, compassion, meekness, long-suffering, forgiveness, and charity, 8-14. Shows that they are called to unity and holiness; and commands them to have the doctrine of Christ dwelling richly in them; and how they should teach and admonish each other, and do every thing in the name of the Lord Jesus, 15-17. The relative duties of wives, 18. Of husbands, 19. Of children, 20. Of fathers, 21. Of servants, 22. He concludes by showing that he that does wrong shall be treated accordingly, for God is no respecter of persons, 23-25.

IF ye then ^abe risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where ^bChrist sitteth on the right hand of God.

2 Set your ^caffection on things above, not on things on the earth.

3 ^dFor ye are dead, ^eand your life is hid with Christ in God.

4 ^fWhen Christ, who is ^gour life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him ^hin glory.

Verse 1. If ye then] Seeing then that ye are risen with Christ. This refers to what he had said, chap. ii. 12.

Verse 2. Set your affection on things above] Love heavenly things; study them; let your hearts be entirely engrossed by them.

Verse 3. For ye are dead] To all hopes of happiness from the present world; and, according to your profession, should feel no more appetite for the things of this life, than he does whose soul is departed into the invisible state.

Your life is hid with Christ in God.] Christ lives in the bosom of the Father; as your heart is in him, ye also sit in heavenly places with Christ Jesus.

Verse 5. Mortify, therefore, your members] Put them to death: the verb is used metaphorically to signify to deprive a thing of its power, to destroy its strength. Use no Inordinate affection] Unnatural and degrading passion; bestial lusts.

Evil concupiscence] Strong and vehement evil desire. Covetousness, which is idolatry] For the covetous man makes his money his god.

Verse 6. The wrath of God cometh] God is angry with such persons, and he inflicts on them the punishment which they deserve.

Verse 7. In the which ye also walked some time] When ye were in your unconverted state, ye served divers lusts and pleasures.

now converted, sin had no more dominion over them.

[Blasphemy] The word seems here to mean injurious and calumnious speaking.

Verse 9. Lie not one to another] Do not deceive each other; speak the truth in all your dealings; do not undervalue the goods of your neighbour, when your conscience tells you that you are not speaking the truth.

Ye have put off the old man] Ye have received a religion widely different from that ye had before; act according to its principles.

Verse 10. Is renewed in knowledge] IGNORANCE was the grand characteristic of the heathen state: KNOWLEDGE, of the Christian. The utmost to which heathenism could pretend was a certain knowledge of nature. How far this went, and how much it fell short of the truth, may be seen in the writings of Aristotle and Pliny.

After the image of him that created him] See the notes on Gen. i. 26, and on Eph. iv. 23, 24.

Verse 11. Where there is neither Greek nor Jew] In which new creation no inquiry is made what nation the persons belonged to, or from what ancestry they had sprung.

Circumcision nor uncircumcision] Nor is their peculiar form of religion of any consideration.

Barbarian, Scythian] Nor whether of the more or less tractable of the nations of the world.

Bond nor free] Nor does the particular state or circumstances in which a man may be found either help him to or exclude him from the benefit of this religion; the slave living as good a title to salvation by grace as the freeman.

But Christ is all, and in all] He alone is the source whence all have proceeded, and to him alone all must return. He is the Maker, Preserver, Saviour, and Judge of all men.

Verse 12. Bowels of mercies, &c.] Be merciful, not in act merely, but in spirit and affection. The apostle would have them to feel the slightest touch of another's misery: and, as their clothes are put over their body, so their tenderest feeling should be always within the reach of the miserable.

Verse 13. Forbearing one another] Avoid all occasions of irritating or provoking each other.

Forgiving one another] If ye receive offence, be instantly ready to forgive on the first acknowledgment of the fault.

Even as Christ forgave you] Who required no satisfaction, and sought for nothing in you but the broken contrite heart, and freely forgave you as soon as you returned to Him. No man should for a moment harbour ill-will in his heart to any; but the offended party is not called actually to forgive, till the offender, with sorrow, acknowledges his fault. Forgive, says the apostle, even as Christ forgave you—show the same disposition and the same readiness to forgive your offending brethren, as Christ showed towards you.

Verse 14. And above all these things] Upon all, over all; as the outer garment envelopes all the clothing, so let charity or love invest and encompass all the rest. Let it be as the upper garment; the surcoat that invests the whole man.

15 And let ^a the peace of God rule in your hearts * to the which also ye are called ^a in one body; * and be ye thankful.

16 Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another ^a in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing ^a with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

17 And ^a whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, ^a giving thanks to God and the Father by him.

18 ^a Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, ^a as it is fit in the Lord.

19 ^a Husbands, love your wives, and be not ^{bb} bitter against them.

20 ^{cc} Children, obey your parents ^{dd} in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord.

21 ^{ee} Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged.

Tit. ii. 9.—^o Eph. vi. 4.

[Which is the bond of perfectness.] Love to God and man is not only to cover all, but also to unite and consolidate the whole. It is therefore represented here under the notion of a girdle, by which all the rest of the clothing is bound close about the body. To love God with all the heart, soul, mind, and strength, and one's neighbour as one's self, is the perfection which the New Covenant requires, and which the grace and Spirit of Christ work in every sincerely obedient, humble believer; and that very love, which is the fulfilling of the law and the perfection itself which the gospel requires, is also the bond of that perfection.

Verse 15. Rule in your hearts] Let the peace of Christ judge, decide, and govern in your hearts, as the brabeus, or judge, does in the Olympic contests. No heart is right with God where the peace of Christ does not rule; and the continual prevalence of the peace of Christ is the decisive proof that the heart is right with God.

In one body] Ye cannot have peace with God, in yourselves, nor among each other, unless ye continue in unity.

Verse 16. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly] I believe the apostle means that the Colossians should be well instructed in the doctrine of Christ; that it should be their constant study; that it should be frequently preached, explained, and enforced among them; and that all the wisdom comprised in it should be well understood. But there appears to be here an allusion to the Shechinah, which dwelt in the tabernacle and first temple; and to an opinion common among the Jews: In whatever place the LAW is, there the SHECHINAH is present with it. Wherever God's word is seriously read, heard, or preached, there is God himself; and in that church or religious society where the truth of God is proclaimed and conscientiously believed, there is the constant dwelling of God.

Verse 17. Whosoever ye do in word or deed] Let your words be right, and your actions upright.

Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus] Begin with him, and end with him; invoke his name, and pray for his direction and support, in all that ye do; and thus every work will be crowned with all requisites success.

Giving thanks to God] Even praises, as well as prayers, must ascend to God through this Mediator. We have no authority to say that God will accept even our thanksgiving, unless it ascend to him through Christ Jesus.

Verse 18. Wives, submit yourselves] Having done with general directions, the apostle comes to particular duties, which are commonly called relative; because they only belong to persons in certain situations; and are not incumbent on all.

As it is fit in the Lord] God commands it; and it is both proper and decent.

Verse 19. Be not bitter against them] Wherever bitterness is, there love is wanting. And where love is wanting in the married life, there is hell upon earth.

Verse 20. Children, obey—in all things] That is, in the 22 * Servants, obey ^b in all things your masters according to the flesh; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but in singleness of heart, fearing God:

Lord—in every thing that your parents command you, which is not contrary to the will or word of God.

Verse 24. The reward of the inheritance] Here, ye have neither lands nor property; ye are servants or slaves; be not discouraged, ye have an inheritance in store; be faithful unto God and to your employers, and Christ will give you a heavenly inheritance.

Verse 25. But he that doeth wrong] Wasting, or not the reward of the inheritance; ^f for ye serve the Lord Christ.

25 But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done: and ^g there is no respect of persons.

taking proper care of the goods of your master, is such a wrong as God will resent. He that is unfaithful in that which is little, will be unfaithful in much, if he have opportunity; and God alone is the defence against an unfaithful servant.

There is no respect] Every man is, in the eye of God, what he is in his soul: if holy, loved; if wicked, despised and rejected.

CHAPTER IV.

The duty of masters to their servants, 1. Continuance in prayer recommended, to which watchfulness and thanksgiving should be joined, 2. And to pray particularly for the success of the gospel, 3, 4. Directions concerning walking wisely, redeeming of time, and godly conversation, 5, 6. He refers them to Tychicus and Onesimus, whom he sends to them for particulars relative to his present circumstances, 7-9. Mentions the salutations of several then at Rome, of whom he gives some interesting particulars, 10-14. Sends his own salutations to the brethren in Laodicea, and to Nymphas and the church at his house, 15. Directs this epistle to be read in the Church of the Laodiceans, and that to them to be read at Colosse, 16. Directions to Archippus relative to his ministry, 17. Concludes with salutations to the people at Colosse, to whom he sends his apostolical benediction, 18.

Verse 1. Masters, give unto your servants] This verse should have been added to the preceding.

That which is just and equal] The condition of slaves among the Greeks and Romans was wretched in the extreme: they could appeal to no law; and they could neither expect justice nor equity. The apostle, therefore, informs the proprietors of these slaves that they should act towards them both according to justice and equity; for God, their Master, required this of them, and would at last call them to account for their conduct in this respect.

Verse 2. Continue in prayer] This was the apostle's general advice to all; without this, neither wives, husbands, children, parents, servants, nor masters, could fulfil the duties which God, in their respective stations, required of them.

Watch in the same] Be always on your guard; and when you have got the requisite grace by praying, take care of it, and bring it into its proper action by watchfulness; by which you will know when, and where, and how to apply it.

With thanksgiving] Being always grateful to God, who has called you into such a state of salvation, and affords you such abundant means and opportunities to glorify him.

Verse 8. Praying also for us] Let the success and spread of the gospel be ever dear to you; and neglect not to pray fervently to God that it may have free course, run, and be glorified.

A door of utterance] The word which commonly signifies a door, or such like entrance into a house or passage through a wall, is often used metaphorically for an entrance to any business, occasion or opportunity to commence or perform any particular work. So in Acts xiv. 27; 1 Cor. xvi. 9; 2 Cor. ii. 12.

posed long hidden in the divine counsels, that the Gentiles should be called to enjoy the same privileges with the Jews.

For which I am also in bonds.] It was for asserting this mystery that they persecuted Paul at Jerusalem, so that to save his life he was obliged to appeal to Cæsar; and, being taken to Rome, he was detained a prisoner till his case was fully heard; and he was a prisoner at Rome on this very account when he wrote this Epistle to the Colossians.

Verse 4. That I may make it manifest.] It was a mystery, and he wished to make it manifest—to lay it open, and make all men see it.

Verse 5. Walk in wisdom.] Act wisely and prudently in reference to them who are without—who yet continue unbelieving Gentiles or persecuting Jews.

The Church of Christ was considered an enclosure; a field or vineyard, well hedged or walled. Those who were not members of it were considered without, i.e., not under that especial protection and defence which the true followers of Christ had.

Verse 6. Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt.] Let all your conversation be such as may tend to exemplify and recommend Christianity; let it not only be holy, but wise, gracious, and intelligent. Salt, from its use in preserving food from corruption, and rendering it both savoury and wholesome, has always been made the emblem of wisdom.

How ye ought to answer every man.] That your discourse may be so judiciously managed, that ye may discern how to treat the prejudices and meet the objections both of Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 8. That he might know your estate.] Tychicus was sent to them, not to know their affairs, but, with Onesimus, to carry this epistle, and make the apostle's state known to them, and comfort their hearts by the good news which he brought.

Verse 9. With Onesimus—who is one of you.] Onesimus was a native of some part of Phrygia, if not of Colosse itself; and being lately converted to the Christian faith by the instrumentality of the apostle, he would be able, on this account, to give them satisfactory information concerning the apostle's state, which would be doubly acceptable to them as he was their countryman.

Verse 10 Aristarchus my fellow-prisoner.] Aristarchus and Epaphras are mentioned as saluters in this epistle, and in that to Philemon written at the same time; but here he is said to be a prisoner, and Epaphras not. In that to Philemon, Epaphras is called a prisoner, and Aristarchus not. One of them is wrong, though it is uncertain which; unless both were prisoners. We need not suppose that both were imprisoned at the same time; about the same time they might be imprisoned, but it might be so ordered by the providence of God that when Aristarchus was imprisoned, Epaphras was at liberty, and while Epaphras was in prison, Aristarchus was at liberty. [It has been conjectured that both voluntarily shared the apostle's captivity by turns.]

Marcus.] See the account of this person, Acts xv. 39.

Touching whom ye received commandments.] What these were we cannot tell; it was some private communication which had been previously sent to the Colossian Church.

Verse 11. Jesus, which is called Justus.] Jesus, Joshua, —^b 2 Tim. iv. 11.—^c 2 Tim. iv. 10. Philom. 24.—^d Rom. xvi. 5. 1 Cor. xvi. 19.—^e 1 Thess. v. 27.—^f Philom. 2.—^g 1 Tim. iv. 6.—^h 1 Cor. xvi. 21. 2 Thess. iii. 17.—ⁱ Heb. xiii. 3.—^j Heb. xiii. 25.

or Jehoshua, was his name among his countrymen the Jews; Justus was the name which he bore among the Greeks and Romans.

These only.] It is evident, therefore, that St. Peter was not now at Rome, else he certainly would have been mentioned in this list; indeed, there is no evidence that St. Peter ever saw Rome.

Verse 12. Epaphras, who is one of you.] A native of some part of Phrygia, and probably of Colosse itself.

A servant of Christ.] A minister of the gospel.

Labouring fervently for you.] Agonizing; very properly expressed by our translators, labouring fervently.

That ye may stand perfect and complete.] Almost all the MSS. of the Alexandrian recension, which are considered the most authentic and correct, have, that ye may be fully persuaded.

This is such a persuasion as the Spirit of God, by means of the gospel, gives to every sincere and faithful man; and from which arises the solid happiness of the genuine Christian. They who argue against it prove, at least, that they have not got it.

Verse 13. He hath a great zeal for you.] Several MSS., with Versions and Fathers, read much labour; this appears to be the better and genuine reading.

Laodicea, and—Hierapolis.] These were both cities of Phrygia, between which Colosse was situated. See on chap. ii. 1. The latter was called Hierapolis, or the holy city, from the multitude of its temples.

Verse 14. Luke, the beloved physician.] This is generally supposed to be the same with Luke the evangelist. Some, however, suppose them to be different persons; because, where it is evident that Luke the evangelist is meant, he never has more than his simple name Luke; and because the apostle is supposed to intend a different person here, he adds, the beloved physician. The word signifies a healer, and must not be restricted to physician, in the sense in which we use that word; he was surgeon, physician, and dispenser of medicines, &c., for all these were frequently combined in the same person.

Verse 15. Salute—Nymphas, and the church—in his house.] In those primitive times there were no consecrated places, for it was supposed that the simple setting apart of any place for the worship of God was a sufficient consecration. See of these domestic churches, Rom. xvi. 5; 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

Verse 16. Cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans.] That is: Let a copy be taken and sent to them, that it may be read there also. This appears to have been a regular custom in the Apostolic Church.

That ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea.] Some suppose that this was an epistle sent from Laodicea to the apostle, which he now sent by Aristarchus to the Colossians, that they might peruse it; that thereby they might see the propriety of sending a copy of his epistle to them, to the Laodicean Church. Many eminent critics are of this opinion, which appears to me to be both forced and far-fetched. Others think that the Epistle to the Ephesians is the epistle in question, and that it was originally directed to them, and not to the Ephesians. See the notes on Eph. i. 1, &c. But others, equally learned, think that there was an epistle, different from that to the Ephesians, sent by St. Paul to the Laodiceans, which is now lost. The Seventh Œcumenic Council, held in 787, states that the ancients allowed that there was an epistle with this direction, but that all the orthodox rejected it as supposititious.

Verse 17. Say to Archippus] Whoever he was, it has been supposed that he had been remiss in discharging the duties of his office; and hence this direction of the apostle, which appears here in the light of a reprehension. But if the same person be meant as in the Epistle to Philemon, ver. 2, whom St. Paul calls his fellow-labourer and fellow-soldier, it cannot be supposed that any reproof is here intended; for, as the Epistle to the Colossians, and that to Philemon, were evidently written about the end of the year 62, Archippus could not be a fellow-labourer and fellow-soldier of the apostle at Rome, and yet a delinquent at Colosse at the same time. It is more likely, therefore, that the words of the apostle convey no censure, but are rather intended to stir him up to further diligence, and to encourage him in the work, seeing he had so much false doctrine and so many false teachers to contend with.

Verse 18. The salutation by the hand of me Paul.] The preceding part of the epistle was written by a scribe, from the mouth of the apostle: this, and what follows, was written by the hand of St. Paul himself.

Remember my bonds.] How eloquent were these concluding words! That such a man should be in bonds for the gospel, was the fullest proof of the truth of the gospel.

THESALONICA, now called by the Turks Salonichi, a mere corruption of its ancient name, is a seaport town of Turkey in Europe, situated on what was called the Thermaic gulf, and was anciently the capital of Macedonia.

St. Paul, in company with Silas, first preached the gospel in this city and the adjacent country, about A.D. 52 or 53. Though the Jews, who were sojourners in this city, rejected the gospel in general, yet a great multitude of the devout Greeks, i.e., such as were proselytes to Judaism, or the descendants of Jewish parents, born and naturalized in Greece, believed, and associated with Paul and Silas, and not a few of the chief women of the city embraced the Christian faith. Acts xvii. 4.

While Paul, driven from Thessalonica by the persecuting Jews abode at Corinth, Timothy and Silas came to him from Thessalonica, and hearing by them of the stedfastness of the Thessalonian converts in the faith of Christ, he wrote this epistle, and shortly after the second, to comfort and encourage them; to give them farther instruction in the doctrines of Christianity, and to rectify some mistaken views relative to the day of judgment, which had been propagated amongst them.

The First Epistle to the Thessalonians is allowed on all hands to be the first epistle that St. Paul wrote to any of the Churches of God; and from it two things may be particularly noted: 1. That the apostle was full of the Spirit of love; 2. That the Church at Thessalonica was pure, upright, and faithful, as we scarcely find any reprobation in the whole epistle: the Thessalonian converts had FAITH that worked, a LOVE that laboured, and a HOPE which induced them to bear afflictions patiently, and wait for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

THESSALONIANS

CHAPTER I

The inscription by Paul, Silvanus, and Timotheus, to the Church of the Thessalonians, 1. St. Paul gives thanks to God for their good estate, and prays for their continuance in the faith, 2-4. Shows how the gospel came to them, and the blessed effects it produced in their life and conversation, 5-7. How it became published from them through Macedonia and Achaia, and how their faith was every where celebrated, 8. He shows farther, that the Thessalonians had turned from idolatry, became worshippers of the true God, and were waiting for the revelation of Christ, 9, 10.

PAUL, and ^a Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians, which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ : ^b Grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

2 ^c We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers ;

^a 2 Cor. i. 19. 2 Thess. i. 1. 1 Pet. v. 12. — ^b Eph. i. 2. — ^c Rom. i. 8. Eph. i. 16. Philem. 4. — ^d Ch. ii. 13. — ^e John vi. 29. Gal. v. 6. Ch. iii. 6. 2 Thess. i. 3, 11. James ii. 17. — ^f Rom. xvi. 6. Heb.

Verse 1. Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus] Though St. Paul himself dictated this letter, yet he joins the names of Silas and Timothy, because they had been with him at Thessalonica, and were well known there.

And Silvanus] This was certainly the same as Silas, who was St. Paul's companion in all his journeys through Asia Minor and Greece, see Acts xv. 22, xvi. 19, xvii. 4, 10.

Verse 3. Your work of faith] This verse contains a very high character of the believers at Thessalonica. They had FAITH, not speculative and indolent, but true, sound, and operative ; their faith worked. They had LOVE, not that gazed at and became enamoured of the perfections of God, but such a love as laboured with faith to fulfil the whole will of God. Faith worked ; but love, because it can do more, did more, and therefore laboured—worked energetically, to promote the glory of God and the salvation of men. They had HOPE ; not an idle, cold, heartless expectation of future good, from which they felt no excitement, and for which they could give no reason, but such a hope as produced a satisfying expectation of a future life and state of blessedness, the reality of which faith had described, and love anticipated ; a hope, not hasty and impatient to get out of the trials of life and possess the heavenly inheritance, but one that was as willing to endure hardships as to enjoy glory itself, when God might be most honoured by this patient endurance. FAITH worked, LOVE laboured, and HOPE endured patiently.

Verse 4. Knowing—your election of God.] No irrespective, unconditional, eternal, and personal election to everlasting

3 ^d Remembering without ceasing ^e your work of faith, ^f and labour of love, and patience of hope, in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father ;

4 Knowing, brethren ^g beloved, ^h your election of God.

5 For ⁱ our gospel came not unto you in word

vi. 10. — ^j Or, beloved of God, your election. — ^k Col. iii. 12. 2 Thess. ii. 13. — Mark xvi. 20. 1 Cor. ii. 4, iv. 20.

glory, is meant by the apostle. As God had chosen the Jews, whom because of their obstinate unbelief, he had now rejected ; so he had now chosen or elected the Gentiles. And in neither case was there anything absolute ; all was most specifically conditional, as far as their final salvation was concerned ; without any merit on their side, they were chosen and called to those blessings which, if rightly used, would lead them to eternal glory. That these blessings could be abused—become finally useless and forfeited, they had an ample proof in the case of the Jews, who, after having been the elect of God for more 2000 years, were now become reprobates.

Verse 5. For our gospel] That is, the glad tidings of salvation by Jesus Christ, and of your being elected to enjoy all the privileges to which the Jews were called, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, or fulfil the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law.

Came not unto you in word only] It was not by simple teaching or mere reasoning that the doctrines which we preached recommended themselves to you.

But also in power] With miraculous manifestations, to your eyes and your hearts, which induced you to acknowledge that this gospel was the power of God unto salvation.

And in the Holy Ghost] By his influence upon your hearts, in changing and renewing them ; and by the testimony which ye received from him, that you were accepted through the Beloved, and become the adopted children of God.

And in much assurance] The Holy Spirit which was given you left no doubt on your mind, either with respect only, but also in power, and ^ain the Holy Ghost, ^band in much assurance; as ^cye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.

6 And ^dye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, ^ewith joy of the Holy Ghost;

7 So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia.

8 For from you ^fsounded out the word of the

to the general truth of the doctrine, or the safety of your own state; the Spirit himself bearing witness with your spirit, that you are the sons and daughters of God Almighty.

What manner of men we were] How we preached, and how we lived; our doctrines and our practices ever corresponding.

Verse 6. Ye became followers of us] Ye became imitators of us—ye believed the same truths, walked in the same way, and minded the same thing.

Having received the word in much affliction] See Acts xvii. 5, 6.

With joy of the Holy Ghost] The consolations which they received, in consequence of believing in Christ, more than counterbalanced all the afflictions which they suffered from their persecutors.

Verse 7. Ye were ensamples] Types, models, or patterns;

Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also ^ain every place your faith to Godward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing.

9 For they themselves shew of us ^bwhat manner of entering in we had unto you, ^cand how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God;

according to which all the churches in Macedonia and Achaia formed both their creed and their conduct.

Verse 8. From you sounded out] As Thessalonica was very conveniently situated for traffic, many merchants from thence traded through Macedonia, Achaia, and different parts of Greece. By these, the fame of the Thessalonians having received the doctrine of the gospel was doubtless carried far and wide.

Verse 9. How ye turned to God from idols] This was spoken of the heathen Greeks; of which it appears that the majority of the church was formed.

Verse 10. And to wait for his Son from heaven] To expect a future state of glory, and resurrection of the body, according to the gospel doctrine, after the example of Jesus Christ, who was raised from the dead, and ascended unto heaven, ever to appear in the presence of God for us.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle sets forth how the gospel was brought and preached to the Thessalonians, in consequence of his being persecuted at Philippi, 1, 2. The manner in which the apostles preached, the matter of their doctrine, and the tenor of their lives, 3-11. He exhorts them to walk worthy of God, 12. And commends them for the manner in which they received the gospel, 13. How they suffered from their own countrymen, as the first believers did from the Jews, who endeavoured to prevent the apostles from preaching the gospel to the Gentiles, 14-16. St. Paul's apology for his absence from them; and his earnest desire to see them, founded on his great affection for them, 17-20.

FOR ^ayourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain:

2 But even after that we had suffered before, and were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at ^bPhilippi, ^cwe were bold in our God ^dto ^aCh. i. 5, 9.—^bActs xvi. 23.—^cCh. i. 5.—^dActs xvii. 2.—^ePhil. i. 30. Col. ii. 1.

Verse 1. Our entrance in unto you] His first coming to preach the gospel was particularly owned of the Lord, many of them having been converted under his ministry.

Verse 2. Shamefully entreated—at Philippi] See Acts xvi. 23, &c.; and the notes there.

With much contention.] The words not only signify with intense labour and earnestness, but may here mean, exposed to the greatest danger; at the peril of our lives.

Verse 3. Our exhortation] The word has a very extensive meaning; it signifies, not only exhortation and teaching in general, but also encouragement, consolation, and the like.

Not of deceit] We did not deceive you, nor were we deceived ourselves.

Nor of uncleanness] Such as the teachings of the Gentile philosophers were; their supreme gods were celebrated for their adulteries, fornications, uncleannesses, thefts, barbarities, and proficiencies of the most odious kind.

speak unto you the gospel of God ^awith much contention.

3 ^bFor our exhortation was not of deceit, nor of uncleanness, nor in guile:

4 But as ^cwe were allowed of God ^dto be put in ^a2 Cor. vii. 2. Ver. 5. 2 Pet. i. 16.—^b1 Cor. vii. 25. 1 Tim. i. 11, 12.—^c1 Cor. ix. 17. Gal. ii. 7. Tit. i. 3.

Nor in guile] We had no false pretences, and were influenced by no sinister motives.

Verse 4. But as we were allowed of God] As we were accounted worthy to be put in trust—as God put confidence in us, and sent us on his most especial message to mankind, even so we speak, keeping the dignity of our high calling continually in view.

Verse 5. Flattering words] Though we proclaimed the gospel or glad tidings, yet we showed that without holiness none should see the Lord.

Nor a cloak of covetousness] We did not seek temporal emolument; God is witness that we did not; we sought you, not yours. Hear this, ye that preach the gospel!

The faithful labourer is worthy of his hire; but woe to that man who enters into the labour for the sake of the hire! he knows not Christ; and how can he preach him?

Verse 6. Nor of men sought we glory] As we preached trust with the gospel, even so we speak; *not as pleasing men, but God, ^b which trieth our hearts.

5 For ^cneither at any time used we flattering words, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness; ^d God is witness:

6 ^eNor of men sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, when ^fwe might have ^gbeen ^hburdensome, ⁱas the apostles of Christ.

7 But ^jwe were gentle among you, even as a nurse cherisheth her children:

8 So, being affectionately desirous of you, we were willing ^kto have imparted unto you, not the gospel of God only, but also ^lour own souls, because ye were dear unto us.

9 For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail: for ^mlabouring night and day, because ⁿwe could not be chargeable unto any of you, we preached unto you the gospel of God.

10 ^oYe are witnesses, and God also, ^phow holily and justly and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe:

11 As ye know how we exhorted and comforted and charged every one of you, as a father doth his children, 12 ^qThat ye would walk worthy of God, ^rwho hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

not for worldly gain, so we preached not for popular applause; we had what we sought for—the approbation of God, and the testimony of a good conscience.

When we might have been burdensome] They had a right to their maintenance while they devoted themselves wholly to the work of the gospel for the sake of the people's souls.

Verse 7. But we were gentle among you] Far from assuming the authority which we had, we acted towards you as a tender nurse or parent does to a delicate child.

Verse 8. Being affectionately desirous of you] We had such intense love for you that we were not only willing and forward to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to you, but also to give our own lives for your sake, because ye were beloved by us.

Verse 9. Ye remember—our labour and travail] Probably Paul and his companions worked with their hands by day, and spent a considerable part of the night, or evenings, in preaching Christ to the people.

Verse 10. Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily] i. e., in reference to God; how justly in reference to men; and unblameably in reference to our spirit and conduct, as ministers of Christ, we behaved ourselves among you. What a consciousness of his own integrity must St. Paul have had to use the expressions that are here!

Verse 11. How we exhorted] What pastoral care is marked here! They exhorted—were continually teaching and instructing, the objects of their charge; this was their general work.

And comforted] They found many under trials and temptations, and these they encouraged.

And charged] Continued to witness to the people that God required faith, love, and obedience; and that, without holiness, none should see God. And all these things they did, not in a general way only, but they spoke to every man; none was left unnoticed, unadmonished, and uncomfortable.

Verse 12. That ye would walk worthy of God] That they should, in every respect, so act up to their high calling, that it would not be a reproach to the God of holiness to acknowledge them as his sons and daughters.

His kingdom and glory.] His church here, for that is the kingdom of God among men; and his glory hereafter, 13 For this cause also thank we God ^awithout ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it ^bnot as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe.

14 For ye, brethren, became followers ^cof the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ^dye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, ^eeven as they have of the Jews;

15 ^fWho both killed the Lord Jesus and ^gtheir own prophets, and have ^hpersecuted us; and they please not God, ⁱand are contrary to all men;

16 ^jForbidding us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, ^kto fill up their sins always; ^lfor the wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.

17 But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time ^min presence, not in heart, endeavoured the more abundantly ⁿto see your face with great desire.

18 Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but ^oSatan hindered us.

19 For ^pwhat is our hope, or joy, or ^qcrown of ^rrejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ ^sat his coming?

20 For ye are our glory and joy.

for that is the state to which the dispensations of grace in his church lead.

Verse 14. Ye—became followers of the churches of God] Had any pre-eminence or authority belonged to the Church of Rome, the apostle would have proposed this as a model to all those which he formed either in Judea, Asia Minor, Greece, or Italy.

Ye also have suffered—of your own countrymen] In almost every case, the Jews were the leaders of all persecutions against the apostles and the infant church.

Verses 15, 16. Who both killed the Lord Jesus, &c.] Is it any wonder, therefore, that wrath should come upon them to the uttermost? It is to be reckoned among the highest mercies of God that the whole nation was not pursued by the divine justice to utter and final extinction.

Verse 17. Being taken from you for a short time] Through the persecution raised by the Jews, see Acts xvii., he was obliged to leave Thessalonica, and yield to a storm that it would have been useless for him to have withstood.

In presence, not in heart] The apostle had compared himself to a parent or nurse, ver. 7 and 11; and the people he considered as his most beloved children; here he represents himself as feeling what an affectionate father must feel when torn from his children; for this is the import of the word bereft of children, which we tamely translate being taken from you.

Verse 18. Even I Paul] He had already sent Timothy and Silas to them; but he himself was anxious to see them, and had purposed this once and again, but Satan hindered; i. e., some adversary, as the word means, whether the devil himself, or some of his children.

Verse 19. For what is our hope] Is it not to get your souls saved, that ye may be my crown of rejoicing in the day of Christ? For this I labour; and, having planted the gospel among you, I wish to take every opportunity of watering it, that it may grow up unto eternal life.

Verse 20. For ye are our glory and joy.] Ye are the seal of our apostleship; your conversion and steadiness are a full proof that God hath sent us. Converts to Christ are our ornaments; persevering believers, our joy in the day of judgment.

CHAPTER III.

St. Paul informs them how, being hindered himself from visiting them, he had sent Timothy to comfort them, of whom he gives a high character, 1, 2. Shows that trials and difficulties are unavoidable in the present state, 3, 4. Mentions the joy he had on hearing by Timothy of their steadiness in the faith, for which he returns thanks to God; and prays earnestly for their increase, 5-10. Prays also that God may afford him an opportunity of seeing them, 11. And that they may abound in love to God and one another, and be unblameable in holiness at the coming of Christ, 12, 13.

WHEREFORE, ^awhen we could no longer forbear, ^bwe thought it good to be left at Athens alone; 2 And sent ^cTimotheus, our brother, and minister of God, and our fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith;

3 ^dThat no man should be moved by these afflictions: for yourselves know that ^ewe are appointed thereunto.

4 ^fFor verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know.

5 For this cause, ^gwhen I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith, ^hlest by some means the tempter have tempted you, and ⁱour labour be in vain.

6 ^jBut now when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring greatly to see us, ^kas we also to see you;

7 Therefore, brethren, ^lwe were comforted over you, in all our affliction and distress, by your faith:

8 For now we live, if ye ^mstand fast in the Lord.

9 ⁿFor what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

10 ^oNight and day ^ppraying exceedingly ^qthat we might see your face, ^rand might perfect that which is lacking in your faith?

11 Now God himself and our Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, ^sdirect ^tour way unto you.

12 And the Lord ^umake you to increase and abound in love ^vone toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you:

13 To the end he may ^westablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ ^xwith all his saints.

Verse 1. Wherefore, when we could no longer, &c.] The apostle was anxious to hear of their state, and as he could obtain no information without sending a messenger express, he therefore sent Timothy from Athens.

Verse 2. Timotheus our brother] See the preface to First Epistle to Timothy.

Minister of God] There were no sinecures then; preaching the gospel was God's work; the primitive preachers were his workmen, and laboured in this calling. It is the same still, but who works?

Verse 3. That no man should be moved] That is, caused to apostatize from Christianity.

We are appointed thereunto.] We are exposed to this, we lie open to such, they are unavoidable in the present state of things. God appoints nothing of this kind, but he permits it; for he has made man a free agent.

Verse 4. That we should suffer tribulation] I prepared you for it, because I knew that it was according to their nature for wicked men to persecute the followers of God.

Verse 5. For this cause] Knowing that you would be persecuted, and knowing that your apostasy was possible.

Verse 6. Your faith and charity] The good tidings which Timothy brought from Thessalonica, consisted of three particulars: 1. Their faith; they continued steadfast in their belief of the gospel. 2. Their charity; they loved one another, and lived in unity and harmony. 3. They were affectionately attached to the apostle; they had good remembrance of him, and desired earnestly to see him.

Verse 7. Therefore—we were comforted] My afflictions and persecutions seemed trifles when I heard of your perseverance in the faith.

Verse 9. What thanks can we render to God] How near his heart did the success of his ministry lie! It was not enough for him that he preached so often, laboured so hard, suffered so much; what were all these if souls were not converted, and if those who embraced the gospel did not walk steadily in the way to heaven, and persevere?

Verse 10. Night and day praying exceedingly] Supplicating God at all times; mingling this with all my prayers; abounding and superabounding in my entreaties to God, to permit me to revisit you.

Might perfect that which is lacking] That I might have the opportunity of giving you the fullest instructions in the doctrine of Christ.

Verse 13. To the end he may establish your hearts] Without love to God and man, there can be no establishment in the religion of Christ. It is love that produces both solidity and continuance. And, as love is the fulfilling of the law, he who is filled with love is unblameable in holiness; for he who has the love of God in him is a partaker of the divine nature, for God is love.

At the coming of our Lord] But who in that great day shall give up his accounts with joy? That person only whose heart is established in holiness before God, i. e. so as to bear the eye and strict scrutiny of his Judge.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle exhorts them to attend to the directions which he had already given them, that they might know how to walk and please God, 1, 2. Gives them exhortations concerning continence, chastity, and matrimonial fidelity, 3-8. Speaks concerning their love to each other, and love to the churches of Christ; and exhorts them to continue and increase in it, 9, 10. Counsels them to observe an inoffensive conduct, to mind their own affairs, to do their own business, and to live honestly, 11, 12. Not to sorrow for the dead, as persons who have no hope of a resurrection; because, to Christians, the resurrection of Christ is a proof of the resurrection of his followers, 13, 14. Gives a short, but awful description, of the appearing of Christ to judge the world, 15.

FURTHERMORE then we ^a beseech you, brethren, and ^b exhort you by the Lord Jesus, ^c that as ye have received of us ^d how ye ought to walk ^e and to please God, so ye would abound more and more.

2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus.

3 For this is ^f the will of God, even ^g your sanctification, ^h that ye should abstain from fornication:

4 ⁱ That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour;

Verse 1. We beseech you, brethren, and exhort] The apostle used the most pressing entreaties; for he had a strong and affectionate desire that this church should excel in all righteousness and true holiness.

Please God—more and more.] God sets no bounds to the communications of his grace and Spirit to them that are faithful. And as there are no bounds to the graces, so there should be none to the exercise of those graces.

Verse 3. This is the will of God, even your sanctification] This is the general calling, but in it many particulars are included. Some of these he proceeds to mention; and it is very likely that these had been points on which he gave them particular instructions while among them.

That ye should abstain from fornication] The word includes all sorts of uncleanness; and it was probably this consideration that induced several MSS., some Versions and Fathers, to add here, all.

Verse 4. How to possess his vessel] Let every man use his wife for the purpose alone for which God created her, and instituted marriage. The general sense is plain; purity and continency are most obviously intended, whether the word be understood as referring to the wife or the husband, as the following verse sufficiently proves.

Verse 5. Not in the lust of concupiscence] Having no rational object, aim, nor end.

The Gentiles which know not God] Enough has been said on this subject on Rom. i. and ii.

Verse 6. That no man go beyond and defraud his brother] That no man should by any means endeavour to corrupt the wife of another, or to alienate her affections or fidelity from her husband; this I believe to be the apostle's meaning, though some understand it of covetousness, over-reaching, tricking, cheating, cozenage in general.

The Lord is the avenger of all such] He takes up the cause of the injured husband wherever the case has not been detected by man, and all such vices he will signally punish.

Verse 7. God hath not called us unto uncleanness] And they who use the marriage state as he directs, will find it conducive to their holiness and perfection.

Verse 8. He therefore that despiseth] He who will not receive these teachings, and is led either to undervalue or despise them, despises not us but God, from whom we have received our commission, and by whose Spirit we give these directions.

brother ^o in any matter: because that the Lord ^p is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, ^q but unto holiness.

8 ^r He therefore that ^s despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, ^t who hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.

9 But as touching brotherly love ^u ye need not that I write unto you: for ^v ye yourselves are taught of God ^w to love one another.

Hath also given unto us his Holy Spirit.] Instead of unto us, unto you, is the reading of a great many MSS. and Versions. God has taught us that we may teach you; and he has also given you his Holy Spirit that ye might understand and be enabled to practise these things.

Verse 10. Ye do it toward all the brethren] Ye not only love one another at Thessalonica, but ye love all the brethren in Macedonia; and consider that all the churches in Christ make one great and glorious body, of which he is the head.

Verse 11. That ye study to be quiet] Though in general the Church at Thessalonica was pure and exemplary, yet there seem to have been some idle, tattling people among them, who disturbed the peace of others; persons who, under the pretence of religion, gadded about from house to house; did not work, but were burdensome to others; and were continually meddling with other people's business, making parties, and procuring their bread by religious gossiping.

Verse 12. That ye may walk honestly] Becomingly, decently, respectably; as is consistent with the purity, holiness, gravity, and usefulness of your Christian calling.

Them that are without] The unconverted Gentiles and Jews.

Verse 13. I would not have you to be ignorant] The true reading: Brethren, I would not wish you to be ignorant; or, I would not that you should be ignorant.

Them which are asleep] That is, those who are dead. It is supposed that the apostle had heard that the Thessalonians continued to lament over their dead, as the heathens did in general who had no hope of the resurrection of the body; and that they had been puzzled concerning the doctrine of the resurrection.

Verse 14. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again] Seeing that we believe; knowing that the resurrection of Christ is as fully authenticated as his death.

Even so them] It necessarily follows that them who sleep—die, in him—in the faith of the gospel, will God bring with him—he will raise them up as Jesus was raised from the dead, in the same manner, i. e., by his own eternal power and energy; and he will bring them with him—with Christ, for he is the head of the church, which is his body.

Verse 15. This we say unto you by the word of the Lord] This I have, by express revelation from the Lord: what he now delivers he gives as coming immediately from the Spirit your own business, and ^a to work with your own hands, as we commanded you ;

12 ^b That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack ^c of nothing.

13 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, ^d even as others ^e which have no hope.

14 For ^f if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so ^g them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

15 For this we say unto you ^h by the word of the Lord, that ⁱ we which are alive, and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep.

16 For ^j the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with ^k the trump of God : ^l and the dead in Christ shall rise first :

17 ^m Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them ⁿ in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air : and so ^o shall we ever be with the Lord.

18 ^p Wherefore ^q comfort one another with those words.

of God. Indeed, human reason could not have found out the points which he immediately subjoins ; no conjectures could lead to them.

We which are alive, and remain. By the pronoun we the apostle does not intend himself, and the Thessalonians to whom he was then writing ; he is speaking of the genuine Christians which shall be found on earth when Christ comes to judgment.

Shall not prevent (or go before) them which are asleep. Those who shall be found living in that day, though they shall not pass through death, but be suddenly changed, shall not go to glory before them that are dead, for the dead in Christ shall rise first—they shall be raised, their bodies made glorious, and be caught up to meet the Lord, before the others shall be changed.

Verse 16. The Lord himself That is : Jesus Christ shall descend from heaven ; shall descend in like manner as he was seen by his disciples to ascend, i.e., in his human form, but now infinitely more glorious.

With a shout Or order ; and probably in these words : Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment ; which order shall be repeated by the archangel, who shall accompany it with the sound of the trump of God, whose great and terrible blasts, like those on Mount Sinai, sounding louder and louder, shall shake both the heavens and the earth !

Verse 18. Comfort one another with these words. Strange saying ! comfort a man with the information that he is going to appear before the judgment-seat of God ! Who can feel comfort from these words ? That man alone with whose spirit the Spirit of God bears witness that his sins are blotted out, and the thoughts of whose heart are purified by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, so that he can perfectly love him, and worthily magnify his name.

CHAPTER V.

The apostle continues to speak of Christ's coming to judgment, and the uncertainty of the time in which it shall take place, and the careless state of sinners, 1-3. Shows the Thessalonians that they are children of the light ; that they should watch and pray, and put on the armour of God, being called to obtain salvation by Christ, who died for them ; that, whether dead or alive, when the day of judgment comes, they may live for ever with him ; and that they should comfort and edify each other with these considerations, 4-11. He exhorts them to remember those who labour among them, and are over them in the Lord ; and to esteem such highly for their work's sake, 12, 13. He charges them to warn, comfort, and support those who stood in need of such assistance, and to be patient and beneficent towards all, 14, 15. He points out their high spiritual privileges ; warns them against neglecting or misimproving the gifts of the Spirit and the means of grace, 16-20. They are also exhorted to prove all things ; to abstain from all evil ; and to expect to be sanctified through spirit, soul, and body, by him who has promised this, and who is faithful to his promises, 21-24. Recommends himself and brethren to their prayers ; shows them how they are to greet each other ; charges them to read this epistle to all the brethren ; and concludes with the usual apostolical benediction, 25-28.

BUT ^a of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you.
2 For yourselves know perfectly that ^b the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night.

^a Matt. xxiv. 3, 36. Acts i. 7.—Ch. iv. 9.—^b Matt. xxiv. 43, 44. xxv. 13. Luke xii. 39, 40. 2 Pet. iii. 10. Rev. iii. 3. xvi. 15.—

Verse 1. But of the times and the seasons It is natural to suppose, after what he had said in the conclusion of the preceding chapter, that the Thessalonians would feel an innocent curiosity to know, as the disciples did concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, when those things should take place, and what should be the signs of those times, and of the coming of the Son of Man. It is very likely that the apostle, in his answer, couples these two grand events—the destruction of Jerusalem and the final judgment. And it appears most probable that it is of the former event chiefly that he

3 For when they shall say, Peace and safety ; then ^c sudden destruction cometh upon them, ^d as travail upon a woman with child ; and they shall not escape.

4 ^e But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief.

^a Isa. xlii. 6-9. Luke xvii. 27, 28, 29. xxi. 34, 35. 2 Thess. i. 9.—^b Jer. xlii. 21. Hos. xiii. 13.—^c Rom. xiii. 12, 13. 1 John ii. 8.

5 Ye are all * the children of light, and the children of the day : we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

6 ^b Therefore let us not sleep, as do others ; but * let us watch and be sober.

7 For ^d they that sleep, sleep in the night ; and they that be drunken, * are drunken in the night.

8 But let us, who are of the day, be sober, ^f putting on the breast-plate of faith and love ; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation.

9 For ^g God hath not appointed us to wrath. ^h but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, 10 ⁱ Who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

11 ^j Wherefore * comfort yourselves together, and edify one another, even as also ye do.

12 And we beseech you, brethren, ^k to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you ;

speaks here, as it was certainly of the latter that he treated in the conclusion of the preceding chapter. [The reference to the destruction of Jerusalem is distinctly at variance with the context, which treats solely of the coming of Christ.]

Verse 3. For when they shall say, Peace and safety] This points out, very particularly, the state of the Jewish people when the Romans came against them ; for so fully persuaded were they that God would not deliver the city and temple to their enemies, that they refused every overture that was made to them.

Sudden destruction] In the storming of their city, and the burning of their temple, and the massacre of several hundreds of thousands of themselves ; the rest being sold for slaves, and the whole of them dispersed over the face of the earth.

As travail upon a woman] This figure is perfectly consistent with what the apostle had said before, viz , that the times and seasons were not known ; though the thing itself was expected, our Lord having predicted it in the most positive manner.

Verse 4. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness] Probably St. Paul refers to a notion that was very prevalent among the Jews, viz., that God would judge the Gentiles in the night-time, when utterly secure and careless ; but he would judge the Jews in the day-time, when employed in reading and performing the words of the law. [There is no reasonable ground for this assumption.]

Verse 5. Ye are all the children of light] Ye are children of God, and enjoy both his light and life. This dispensation, under which ye are, has illustrated all the preceding dispensations ; in its light all is become luminous ; and ye, who walked formerly in heathen ignorance, or in the darkness of Jewish prejudices, are now light in the Lord, because ye have believed in him who is the light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory and splendour of his people Israel.

We are not of the night, nor of darkness.] Our actions are such as we are not afraid to expose to the fullest and clearest light.

Verse 6. Let us not sleep, as do others] Let us who are of the day not give way to a careless, unconcerned state of mind, like to the Gentiles and sinners in general, who are stupefied and blinded by sin, so that they neither think nor feel ; but live as if there were no eternity, no future state of existence, rewards, or punishments.

Let us watch] Be always on the alert ; and be sober, making a moderate use of all things.

Verse 7. For they that sleep] Sleepers and drunkards seek the night-season ; so careless and profligate persons indulge their evil propensities, and avoid all means of instruction ; they prefer their ignorance to the word of God's grace, and to the light of life.

Verse 8. Putting on the breastplate] We are not only 13 And to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. ^m And be at peace among yourselves.

14 Now we ⁿ exhort you, brethren, ^o warn them that are ^p unruly, ^q comfort the feeble-minded, ^r support the weak, ^s be patient toward all men.

15 ^t See that none render evil for evil unto any man ; but ever ^u follow that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men.

16 ^v Rejoice evermore.

17 ^w Pray without ceasing.

18 ^x In every thing give thanks ; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.

19 ^y Quench not the Spirit.

20 ^z Despise not prophesyings.

21 ^{aa} Prove all things ; ^{bb} hold fast that which is good.

22 ^{cc} Abstain from all appearance of evil.

called to work, and we are called also to fight ; and that we may not be surprised, we must watch ; and that we may be in a condition to defend ourselves, we must be sober ; and that we may be enabled to conquer, we must be armed ; and what the breastplate and helmet are to the soldier's heart and head, such are faith, love, and hope to us. Faith enables us to endure, as seeing him who is invisible ; love excites us to diligence and activity, and makes us bear our troubles and difficulties pleasantly ; hope helps us to anticipate the great end, the glory that shall be revealed, and which we know we shall in due time obtain, if we faint not.

Verse 9. For God hath not appointed us to wrath] So then it appears that some were appointed to wrath, to punishment ; on this subject there can be no dispute. But who are they ? When did this appointment take place ? And for what cause ? If we look carefully at the apostle's words, we shall find all these difficulties vanish. It is very obvious that, in the preceding verses, the apostle refers simply to the destruction of the Jewish polity, and to the terrible judgments which were about to fall on the Jews as a nation ; therefore, they are the people who were appointed to wrath ; and they were thus appointed, not from eternity, nor from any indefinite or remote time, but from that time in which they utterly rejected the offers of salvation made to them by Jesus Christ and his apostles ; the privileges of their election were still continued to them, even after they had crucified the Lord of glory ; for, when he gave commandment to his disciples to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, he bade them begin at Jerusalem. Even this appointment to wrath does not signify eternal damnation ; nothing of the kind is intended in the word. Though we are sure that those who die in their sins can never see God, yet it is possible that many of those wretched Jews, during their calamities, and especially during the siege of their city, did turn unto the Lord who smote them, and found that salvation which he never denies to the sincere penitent.

Verse 10. Who died for us] His death was an atoning sacrifice for the Gentiles as well as for the Jews.

Whether we wake or sleep] The words show that everywhere and in all circumstances, genuine believers, who walk after God, have life in communion with him, and are continually happy, and constantly safe.

Verse 12. Know them] Act kindly towards them ; acknowledge them as the messengers of Christ ; and treat them with tenderness and respect. This is a frequent meaning of the word.

Verse 13. Estem them very highly in love] Christian ministers, who preach the whole truth, and labour in the word and doctrine, are entitled to more than respect ; the apostle commands them to be esteemed abundantly and superabundantly ; and this is to be done in love ; and as wholly: and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body *be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

24 ^b Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it.

25 Brethren, * pray for us.

26 ^d Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss.

* 1 Cor. i. 8.—^b 1 Cor. i. 9. x. 13. 2 Thess. iii. 3.—

men delight to serve those whom they love, it necessarily follows that they should provide for them, and see that they want neither the necessaries nor conveniences of life; I do not say comforts, though these also should be furnished; but of those the genuine messengers of Christ are frequently destitute.

Verse 14. Warn them that are unruly] Those who are out of their ranks, and are neither in a disposition nor situation to perform the work and duty of a soldier; those who will not do the work prescribed, and will meddle with what is not commanded. The phraseology of the verse is military.

Comfort the feeble-minded] Those of little souls; the faint-hearted; those who, on the eve of a battle, are dispirited because of the number of the enemy, and their own feeble and unprovided state.

Support the weak] Shore up, prop them that are weak; strengthen those wings and companies that are likely to be most exposed, that they be not overpowered and broken in the day of battle.

Be patient toward all] The disorderly, the feeble-minded, and the weak, will exercise your patience, and try your temper. He who has the direction and management of a Church of God will need all the skill and prudence he can acquire.

Verse 15. See that none render evil for evil] Every temper contrary to love is contrary to Christianity. A peevish, fretful, vindictive man may be a child of Satan; he certainly is not a child of God.

Follow that which is good] That by which ye may profit your brethren and your neighbours of every description, whether Jews or Gentiles.

Verse 16. Rejoice evermore] Be always happy; the religion of Christ was intended to remove misery. He that has God for his portion may constantly exult.

Verse 19. Quench not the Spirit] The Holy Spirit is represented as a fire, because it is his province to enlighten and quicken the soul; and to purge, purify, and refine it. This Spirit is represented as being quenched when any act is done, word spoken, or temper indulged, contrary to its dictates.

Verse 20. Despise not prophesyings] Do not suppose that ye have no need of continual instruction; without it ye cannot preserve the Christian life, nor go on to perfection. God will ever send a message of salvation by each of his ministers to every faithful, attentive hearer.

Verse 21. Prove all things] Whatever ye hear in these prophesyings or preachings, examine by the words of Christ, and by the doctrines which, from time to time, we have delivered unto you in our preaching and writings.

27 I * charge you by the Lord, that 'this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren.

28 * The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

The first epistle unto the Thessalonians was written from Athens.

* Or, adjure.—* Col. iv. 14. 2 Thess. iii. 14.—
* Rom. xvi. 20, 24. 2 Thess. iii. 18.

Hold fast that which is good.] Whatever in these prophesyings has a tendency to increase your faith, love, holiness, and usefulness, that receive and hold fast.

Verse 22. Abstain from all appearance of evil.] Do not drive your morality so near the bounds of evil as to lead even weak persons to believe that ye actually touch, taste, or handle it.

Verse 23. And the very God of peace] The word wholly means precisely the same as our phrase, to all intents and purposes. May he sanctify you to the end and to the uttermost.

Your whole spirit and soul and body] Some think that the apostle alludes to the Pythagorean and Platonic doctrine which was acknowledged among the Thessalonians. I should rather believe that he refers simply to the fact, that the creature called man is a compound being, consisting, 1. Of a body, an organized system, formed by the creative energy of God out of the dust of the earth. 2. Of a soul, which is the seat of the different affections and passions, such as love, hatred, anger, &c., with sensations, appetites, and propensities of different kinds. 3. Of spirit, the immortal principle, the source of life to the body and soul, without which the animal functions cannot be performed, how perfect soever the bodily organs may be.

The apostle prays that this compound being, in all its parts, powers, and faculties, may be sanctified and preserved blameless till the coming of Christ.

Verse 24. Faithful is he that calleth you] In a great variety of places in his word God has promised to sanctify his followers, and his faithfulness binds him to fulfil his promises; therefore he will do it.

Verse 25. Pray for us.] Even apostles, while acting under an extraordinary mission, and enjoying the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, felt the necessity of the prayers of the faithful. God requires that his people should pray for his ministers; and it is not to be wondered at, if they who pray not for their preachers should receive no benefit from their teaching.

Verse 27. I charge you by the Lord, that this epistle be read] There must have been some particular reason for this solemn charge; he certainly had some cause to suspect that the epistle would be suppressed in some way or other, and that the whole church would not be permitted to hear it: or he may refer to the smaller churches contiguous to Thessalonica, or the churches in Macedonia in general, whom he wished to hear it, as well as those to whom it was more immediately directed.

SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

T H E S S A L O N I A N S.

THAT this Second Epistle was written shortly after the first, and from the same place too, is very probable, from this circumstance, that the same persons, Paul, Silvanus, and Timotheus, who addressed the Church at Thessalonica in the former epistle, address the same Church in this; and, as three such apostolic men were rarely long together in the same place, it is very likely that the two epistles were written not only in the same year, but also within a very short time of each other. It appears that the person who carried the First Epistle returned speedily to Corinth, and gave the apostle a particular account of the state of the Thessalonian Church; and, among other things, informed him that many were in expectation of the speedy arrival of the day of judgment; and that they inferred from his epistle already sent, chap. iv. 15, 17, and v. 4, 6, that it was to take place while the apostle and themselves should be yet alive. And it appears probable, from some parts of this epistle, that he was informed also that some, expecting this sudden appearance of the Lord Jesus, had given up all their secular concerns as inconsistent with a due preparation for such an important and awful event, see chap. iii. 6-13. To correct such a misapprehension, and redeem them from an error, which, if appearing to rest on the authority of an apostle, must in its issue be ruinous to the cause of Christianity, St. Paul would feel himself constrained to write immediately; and this is a sufficient reason why these epistles should appear to have been written at so short a distance from each other. What rendered this speedy intervention of the apostle's authority and direction the more necessary, was, that there appear to have been some in that Church who professed to have a revelation concerning this thing, and to have endeavoured to confirm it by a pretended report from the apostle himself, and from the words already referred to in the former epistle, see here on chap. ii. 1, 2: "We beseech you, brethren, be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by SPIRIT, nor by WORD, nor by LETTER as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand."

This is the shortest of all St. Paul's epistles to the churches, but is of very great importance, and in many places very sublime, especially in the second part; and in this there are several very great difficulties, and some things hard to be understood. After all the pains and labour of learned men, it would be hazardous to say, the meaning of every part is now clearly made out. What increases the difficulty is, that the apostle refers to some private communication with themselves, no part of which is on record, and without which it would require St. Paul's inspiration to be able to fix the sense and meaning of all we find here. May the Father of lights give the reader a wise understanding in all things! Amen.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE THESSALONIANS.

CHAPTER I

The salutation of St. Paul and his companions, 1, 2. The apostle gives thanks to God for their faith, love, and union; and for their patience under persecutions, 3, 4. Speaks of the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, the punishment of the ungodly, and the glorification of the righteous, 5-10. Prays that God may count them worthy of their calling, that the name of Jesus may be glorified in them, 11, 12.

PAUL, and ^a Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto the church of the Thessalonians ^b in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ: ² Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

³ ⁴ We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth;

⁴ So that ^c we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God ^d for your patience and faith ^e in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure:

⁵ Which is ^f a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, ^g for which ye also suffer:

⁶ ^h Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you;

⁷ And to you who are troubled, ⁱ rest with us;

^a 2 Cor. i. 19.—^b 1 Thess. i. 1.—^c 1 Cor. i. 3.—^d 1 Thess. i. 2, 3. iii. 6, 9. Ch. ii. 13.—^e 2 Cor. vii. 14. ix. 2. 1 Thess. ii. 19, 20.—

^f 1 Thess. i. 3.—^g 1 Thess. ii. 14.—^h Phil. i. 28.—ⁱ 1 Thess. ii. 14.—^j Rev. vi. 10.—^k Rev. xiv. 13.

Verse 1. Paul, and Silvanus, &c.] See the notes on 1 Thess. i. 1.

Verse 3. Your faith groweth exceedingly] The word signifies to grow luxuriantly, as a good and healthy tree planted in a good soil; and if a fruit-tree, bearing an abundance of fruit to compensate the labour of the husbandman. Faith is one of the seeds of the kingdom; this the apostle had sowed and watered, and God gave an abundant increase.

Verse 4. We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God] We hold you up as an example of what the grace of God can produce when communicated to honest and faithful hearts.

For your patience and faith] From Acts xvii. 5, 13, and from 1 Thess. ii. 14, we learn that the people of Thessalonica had suffered much persecution, both from the Jews and their own countrymen; but being thoroughly convinced of the truth of the gospel, and feeling it to be the power of God unto salvation, no persecution could turn them aside from it.

Verse 5. A manifest token of the righteous judgment of God] They who enter into the kingdom of God go through great tribulation; your going through that tribulation is a proof that ye are entering in; and God sees it right and just that ye should be permitted to suffer before ye enjoy that endless felicity.

The words, however, may be understood, as indicating that the sufferings of the just, and the triumphs of the wicked, in this life, are a sure proof that there will be a future judgment, in which the wicked shall be punished and the righteous rewarded.

Verse 6. Seeing it is a righteous thing] Though God neither rewards nor punishes in this life in a general way, yet he often gives proofs of his displeasure, especially against those who persecute his followers.

Verse 7. And to you who are troubled, rest with us] And while they have tribulation, you shall have that eternal rest which remains for the people of God.

When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed] But this fullness of tribulation to them, and rest to you, shall not take place till the Lord Jesus comes to judge the world.

With his mighty angels] The coming of God to judge the world is scarcely ever spoken of in the sacred writings without mentioning the holy angels, who are to accompany him, and to form his court or retinue. See Deut. xxxiii. 2; Matt. xxv. 31, xxvi. 27, xxvi. 64; Mark viii. 38.

Verse 8. In flaming fire] In thunder and lightning, taking vengeance—inflicting just punishment on them that know not God—the heathen who do not worship the true God, and will not acknowledge him, but worship idols; and on them that obey not the gospel—the Jews, particularly, who have rejected the gospel, and persecuted Christ and his messengers; and all nominal Christians who, though they believe the gospel as a revelation from God, yet do not obey it as a rule of life.

Verse 9. Who shall be punished] What this everlasting destruction consists in we cannot tell. It is not annihilation, for their being continues; and as the destruction is everlasting, it is an eternal continuance and presence of substantial evil, and absence of all good; for a part of this punishment consists in being banished from the presence of the Lord—excluded from his approbation for ever; so that when ^a the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with ^b his mighty angels,

8 ^c In flaming fire, ^d taking vengeance on them ^e that know not God, and ^f that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ :

9 ^g Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and ^h from the glory of his power ;

10 ⁱ When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, ^j and to be admired in all them that believe the light of his countenance can be no more enjoyed, as there will be an eternal impossibility of ever being reconciled to him.

^a 1 Thess. iv. 16. Jude 14.—^b Gr. the angels of his power.—^c Heb. x. 27. xii. 29. 2 Pet. iii. 7. Rev. xxi. 8.—^d Or, yielding.—^e Ps. lxxix. 6. 1 Thess. iv. 5.—^f Rom. ii. 8.—^g Phil. iii. 19.

The glory of his power] Never to see the face of God throughout eternity is a heart-rending, soul-appalling thought; and to be banished from the glory of his power, that power the glory of which is peculiarly manifested in saving the lost and glorifying the faithful, is what cannot be reflected on without confusion and dismay.

Verse 10. And to be admired] To be wondered at among, and on the account of all, them that believe. Much as true believers admire the perfections of the Redeemer of mankind, and much as they wonder at his amazing condescension in becoming man, and dying for the sins of the world; all their present amazement and wonder will be as nothing when compared with what they shall feel when they come to see him in all his glory, the glory that he had with the Father before the world was. Them that have believed is undoubtedly the true reading.

Because our testimony—was believed in that day.] The Thessalonians had credited what the apostles had said and written, not only concerning Jesus Christ in general, but concerning the day of judgment in particular.

Verse 11. Fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness] 1. The goodness of God—his own innate eternal kindness, has led (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

11 Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would ^k count ^l you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and ^m the work of faith with power :

12 ⁿ That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

2 Pet. iii. 7.—^h Deut. xxxiii. 2. Isa. ii. 19. Ch. ii. 8.—ⁱ Ps. lxxix. 7.—^j Ps. lxxviii. 35.—^k Or, vouchsafe.—^l Ver. 5.—^m 1 Thess. i. 3.—ⁿ 1 Pet. i. 7. iv. 14.

him to call you into this state of salvation. 2. It is the pleasure of that goodness to save you unto eternal life. 3. It is the good pleasure; nothing can please God more than your receiving and retaining his utmost salvation. 4. It is all the good pleasure of his goodness thus to save you; this he has amply proved by sending his Son to die for you, beyond which gift he has none greater. 5. And if you be faithful to his grace, he will fulfil—completely accomplish, all the good pleasure of his goodness in you; which goodness is to be apprehended and is to work by faith, the power of which must come from him, though the act or exercise of that power must be of yourselves; but the very power to believe affords excitement to the exercise of faith.

Verse 12. That the name of our Lord] This is the great end of your Christian calling; that Jesus, who hath died for you may have his passion and death magnified in your life and happiness; that ye may show forth the virtues of him who called you from darkness into his marvellous light.

And ye in him] That his glorious excellence may be seen upon you; that ye may be adorned with the graces of his Spirit, as he is glorified by your salvation from all sin.

According to the grace] That your salvation may be such as God requires, and such as is worthy of his grace to communicate.

CHAPTER II.

He exhorts the Thessalonians to stand fast in the faith, and not to be alarmed at the rumours they heard concerning the sudden coming of Christ, 1, 2. Because, previously to this coming, there would be a great apostasy from the true faith, and a manifestation of a son of perdition, of whose unparalleled presumption he gives an awful description; as well as of his pernicious success among men, and the means which he would use to deceive and pervert the world; and particularly those who do not receive the love of the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness, 3-12. He thanks God for their steadfastness; shows the great privileges to which they were called; and prays that they may be comforted and established in every good word and work.

NOW we beseech you, brethren, ^a by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^b and by our gathering together unto him,

2 ^c That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter, as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand.

^a 1 Thess. iv. 16.—^b Matt. xxiv. 31. Mark xii. 27. 1 Thess. iv. 17.—^c Matt. xxiv. 4. Eph. v. 6. 1 John iv. 1.—^d Matt. xxiv. 4. Eph. v. 6.—^e 1 Tim. iv. 1.—^f Dan. vii. 25. 1 John ii. 18. Rev.

Verse 1. We beseech you—by the coming of our Lord] Of the day of general judgment he had spoken before, and said that it should come as a thief in the night, i.e., when not expected; but he did not attempt to fix the time, nor 3 ^d Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, ^e except there come a falling away first, and ^f that man of sin be revealed, ^g the son of perdition; did he insinuate that it was either near at hand, or far off. Now, however, he shows that it must necessarily be far off, because of the great transactions which must take place before it can come.

he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God.

5 Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

6 And now ye know what * withholdeth, that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For ^b the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way.

8 And then shall that Wicked be revealed, ° whom the Lord shall consume ° with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy ° with the brightness of his coming:

* Or, holdeth.—^b 1 John ii. 18. iv. 3.—^c Dan. vii. 10. 11.—^d Job iv. 9. Isa. xi. 4. Hos. vi. 5. Rev. ii. 16. xix. 15, 20, 21.—^e Ch. i. 8, 9. Heb. x. 17.—^f John viii. 41. Eph. ii. 2. Rev. xviii. 23.—^g See Deut. xiii. 1. Matt. xxiv. 24. Rev. xiii. 13. xix. 21.—

Verse 2. Be not soon shaken in mind] From the mind; i.e., that they should regain the persuasion they had of the truths which he had before delivered to them; that they should still hold the same opinions, and hold fast the doctrines which they had been taught.

Neither by spirit] Any pretended revelation.
Nor by word] Anything which any person may profess to have heard the apostle speak.

Nor by letter] Either the former one which he had sent, some passages of which had been misconceived and misconstrued; or any other letter, as from us—pretending to have been written by us, the apostles, containing predictions of this kind.

As that the day of Christ is at hand.] Whether does the apostle mean the coming of Christ to execute judgment upon the Jews, and to destroy their policy, or his coming, at the end of time, to judge the world? I think that the apostle, in the following confessedly obscure words, has both these in view, speaking of none of them exclusively; for it is the custom of the inspired penmen, or rather of that Spirit by which they spoke, to point out as many certain events by one prediction as it was possible to do, and to choose the figures, metaphors, and similes accordingly; and thus, from the beginning, God has pointed out the things that were not by the things that then existed, making the one the types or signifiers of the other. [The reference is limited to the coming of Christ, according to the ablest critics.]

Verse 3. Except their come a falling away first] We have the original word in our word apostasy; and by this term we understand a dereliction of the essential principles of religious truth—either a total abandonment of Christianity itself, or such a corruption of its doctrines as renders the whole system completely inefficient to salvation. But what this apostasy means is a question which has not yet, and perhaps never will be, answered to general satisfaction.

That man of sin] The perverse, obstinate, and iniquitous man.

The son of perdition] The son of destruction; the same epithet that is given to Judas Iscariot, John xvii. 12, where see the note. The son of perdition, and the man of sin, or, as some excellent MSS. and Versions, with several of the Fathers, read the lawless man, see ver. 8, must mean the same person or thing. It is also remarkable that the wicked Jews are styled by Isa., chap. i. 4, “children of perdition;” persons who destroy themselves and destroy others.

Verse 4. Who opposeth and exalteth] He stands against and exalts himself above all divine authority, and above every object of adoration, and every institution relative to divine worship, himself being the source, whence must originate all the doctrines of religion, and all its rites and ceremonies; so that sitting in the temple of God—having the highest place and authority in the Christian Church, he acts as God—taking upon himself God’s titles and attributes, and arrogating to himself the authority that belongs to the Most High.

The words as God, are wanting in the best MSS.

Verse 6. And now ye know what withholdeth] I told you this among other things; I informed you what it was that prevented this man of sin, this son of perdition, from revealing himself fully.

Verse 7. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work]

9 Even him, whose coming is ‘after the working of Satan, with all power and * signs and lying wonders,

10 And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in ^h them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

11 And ⁱ for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, ^j that they should believe a lie:

12 That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but ^k had pleasure in unrighteousness.

13 But ^l we are bound to give thanks always to God for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God ^m hath ⁿ from the beginning chosen you to sal-

^h 2 Cor. ii. 15. iv. 8.—ⁱ Rom. i. 21, &c. See 1 Kings xxii. 22. Ezek. xiv. 9.—^j Matt. xxiv. 5. 11. 1 Tim. iv. 1.—^k Rom. i. 32.—^l Ch. i. 3.—^m 1 Thess. i. 4.—ⁿ Eph. i. 4.

There is a system of corrupt doctrine, which will lead to the general apostasy, already in existence, but it is a mystery; it is as yet hidden; it dare not show itself, because of that which hindereth or withholdeth. But when that which now restraineth shall be taken out of the way, then shall that wicked one be revealed—it will then be manifest who he is, and what he is.

Verse 8. Whom the Lord shall consume] He shall blast him so, that he shall wither and die away; and this shall be done by the spirit of his mouth—the words of eternal life, the true doctrine of the gospel of Jesus; this shall be the instrument used to destroy this man of sin: therefore it is evident his death will not be a sudden but a gradual one; because it is by the preaching of the truth that he is to be exposed, overthrown, and finally destroyed.

The brightness of his coming] This may refer to that full manifestation of the truth which had been obscured and kept under by the exaltation of this man of sin.

Verse 9. Whose coming is after the working of Satan] The operation of God’s Spirit sends his messengers; the operation of Satan’s spirit sends his emissaries.

With all power] All kinds of miracles, like the Egyptian magicians; and signs and lying wonders: the word lying may be applied to the whole of these; they were lying miracles, lying signs, and lying wonders; only appearances of what was real, and done to give credit to his presumption and imposture. Whereas God sent his messengers with real miracles, real signs, and real wonders; such Satan cannot produce.

Verse 10. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness] With every art that cunning can invent and unrighteousness suggest, in order to delude and deceive.

In them that perish] Among them that are destroyed; and they are destroyed and perish because they would not receive the love of the truth that they may be saved.

Verse 11. God shall send them strong delusion] So that they believe a lie rather than the truth, prefer false apostles and their erroneous doctrines to the pure truths of the gospel, brought to them by the well-accredited messengers of God; being ever ready to receive any false Messiah, while they systematically and virulently reject the true one.

Verse 12. That they all might be damned] So that they may all be condemned who believed not the truth when it was proclaimed to them; but took pleasure in unrighteousness, preferring that to the way of holiness. Their condemnation was the effect of their refusal to believe the truth; and they refused to believe it because they loved their sins.

Verses 13 and 14. God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation, &c.] In your calling God has shown the purpose that he had formed from the beginning, to call the Gentiles to the same privileges with the Jews, not through circumcision and the observances of the Mosaic law, but by faith in Christ Jesus; but this simple way of salvation referred to the same end—holiness, without which no man, whether Jew or Gentile, can see the Lord.

Verse 15. Hold the traditions which ye have been taught] The word which we render tradition, signifies anything delivered in the way of teaching; and here most obviously means the doctrines delivered by the apostle to the Thessalonians; whether in his preaching, private conversation, or by these epistles; and particularly the first epistle, as the apostle here states.

II. THESSALONIANS.

vation *through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth;

^b 14 Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

^c 15 Therefore, brethren, *stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle.

* Luke i. 75. 1 Pet. i. 2.—^b John xvii. 22. 1 Thess. ii. 12. 1 Pet. v. 10.—^c 1 Cor. xvi. 13. Phil. iv. 1.—^d 1 Cor. xi. 2. Ch. iii. 6.

Verse 16. Now our Lord Jesus] As all your grace came from God through Christ, so the power that is necessary to strengthen and confirm you unto the end must come in the same way.

Everlasting consolation] A complete system of complete peace and happiness.

And good hope through grace] Pardon and holiness they enjoyed, therefore they were no objects of hope; but the resurrection of the body and eternal glory were necessarily future; these they had in expectation; these they hoped for; and, through the grace which they had already received they had a good hope—a well-grounded expectation, of this glorious state.

Verse 17. Comfort your hearts] Keep your souls ever under the influence of his Holy Spirit: and stablish you—confirm and strengthen you in your belief of every good word or doctrine which we have delivered unto you; and in the practice of every good work, recommended and enjoined by the doctrines of the gospel.

The reader will have observed that in going through this chapter, while examining the import of every leading word, I have avoided fixing any specific meaning to terms: the apostasy or falling away; the man of sin; son of perdition; him who letteth or withholdeth, &c. The reason is, I have found it extremely difficult to fix any sense to my own satisfaction; and it was natural for me to think that, if I could not satisfy myself, it was not likely I could satisfy my readers.

The general run of Protestant writers understand the whole as referring to the Popes and Church of Rome, or the whole system of the Papacy. Others think that the defection of the Jewish nation from their allegiance to the Roman Emperor, is what is to be understood by the apostasy or 16 *Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace, 17 Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.

—* Ch. i. 1, 2.—^f 1 John iv. 10. Rev. i. 5.—^g 1 Pet. i. 3.—^h 1 Cor. i. 8. 1 Thess. iii. 13. 1 Pet. v. 13.

falling off; and that all the other terms refer to the destruction of Jerusalem. The Fathers understood the Antichrist to be intended, but of this person they seem to have formed no specific idea. Dr. Hammond refers the apostasy to the defection of the primitive Christians to the Gnostic Heresy; and supposes that by the man of sin and son of perdition, Simon Magus is meant. Grotius applies the whole to Caius Cæsar. Wetstein applies the apostasy to the rebellion and slaughter of the three princes that were proclaimed by the Roman armies, previously to the reign of Vespasian; and supposes Titus and the Flavian family to be intended by the man of sin and son of perdition. Schoettgen contends strongly that the whole refers to the case of the Jews, incited to rebellion by the Scribes and Pharisees, and to the utter and final destruction of the Rabbinic and Pharisaic system. Calmet follows, in the main, the interpretation given by the ancient Fathers. Bishop Newton applies the whole to the Romish Church: the apostasy, its defection from the pure doctrines of Christianity; and the man of sin, &c., the general succession of the Popes of Rome.

The labours of the above learned men have certainly narrowed the principal subjects of inquiry; and we may now safely conclude, in this very obscure prophecy, the Spirit of God had in view either the Jewish or an apostate Christian Church, possessing great spiritual and secular influence and jurisdiction. That the words appear to apply best to the conduct of many of the Popes, and the corruptions of the Romish Church, needs no proof; but to which of these Churches, or to what other Church or system, we should apply them, some men, as eminent for their piety as for their learning, hesitate to declare: yet I must acknowledge, that the most pointed part of the evidence here adduced, tends to fix the whole on the Romish Church, and on none other.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle recommends himself, and his brethren to the prayers of the Church, that their preaching might be successful, and that they might be delivered from wicked men, 1, 2. Expresses his confidence in God and them, and prays that they may patiently wait for the coming of Christ, 3-5. Gives them directions concerning strict discipline in the church; and shows how he and his fellow-labourers had behaved among them, not availing themselves of their own power and authority, 6-9. Shows them how to treat disorderly and idle people, and not to get weary in well-doing, 10-13. Directs them not to associate with those who obey not the orders contained in this epistle, 14, 15. Prays that they may have increasing peace, 16. And concludes with his salutation and benediction, 17, 18.

FINALLY, brethren, *pray for us, that the word of the Lord ^b may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you:

goal, and be glorified, i.e., gain the crown appointed for him that should get first to the end of the course.

Verse 2. Unreasonable and wicked men] The word which we translate unreasonable, signifies rather disorderly, unmanageable; persons out of their place—under no discipline, regardless of law and restraint, and ever acting agreeably to the disorderly and unreasonable impulse of their own minds.

For all men have not faith.] The word is, without doubt, to be taken here for fidelity or trustworthiness, and not for faith; and this is agreeable to the meaning given to it in the very next verse: But the Lord is faithful.

Verse 3. From evil.] Or from the devil or from the evil one. They had disorderly men, wicked men, and the evil one or the devil, to contend with; God alone could support and give them the victory; he had promised to do it, and he might ever be confided in as being invariably faithful.

Verse 4. And we have confidence.] We have no doubt of God's kindness towards you; he loves you, and will support you: and we can confide in you, that ye are now acting as we have desired you, and will continue so to do.

Verse 5. The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God.] The love of God is the grand motive and principle of obedience; this must occupy your hearts: the heart is irregular in all its workings; God alone, by his Spirit, can direct it into his love, and keep it right; give a proper direction to all its passions, and keep them in order, regularity, and purity.

The patient waiting, &c.] Such patience, under all your sufferings and persecutions, as Christ manifested under his. He bore meekly the contradiction of sinners against himself; and when he was reviled he reviled not again.

Verse 6. That ye withdraw yourselves.] Have no fellowship with those who will not submit to proper discipline; who do not keep their place; such as are out of their rank, and act according to their own wills and caprices; and particularly such as are idle and busy-bodies.

And not after the tradition.] This evidently refers to the orders contained in the first epistle; and that first epistle was the tradition which they had received from him.

Verse 7. We behaved not ourselves disorderly.] We did not go out of our rank—we kept our place, and discharged all its duties.

Verse 8. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought.] We paid for what we bought, and worked with our hands that we might have money to buy what was necessary.

Labour and travail night and day.] We were necessarily employed, either in preaching the gospel, visiting from house to house, or working at our calling.

Verse 9. Not because we have not power.] We have the power, the right, to be maintained by those in whose behalf we labour. The labourer is worthy of his hire, is a maxim among you disorderly, "working not at all, but are busy-bodies.

12 "Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, "that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread.

13 But ye, brethren, "be "not weary in well doing.

14 And if any man obey not our word "by this epistle, note that man, and "have no company with him, that he may be ashamed.

15 "Yet count him not as an enemy, "but admonish him as a brother.

16 Now "the Lord of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all.

17 "The salutation of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle: so I write.

18 "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

universally acknowledged and respected; and they who preach the gospel should live by the gospel: the apostle did not claim his privilege, but laboured for his own support, that he might be an example to those whom he found otherwise disposed, and that he might spare the poor.

Verse 10. If any would not work, neither should he eat.] This is a just maxim, and universal nature inculcates it to man. Industry is crowned with God's blessing; idleness is loaded with his curse.

Verse 11. For we hear that there are some] It is very likely that St. Paul kept up some sort of correspondence with the Thessalonian Church; for he had heard everything that concerned their state, and it was from this information that he wrote his second epistle.

Disorderly] Out of their rank—not keeping their own place.

Working not at all] Either lounging at home, or becoming religious gossips; doing nothing.

Busy-bodies.] Doing every thing they should not do—impertinent meddlers with other people's business; prying into other people's circumstances and domestic affairs; magnifying or minimizing, mistaking or underrating, everything; news-mongers and tell-tales; an abominable race, the curse of every neighbourhood where they live, and a pest to religious society.

Verse 12. With quietness they work] With silence; leaving their tale-bearing and officious intermeddling.

That—they work, and eat their own bread.] Their own bread, because earned by their own honest industry. What a degrading thing to live on the bounty or mercy of another, while a man is able to acquire his own livelihood! He who can submit to this has lost the spirit of independence; and has in him a beggar's heart, and is capable of nothing but base and beggarly actions.

Verse 13. Be not weary in well doing.] Do not forget the real poor—the genuine representatives of an impoverished Christ; and rather relieve a hundred undeserving objects, than pass by one who is a real object of charity.

Verse 14. If any man obey not] They had disobeyed his word in the first epistle, and the church still continued to bear with them; now he tells the church, if they still continue to disregard what is said to them, and particularly his word by this second epistle, they are to mark them as being totally incorrigible, and have no fellowship with them.

Verse 15. Count him not as an enemy] Consider him still more an enemy to himself than to you; and admonish him as a brother, though you have ceased to hold religious communion with him. His soul is still of infinite value; labour to get it saved.

Verse 16. The Lord of peace] Jesus Christ, who is called our peace, Eph. ii. 14; and The Prince of peace, Isa. ix. 6. By all means.] By all means, methods, occasions, instruments, and occurrences; peace or prosperity in every form and shape.

The Lord be with you all.] This is agreeable to the promise of our Lord: Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20.

Verse 17. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand] It is very likely that Paul employed an amanuensis generally, either to write what he dictated, or to make a fair copy of what he wrote. In either case the apostle always subscribed it, and wrote the salutation and benediction with his own hand; and this was what authenticated all his epistles. A measure of this kind would be very necessary if forged epistles were carried about in those times. See the note on 1 Cor. xvi. 21, and see Col. iv. 18.

T I M O T H Y.

PAUL and Barnabas, in the course of their first apostolic journey among the Gentiles, came to Lystra, a city of Lycaonia, where they preached the gospel for some time, and, though persecuted, with considerable success. See Acts xiv. 5, 6. It is very likely that here they converted to the Christian faith a Jewess named Lois, with her daughter Eunice, who had married a Gentile, by whom she had Timothy, and whose father was probably at this time dead; the grandmother, daughter, and son living together. Compare Acts xvi. 1-3 with 2 Tim. i. 5. It is likely that Timothy was the only child; and it appears that he had been brought up in the fear of God, and carefully instructed in the Jewish religion by means of the holy scriptures. Compare 2 Tim. i. 5 with 2 Tim. iii. 15. It appears, also, that this young man drank into the apostle's spirit, became a thorough convert to the Christian faith, and that a very tender intimacy subsisted between St. Paul and him.

When the apostle came from Antioch, in Syria, the second time to Lystra, he found Timothy a member of the church, and so highly reputed and warmly recommended by the church in that place, that St. Paul took him to be his companion in his travels, Acts xvi. 1-3. From this place we learn that, although Timothy had been educated in the Jewish faith, he had not been circumcised, because his father, who was a Gentile, would not permit it. When the apostle had determined to take him with him, he found it necessary to have him circumcised, not from any supposition that circumcision was necessary to salvation, but because of the Jews, who would neither have heard him nor the apostle had not this been done; the gospel testimony they would not have received from Timothy, because a heathen; and they would have considered the apostle in the same light, because he associated with such. See the notes on Acts xvi. 3.

It is pretty evident that Timothy had a special call of God to the work of an evangelist, which the elders of the church at Lystra knowing, set him solemnly apart to the work by the imposition of hands, 1 Tim. iv. 14. And they were particularly led to this by several prophetic declarations relative to him, by which his divine call was most clearly ascertained. See 1 Tim. i. 18, and iii. 14. Some think that, after this appointment by the elders, the apostle himself laid his hands on him, not for the purpose of his evangelical designation, but that he might receive those extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit so necessary in those primitive times to demonstrate the truth of the gospel. See

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

2 Tim. i. 6, 7. Yet, it is likely that Timothy had not two ordinations; one by the elders of Lystra, and another by the apostle; as it is most probable that St. Paul acted with that eldership mentioned, 1 Tim. iv. 14, among whom, in the imposition of hands, he would undoubtedly act as chief.

By his affection, fidelity, and zeal, Timothy so recommended himself to all the disciples, and acquired such authority over them, that Paul inserted his name in the inscription of several of the letters which he wrote to the churches, to show that their doctrine was one and the same. His esteem and affection for Timothy the apostle expressed still more conspicuously by writing to him those excellent letters in the canon which bear his name, and which have been of the greatest use to the ministers of the gospel ever since their publication, by directing them to discharge all the duties of their function in a proper manner.

The date of this epistle has been a subject of much controversy, some assigning it to the year 56, which is the common opinion; and others to 61 or 65. A great balance of probability appears to be in favour of this later date.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO TIMOTHY.

CHAPTER I.

Paul's salutation to Timothy, 1, 2. For what purpose he had left him at Ephesus, 3. What the false apostles taught in opposition to the truth, 4-7. The true use of the law, 8-11. He thanks God for his own conversion, and describes his former state, 12-17. Exhorts Timothy to hold fast faith and a good conscience, and speaks of Hymeneus and Alexander who had made shipwreck of their faith, 18-20.

PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ, ^a by the commandment ^b of God our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, ^c which is our hope; 2 Unto ^d Timothy, ^e my own son in the faith: ^f Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord.

3 As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, ^g when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some ^h that they teach no other doctrine,

^a Acts ix. 15. Gal. i. 1, 11.—^b Ch. ii. 3. iv. 10. Tit. i. 3, ii. 10. iii. 4. Ju'da 25.—^c Col. i. 27.—^d Acts xvi. 1. 1 Cor. iv. 17. Phil. ii. 19. 1 Thess. iii. 2.—^e Tit. i. 4.—^f Gal. i. 3. 2 Tim. i. 2. 1 Pet. i. 2.—^g Acts xx. 1, 3. Phil. ii. 24.—^h Gal. i. 6, 7. Ch. vi. 3, 10.—

Verse 1. Jesus Christ—our hope] Without Jesus, the world was hopeless; the expectation of being saved can only come to mankind by his gospel. He is called our hope, as he is called our life, our peace, our righteousness, &c., because from him hope, life, peace, righteousness, and all other blessings proceed.

Verse 2. My own son in the faith] Brought to salvation through Christ by my ministry alone. Probably the apostle speaks here according to this Jewish maxim: He who teaches the law to his neighbour's son is considered by the scripture as if he had begotten him, Sanhedrin, fol. xix. 2.

But the phrase may mean, my beloved son; for in this sense the word is not unfrequently used.

In the faith] The word faith is taken here for the whole of the Christian religion, faith in Christ being its essential characteristic.

Grace, mercy, and peace] GRACE, the favour and approbation of God. MERCY, springing from that grace, pardoning, purifying, and supporting. PEACE, the consequence of this manifested mercy, peace of conscience, and peace with God; producing internal happiness, quietness, and assurance.

Verse 3. I besought thee] The apostle had seen that a bad seed had been sown in the church; and, as he was obliged to go then into Macedonia, he wished Timothy, on whose prudence, piety, and soundness in the faith he could depend, to stay behind and prevent the spreading of a doctrine that would have been pernicious to the people's souls.

That thou mightest charge some] He does not name any persons; the Judaizing teachers are generally supposed to 4 ⁱ Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, ^j which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do.

5 Now ^k the end of the commandment is charity ^l out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned:

be those intended; and the term some, certain persons, which he uses, is expressive of high disapprobation, and at the same time of delicacy: they were not apostles, nor apostolic men; but they were undoubtedly members of the Church at Ephesus, and might yet be reclaimed.

Verse 4. Neither give heed to fables] Idle fancies; things of no moment; doctrines and opinions unauthenticated; silly legends, of which no people ever possessed a greater stock than the Jews.

Endless genealogies] I suppose the apostle to mean those genealogies which were uncertain—that never could be made out, either in the ascending or descending line; and, principally, such as referred to the great promise of the Messiah, and to the priesthood. The Jews had scrupulously preserved their genealogical tables till the advent of Christ; and the evangelists had recourse to them, and appealed to them in reference to our Lord's descent from the house of David; Matthew taking this genealogy in the descending, Luke in the ascending, line.

Some learned men suppose that the apostle alludes here to the Æons, among the Gnostics and Valentinians, of whom there were endless numbers to make up what was called their pleroma; or to the sephiroth or splendours of the Cabalists.

Which minister questions] They are the foundation of endless altercations and disputes; for, being uncertain and not consecutive, every person had a right to call them in question.

Rather than godly edifying] Such discussions as these had no tendency to promote piety.

standing neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm.

8 But we know that ^athe law is good, if a man use it lawfully;

9 ^bKnowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers,

10 For whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary ^cto sound doctrine;

11 According to the glorious gospel of ^dthe

^aRom. vii. 12.—^bGal. iii. 19, v. 23.—^cCh. vi. 3. 2 Tim. iv. 3. Tit. i. 9, ii. 1.—^dCh. vi. 15.—1 Cor. ix. 17. Gal. ii. 7. Col. i. 25. 1 Thess. ii. 4. Ch. ii. 7. 2 Tim. i. 11. Instead of godly edifying or the edification of God, the economy or dispensation of God, is the reading of almost every MS. in which this part of the epistle is extant (for some MSS. are here mutilated), and of almost all the Versions, and the chief of the Greek Fathers. Of the genuineness of this reading scarcely a doubt can be formed; and though the old reading, which is supported by the Latin Fathers and the Vulgate, gives a good sense, yet the connexion and spirit of the place show that the latter must be the true reading.

What had the Jewish genealogies to do with the gospel? Men were not to be saved by virtue of the privileges or piety of their ancestors. The Jews depended much on this.

Verse 5. Now the end of the commandment is charity] The end, aim, and design of God in giving this dispensation to the world is, that men may have an unfeigned faith, such as lays hold on Christ crucified, and produces a good conscience from a sense of the pardon received, and leads on to purity of heart; LOVE to God and man being the grand issue of the grace of Christ here below, and this fully preparing the soul for eternal glory. He whose soul is filled with love to God and man has a pure heart, a good conscience, and unfeigned faith. But these blessings no soul can ever acquire, but according to God's dispensation of faith.

Of faith unfeigned] A faith not hypocritical. The apostle appears to allude to the Judaizing teachers, who pretended faith in the gospel, merely that they might have the greater opportunity to bring back to the Mosaic system those who had embraced the doctrine of Christ crucified. This is evident from the following verse.

Verse 6. From which some have pretended to aim at the scope or mark, have missed that mark. This is the import of the original word.

Turned aside unto vain jangling] The original term signifies empty or vain talking; discourses that turn to no profit; a great many words and little sense; and that sense not worth the pains of hearing. Such, indeed, is all preaching where Jesus Christ is not held forth.

Verse 7. Teachers of the law] To be esteemed and celebrated as rabbins; to be reputed cunning in solving knotty questions and enigmas, which answered no end to true religion. Of such the rabbinical teaching was full.

Understanding neither what they say] This is evident from almost all the Jewish comments which yet remain. Things are asserted which are either false or dubious; words, the import of which they did not understand, were brought to illustrate them: so that it may be said, They understand not what they say nor whereof they affirm.

Verse 8. But we know that the law is good] The law, as given by God, is both good in itself, and has a good tendency. This is similar to what the apostle had asserted, Rom. vii. 12-16.

If a man use it lawfully] That is, interpret it according to its own spirit and design, and use it for the purpose for which God has given it; for the ceremonial law was a schoolmaster to lead us unto Christ, and Christ is the end of that law for justification to every one that believes.

Verse 9. The law is not made for a righteous man] It was not made for the righteous as a restrainer of crimes and an inflicter of punishments; for the righteous avoid sin, blessed God ^awhich was committed to my trust.

12 And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, ^bwho hath enabled me, ^cfor that he counted me faithful, ^dputting me into the ministry;

13 ^eWho was before a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious: but I obtained mercy, because ^fI did it ignorantly in unbelief.

14 ^gAnd the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant ^hwith faith ⁱand love which is in Christ Jesus.

15 ^jThis is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that ^kChrist Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.

16 Howbeit for this cause ^lI obtained mercy, ix. 39, 41. Acts iii. 17. xxvi. 9.—^aRom. v. 20. 1 Cor. xv. 10.—^b2 Tim. i. 13.—^cLuke vii. 47.—^dCh. iii. i. iv. 9. 2 Tim. i. 11. Tit. iii. 8.—^eMatt. ix. 13. Mark ii. 17. Luke v. 32. xix. 10. Rom. v. 8. 1 John iii. 5.—^f2 Cor. iv. 1.

and by living to the glory of God, expose not themselves to its censures. This seems to be the mind of the apostle: he does not say that the law was not made for a righteous man, but it does not lie against, a righteous man, because he does not transgress it; but it lies against the wicked, for such as the apostle mentions have broken it, and grievously too, and are condemned by it. The word refers to the custom of writing laws on boards, and hanging them up in public places within reach of every man, that they might be read by all; thus all would see against whom the law lay.

The lawless] Those who will not be bound by a law, and acknowledge none, therefore have no rule of moral conduct.

Disobedient] Those who acknowledge no authority; and consequently endeavour to live as they list; and from such dispositions all the crimes in the following catalogue may naturally spring.

For the ungodly] The irreligious—those who do not worship God, or have no true worship. For sinners, those who transgress the laws.

For unholy] Persons totally polluted—unclean within, and unclean without.

And profane] Such as are so unholy and abominable as not to be fit to attend any public worship. Our word profane comes from procul a fano, "far from the temple." When the ancients, even heathens, were about to perform some very sacred rites, they were accustomed to command the irreligious to keep at a distance.

Murderers of fathers] The original does not necessarily imply the murder of a father or of a mother; it may mean simply beating or striking a father or mother. This is horrible enough, but to murder a parent out-herods Herod.

Manslayers] Murderers simply; all who take away the life of a human being contrary to law.

Verse 10. For whoremongers] Adulterers, fornicators, and prostitutes of all sorts.

Menstealers] Slave-dealers; whether those who carry on the traffic in human flesh and blood, or those who buy stolen men or women, no matter of what colour or what country; or those who sow dissensions among barbarous tribes in order that they who are taken in war may be sold into slavery; or the nations who legalize or connive at such traffic: all these are menstealers, and God classes them with the most flagitious of mortals.

For liars] They who speak for truth what they know to be false; and even they who tell the truth in such a way as to lead others to draw a contrary meaning from it.

For perjured persons] Such as do or leave undone anything contrary to an oath or moral engagement, whether that engagement be made by what is called swearing, or by an affirmation or promise of any kind.

And if there be any other thing] Every species of vice and immorality, all must be necessarily included that is contrary to sound doctrine—to the immutable law of God, as well as to the pure precepts of Christianity, where that law is incorporated, explained, and rendered, if possible, more and more binding.

Verse 11. According to the glorious gospel] The sound doctrine mentioned above, which is here called the gospel of the glory of the blessed or happy God.

Verse 12. I thank Christ] I feel myself under infinite obligation to Christ who hath endued me with various mira-that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, * for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting.

17 Now unto ^b the King eternal, ^c immortal, ^d invisible, ^e the only wise God, ^f be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

18 This charge ^g I commit unto thee, son Timothy, ^h according to the prophecies which went before on

* Acts xiii. 39.—^b Ps. x. 18. cxlv. 13. Dan. vii. 14. Ch. vi. 15, 16.
—^c Rom. i. 23.—^d John i. 18. Heb. xi. 27. 1 John iv. 12.—^e Rom. xvi. 27. Jude 25.—^f 1 Chron. xxix. 11.—^g Ch. vi. 13, 14, 20. 2 Tim.

culous gifts of his Holy Spirit, and put me into the ministry the deaconship, the service of mankind, by preaching the gospel, for that he counted me—he knew that I would be faithful to the charge that was delivered to me.

Verse 13. A blasphemer] Speaking impiously and unjustly of Jesus, his doctrine, his ways, and his followers.

And—persecutor] Endeavouring, to the uttermost of his power, to exterminate all who called on the name of the Lord Jesus.

And injurious] As full of insolence as I was of malevolence; and yet, all the while, thinking I did God service, while sacrificing men and women to my own prejudices and intolerance.

I did it ignorantly in unbelief] This extension of mercy does not however excuse the infuriated conduct of Saul of Tarsus, for he says himself that he was exceedingly mad against them. Let us beware, lest we lose the man's former crimes in his after character.

Verse 14. The grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant] The original is very emphatic, that grace of our Lord hath superabounded—it manifested itself in a way of extraordinary mercy.

With faith and love] Not only pardoning such offences, but leading me to the full experimental knowledge of Christianity; of that faith and love which are essential to it; and giving me authority to proclaim it to mankind.

Verse 15. Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners] This saying or doctrine he calls, first, a faithful or true saying; it is a doctrine that may be credited, without the slightest doubt or hesitation; God himself has spoken it; and the death of Christ and the mission of the Holy Ghost, sealing pardon on the souls of all who believe, have confirmed and established the truth.

Secondly, it is worthy of all acceptance; as all need it, it is worthy of being received by all. From this it is evident that the death of Christ, and all its eternally saving effects, were designed for every man.

Of whom I am chief] Confounding Paul the apostle, in the fulness of his faith and love, with Saul of Tarsus, in his ignorance, unbelief, and persecuting rage, we are in the habit of saying: "This is a hyperbolical expression, arguing the height of the apostle's modesty and humility, and must not be taken according to the letter." Take it as strictly and literally true. Take the whole of the apostle's conduct, previously to his conversion, into consideration, and was there a greater sinner converted to God from the incarnation to his own time? Not one; he was the chief; and, keeping his blasphemy, persecution, and contumely in view, he asserts: Of all that the Lord Jesus came into the world to save, and of all that he had saved to that time, I am chief. And it is very probable that the apostle refers to those in whom the grace and mercy of God were, at the first promulgation of the gospel, manifested: and, comparing himself with all these, he could with propriety say, of whom I am the first; the first who, from a blasphemer, and persecutor (and might we not add murderer? see the part he took in the martyrdom of Stephen) became a preacher of that gospel which I had persecuted. And hence, keeping this idea strictly in view, he immediately adds: Houbeit, for this cause I obtained mercy; that in me first, Jesus Christ might shew forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting. If Jesus Christ, with whom there can be no respect of persons, saved Saul of Tarsus, no sinner need despair.

Verse 17. Now unto the King eternal] This burst of thanksgiving and gratitude to God naturally arose from the subject then under his pen and eye.

Immortal] Incorruptible—not liable to decay or corruption; a simple uncompounded essence, incapable, therefore, thee, that thou by them mightest ¹ war a good warfare;

19 ¹ Holding faith, and a good conscience; which some having put away, concerning faith ² have made shipwreck:

20 Of whom is ¹ Hymeneus and ² Alexander; whom I have ³ delivered unto Satan, that they may learn not to ⁴ blaspheme.

ii. 2.—¹ Eccles. xvi. 1. Ch. iv. 14.—² Ch. vi. 12. 2 Tim. ii. 8. iv. 7.—³ Ch. iii. 9.—⁴ Ch. vi. 9.—⁵ 2 Tim. ii. 17.—⁶ 2 Tim. ii. 14.—⁷ 1 Cor. v. 5.—⁸ Acts xiii. 45.

of decomposition, and consequently permanent and eternal. Invisible] One who fills all things, works everywhere, and yet is invisible to angels and men; the perfect reverse of false gods and idols, who are confined to one spot, work no where, and, being stocks and stones, are seen by everybody.

The only wise God] The word wise is omitted by the best MSS. and Versions. Some of the Greek Fathers quote it sometimes, and omit it at others; which shows that it was an unsettled reading, probably borrowed from Rom. xvi. 27. Without it the reading is very strong and appropriate: To the only God; nothing visible or invisible being worthy of adoration but himself.

Be honour] All the respect and reverence that can be paid by intelligent beings, ascribing to him at the same time all the glory—excellences and perfections which can be possessed by an intelligent, unoriginated, independent, and eternal Being; and this for ever and ever—through eternity.

Verse 18 This charge] It was a charge that the Judaizing teachers should not teach differently from that doctrine which the apostle had delivered to him. See ver. 3.

According to the prophecies] This may refer to some predictions by inspired men, relative to what Timothy should be; and he wishes him to act in all things conformably to those predictions.

Some think that the foregoing prophecies refer to revelations which the apostle himself had received concerning Timothy; while others think that the word is to be understood of advices, directions, and exhortations, which the apostle had previously delivered to him; the word signifies to speak to men to edification, to exhortation, and to comfort. This is a very sober and good sense of the passage.

War a good warfare] The trials and afflictions of the followers of God are often represented as a warfare or campaign. See Isa. xl. 2; 1 Cor. ix. 7; 2 Cor. x. 4; and see the reasons of this metaphorical form of speech in the notes on Eph. vi. 13.

Verse 19. Holding faith] All the truths of the Christian religion, firmly believing them, and fervently proclaiming them to others.

And a good conscience] So holding the truth as to live according to its dictates, that a good conscience may be ever preserved.

Which some having put away] Having thrust away; as a fool-hardy soldier might his shield and his breast-plate, or a mad sailor his pilot, helm, and compass.

Concerning faith] The great truths of the Christian religion.

Have made shipwreck] Being without the faith, that only infallible system of truth; and a good conscience, that skilful pilot, that steady and commanding helm, that faithful and invariable loadstone; have been driven to and fro by every wind of doctrine, and, getting among shoals, quicksands, and rocks, have been shipwrecked and engulfed.

Verse 20. Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander] Who had the faith, but thrust it away; who had a good conscience through believing, but made shipwreck of it. Hence we find that all this was not only possible, but did actually take place, though some have endeavoured to maintain the contrary; who, confounding eternity with a state of probation, have supposed that, if a man once enter into the grace of God in this life, he must necessarily continue in it to all eternity. Thousands of texts and thousands of facts refute this doctrine.

Delivered unto Satan] For the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. What this sort of punishment was no man now living knows. There is nothing of the kind referred to in the Jewish writings. It seems to have been something done by mere apostolical authority, under the direction of the Spirit of God.

Hymeneus, it appears, denied the resurrection, see 2 Tim.

ii. 17, 18; but whether this Alexander be the same with Alexander the coppersmith, 2 Tim. iv. 14, or the Alexander, Acts xix. 33, cannot be determined. Probably, he was the same with the coppersmith. Whether they were brought back to the acknowledgment of the truth does not appear. From what is said in the second epistle the case seems extremely doubtful. Let him who most assuredly standeth, take heed lest he fall.

CHAPTER II.

Prayer, supplication, and thanksgiving, must be made for all men; because God wills that all should be saved, 1-4. There is but one God and one Mediator, 5-7. How men should pray, 8. How women should adorn themselves, 9, 10. They are not suffered to teach, nor to usurp authority over the men, 11-14. How they may expect to be saved in child-bearing, 15.

I EXHORT therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men;

2 ^b For kings, and ^c for all that are in ^d authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

3 For this is ^e good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour;

4 ^a Who will have all men to be saved, ^b and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.

Verse 1. I exhort—that, first of all] It is difficult to know the precise difference between the four words used here by the apostle. They are sometimes distinguished thus:

Supplications] Prayers for averting evils of every kind.

Prayers] Prayers for obtaining the good things, spiritual and temporal, which ourselves need.

Intercessions] Prayers in behalf of others.

Giving of thanks] Praises to God, as the parent of all good, for all the blessings which we and others have received. It is probable that the apostle gives directions here for public worship.

Verse 2. For kings] As it is a positive maxim of Christianity to pray for all secular governors, so it has ever been the practice of Christians.

That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life] Good rulers have power to do much good; we pray that their authority may be ever preserved and well directed. Bad rulers have power to do much evil; we pray that they may be prevented from thus using their power.

Verse 3. This is good and acceptable] Prayer for all legally constituted authorities is good in itself, because useful to ourselves and to the public at large, and it is acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; and this is its highest sanction and its highest character: it is good; it is well pleasing to God.

Verse 4. Who will have all men to be saved] Because he wills the salvation of all men; therefore, he wills that all men should be prayed for.

And to come unto the knowledge of the truth.] The proper import of the original word is; the acknowledgment of the truth—that they may receive it as the truth, and make it the rule of their faith, the model and director of their life and actions.

Verse 5. There is one God] Who is the maker, governor, and preserver of all men, of every condition, and of every nation; and equally wills the salvation of all.

And one mediator] The word mediator signifies, literally, a middle person, one whose office it is to reconcile two parties at enmity; and hence Suidas explains it by a peace-maker. God was offended with the crimes of men; to restore them to his peace, Jesus Christ was incarnated; and being God and man, both God and men met in and were reconciled by him. But this reconciliation required a sacrifice on the part of the peace-maker or mediator; hence what follows.

Verse 6. Who gave himself a ransom] The word used here, and applied to the death of Christ, signifies that ransom which consists in the exchange of one person for another, or the redemption of life by life; or, as Schleusner has expressed it in his translation of these words: "He who by his death has redeemed all from the power and punishment of vice, from the slavery and misery of sinners."

To be testified in due time.] The original words are not very clear, and have been understood variously. This appears to be the apostle's meaning: Christ gave himself a ransom for all. This, in the times which seemed best to the divine wisdom, was to be testified to every nation, and people, and tongue. The apostles had begun this testimony; and, in the course of the divine economy, it has ever since been gradually promulgated; and at present runs with a more rapid course than ever.

Verse 7. I am ordained a preacher] I am set apart, appointed. The word does not imply any imposition of hands by either bishop or presbyter, as is vulgarly supposed.

I speak the truth in Christ.] As I have received my commission from him, so I testify his truth. I did not run before I was sent; and I speak nothing but what I have received.

A teacher of the Gentiles] Being specially commissioned to preach the gospel, not to the Jews, but to the nations of the world.

In faith and verity.] Faithfully and truly; preaching the TRUTH, the whole TRUTH, and nothing but the TRUTH; and this fervently, affectionately, and perseveringly.

authority from Christ, and spoke nothing but what he received from him, his I will is equal to I command.

That men pray] That is, for the blessings promised in this testimony of God. For, although God has provided them, yet he will not give them to such as will not pray.

Every where] In every place. That they should always have a praying heart, and this will ever find a praying place. The Jews thought that no prayer could be acceptable that was not offered at the temple at Jerusalem; afterwards this was extended to the Holy Land; but, when they became dispersed among the nations, they built oratories or places of prayer, principally by rivers and by the sea-side; and in these they were obliged to allow that public prayer might be legally offered, but no where else.

Lifting up holy hands] It was a common custom, not only among the Jews, but also among the heathens, to lift up or spread out their arms and hands in prayer. It is properly the action of entreaty and request, and seems to be an effort to embrace the assistance requested. But the apostle probably alludes to the Jewish custom of laying their hands on the head of the animal which they brought for a sin-offering, confessing their sins, and then giving up the life of the animal as an expiation for the sins thus confessed. And this very notion is conveyed in the original term. This shows us how Christians should pray. They should come to the altar; set God before their eyes; humble themselves for their sins; bring as a sacrifice the Lamb of God; lay their hands on this sacrifice; and by faith offer it to God in their souls' behalf, expecting salvation through his meritorious death alone.

Without wrath] Having no vindictive feeling against any person; harbouring no unforgiving spirit, while they are imploring pardon for their own offences.

The holy hands refer to the Jewish custom of washing their hands before prayer; this was done to signify that they had put away all sin, and purposed to live a holy life.

And doubting.] Reasonings. Such as are often felt by distressed penitents and timid believers; faith, hope, and unbelief appearing to hold a disputation and controversy in their own bosoms, in the issue of which unbelief ordinarily triumphs.

Verse 9. In like manner also] That is, he wills or commands what follows, as he had commanded what went before.

With shamefacedness and sobriety] This would lead them to avoid everything unbecoming or meretricious in the mode or fashion of their dress, and all unnecessary expense. They might follow the custom or costume of the country as to the dress itself, for nothing was ever more becoming than the Grecian stola, catastola, and zona; but they must not imitate the extravagance of those who, through impurity or littleness of mind, decked themselves merely to attract the eye of admiration, or set in lying action the tongue of flattery.

When either women or men spend much time, cost, and attention on decorating their persons, it affords a painful proof that within there is little excellence, and that they are endeavouring to supply the want of mind and moral good by the feeble and silly aids of dress and ornament. Were religion out of the question, common sense would say in all these things: Be decent; but be moderate and modest.

Verse 10. But (which becometh, &c.)] That is: Good works are the only ornaments with which women professing Christianity should seek to be adorned.

usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

13 ^a For Adam was first formed, then Eve.

14 And ^b Adam was not deceived; but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression.

—^a Gen. iii. 16. Luke i. 42. Exod. i. 19.—^b Gen. iv. 1, 25. Eze. xviii. 3. Acts xiv. 22.

Verse 11. Let the woman learn in silence] This is generally supposed to be a prohibition of women's preaching. I have already said what I judge necessary on this subject in the notes on 1 Cor. xi. 5, &c., and xiv. 34, 35; to which places I beg leave to refer the reader.

Verse 12. Nor to usurp authority] A woman should attempt nothing, either in public or private, that belongs to man as his peculiar function.

But to be in silence.] It was lawful for men in public assemblies to ask questions, or even interrupt the speaker when there was any matter in his speech which they did not understand; but this liberty was not granted to women.

Verse 13. For Adam was first formed, then Eve] And by this very act God designed that he should have the pre-eminence. God fitted man, by the robust construction of his body, to live a public life, to contend with difficulties, and to be capable of great exertions. The structure of woman's body plainly proves that she was never designed for those exertions required in public life. In this the chief part of the natural inferiority of woman is to be sought.

Verse 14. Adam was not deceived] It does not appear that Satan attempted the man; the woman said: The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat. Adam received the fruit from the hand of his wife; he knew he was transgressing, he was not deceived; however she led the way, and in consequence of this she was subjected to the domination of her husband.

Verse 15. She shall be saved in child-bearing] She shall be saved through child-bearing—she shall be saved by means, or through the instrumentality, of child-bearing or of bringing forth a child. Amidst the different opinions given of the meaning of this very singular text, that of Dr. Macknight appears to me the most probable, which I shall give in his paraphrase.

"However, though Eve was first in the transgression, and brought death on herself, her husband, and all her posterity, the female sex shall be saved (equally with the male) through child bearing—through bringing forth the Saviour, if they live in faith, and love, and chastity, with that sobriety which I have been recommending."

There are innumerable instances of women dying in child-bed who have lived in faith, and charity, and holiness, with sobriety; and equally numerous instances of worthless women, slaves to different kinds of vices, who have not only been saved in child-bearing, but have passed through their travail with comparatively little pain: hence that is not the sense in which we should understand the apostle. Yet it must be a matter of great consolation and support to all pious women labouring of child, to consider that, by the Holy Virgin's child-bearing, salvation is provided for them and the whole human race; and that, whether they die or live, though their own child-bearing can contribute nothing to their salvation, yet he who was born of a woman has purchased them and the whole human race by his blood.

If they continue] Rightly translated, if they live; for so it signifies in other passages, particularly Phil. i. 25. The change in the number of the verb from the singular to the plural, which is introduced here, was designed by the apostle to show that he does not speak of Eve, nor of any particular woman, but of the whole sex.

CHAPTER III.

Concerning bishops, their qualifications and work, 1-7. Of deacons, and how they should be proved, 8-10. Of their wives and children, and how they should be governed, 11-13. How Timothy should behave himself in the church, 14, 15. The great mystery of godliness, 16.

Verse 1. This is a true saying] This is a true doctrine. These words are joined to the last verse of the preceding chapter by several of the Greek Fathers, and by them referred to the doctrine there stated.

The office of a bishop] The episcopacy, overseership, or superintendency. It is strange that the episcopacy, in those times, should have been an object of intense desire (for such is the sense of the original) to any man; when it was a place of danger, and exposure to severe labour, want, persecution, and death, without any secular emolument whatsoever. On this ground I am led to think that the Spirit of God designed these words more for the ages that were to come, than for those which were then; and in reference to after ages the whole of what follows is chiefly to be understood.

A good work.] A work it then was; heavy, incessant, and painful. There were no unpreaching prelates in those days, and there should be none now. Episcopacy in the Church of God is of divine appointment, and should be maintained and respected. Under God, there should be supreme governors in the church as well as in the state. The state has its monarch, the church has its bishop; one should govern according to the laws of the land, the other according to the word of God.

Verse 2. A bishop then must be blameless] First—This Christian bishop must be blameless; a person against whom no evil can be proved; one who is everywhere invulnerable; for the word is a metaphor, taken from the case of an expert and skilful pugilist, who so defends every part of his body that it is impossible for his antagonist to give him one hit. So this Christian bishop is one that has so conducted himself, as to put it out of the reach of any person to prove that he is either unsound in a single article of the Christian faith, or deficient in the fulfilment of any duty incumbent on a Christian. He must be irreprehensible; for how can he reprove that in others which they can reprove in him?

Second.—He must be the husband of one wife. He should be a married man, but he should be no polygamist; and have only one wife, i. e., one at a time. It does not mean that, if he has been married, and his wife die, he should never marry another. Some have most foolishly spiritualized this, and say that by one wife the church is intended! This silly quibbling needs no refutation. The apostle's meaning appears to be this: that he should not be a man who has divorced his wife and married another; nor one that has two wives at a time.

Third.—He must be vigilant. A bishop has to watch over the church, and watch for it; and this will require all his care and circumspection.

Fourth.—He must be sober; prudent, or, according to the etymology of the word, a man of a sound mind; having a good understanding, and the complete government of all his passions.

A bishop should be a man of learning, of an extensive and 5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of ^a the church of God?)

6 Not ^a a novice, lest being lifted up with pride ^a he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

7 Moreover he must have a good report ^a of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach, ^a and the snare of the devil.

8 Likewise must ^a the deacons be grave, not double tongued, ^a not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

—^a Acts xx. 28.—^a Or, one newly come to the faith.—^a Isa. xiv. 12.—^a Acts xxii. 12. 1 Cor. v. 12. 1 Thess. iv. 1.—^a Ch. vi. 9. 2 Tim. ii. 26.—^a Acts vi. 3.—^a Ver. 3. Lev. x. 9 Ezek. xlv. 21.

well cultivated mind, dispassionate, prudent, and sedate.

Fifth.—He must be of good behaviour; orderly, decent, grave, and correct in the whole of his appearance, carriage, and conduct. The preceding term refers to the mind; this latter to the external manners. A clownish, rude, or boorish man should never have the rule of the Church of God; the sour, the sullen, and the boisterous should never be invested with a dignity which they would most infallibly disgrace.

Sixth.—He must be given to hospitality; literally, a lover of strangers; one who is ready to receive into his house and relieve every necessitous stranger. Hospitality, in those primitive times, was a great and necessary virtue; then there were few inns or places of public entertainment; to those who were noted for benevolence, the necessitous stranger had recourse. To enable them to entertain such, the church over which they presided must have furnished them with the means. Such a bishop as St. Paul, who was often obliged to labour with his hands for his support, could have little to give away. But there is a considerable difference between the apostolic bishop and an ecclesiastical bishop: the one was generally itinerant, the other comparatively local; the former had neither house nor home, the latter had both; the apostolic bishop had charge of the Church of Christ universally, the ecclesiastical bishop of the churches in a particular district. Such should be addicted to hospitality or works of charity; especially in these modern times, in which, besides the spiritualities, they possess the temporalities, of the church.

Seventh.—He should be apt to teach; one capable of teaching; not only wise himself, but ready to communicate his wisdom to others. One whose delight is to instruct the ignorant and those who are out of the way. He must be a preacher; an able, zealous, fervent, and assiduous preacher.

Verse 3. An eighth article in his character is, he must not be given to wine. The word not only signifies one who is inordinately attached to wine, a winebibber or tippler, but also one who is imperious, abusive, insolent, whether through wine or otherwise.

Ninth.—He must be no striker; not quarrelsome; not ready to strike a person who may displease him; no persecutor of those who may differ from him.

Tenth.—He must not be greedy of filthy lucre, not desirous of base gain; not using base and unjustifiable methods to raise and increase his revenues; not trading or trafficking; for what would be honourable in a secular character, would be base and dishonourable in a bishop.

Eleventh.—He must be patient, meek, gentle; the opposite to a quarrelsome person, such as the striker before named. When meekness and patience do not reign, gravity cannot exist, and the love of God cannot dwell.

Twelfth.—He must not be a brawler; not contentious or litigious, but quiet and peaceable.

Thirteenth.—He must not be covetous; not a lover of money; not desiring the office for the sake of its emoluments.

9 * Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless.

11 ^b Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things.

12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well.

13 For ^c they that have ^d used the office of a deacon well, purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.

* Ch. i. 19.—^b Tit. ii. 3.—^c See Matt. xxv. 21.—^d Or, ministered.—^e Eph. ii. 21, 22. 2 Tim. ii. 20.—^f Or, stay.—^g John i. 14. 1 John i. 2.—^h (Gr. manifested) —ⁱ Matt. iii. 16. John i. 32, 33. xv. 26. xvi. 8, 9. Rom. i. 4. 1 Pet. iii. 13. 1 John v. 6, &c.—^j Matt.

Verse 4. The fourteenth qualification of a Christian bishop is, that he ruleth well his own house. One who has the command of his own house, not by sternness, severity, and tyranny, but with all gravity; governing his household by rule, every one knowing his own place, and each doing his own work, and each work having the proper time assigned for its beginning and end.

Verse 5. For if a man know not] Method is a matter of great importance in all the affairs of life. He who has a disorderly family has no government of that family; he probably has none because he has no method, no plan of presiding. Look at a man's domestic arrangements; if they be not good, he should not be trusted with any branch of government, whether ecclesiastical or civil.

Verse 6. Fifteenth.—It is required that he be not a novice. Not a young plant, not recently ingrafted, that is, one not newly converted to the faith (Old MS. Bible); one who has been of considerable standing in the Christian Church, if he have the preceding qualifications, may be safely trusted with the government of that church. It is impossible that one who is not long and deeply experienced in the ways of God can guide others in the way of life. But the apostle gives another reason: Lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil. It is natural for man to think himself of more importance than his fellows when they are intrusted to his government.

Verse 7. The sixteenth requisite is, that he must have a good report of them which are without. That he should be one who had not been previously a profligate, or scandalous in his life. Such a person, when converted, may be a worthy private member of religious society; but I believe God rarely calls such to the work of the ministry, and never to the episcopate.

And the snare of the devil.] Backsliders in general fall by those sins to which they were addicted previously to their conversion. Former inveterate habits will revive in him who does not continue to deny himself, and watch unto prayer.

The snare of the devil. Some would translate the snare of the accuser; and they give the same meaning to the word in ver. 6. Now, though the word signifies an accuser, yet I do not see that it can, with any propriety, be restrained to this meaning in the texts in question, and especially as the word is emphatically applied to Satan himself.

Verse 8. Likewise must the deacons] The term deacon simply signifies a regular or stated servant.

Grave.] Of a sedate and dignified carriage and conduct.

Not double tongued.] Speaking one thing to one person, and another thing to another, on the same subject. This is hypocrisy and deceit. This word might also be translated liars.

Not given to much wine.] Neither a drunkard, tippler, nor what is called a jovial companion. All this would be inconsistent with gravity.

Verse 9. Holding the mystery of the faith.] What has been since called Antinomianism, that is, making void the moral law by a pretended faith in the righteousness of Christ, is that which the apostle has here particularly in view.

Verse 10. Let these—be proved.] Let them not be young converts, or persons lately brought to the knowledge of the truth. This is the same in spirit with what is required of the bishops, verse 6.

Being found blameless.] Being irreproachable; persons 14 These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly;

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

16 And, without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

against whom no evil can be proved. The same as in verse 2, though a different word is used.

Verse 11. Even so must their wives be grave.] The original is simply: Let the women likewise be grave. Whatever is spoken here becomes women in general; but if the apostle had those termed deaconesses in his eye, which is quite possible, the words are peculiarly suitable to them. That there was such an order in the apostolic and primitive Church, and that they were appointed to their office by the imposition of hands, has already been noticed on Rom. xvi. 1. Possibly, therefore, the apostle may have had this order of deaconesses in view, to whom it was as necessary to give counsels and cautions as to the deacons themselves; and to prescribe their qualifications, lest improper persons should insinuate themselves into that office.

Not slanderers.] Literally not devils. This may be properly enough translated slanderers, backbiters, tale-bearers, &c., for all these are of their father, the devil, and his lusts they will do.

Sober.] See on verse 2.

Faithful in all things.] The deaconesses had much to do among the poor, and especially among poor women, in dispensing the bounty of the Church.

Verse 12. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife.] See on verses 2, 4, and 5.

Verse 13. That have used the office of a deacon well.] It seems to have been a practice dictated by common sense, that the most grave and steady of the believers, should be employed as deacons; the most experienced and zealous of the deacons should be raised to the rank of elders; and the most able and pious of the elders be consecrated bishops. As to a bishop of bishops, that age did not know such. The Pope of Rome was the first who took this title. Deacon, presbyter, and bishop, existed in the Apostolic Church, and may therefore be considered of divine origin.

Verse 14. These things write I.] That is: I write only these things, because I hope to come unto thee shortly.

Verse 15. But if I tarry long.] That is: Notwithstanding I hope to come to thee shortly, and therefore do not feel the necessity of writing at large; yet, lest I should be delayed, I write what I judge necessary to direct thy conduct in the Church of God.

The house of God.] This is spoken in allusion to the ancient tabernacle, which was God's house, and in which the symbol of the Divine Majesty dwelt. So the Christian Church is God's house, and every believer is a habitation of God through the Spirit.

The church of the living God.] The assembly in which God lives and works; each member of which is a living stone, all of whom, properly united among themselves, grow up unto a holy temple in the Lord.

The pillar and ground of the truth.] To what, or to whom, does the pillar and ground of the truth refer?

1. Some say to Timothy, who is called the pillar, &c., because left there to support and defend the truth of God against false doctrines and false teachers; and is so called for the same reason that Peter, James, and John are said to be pillars, i. e., supporters of the truth of God. Gal. ii. 9.

2. Others suppose that the pillar and ground of the truth is spoken of God; and that who is, should be supplied as referring immediately to God, just before. How God may be fitly termed the pillar and ground of truth, requires no explanation.

8. Others think that the words should be understood of the CHURCH of the living God; and in this case the relative which must be repeated immediately after the church. The house of God is the church of the living God; WHICH (church) is the pillar and ground of the truth. That is: The full revelation of God's truth is in the Christian Church.

4. Lastly, others refer the whole to the mystery of godliness; and translate the clause thus: The mystery of godliness is the pillar and ground of the truth; and, without controversy, a great thing. This gives a very good sense, but is not much favoured by the arrangement of the words in the original.

Verse 16. And, without controversy] And confessedly, by general consent, it is a thing which no man can or ought to dispute; any phrase of this kind expresses the meaning of the original.

God was manifest in the flesh] Instead of God, several MSS., Versions, and Fathers, have who or which. And this is generally referred to the word mystery; Great is the mystery of godliness, WHICH was manifest in the flesh.

The enemies of the deity of Christ have been at as much pains to destroy the evidence afforded by the common reading in support of this doctrine as if this text were the only one by which it can be supported; they must be aware that John i. 1, and 14, proclaim the same truth; and that in those verses there is no authority to doubt the genuineness of the reading. We read, therefore, God was manifested in the flesh, and I cannot see what good sense can be taken out of the GOSPEL was manifested in the flesh; or, the mystery of godliness was manifested in the flesh. [But there is no reason for referring the relation to the mystery of godliness. It may be the relation to "an omitted, though easily recognized antecedent, viz., Christ" Ellicot and others think that the passage is quoted from some well known hymn, or Confession of Faith.]

Justified in the Spirit] By the miracles which were wrought by the apostle in and through the name of Jesus; as well as by his resurrection from the dead, through the energy of the Holy Ghost, by which he was proved to be the Son of God with power.

Seen of angels] Some understand, not those celestial or infernal beings commonly called angels, but apostles and other persons who became messengers, to carry far and wide and attest the truth of his resurrection from the dead. If, however, we take the word seen, in its Jewish acceptation, for made known, we may here retain the term angels in its common acceptation; for it is certain that, previously to our Lord's ascension to heaven, these holy beings could have little knowledge of the necessity, reasons, and economy of human salvation; nor of the nature of Christ as God and man. St. Peter informs us that the angels desire to look into these things, 1 Pet. i. 12. And St. Paul says the same thing, Eph. iii. 9, 10, when speaking of the revelation of the gospel plan of salvation.

Preached unto the Gentiles] This was one grand part of the mystery which had been hidden in God, that the Gentiles should be made fellow-heirs with the Jews, and be admitted into the kingdom of God.

Believed on in the world] This is a most striking part of the mystery of godliness, that one who was crucified as a malefactor, and whose kingdom is not of this world, and whose doctrines are opposed to all the sinful propensities of the human heart, should, wherever his gospel is preached, be acknowledged as the only Saviour of sinners, and the Judge of quick and dead!

Received up into glory.] Even that human nature which he took of the Virgin Mary was raised, not only from the grave, but taken up into glory, and this in the most visible and palpable manner.

CHAPTER IV.

Apostasy from the true faith predicted, and in what that apostasy should consist, 1-5. Exhortations to Timothy to teach the truth, 6. To avoid old wives' fables; to exercise himself to godliness, 7, 8. To labour, command, and teach, 9, 10, 11. To act so that none might despise his youth, 12. To give attendance to reading and preaching, 13, 14. To give up himself wholly to the divine work, 15. And so doing he should both save himself and them that heard him, 16.

NOW the Spirit ^a speaketh expressly, that ^b in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed ^c to seducing spirits, ^d and doctrines of devils;

2 ^e Speaking lies in hypocrisy; ^f having their conscience seared with a hot iron;

Verse 1. Now the Spirit speaketh expressly] Manifestly, openly. It is very likely that the apostle refers here to a prophecy then furnished by the Holy Ghost, and probably immediately after he had written the words in the preceding verses.

In the latter times] This does not necessarily imply the last ages of the world, but any times consequent to those in which the church then lived.

Depart from the faith] They will apostatise from the faith, i.e., from Christianity; renouncing the whole system in effect, by bringing in doctrines which render its essential truths null and void, or denying and renouncing such doctrines as are essential to Christianity as a system of salvation.

3 ^g Forbidding to marry, ^h and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created ⁱ to be received ^j with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth.

Giving heed to seducing spirits] Many MSS. and the chief of the Fathers have spirits of deceit; which is much more emphatic than the common reading. Deception has her spirits, emissaries of every kind, which she employs to darken the hearts and destroy the souls of men. Pretenders to inspiration, and false teachers of every kind, belong to this class.

And doctrines of devils] Demons; either meaning fallen spirits, or dead men, spectres, &c., or doctrines inspired by Satan relative to these, by which he secures his own interest, and provides for his own worship.

Verse 2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy] Persons pretending, not only to divine inspiration, but also to extraordinary de-greets of holiness, self-denial, mortification, &c., in order to accredit the lies and false doctrines which they taught.

Having their conscience seared with a hot iron] They bear the marks of their hypocrisy as evidently and as indelibly in their conscience in the sight of God, as those who have been cauterized for their crimes do in their bodies in the sight of men.

Verse 3. Forbidding to marry] This sentiment was held by the Essenes, a religious sect among the Jews; and we know that it is a favourite opinion among the Romanists, who oblige all their clergy to live a single life by a vow of continency.

To abstain from meats] Both among the heathens, Jews, and Romanists, certain meats were prohibited; some always, others at particular times. This the apostle informs us was directly contrary to the original design of God; and says that those who know the truth, know this.

Verse 4. For every creature of God is good] That is: Every creature which God has made for man's nourishment is good for that purpose, and to be thankfully received whenever necessary for the support of human life; and nothing of that sort is at any time to be rejected or despised.

Verse 5. For it is sanctified by the word of God] By the command of God; probably referring to Gen. i. 29. And when man is about to use it, he is to sanctify or set it apart to that use by prayer to God, 1. That it may answer the end to us for which it was designed; 2. That we may use it with gratitude and moderation; 3. That all the strength derived from it may be devoted to God, in filling up the duties of those situations in which his providence has placed us. Those who thank not God for their food, and pray not for his blessing in the use of it, are unworthy even of a morsel of bread, and of the breath they breathe.

Verse 6. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things] Show the Church that, even now, there is danger of this apostasy: put them on their guard against it; for the forewarned are half armed.

Nourished up in the words of faith] The apostle seems to allude here to Timothy's Christian education.

Whereunto thou hast attained.] Which thou hast thoroughly understood.

Verse 7. But refuse profane and old wives' fables] This seems to refer particularly to the Jews, whose Talmudical writings are stuffed with the most ridiculous and profane fables that ever disgraced the human intellect. It may with equal propriety be applied to the Legends of the Romish Church.

Exercise thyself rather unto godliness.] The apostle alludes here to the gymnastic exercises among the Greeks, which were intended as a preparation for their contests at the public games. They did this in order to obtain a corruptible or fading crown, i.e., a chaplet of leaves, which was the reward of those who conquered in those games; Timothy was to exercise himself unto godliness, that he might be prepared for the kingdom of heaven, and there receive a crown that fadeth not away. See the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24, &c.

Verse 8. For bodily exercise profiteth little] These gymnastic exercises, so highly esteemed among the Greeks, are 15 Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear ^sto all.

16 ^tTake heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both ^usave thyself, and ^vthem that hear thee.

but little worth; they are but of short duration; they refer only to this life, and to the applause of men. [The reference seems to be to an ascetic training of the body.]

But godliness is profitable unto all things.] By godliness we are to understand every thing that the Christian religion either promises or prescribes: the life of God in the soul of man; and the glory of God is the object and end of that life.

Having promise of the life that now is] The man that fears, loves, and serves God, has God's blessing all through life. His religion saves him from all those excesses, both in action and passion, which sap the foundations of life, and render existence itself often a burden. The peace and love of God in the heart produce a serenity and calm which cause the lamp of life to burn clear, strong, and permanent. Evil and disorderly passions obscure and stifle the vital spark. Every truly religious man extracts the uttermost good out of life itself, and through the divine blessing gets the uttermost good that is in life; and, what is better than all, acquires a full preparation here below for an eternal life of glory above.

Verse 9. This is a faithful saying] The truth of this doctrine none need doubt; and every man has it in his power to put this to the proof.

Verse 10. For therefore we both labour] Here he shows that his meaning was not that the followers of God should enjoy worldly prosperity and exemption from natural evils.

Who is the Saviour of all men] Who has provided salvation for the whole human race, and has freely offered it to them in his word and by his Spirit.

Specially of those that believe.] What God intends for ALL, he actually gives to them that believe in Christ, who died for the sins of the world, and tasted death for every man. As all have been purchased by his blood, so all may believe; and consequently all may be saved. Those that perish, perish through their own fault.

Verse 11. These things command and teach.] Let it be the sum and substance of thy preaching, that true religion is profitable for both worlds; that vice destroys both body and soul; that Christ tasted death for every man; and that he saves to the uttermost all them that believe in his name.

Verse 12. Let no man despise thy youth] Act with all the gravity and decorum which become thy situation in the church. Boyish playfulness ill becomes a minister of the gospel, whatever his age may be.

Be thou an example of the believers] It is natural for the flock to follow the shepherd; if he go wrong, they will go wrong also.

In word] In doctrine; teach nothing but the truth of God, because nothing but that will save souls.

In conversation] In the whole of thy conduct in every department which thou fillest, in all thy domestic as well as public relations, Behave thyself well.

In charity] In love to God and man; show that this is the principle and motive of all thy conduct.

In spirit] In the manner and disposition in which thou dost all things.

In faith] This word is probably taken here for fidelity, a sense which it often bears in the New Testament. It cannot mean doctrine, for that has been referred to before. Fidelity consists in honestly keeping, preserving, and delivering up when required, whatever is intrusted to our care; and also in improving whatever is delivered in trust for that purpose.

In purity.] Chastity of body and mind; a direction peculiarly necessary for a young minister, who has more temptations to break its rules than perhaps any other person.

Verse 13. Give attendance to reading] The books of the Old Testament were probably what he intended; these testified of Jesus, and by these he could either convince or confound the Jews. But, whether was the reading of these to be public or private? Probably both.

As to other books, there were not many at that time that could be of much use to a Christian minister. In those days the great business of the preacher was to bring forward the grand facts of Christianity, to prove these, and to show that all had happened according to the prediction of the prophets; and from these to show the work of God in the heart, and the evidence of that work in a holy life.

Verse 14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee] The word here must refer to the gifts and graces of the Divine Spirit, which Timothy received when set apart to the work of an evangelist by the imposition of St. Paul's hands, 2 Tim. i. 6, and by that of the presbytery or eldership; for it most evidently appears, from the verse and that above quoted, that he received this double imposition, not probably at different times, but on one and the same occasion. These very gifts and graces might be improved; and we have reason to believe, if not improved, would be withdrawn by the great head of the church.

Given thee by prophecy] When apostles laid their hands on men, they ordinarily received the Holy Spirit with this imposition. This may be what the apostle calls to the remembrance of Timothy, when he tells him not to neglect what he had received, nor the purpose for which he had received it.

Verse 15. Meditate upon these things] Revolve them frequently in thy mind; consider deeply their nature and importance; get them deeply fastened in thy heart, and let all thy conduct flow from this inward feeling and conviction. Let the nature, reasons, and motives of thy ministry, be ever in the view of thy heart and conscience.

Give thyself wholly to them] Be thou in these things. Occupy thyself wholly with them; make them not only thy chief but thy sole concern. Thou art called to save thy own soul, and the souls of them that hear thee; and God has given thee the divine gifts for this and no other purpose. To this let all thy reading and study be directed; this is thy great business, and thou must perform it as the servant and steward of the Lord.

That thy profiting may appear to all] By being made a universal blessing; convincing and converting sinners; and building up the Church of God on its most holy faith.

Verse 16. Take heed unto thyself] See that the life of God remains, and the work of God prospers in thine own soul. Take heed to thy doctrine, that the matter be pure and orthodox; that thou teach nothing for truth but what God has revealed.

Continue in them] i.e., In taking heed to thyself and thy doctrine; for this must be thy continual study. Without this, the divine influence shall recede from thy heart, and the divine gift from thy intellect; and, like Samson shorn of his strength, thou wilt soon become as another man, as any common man: thy power will depart from thee, and thou shalt be no longer able to persuade; the unction shall depart from thee, and, destitute of spiritual feeling thyself, thou shalt not be able to cause others to feel. Take the apostle's advice, and thou shalt save thy own soul, and the souls of them that hear thee.

2 The elder women as mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity.

* Lev. xix. 32.—b Ver. 5, 16.—c Or, kindness.

Verse 1. Rebuke not an elder] That is, an elderly person; for the word is here taken in its natural sense, and signifies one advanced in years. There are but few cases in which it at all becomes a young man to reprove an old man, and especially one who is a father in the Church. If such a one does wrong, or gets out of the way, he should be entreated as a father, with great caution and respect. To this, at least, his age entitles him.

The younger men as brethren] Showing humility, and arrogating nothing to thyself on account of thy office. Feel for them as thou oughtest to feel for thy own brethren.

Verse 2. The elder women as mothers] Treating them with the respect due to their age.

The younger as sisters] Feel for every member of the Church, old and young, male and female; consider them as fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters; treat them all with 3 Honour widows ^b that are widows indeed.

gentleness; and labour to keep them in, not to expel them from, the Church.

With all purity.] With all chastity.

Verse 3. Honour widows that are widows indeed.] One meaning of the word to honour, is to support, sustain, &c., Matt. xv. 4, 5; and here it is most obviously to be taken in this sense. Provide for those widows especially which are widows indeed—persons truly destitute, being aged and helpless, and having neither children nor friends to take care of them, and who behave as becometh their destitute state. But see the note on verse 10.

Verse 4. But if any widow have children or nephews] This shows that widows indeed are those that have neither children nor nephews, i.e., no relatives that either will or can help them, or no near relatives alive.

Let them learn first to shew piety at home] Let these children and nephews provide for their aged or helpless parents or relatives, and not burden the Church with them while they are able to support them.

And to requite their parents] Let them learn to give benefit for benefit. Your parents supported and nourished you when you were young and helpless; you ought therefore to support them when they are old and destitute. This is called showing piety; and there is doubtless an allusion to the fifth commandment: Honour thy father and thy mother—provide for them in their old age and afflictions; God commands this.

Verse 5. And desolate] Left entirely alone—having neither children nor relatives to take care of her.

Trusteth in God] Finding she has no other helper, she continues in prayer and supplication, that she may derive that from God which, in the course of his providence, he has deprived her of among men.

Verse 6. But she that liveth in pleasure] She that liveth delicately—voluptuously indulging herself with dainties; it does not indicate grossly criminal pleasures; but simply means one who indulges herself in good eating and drinking, pampering her body at the expense of her mind.

Is dead while she liveth.] No purpose of life is answered by the existence of such a person.

Verse 7. That they may be blameless.] The words are not spoken of the widows only, but of the church or its officers; it cannot be restricted to the widows, for the adjective is both of the masculine and feminine gender.

Verse 8. But if any provide not for his own] His own people or relatives.

Those of his own house] That is, his own family, or a poor widow or relative that lives under his roof.

Hath denied the faith] The Christian religion, which strongly inculcates love and benevolence to all mankind.

Is worse than an infidel.] For what are called the dictates of nature lead men to feel for and provide for their own families.

Verse 9. Taken into the number] Let her not be taken into the list of those for which the church must provide. But some think that the apostle means the list of those who were deaconesses in the church; and that no widow was to be admitted into that rank who did not answer to the following character. See on ver. 10.

Under threescore years] As it might be supposed that, previously to this age, they might be able to do something towards their own support. See on ver. 10.

Having been the wife of one man] Having lived in conjugal fidelity with her husband; or having had but one husband at a time; or, according to others, having never been but once married.

Verse 10. Well reported of for good works] Numbers being able to bear testimony, as the word implies, that she has not only avoided all sin, but that she has walked according to the testimony of God.

Brought up children] The words brought up may refer to the children of others, who were educated in the Christian faith by pious Christian women.

Washed the saints' feet.] This was an office of humanity shown to all strangers and travellers in the Eastern countries, who, either walking barefoot, or having only a sort of sole to defend the foot, needed washing when they came to their journey's end.

Diligently followed every good work.] In a word, if she have been altogether a Christian, living according to the precepts of the gospel, and doing the Lord's work with all her heart, soul, and strength.

Verse 11. But the younger widows refuse] Do not admit those into this office who are under sixty years of age. Probably those who were received into such a list promised to abide in their widowhood. But as young or comparatively young women might have both occasion and temptations to re-marry, and so break their engagement to Christ, they should not be admitted. Not that the apostle condemns their re-marrying as a crime in itself, but because it was contrary to their engagement. See on verse 14.

Wax wanton] The metaphor taken from a pampered horse, from whose mouth the rein has been removed, so that there is nothing to check or confine him.

Verse 12. Having damnation] It is likely that he refers here to some promise or engagement which they made when taken on the list already mentioned, and now they have the guilt of having violated that promise; this is the condemnation of which the apostle speaks.

They have cast off their first faith.] By pledging their fidelity to a husband they have cast off their fidelity to Christ, as a married life and their previous engagement are incompatible.

Verse 13. And withal they learn to be idle] They do not love work, and they will not work.

Wandering about from house to house] Gadding, gossiping; never contented with home; always visiting.

And not only idle] If it went no farther, this would be intolerable; but they are tattlers—tale-bearers; whisperers; light, trifling persons; all noise and no work.

Busy-bodies] Persons who meddle with the concerns of others; who mind every one's business but their own.

Speaking things which they ought not.] Lies, slanders, calumnies; backbiting their neighbours, and everywhere sowing the seed of dissension.

Verse 14. I will therefore that the younger women marry] As the preceding discourse has been about the younger widows, and this is an inference from it; it is most evident that by the younger women the apostle means the young widows. Here the apostle, so far from forbidding second marriages, positively enjoins, or at least recommends them. And what man of sense could have done otherwise in the cases he mentions?

The adversary] Any person, whether Jew or Gentile, who might be watching for an occasion to reproach, through the misconduct of its professors, the cause of Christianity.

Verse 15. For some are already turned aside] Some of these young widows, for he appears to be still treating of them, are turned aside to idolatry, to follow Satan instead of Christ. Slight deviations, in the first instance, from a right line, may lead at last to an infinite distance from Christ.

Verse 16. If any man or woman that believeth] If any Christian man or woman have poor widows, which are their relatives, let them relieve them—provide them with the necessities of life, and not burden the church with their maintenance, that the funds may be spared for the support of those widows who are employed in its service, teaching children, visiting the sick, &c. &c.

Verse 17. Let the elders that rule well] Elder is probably here the name of an ecclesiastical officer, similar to what we now term presbyter.

Double honour] Almost every critic of note allows that the original word here signifies reward, stipend, wages. Let him have a double or a larger salary who rules well; and why? Because in the discharge of his office he must be at expense, in proportion to his diligence, in visiting and relieving the sick, in lodging and providing for strangers; in a word, in his being given to hospitality, which was required of every bishop or presbyter.

Especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.] Those who not only preach publicly, but instruct privately, catechise, &c.

Verse 18. The scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox] This is a manifest proof that by honour, in the preceding verse, the apostle means salary or wages. The maintenance of every man in the church should be in proportion to his own labour, and the necessities of his family. He that does no work should have no wages. In the Church of Christ there never can be a sinecure.

Verse 19. Against an elder] Be very cautious of receiving evil reports against those whose business it is to preach to others, and correct their vices. Do not consider an elder as guilty of any alleged crime, unless it be proved by two or three witnesses. The reason of this difference is evident: those whose business it is to correct others will usually have many enemies; great caution, therefore, should be used in admitting accusations against such persons.

Verse 20. Them that sin rebuke before all] That is, before the members of the church; which was the custom of the Jews in their synagogues.

That others also may fear.] That is the grand object of church censures, to reclaim the transgressors, and to give warning to others.

Verse 21. I charge thee before God] The word elect, applied to the angels here, is supposed to distinguish those who stood, when others fell from their first estate. Perhaps, however, there is nothing else meant than the angels that are chosen out from among others, by the Lord himself, to be ministering servants to the church.

Without preferring one before another] Without prejudice. Promote no man's cause; make not up thy mind on any case, till thou hast weighed both sides, and heard both parties, with their respective witnesses; and then act im-things, 'without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

22 'Lay hands suddenly on no man, 'neither be partaker of other men's sins: keep thyself pure.

23 Drink no longer water, but use a little wine 'for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities.

24 'Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after.

25 Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand; 'and they that are otherwise cannot be hid.

iv. 1.—^b Or, without prejudice. Acts vi. 6. xiii. 3. Ch. iv. 14. 2 Tim. i. 6.—^c 2 John 11.—^d Ps. civ. 15.—^e Gal. v. 19. Rev. xiv. 13.—^f Matt. vii. 17-20.

partially, as the matter may appear to be proved. Accepting the persons of the rich, in ecclesiastical matters, has been a source of corruption in Christianity. With some ministers the show of piety in a rich man goes farther than the soundest Christian experience in the poor.

Verse 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man] Do not hastily appoint any person to the sacred ministry; let the person be well proved before he receives the imposition of hands. Some understand this of laying hands on the sick.

Neither be partaker of other men's sins] It is a sin for any improper person to thrust himself into the sacred office; and he partakes of that sin who introduces, helps him forward, or sanctions him in it.

Keep thyself pure.] From this and every other evil.

Verse 23. Drink no longer water, but use a little wine] As Timothy's life was of great consequence to the Church of God at Ephesus, it was not unworthy of the Spirit of God to give the direction in the text, and to mingle it immediately with what some have called more solemn and important advice. 1. It was necessary that the work should be done in the Church at Ephesus which the apostle appointed to Timothy. 2. There was no person at Ephesus fit to do this work but Timothy. 3. Timothy could not continue to do it if he followed his present mode of abstemiousness. 4. It was necessary, therefore, that he should receive direction from divine authority relative to the preservation of his life, and consequently the continuation of his usefulness, as it is not likely that a minor authority would have weighed with him.

Verse 24. Some men's sins are open beforehand] In appointing men to sacred offices in the Church, among the candidates, Timothy would find, 1. Some of whom he knew nothing, but only that they professed Christianity; let such be tried before they are appointed. 2. Some of whose faith and piety he had the fullest knowledge, and whose usefulness in the Church was well known. 3. Some whose lives were not at all or but partially reformed, who were still unchanged in their hearts, and unholy in their lives. The sins of these latter were known to all; they go before to judgment; with them he could have no difficulty. With the first class he must have more difficulty; there might have been hypocrites among them whose sins could not be known till after they were brought into the sacred office. The characters of all should be fully investigated. The sins of some, before this investigation, might be so manifest as to lead at once to condemnation. The sins of others might be found out after, or in consequence of, this investigation; and those that were otherwise could not be long hid from his knowledge, or the knowledge of the Church. On all these accounts the exhortation is necessary: Lay hands suddenly on no man.

Verse 25. Likewise also the good works of some] Though those who are very holy and very useful in the Church, cannot be unknown, yet there are others not less holy who need to be brought forward; who do much good in private; and their character and their good works are not fully known till after diligent inquiry. These are they who do not let their left hand know what their right hand doeth.

CHAPTER VI.

Of the duty of servants, 1, 2. Of false teachers who suppose gain to be godliness, 3-5. Of true godliness and contentment, 6-8. Of those, and their dangerous state, who determine to be rich; and of the love of money, 9, 10. Timothy is exhorted to fight the good fight of faith, and to keep the charge delivered to him, 11-14. A sublime description of the majesty of God, 15, 16. How the rich should behave themselves; and the use they should make of their property, 17-19. Timothy is once more exhorted to keep what was committed to his trust; and to avoid profane babblings, through which some have erred from the faith, 20, 21.

LET as many ^aservants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honour, ^b that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed.

2 And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them, ^c because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are ^d faithful and beloved, partakers of the benefit. ^e These things teach and exhort.

3 If any man ^fteach otherwise, and consent ^g not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^h and to the doctrine which is according to godliness;

4 He is ⁱproud, ^jknowing nothing, but ^kdoting about ^lquestions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings,

^a Eph. vi. 5. Col. iii. 22. Tit. ii. 9. 1 Pet. ii. 18.—^b Isa. lvi. 5. Rom. ii. 24. Tit. ii. 5, 8.—^c Col. iv. 1.—^d Or, believing.—^e Ch. iv. 11.—^f Ch. i. 3.—^g Ch. i. 10. 2 Tim. i. 13. iv. 3. Ch. i. 6.—² Or, gallings one of another.—² Tim. iii. 8.—³ Tit. i. 11. 2 Pet. ii. 3.—⁴ Rom.

Verse 1. Let as many servants as are under the yoke] The word here means slaves converted to the Christian faith; and the yoke is the state of slavery; and by masters, despots, we are to understand the heathen masters of those Christianized slaves. Even these are commanded to treat their masters with all honour and respect, that the name of God, by which they were called, and the doctrine of God, Christianity, which they had professed, might not be evil spoken of in consequence of their improper conduct. The civil state in which a man was before his conversion is not altered by that conversion; nor does the grace of God absolve him from any claims which either the state or his neighbour may have on him.

Let them not despise them] Supposing themselves to be their equals, because they are their brethren in Christ; for, although all are equal as to their spiritual privileges and state, yet there still continues, in the order of God's providence, a great disparity in their station: the master must ever be in this sense superior to the servant.

But rather do them service] Obey them the more cheerfully, because they are faithful and beloved; faithful to God's grace, beloved by him and his true followers.

Partakers of the benefit.] Joint partakers of the benefit. This is generally understood as referring to the master's participation in the services of his slaves. Others think that benefit here refers to the grace of the gospel, the common salvation of believing masters and slaves. [This view however has no weight.]

Verse 3. If any man teach otherwise] It appears that there were teachers of a different kind in the Church, a sort of religious levellers, who preached that the converted servant had as much right to the master's service as the master had to his. Teachers of this kind have been in vogue long since the days of Paul and Timothy.

And consent not to wholesome words] Healing doctrines—doctrines which give nourishment and health to the soul, which is the true character of all the doctrines taught by our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 4. He is proud] He is blown up, or inflated with a vain opinion of his own knowledge.

Doting about questions] It is evident that the apostle has the Judaizing teachers in view, who were ever, in questions of theology, straining out a gnat, and swallowing a camel.

5 ^aPerverse ^bdisputings of ^cmen of corrupt minds, and destitute of the truth, ^dsupposing that gain is godliness: ^efrom such withdraw thyself.

6 But ^fgodliness with contentment is great gain.

7 For ^gwe brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out.

8 And ^hhaving food and raiment, let us be therewith content.

9 But ⁱthey that will be rich fall into temptation ^jand a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, ^kwhich drown men in destruction and perdition.

10 ^lFor the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have ^merred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

11 ⁿBut thou, ^oO man of God, flee these things;

Strifes of words] Logomachies; verbal contentions; splitting hairs. In this sort of sublimenonsense the works of the Jewish rabbins abound.

Whereof cometh envy, strife, &c.] Most controversialists have succeeded in getting their own tempers soured, and in irritating their opponents. Indeed, truth seems rarely to be the object of their pursuit; they labour to accredit their own party by abusing and defaming others; from generals they often descend to particulars; and then personal abuse is the order of the day. Is it not strange that Christians either cannot or will not see this?

Verse 5. Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds] Disputations that cannot be settled, because their partizans will not listen to the truth because their minds are corrupt.

Supposing that gain is godliness] Professing religion only for the sake of secular profit; defending their own cause for the emoluments it produced; and having no respect to another world. [The true meaning is, supposing that godliness is a source of gain.]

From such withdraw thyself.] This clause is probably spurious.

Verse 6. But godliness with contentment is great gain.] The word godliness here, and in several other places of this epistle, signifies the true religion, Christianity; and the word contentment signifies a competency, a sufficiency; that measure or portion of secular things which is necessary for the support of life, while the great work of regeneration is carrying on in the soul.

Verse 7. We brought nothing into this world] All the Greek and Latin poets, and especially the stoic philosophers, are full of such sentiments.

Verse 8. Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content.] Let us consider this a competency.

The word which we translate raiment, signifies covering in general; and here means house or lodging, as well as clothing.

Verse 9. But they that will be rich] The words are emphatic, and refer to persons who are determined to get riches; who make this their object and aim in life; who live to get money; who get all they can, save all they can, and keep all they get.

Fall into temptation and a snare] Of the devil, is added by some MSS. Versions, and many of the Fathers. It is in consequence of the temptation of the devil that they and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

12 *Fight the good fight of faith, ^blay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, ^cand hast professed a good profession before many witnesses.

13 ^dI give thee charge in the sight of God, ^ewho quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, ^fwho before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good ^gconfession; have determined to be rich; this temptation once received, others quickly succeed: and when they have swallowed down the temptation to the thing, then they drink in a thousand temptations to the means; and all these lead them into an unforeseen and concealed trap.

And into many foolish and hurtful lusts.] The whole conduct of such a person is a tissue of folly; scraping, gathering, and heaping up riches, and scarcely affording to take the necessities of life out of them for himself. The apostle considers these persons like mariners in a storm; by the concurrence of winds, waves, and tide, they are violently driven among the rocks, the vessel is dashed to pieces, and in a moment they are all engulfed in the great deep! Such is the lot and unavoidable catastrophe of them that will be rich, even though they should strive to accomplish their desires by means the most rigidly honest.

Verse 10. The love of money is the root of all evil.] Perhaps it would be better to translate, of all these evils, i.e., the evils enumerated above; for it cannot be true that the love of money is the root of all evil. [The absence of the article in the original warrants the rendering, The love of money is a root of all evil.]

While some coveted after.] Insatiably desiring.

Have erred from the faith.] Have totally erred—have made a most fatal and ruinous departure from the religion of Christ.

And pierced themselves through with many sorrows.] The word signifies to be transfixed in every part; and is an allusion to one of those snares, mentioned ver. 9, where a hole is dug in the earth, and filled full of sharp stakes, and, being slightly covered over with turf, is not perceived; and whatever steps on it falls in, and is pierced through and through with these sharp stakes, the many torments, mentioned by the apostle.

Verse 11. But thou, O man of God.] Even thou art not out of the reach of the love of money. How many of the ministers of religion have been ruined by this! And how much has religion itself suffered by their love of money!

Follow after righteousness.] Justice and uprightness in all thy dealings with men. Godliness—a thorough conformity to the image of God and mind of Christ. Faith in Jesus, and in all that he has spoken; and fidelity to the talents thou hast received, and the office with which thou art intrusted.

Love.] To God and all mankind. Patience in all trials and afflictions.

Meekness.] Bearing up with an even mind under all adversities and contradictions.

Verse 12. Fight the good fight of faith.] “Agonize the good agony.” Thou hast a contest to sustain in which thy honour, thy life, thy soul, are at stake.

Lay hold on eternal life.] All this is in allusion to the exercises in the public Grecian Games.

Whereunto thou art also called.] The allusion to the public games is still carried on: Thou hast been called into this palestra; thou hast been accepted as one proper to enter the lists with any antagonists that may offer; in the presence of many witnesses thou hast taken the necessary engagements upon thee, and submitted to be governed by the laws of the stadium; many eyes are upon thee, to see whether thou wilt fight manfully, and be faithful.

Verse 13. Who quickeneth all things.] God, who is the blessed and only Potentate, ¹the King of kings, and Lord of lords;

16 ^hWho only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; ⁱwhom no man hath seen nor can see: ^mto whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen.

17 Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, ⁿnor trust in ^ouncertain riches, but in the ^qliving God, ^rwho giveth us richly all things to enjoy; fountain of life, and who is the resurrection; and who will raise thee up at the last day to a life of ineffable glory, if thou be faithful unto death. And should thy life fall a sacrifice to the performance of thy duty, all will be safe; for thy life is hid with Christ in God, and when he who is thy life shall appear, then shalt thou also appear with him in glory!

A good confession.] See John xviii. 36, 37; and Mark xiv. 61, 62.

Verse 14. That thou keep this commandment without spot.] Two things are mentioned here: 1. That the commandment itself—the whole doctrine of Christ, should be kept entire. 2. That his life should be agreeable to that doctrine.

Verse 15. Which in his times he shall shew.] Jesus will appear in the most proper time; the time which the infinite God in his wisdom has appointed for the second coming of his Son.

The blessed and only Potentate.] Potentate is applied to secular governors; but none of these can be styled the happy and only One; the King of kings or the King over all kings; the Lord over all lords or rulers. These are titles which could not be given to any mortals.

Verse 16. Who only hath immortality.] All beings that are not eternal must be mutable; but there can be only one eternal Being, that is God; and he only can have immortality.

Dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto.] Inhabiting unapproachable light. Such is the excessive glory of God; that neither angel nor man can approach it.

Whom no man hath seen nor can see.] Moses himself could only see the symbol of the divine presence; but the face of God no man could ever see.

To whom.] As the author of being, and the dispenser of all good, be ascribed honour and power—the sole authority of all-pervading, all-superintending, all-preserving, and everlasting might.

Verse 17. Nor trust in uncertain riches.] The uncertainty of riches; things which are never at a stay, are ever changing, and seldom continue long with one proprietor; therefore, as well as on many other accounts, they are not to be trusted in.

Who giveth us richly all things to enjoy.] Who not only has all good, but dispenses it liberally for the supply of the wants of all his creatures; and he does not give merely what is necessary, but he gives what tends to render life comfortable.

Verse 18. That they do good.] The highest luxury a human being can enjoy on this side of the grave.

Ready to distribute.] That they give nothing through partiality or favour, but be guided in their distribution by the necessities of the objects presented to them; and that they confine not their charity at home, but scatter it abroad.

Willing to communicate.] Bringing every poor person into a state of fellowship with themselves.

Verse 19. Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation.] They who have not been merciful according to their power, shall not obtain mercy; they that have, shall obtain mercy: and yet the eternal life which they obtain they look for from the mercy of God through Jesus Christ.

Verse 20. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to 19 *Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may^b lay hold on eternal life.

20 O Timothy, * keep that which is committed to thy trust, ^aavoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called :

^a Matt. vi. 20. xix. 21. Luke xii. 33. xvi. 9.—^b Ver. 12.—
^c 2 Tim. i. 14. Tit. i. 9. Rev. iii. 3.

thy trust] Nothing can be more solemn and affectionate than this charge.

And oppositions of science falsely so called] Some think that the apostle has the Gnostics in view. But it is not clear that these heretics, or whatever they were, had any proper existence at this time. [The reference is probably to that false teaching which prepared the way "for the definite gnosticism of a later century."]]

Verse 21. Which some professing] Which inspired

21 Which some professing, * have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

The first to Timothy was written from Laodicea, which is the chiefest city of Phrygia Pacatiana.

knowledge some pretending to, have set up Levitical rites in opposition to the great Christian sacrifice, and consequently have erred concerning the faith—have completely mistaken the whole design of the gospel.

Grace be with thee.] May the favour and influence of God be with thee, and preserve thee from these and all other errors!

Amen.] This word, as in former cases, is wanting in the most ancient MSS.

P R E F A C E

TO THE

SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

T I M O T H Y.

THE disagreement among learned men as to the time in which this Second Epistle was written is very great; some arguing that it was written about the year 61, others referring it to the year 66. Some asserting that it is the first, in order of time, of these two epistles: and that it was written on Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. Several of the most eminent critics are of this opinion; and they have supported their sentiments with arguments of no small weight. Hammond, Lightfoot, and Lardner, as well as several critics on the continent, contend for this earlier date. Macknight and Paley take the opposite side.

From a consideration of the arguments on both sides, there seems the fullest evidence, 1. That this epistle was not written during St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. 2. That he was at Rome when he wrote this epistle. 3. That he was there a prisoner, and in such confinement as we know, from the Acts of the Apostles, he was not in during the time of his first imprisonment there. 4. That this must have been some subsequent imprisonment. 5. That as the general consent of all Christian antiquity states that St. Paul was twice imprisoned at Rome, and that from his second imprisonment he was never liberated, but was at its conclusion martyred; therefore this epistle must have been written while St. Paul was in his second imprisonment at Rome, and but a short time before his martyrdom. And as the Christian Church has generally agreed that this apostle's martyrdom took place on the 29th of June, A.D. 66, the second epistle to Timothy might have been written some time towards the end of the spring, or beginning of summer of that year. It is supposed that St. Paul went from Crete to Rome, about the end of the year 65, on hearing of the persecution which Nero was then carrying on against the Christians, on pretence that they had set Rome on fire: for, as he knew that the Church must be then in great tribulation, he judged that his presence would be necessary to comfort, support, and build it up. Like a true soldier of Jesus Christ, he was ever at the post of danger; and in this case he led on the Forlorn Hope.

SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO TIMOTHY.

CHAPTER I

Paul's address to Timothy, and declaration of his affection for him, 1-4. His account of the piety of Timothy's mother and grandmother, and the religious education they had given their son, 5. He exhorts him to stir up the gift of God that is in him, and not to be ashamed of the testimony of the Lord, 6-8. How God has saved them that believe; and how Christ has brought life and immortality to light by the gospel, 9, 10. The apostle's call to preach it, and the persecutions which he had been obliged in consequence to endure, 11, 12. Timothy is exhorted to hold fast the form of sound words, 13, 14. And is informed of the apostasy of several in Asia; and particularly of Phygellus and Hermogenes, 15. And of the great kindness of Onesiphorus to the apostle in his imprisonment, 16-18.

PAUL, ^aan apostle of Jesus Christ, by the will of God, according to ^bthe promise of life which is in Christ Jesus,

2 ^cTo Timothy, my dearly beloved son: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

3 ^dI thank God, ^ewhom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience, that ^fwithout ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day;

^a2 Cor. i. 1.—^bEph. iii. 6. Tit. i. 2. Heb. ix. 15.—^c1 Tim. i. 2.—^dRom. i. 8. Eph. i. 16.—^eActs xxii. 3. xxiii. 1. xxiv. 14. xxvii. 23. Rom. i. 9. Gal. i. 14.—^f1 Thess. i. 2. iii. 10.—^gCh. iv.

Verse 1. Paul, an apostle] St. Paul at once shows his office, the authority on which he held it, and the end for which it was given him. He was appointed that he might proclaim that eternal life which God had in view for mankind by the incarnation of his Son Jesus Christ, and which was the end of all the promises he had made to men, and the commandments he had delivered to all his prophets since the world began. The mention of this life was peculiarly proper in the apostle, who had now the sentence of death in himself, and who knew that he must shortly seal the truth with his blood.

Verse 3. Whom I serve from my forefathers] Being born a Jew, I was carefully educated in the knowledge of the true God, and the proper manner of worshipping him.

With pure conscience] Ever aiming to please him, even in the time when through ignorance I persecuted the church.

Without ceasing I have remembrance of thee] It is a very rare thing now in the Christian Church, that a man particularly thanks God that he is enabled to pray for others. And yet he that can do this must have an increase of that brotherly love which the second greatest commandment of God requires: Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. It is also a great blessing to be able to maintain the spirit of a pure friendship, especially through a considerable lapse of time and absence. He that can do so may well thank God

4 ^gGreatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy;

5 When I call to remembrance ^hthe unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and ⁱthy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also.

6 Wherefore I put thee in remembrance ^jthat thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

7 For ^kGod hath not given us the spirit of fear;

9, 21.—^h1 Tim. i. 5. iv. 6.—ⁱActs xvi. 1.—^j1 Thess. v. 19. 1 Tim. iv. 14.—^kRom. viii. 15.

that he is saved from that sickleness and unsteadiness of mind, which are the bane of friendships, and the reproach of many once warm-hearted friends.

Verse 4. Being mindful of thy tears] Whether the apostle refers to the affecting parting with the Ephesian Church, mentioned Acts xx. 37, or to the deep impressions made on Timothy's heart when he instructed him in the doctrine of Christ crucified, or to some interview between themselves, it is not certainly known.

Verse 5. The unfeigned faith that is in thee] Timothy had given the fullest proof of the sincerity of his conversion and of the purity of his faith.

Which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois] Luke says (Acts xvi. 1.) that Timothy's father was a Greek; consequently we may believe him to have been then in his heathen state: Paul, in mentioning the grandmother, mother, and son, passes by the father in silence; which intimates that either the father remained in his unconverted state, or was now dead. Lois and Eunice are both Grecian, and indeed heathen names; hence we are led to conclude that, although Timothy's mother was a Jewess according to St. Luke, yet she was a Grecian or Hellenist by birth. Lois, the grandmother, appears to have been the first convert to Christianity; she instructed her daughter Eunice, and both brought up Timothy in the Christian faith; so that he had a general *but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.

8 ^b Be not thou therefore ashamed of ^c the testimony of our Lord, nor of me ^d his prisoner: ^e but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God;

9 ^f Who hath saved us, and ^g called us with an holy calling, ^h not according to our works, but ⁱ according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus ^j before the world began;

10 But ^k is now made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, ^l who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel:

11 ^m Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles.

12 ⁿ For the which cause I also suffer these things: nevertheless I am not ashamed: ^o for I know whom I have ^p believed, and am persuaded that he is able to ^q keep that which I have committed unto him ^r against that day.

13 ^s Hold fast ^t the form of ^u sound words, ^v which thou hast heard of me, ^w in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

14 ^x That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost ^y which dwelleth in us.

15 This thou knowest, that ^z all they which are in Asia be ^{aa} turned away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes.

knowledge of it before he met with St. Paul at Lystra. There, it appears, the apostle was the instrument of the conversion of his heart to God; for a man may be well instructed in divine things, have a very orthodox creed, and yet his heart not be changed.

Verse 6. Stir up the gift of God, which is in thee] The gift which Timothy had received was the Holy Spirit, and through him a particular power to preach and to defend the truth. This gift is represented here under the notion of a fire which, if it be not frequently stirred up, and fresh fuel added to it, will go out.

Verse 7. God hath not given us the spirit of fear] Here is an allusion to the giving of the law on Mount Sinai. This was communicated with such terrible majesty as to engender fear in all the Israelites; even Moses on the occasion did exceedingly fear and tremble. The gospel was ushered in in a much milder manner; everything was placed on a level with the human intellect, and within reach of every human spirit. [The reference is not to the contrast between the law and the gospel; but to the courage needed by Timothy in bearing witness to the Lord. "God hath not given us the spirit of cowardice."]

Of a sound mind.] Of self-possession and government, according to some. But a sound mind implies much more; it means a clear understanding, a sound judgment, a rectified will, holy passions, heavenly tempers; in a word, the whole soul harmonized in all its powers and faculties, and completely regulated and influenced, so as to think, speak, and act aright in all things. The apostle says God has given the spirit of these things; they are not factitious; they are not assumed for times and circumstances; they are radical powers and tempers; each produced by its proper principle.

Verse 8. Be not—ashamed of the testimony] In the sight of the world there appeared to be reason why a man should be ashamed of this, ashamed of him who was crucified as a malefactor; but when this gospel became the power of God to the salvation of every one that believed, it was a subject to exult in. Rom. i. 16.

Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel] No parent could love a child better than Paul loved Timothy; and, behold! he who could wish him nothing but what was great, honourable, and good, wishes him to be a partaker of the afflictions of the gospel! Because, to suffer for Christ, and suffer with Christ, was the highest glory to which any human being in this state could arrive. The royal way to the crown of glory is by the cross of Christ.

According to the power of God] While thou hast no more affliction than thou hast grace to sustain thee under, thou canst have no cause to complain. His load cannot be oppressive who is strengthened to bear it by the power of God.

Verse 9. Who hath saved us] From sin; the spirit of boudage, and all tormenting fear.

And called us with an holy calling] Invited us to holiness and comfort here, and to eternal glory hereafter.

Before the world began] Before the Mosaic dispensation took place, God purposed the salvation of the Gentiles by Christ Jesus; and the Mosaic dispensation was intended only as the introducer of the gospel. [The more obvious meaning is "from all eternity."]

Verse 10. Who hath abolished death] Who has counter-worked death—operated against his operations, destroyed his batteries, undersunk and destroyed his mines, and rendered all his instruments and principles of attack useless. By death here we are not to understand merely natural death, but the corruption and decomposition which take place in consequence of it; and which would be naturally endless but for the work and energy of Christ.

Brought life and immortality to light] The literal translation of the original is: He hath illustrated life and incorruption by the gospel. Life eternal, or the doctrine of life eternal, even implying the resurrection of the body, was not unknown among the Jews. Therefore the gospel could not be stated as bringing to light what certainly was in the light before that time. But this doctrine was never illustrated and demonstrated before; it existed in promise, but had never been practically exhibited.

Verse 12. I am not ashamed] Though I suffer for the gospel, I am not ashamed of the gospel; nor am I confounded, in my expectation, his grace being at all times sufficient for me.

For I know whom I have believed] I know that I cannot be confounded in my expectation; his grace being at all times sufficient, I cannot confide in him in vain.

That which I have committed unto him] This is variously understood. Some think he means his life which he had put, as it were, into the hands of Christ, in order that he might receive it again in the resurrection at the great day. Others think he means his soul. Others think that he is speaking of the gospel, which he knows will be carefully preserved by the great Head of the Church, though he shall be soon called to seal the truth with his blood. [Others, and among them the ablest critics, render the original, "the trust committed unto me."]

Verse 13. Hold fast the form of sound words] The word signifies the sketch, plan, or outline of a building, picture, &c., and here refers to the plan of salvation which the apostle had taught Timothy. No man was left to invent a religion for his own use, and after his own mind.

In faith and love] Faith credits the divine doctrines. Love reduces them all to practice.

Verse 14. That good thing] The everlasting gospel, keep by the Holy Ghost; for without a continual spiritual energy, man can do nothing.

Verse 15. All they which are in Asia] It seems as if the apostle must refer to the Asiatic Christians which were then at Rome, or had been lately there. He cannot be speaking of any general defection of the Asiatic Churches, but of those Asiatics who had professed a particular friendship for him. [The terms used in the original imply that the Asiatic defaulters were not then at Rome.]

Phygellus and Hermogenes.] These were two of the persons of whom he complains; but who they were, or what office they held, we cannot tell.

Verse 17. When he was in Rome] Onesiphorus was no doubt an Asiatic (probably an Ephesian, see below), who had frequent business at Rome. He had entertained the apostle when he was at Ephesus, and now he sought him out at Rome. Pure love feels no loads.

Verse 18. The Lord grant—that he may find mercy of the Lord] This is probably only a Hebraism for, God grant that he may here be so saved by divine grace, that in the great day he may receive the mercy of the Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

CHAPTER II.

He exhorts Timothy to constancy, fidelity, and courage; and to acquit himself as a true soldier of Jesus Christ; and patiently expect the fruit of his labours, 1-7. What the apostle's doctrine was relative to Christ, 8. He mentions his own sufferings and consolations, 9-13. What Timothy is to preach, how he is to acquit himself, and what he is to shun, 14-16. Of Hymeneus and Philetus, and their errors, 17, 18. Of the foundation of God, and its security, 19. The simile of a great house and its utensils, 20, 21. Timothy is to avoid youthful lusts, and foolish and unlearned questions, 22, 23. How he is to act in reference to false teachers, 24-26.

THOU therefore, ^a my son, ^b be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.

2 ^c And the things that thou hast heard of me ^d among many witnesses, ^e the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be ^f able to teach others also.

3 ^g Thou therefore endure hardness, ^h as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

4 ⁱ No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier.

5 And ^j if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully.

6 ^k The ^l husbandman that laboureth must be first partaker of the fruits.

7 Consider what I say; and the Lord give thee understanding in all things.

8 Remember that Jesus Christ, ^m of the seed of David, ⁿ was raised from the dead ^o according to my gospel:

9 ^p Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer, ^q even unto bonds; ^r but the word of God is not bound.

10 Therefore ^s I endure all things for the elect's sakes, ^t that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory.

11 ^u It is a faithful saying: For ^v if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him:

12 ^w If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we ^x deny him, he also will deny us:

Verse 1. Be strong in the grace] Though the genuine import of the word grace is favour, yet it often implies an active principle communicated from God; light directing how to act, and power enabling to act according to the light.

Verse 2. The things that thou hast heard of me] He seems to refer here to the doctrines delivered to him when, in the presence of many witnesses, he laid his hands upon him, see 1 Tim. vi. 12. These truths are still continued in the church, and still there are faithful men who proclaim them. But where is the uninterrupted apostolical succession? Who can tell? Probably it does not exist on the face of the world.

Verse 3. Endure hardness] The hardships and difficulties to which he must be exposed who faithfully preaches the gospel of Christ.

Verse 4. No man that warreth entangleth, &c.] He who will preach the gospel thoroughly, and wishes to give full proof of his ministry, had need to have no other work. He should be wholly in this thing, that his profiting may appear unto all.

Verse 5. If a man also strive for masteries] If a man contend in the public games—the Olympic or Isthmian Games among the Greeks, so often alluded to, and particularly explained in the notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24-26.

Is he not crowned] Though he may have conquered, except he strive lawfully—unless he enter according to the rules of the athletes, and act as these direct.

Verse 6. The husbandman that laboureth] That is: The husbandman must first till his ground before he can expect a crop; and he must till it according to the proper rules of agriculture, else he cannot have a crop. The combatant must fight and conquer, and fight according to the laws of the Agones, before he can be crowned; so the Christian minister must labour in the spiritual vineyard, and labour too under the eye and according to the direction of his Master, before he can expect that crown of righteousness that fadeth not away.

Verse 7. Consider what I say] Apply my metaphors and similitudes in a proper manner.

And the Lord give thee understanding] Consider thou properly, and God will give thee a proper understanding of all things that concern thy own peace, and the peace and prosperity of his church. Think as well as read.

Verse 9. Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil doer] This verse contains one of the proofs that this epistle was written while St. Paul was a prisoner the second time at Rome.

Verse 10. For the elect's sakes] For the sake of the Gentiles, elected by God's goodness to enjoy every privilege formerly possessed by the Jews, and, in addition to these,

II. TIMOTHY.

14 Of these things put them in remembrance, ^c charging them before the Lord ^d that they strive not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers.

15 Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

16 But ^e shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness.

17 And their word will eat as doth a ^f canker: of whom is ^g Hymeneus and Philetus;

18 Who ^h concerning the truth have erred, ⁱ saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some.

all the blessings of the gospel; the salvation of Christ here and eternal glory hereafter.

Verse 11. If we be dead with him] That is: As surely as Christ rose again from the dead, so surely shall we rise again; and if we die for him, we shall surely live again with him.

Verse 12. If we suffer—with him] These are other parts of the true doctrine which the apostle mentions above.

Verse 13. If we believe not] Should we deny the faith and apostatize, he is the same, as true to his threatenings as to his promises; he cannot deny—act contrary to himself.

Verse 14. That they strive not about words] WORDS, not things, have been a most fruitful source of contention in the Christian world; and among religious people, the principal cause of animosity has arisen from the different manner of apprehending the same term, while, in essence, both meant the same thing.

Verse 15. Study to shew thyself approved unto God] Endeavour so to cultivate and improve thy heart and mind, that thou mayest not be a reproach to him from whom thou professest to receive thy commission.

Rightly dividing the word of truth.] The word signifies, 1. Simply to cut straight, or to rectify. 2. To walk in the right way. Therefore, by rightly dividing the word of truth, we are to understand his continuing in the true doctrine, and teaching that to every person; and, according to our Lord's simile, giving each his portion of meat in due season—milk to babes, strong meat to the full grown, comfort to the disconsolate, reproof to the irregular and careless; in a word, finding out the necessities of his hearers, and preaching so as to meet those necessities.

Verse 16. Shun profane and vain babblings] The preaching of the false teachers.

Verse 17. Their word will eat as doth a canker] As a gangrene, i.e., as a mortification in the flesh, where the circulation is entirely stopped, and putrefaction takes place, which continues to corrupt all the circumjacent flesh, spreading more and more till death takes place, unless stopped by a timely and judicious application of medicine.

Verse 18. Who concerning the truth have erred] They had the truth, but erred or wandered from it.

Verse 19. The foundation of God standeth sure] The word signifies literally a foundation, and especially the foundation of a building; and, metaphorically, the building itself, and often a noble mansion or palace. In this place the apostle compares the religion of Christ to a great or noble mansion, see ver. 20. And as this religion is founded on the authority and power of the Almighty, it necessarily must stand sure and be permanent. This house has an inscription on it, for so seal is frequently understood; and this is evidently an allusion to the ancient temples. And this inscription may here be represented as being made with the seal of God, for 20 ^m But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; ⁿ and some to honour, and some to dishonour.

21 ^o If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and ^p prepared unto every good work.

22 Flee also youthful lusts; but ^q follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that ^r call on the Lord ^s out of a pure heart.

23 But ^t foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes.

24 And ^u the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, ^v apt to teach, ^w patient.

25 ^x In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves; ^y if God peradventure will give them repentance ^z to the acknowledging of the truth;

26 And that they may ^{aa} recover themselves ^{bb} out of the snare of the devil, who ^{cc} are taken captive by him at his will.

he stamps this on all things belonging to himself and his worship.

But some suppose the word rendered foundation to signify a contract or covenant by which two parties are bound to fulfil certain conditions and duties, the obligation to which each takes on him by sealing the instrument with his seal. Among the Asiatics, these seals have scarcely ever any image or figure on them, but always some very expressive inscription. The twofold inscription, i.e., one on the seal of each party, may be here alluded to; that on God's seal is, The Lord approve of them that are his. That on the seal of his followers is, Let every one who nameth the name of the Lord (every Christian) depart from iniquity. Thus each has his peculiar inscription. [This interpretation is ingenious but improbable.]

The Lord knoweth] i.e., Approves, watches over, and provides for, them that are his true followers.

Verse 20. But in a great house] As the foundation of God refers to God's building, i.e., the whole system of Christianity, so here the great house is to be understood of the same; and the different kinds of vessels mean the different teachers, as well as the different kinds of members. In this sacred house at Ephesus there were vessels of gold and silver—eminent, holy, sincere, and useful teachers and members; and also vessels of wood and of earth—false and heretical teachers, such as Hymeneus and Philetus, and their followers. There are also in such houses vessels employed, some in a more honourable, others in a less honourable, office. To these he seems also to compare the same persons.

Verse 21. If a man therefore purge himself from these] He that takes heed to his ways and to his doctrines, and walks with God, will separate himself, not only from all false doctrine, but from all wicked men, and thus be sanctified and proper to be employed by the Master in every good word and work.

Verse 22. Flee also youthful lusts] Not only all irregular and sensual desires, but pride, ambition, and above all, the lust of power, to which most men will sacrifice all other propensities, their ease, pleasure, health, &c. Timothy was now between thirty and forty years of age; the very age in which ambition and the love of power most generally prevail. Carnal pleasures are the sins of youth; ambition and the love of power the sins of middle age; covetousness and carking cares the crimes of old age.

Follow righteousness] Righteousness—whatever is just, holy, and innocent. Faith—fidelity both to God and man, improving that grace by which thy soul may be saved, and faithfully discharging the duties of thy office, that thou mayest save the souls of others. Charity—love to God and man. Peace among all the members of the church, and as far as possible with all men; but especially among those who invoke the Lord out of a pure desire to glorify his name.

Verse 25. Those that oppose] This seems to refer to those who opposed the apostle's authority; and hence the propriety of the allusion to the rebellion of Korah and his company.

If God peradventure] He was to use every means which he had reason to believe God might bless; and the apostle intimates that, bad as they were, they were not out of the reach of God's mercy.

Verse 26. And that they may recover themselves] The construction of this verse is extremely difficult, though the sense given by our translation is plain enough. [Ellicott's rendering is worthy of regard: That they may return to soberness out of the snare of the devil, though holden captive by him, to do His will, i.e., the will of God.]

CHAPTER III.

Dangerous times in the latter days, from the apostasy and wickedness of men, of whom an affecting description is given, 1-7. It shall happen to them as to Jannes and Jambres, who withstood Moses, 8, 9. The apostle speaks of his persecutions and sufferings, and shows that all those who will live a godly life must suffer persecution, 10-12, because evil men and seducers will wax worse and worse, 13. Timothy is exhorted to continue in the truths he had received, having known the scriptures from a child, 14, 15. All scripture is given by divine inspiration, 16, 17.

THIS know also, that " in the last days perilous times shall come.

Verse 1. In the last days] This often means the days of the Messiah, and is sometimes extended in its signification to the destruction of Jerusalem, as this was properly the last days of the Jewish state. But the phrase may mean any future time, whether near or distant.

Verse 2. For men shall be] There have been both teachers and people in every age of the church, and in every age of the world, to whom these words may be most legitimately applied. Both Catholics and Protestants have been lovers of their own selves, &c.; but it is probable that the apostle had some particular age in view, in which there should appear some very essential corruption of Christianity.

Lovers of their own selves] Selfish, studious of their own interest, and regardless of the welfare of all mankind.

Covetous] Lovers of money, because of the influence which riches can procure.

Boasters] Vain-glorious, self-assuming; valuing themselves beyond all others.

Proud] Airy, light, trifling persons; those who love to make a show.

Blasphemers] Those who speak impiously of God and sacred things, and injuriously of men.

Disobedient to parents] Headstrong children, whom their parents cannot persuade.

Unholy] Without piety; have no heart-reverence for God.

Verse 3. Without natural affection] Without that affection which parents bear to their young, and which the young bear to their parents.

Trucebreakers] The word means those who are bound by no promise, held by no engagement, obliged by no oath; persons who readily promise any thing, because they never intend to perform.

False accusers] Devils; but properly enough rendered false accusers, for this is a principal work of the devil. Slanderers; striving ever to ruin the characters of others.

Incontinent] Those who, having sinned away their power of self-government, want strength to govern their appetites; especially those who are slaves to uncleanness.

Fierce] Wild, impetuous, whatever is contrary to phiality and gentleness.

Despisers of those that are good] Not lovers of good men. Here is a remarkable advantage of the Greek over the English tongue, one word of the former expressing five or six of the latter.

Verse 4. Traitors] Those who deliver up to an enemy the person who has put his life in their hands.

Heady] Headstrong, precipitate, rash, inconsiderate.

High-minded] Those who are full of themselves, and empty of all good.

Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God] This is at ^a Antioch, ^b at Iconium, ^c at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but ^d out of them all the Lord delivered me.

12 Yea, and ^e all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

13 ^f But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived.

14 But ^g continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them;

^a Acts xiii. 45, 50.—^b Acts xiv. 2, 5.—^c Acts xiv. 19, &c.—^d Ps. xxxiv. 19. 2 Cor. i. 10. Ch. iv. 7.—^e Ps. xxxiv. 19. Acts xiv. 22. Matt. xvi. 24. Josh. xvii. 14. 1 Cor. xv. 19. 1 Thess. iii. 3.—

nervously and beautifully expressed in the Greek, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God, i.e., pleasure, sensual gratification, is their god; and this they love and serve; God they do not.

Verse 5. Having a form of godliness] The original word signifies a draught, sketch, or summary, and will apply well to those who have all their religion in their creed, confession of faith, catechism, bodies of divinity, &c., while destitute of the life of God in their souls; and are not only destitute of this life, but deny that such life or power is here to be experienced or known.

Verse 6. For of this sort are they] He here refers to false teachers and their insinuating manners, practising upon weak women who, seeing in them such a semblance of piety, entertain them with great eagerness, and at last become partakers with them in their impurities.

Verse 7. Ever learning] There are many professors of Christianity still who answer the above description. They hear, repeatedly hear, it may be, good sermons; but as they seldom meditate on what they hear, they derive little profit from the ordinances of God.

Verse 8. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses] This refers to the history of the Egyptian magicians, given in Exod. vii.

Men of corrupt minds] Judaizing teachers who were perverting the church with their doctrines, and loudly calling in question the authority and doctrine of the apostle.

Reprobate concerning the truth] Undiscerning or untried; they are base metal, unstamped; and should not pass current, because not standard.

Verse 9. But they shall proceed no further] Such teaching and teachers shall never be able ultimately to prevail against the truth; for the foundation of God standeth sure.

Their folly shall be manifest] False doctrine cannot prevail long where the sacred scriptures are read and studied. Error prevails only where the book of God is withheld from the people. The religion that fears the Bible is not the religion of God.

Verse 11. Persecutions—which came unto me at Antioch] The Antioch mentioned here was Antioch in Pisidia, to which place Paul and Barnabas came in their first apostolic progress, and where Paul delivered that memorable discourse which is preserved in the 13th chapter of Acts, ver. 16-43. See Acts. xiv. 5, 6, 19-21.

Verse 12. All that will live godly] He who gives himself entirely up to God, making the holy scriptures the rule of his words and actions, will be less or more reviled and persecuted.

Verse 18. Evil men and seducers shall wax worse] The 15 And that from a child thou hast known ^h the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

16 ⁱ All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness;

17 ^k That the man of God may be perfect, ^l thoroughly ^m furnished unto all good works.

word which we render seducers signifies jugglers, pretenders to magical arts; probably persons dealing in false miracles, with whom the church in all ages has been not a little disgraced.

Verse 14. But continue thou] No man, however well instructed in the things of God, or grounded in divine grace, is out of the reach of temptation, apostasy, and final ruin.

Verse 15. Able to make thee wise unto salvation] The apostle is here evidently speaking of the Jewish scriptures; and he tells us that they are able to make us wise unto salvation, provided we have faith in Jesus Christ. This is the simple use of the Old Testament.

Verse 16. All scripture is given by inspiration of God] Every writing divinely inspired is profitable for doctrine, &c. The particle and is omitted by almost all the Versions and many of the Fathers, and certainly does not agree well with the text.

The doctrine of the inspiration of the sacred writings has been a subject of much discussion, and even controversy, among Christians. There are two principal opinions on the subject: 1. That every thought and word were inspired by God, and that the writer did nothing but merely write as the Spirit dictated. 2. That God gave the whole matter, leaving the inspired writers to their own language; and hence the great variety of style and different modes of expression.

Is profitable for doctrine] To teach the will of God, and to point out Jesus Christ till he should come.

For reproof] To convince men of the truth; and to convince those who should deny it, particularly the Jews.

For correction] For restoring things to their proper uses and places, correcting false notions and mistaken views.

Instruction in righteousness] For communicating all initiatory religious knowledge; for schooling mankind. All this is perfectly true of the Jewish scriptures; and let faith in Christ Jesus be added, see ver. 15, and then all that is spoken in the following verses will be literally accomplished.

Verse 17. That the man of God] The preacher of righteousness, the minister of the gospel, the person who derives his commission from God, and always appears as his herald and servant.

May be perfect] It properly signifies an integer or whole number in arithmetic, to which nothing needs to be added to make it complete.

Thoroughly furnished] Not only complete in himself as to his integrity, religious knowledge, faith in Jesus, and love to God and man; but that he should have all those qualifications which are necessary to complete the character and insure the success of a preacher of the gospel.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle solemnly charges Timothy to be diligent, incessant, and faithful in his preaching; to watch, suffer patiently, and give full proof of his ministry, 1-5. He predicts his own approaching death, and expresses the strongest confidence of being eternally happy, 6-8. Desires Timothy to come and see him; shows that several had forsaken him, that others were gone to different districts, and that he had only Luke with him, 9-12. Desires him to bring the cloak, book, and parchments, which he had left at Troas, 13. Of Alexander the copper-smith's opposition, 14, 15. Tells Timothy how he was deserted by all when obliged to make his first defence before Nero; how God supported him, and the confidence with which he was inspired, 16-18. Salutations to different persons at Ephesus, and from different persons at Rome, 19-21. The apostolical benediction, 22.

I CHARGE thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ,^a who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom;

2 Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove,^c rebuke,^d exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine.

3 For the time will come when they will not endure^e sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears;

4 And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.

5 But watch thou in all things,^f endure afflictions, do the work of^g an evangelist,^h make full proof of thy ministry.

Verse 1. I charge thee therefore before God] Whose herald thou art; and before the Lord Jesus Christ, whose salvation thou art to proclaim, and who is coming to judge the world—all that shall be found then alive, and all that have died from the foundation of the world.

Verse 2. Preach the word] Proclaim the doctrine, the doctrine of Christ crucified for the sins of the whole world; the doctrine, that the Gentiles are invited to be fellow-heirs with the Jews, and that for Jews and Gentiles there is no salvation but by faith in Christ.

Be instant in season, out of season] Be urgent, whether the times be prosperous or adverse, whenever there is an opportunity; and when there is none, strive to make one. The Judge is at the door, and to every man eternity is at hand!

Reprove] Confute the false teachers.

Rebuke] Rebuke cuttingly and severely those who will not abandon their sins.

Exhort] Comfort the feeble-minded, the diffident, and the tempted.

And doctrine] The different modes of teaching suited to each.

Verse 3. For the time will come] There is a time coming to the church when men will not hear the practical truths of the gospel, when they will prefer speculative opinions, which either do no good to the soul, or corrupt and destroy it.

Shall they heap to themselves teachers] They will add one teacher to another, run and gad about after all, to find out those who insist not on the necessity of bearing the cross, of being crucified to the world, and of having the mind that was in Jesus.

Having itching ears] Endless curiosity, an insatiable desire of variety; and they get their ears tickled with the language and accent of the person, abandoning the good and faithful preacher for the fine speaker.

Verse 4. And shall be turned unto fables] Believe any kind of stuff and nonsense; for, as one has justly observed, 6 Forⁱ I am now ready to be offered, and the time of^m my departure is at hand.

7 I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith:

8 Henceforth there is laid up for me^a a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me^b at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

9 Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me:

10 For^c Demas hath forsaken me,^d having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia.

11 Only^e Luke is with me. Take^f Mark, and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry.

12 And^g Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus.

"Those who reject the truth are abandoned by the just judgment of God to credit the most degrading nonsense."

Verse 5. But watch thou in all things] It is possible to be overtaken in a fault, to neglect one's duty, and to lose one's soul.

Endure afflictions] Let no sufferings affright thee; nor let the dread of them either cause thee to abandon the truth, or relax in thy zeal for the salvation of men.

Do the work of an evangelist] That is: Preach Christ crucified for the sins of the whole world: for this, and this alone, is doing the work of an evangelist, or preacher of the glad tidings of peace and salvation by Christ.

Make full proof of thy ministry] Neglect no part of thy sacred function; perform faithfully all the duties of which it is composed; and do God's work in his own way and in his own Spirit.

Verse 6. For I am now ready to be offered] I am already poured out as a libation. He considers himself as on the eve of being sacrificed, and looks upon his blood as the libation which was poured on the sacrificial offering. He could not have spoken thus positively had not the sentence of death been already passed upon him.

Verse 7. I have fought a good fight] The apostle alludes to the contests at the Grecian games: I have wrestled that good wrestling—I have struggled hard, and have overcome in a most honourable cause.

I have finished my course] I have started for the prize, and have come up to the goal, outstripping all my competitors, and have gained this prize also.

I have kept the faith] I have kept the rules of the spiritual combat and race; and thus, having contended lawfully, and conquered in each exercise, I have a right to expect the prize.

Verse 8. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown] This I can claim as my due; but the crown I expect is not one of fading leaves, but a crown of righteousness; the reward which God, in his kindness, has promised to them who are faithful to the grace he has bestowed upon them.

II. TIMOTHY.

14 ^bAlexander the coppersmith did me much evil: ^cthe Lord reward him according to his works:

16 At my first answer no man stood with me, ^ebut all men forsook me: 'I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.

17 ^fNotwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; ^gthat by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered ^hout of the mouth of the lion.

The Lord, the righteous Judge] He alludes here to the empire in the Grecian games, whose office it was to declare the victor, and to give the crown.

At that day] The day of judgment; the morning of the resurrection from the dead.

Unto all them also that love his appearing.] All who live in expectation of the coming of Christ, who anticipate it with joyfulness, having buried the world and laid up all their hopes above.

Verse 9. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me] He appears to have wished Timothy to be present at his death, that he might have his faith confirmed by seeing how a Christian could die.

Verse 10. Demas hath forsaken me] Demas was with the apostle in his first imprisonment, and joins in the salutations, see Col. iv. 14, which were written when Paul was a prisoner at Rome for the first time.

Having loved this present world] Having preferred Judaism to Christianity; or having loved the Jews, and having sought their welfare in preference to that of the Gentiles. [The phrase "this present world" must not be limited to Judaism.]

Crescens to Galatia] Whether the departure of Crescens was similar to that of Demas, as intimated above, or whether he went on an evangelical embassy, we know not. Charity would hope the latter; for we can hardly suppose that Titus, who is here said to have departed to Dalmatia, had abandoned his Cretan Churches, his apostolical office, and especially his aged father and friend, now about to seal the truth with his blood! Even for Demas, as standing in this connexion, something might be said. It is not intimated that he had denied the faith, but simply that he had left the apostle and gone into Thessalonica; for which reason is given, that he loved the present world. Now, if having loved can be applied to a desire to save the souls of the Jews, and that he went into Thessalonica, where they abounded, for this very purpose, then we shall find all three—Demas, Crescens, and Titus, one at Thessalonica, another at Galatia, and the third at Dalmatia, doing the work of evangelists, visiting the churches, and converting both Jews and Gentiles. [There is unfortunately no ground for this most charitable suggestion.]

Verse 11. Only Luke is with me] This was Luke the evangelist, and writer of the Acts of the Apostles, who was always much attached to St. Paul, and it is supposed continued with him even to his martyrdom.

Take Mark, and bring him with thee] This was John Mark, the sister's son of Barnabas, who, after having wavered a little at first, became a steady, zealous, and useful man.

For he is profitable to me for the ministry.] For service; that is, he would be very useful to the apostle to minister to him in his present close confinement.

Verse 12. Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus.] For this person, see Acts xv. 4; Eph. vi. 21; Col. iv. 7.

Verse 13. The cloak that I left at Troas] By several translated bag or portmanteau; and it is most likely that it was something of this kind, in which he might carry his clothes, books, and travelling necessities. [The authorized version gives the most probable rendering of the original.] What the books were we cannot tell; it is most likely they evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

19 Salute ^aPrisca and Aquila, and ^bthe household of Onesiphorus.

20 ^cErastus abode at Corinth: but ^dTrophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

21 ^eDo thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

22 ^fThe Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

The second epistle unto Timotheus, ordained the first bishop of the church of the Ephesians, was written from Rome, when Paul was brought before ^gNero the second time.

Gal. i. 5. Heb. xiii. 21.—^aActs xviii. 2. Rom. xvi. 3.—^b2 Tim. i. 16.—^cActs xix. 22. Rom. xvi. 23.—^dActs xx. 4. xxi. 29.—^eVer. 9.—^fGal. vi. 18. Philem. 25.—^gGr. Cæsar Nero, or, the Emperor Nero.

were his own writings; and as to the parchments, they were probably the Jewish scriptures and a copy of the Septuagint. These he must have had at hand at all times. The books and parchments now sent for could not be for the apostle's own use, as he was now on the eve of his martyrdom. He had probably intended to bequeath them to the faithful, that they might be preserved for the use of the church.

Verse 14. Alexander the coppersmith] We are not to understand this of any tradesman, but of some rabbin; for it was not unusual for the Jews to apply the name of some trade as an epithet to their rabbins and literary men.

The Lord reward him] But instead of the Lord reward, which has here the power of a solemn imprecation, he will reward is the reading of the very best MSS, several of the Versions, and some of the chief Greek Fathers. This reading is most like the spirit and temper of this heavenly man.

Verse 15. Of whom be thou ware also] It seems that this rabbin travelled about from place to place for the purpose of opposing the gospel, the Jews putting him forward, as it is said, Acts xix. 33.

He hath greatly withstood our words.] Has been a constant opposer of the Christian doctrines.

Verse 16. At my first answer] At my first apology; this word properly signifies a defence or vindication. This is the meaning of what we call the apologies of the primitive Fathers: they were vindications or defences of Christianity.

I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.] How much more simple, elegant, and expressive are the apostle's own words: let it not be placed to their account! Let them not have to reckon for it with the Supreme Judge at the great day!

Verse 17. The Lord stood with me] When all human help failed, God, in a more remarkable manner, interposed; and thus the excellency plainly appeared to be of God, and not of man.

That by me the preaching might be fully known] When called on to make his defence he took occasion to preach the gospel, and to show that the great God of heaven and earth had designed to illuminate the Gentile world with the rays of his light and glory.

I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.] The words, to be rescued from the mouth or jaws of the lion, are a proverbial form of speech for deliverance from the most imminent danger. Several writers think Nero to be intended by the lion, because of his rage and oppressive cruelty.

Verse 18. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work] None of the evil designs formed against me to make me unfaithful or unsteady, to cause me to save my life at the expense of faith and a good conscience, shall succeed; my life may go; but He will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom.

Verse 19. Salute Prisca and Aquila] They are probably the same as those mentioned, Acts xviii. 18, 26.

The household of Onesiphorus.] See chap. i. 16. Onesiphorus was probably at this time dead: his family still remained at Ephesus.

Verse 20. Erastus abode at Corinth] He was treasurer of that city, as we learn from Rom. xvi. 23.

Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.] Even the apostles could not work miracles when they pleased; that power was but rarely given, and that for very special purposes. Trophimus was an Ephesian.

It is most likely that the Miletus of Ionia is the place intended. There is another in Crete.

Verse 21. Come before winter.] 1. Because the apostle's time was short and uncertain. 2. Because sailing in those seas was very dangerous in winter. Whether Timothy saw the apostle before he was martyred is not known.

Eubulus] This person is nowhere else mentioned in the New Testament.

Pudens] Of this person we have traditions and legends, but nothing certain. The Catholics make him Bishop of Rome.

Linus] He also is made, by the same persons, bishop of Rome; but there is no sufficient ground for these pretensions.

Claudia] Supposed to be the wife of Pudens. Some think she was a British lady, converted by St. Paul; and that she was the first that brought the gospel to Britain.

All the brethren.] All the Christians, of whom there were many at Rome; though of Paul's companions in travel, only Luke remained there.

Verse 22. The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy Spirit.] This is a prayer addressed to Christ by one of the most eminent of his apostles; another proof of the untruth of the assertion, that prayer is never offered to Christ in the New Testament.

Grace be with you.] These words show that the epistle was addressed to the whole church, and that it is not to be considered of a private nature.

EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

T I T U S.

IT is strange, that of a person who must have attained considerable eminence in the Christian Church, and one to whom a canonical epistle has been written by the great apostle of the Gentiles, we should know so very little. That Titus was a frequent companion of St. Paul in his journeys we have evidence from his epistles; and although this was the case, he is not once mentioned in the book of the Acts of the Apostles!

That he was a Greek, and brought up in Heathenism, we learn from Gal. ii. 3. As he was uncircumcised, he was neither Jew nor a proselyte of justice, and probably was a mere heathen till he heard the gospel preached by St. Paul, by whose ministry he was converted to the Christian faith, chap. i. 4. That he was very highly, and consequently deservedly, esteemed by St. Paul, is evident from the manner in which he mentions him in different places, 2 Cor. ii. 13; 2 Cor. vii. 6, 7, 13, 15; 2 Cor. viii. 16, 23; 2 Cor. xii. 18.

Though St. Paul's preaching the gospel in Crete is not expressly mentioned anywhere, yet it may be plainly inferred from chap. i. 5. It is supposed that this was some time in the year 62, after the apostle was released from his first imprisonment in Rome. But not being able to spend much time in that island, he left the care of the churches to Titus, and sailed into Judea in the beginning of 63, taking Timothy with him. Having spent some time in Jerusalem, he proceeded to Antioch, comforting and establishing the churches whithersoever they went. From Antioch he set out on his fifth and last apostolical journey, in which he and Timothy travelled through Syria and Cilicia, and came to Colosse in Phrygia, early in the year 64. On this occasion it is supposed he wrote his Epistle to Titus, in which he desires him to meet him in Nicopolis, as he had intended to spend the winter there, Titus iii. 12. From Colosse he went with Timothy to Ephesus, where he left him to regulate and govern the Church; from thence he passed into Macedonia, and probably visited Philippi, and different Churches in that province, according to his intention, Phil. ii. 24; and thence to Nicopolis, where he intended to spend the winter, and where he had desired Titus to meet him.

Whether Titus ever left Crete we know not; nor how, nor where he died. Some traditions, on which little dependance can be placed, say he lived till he was 94 years of age, and died and was buried at Crete. He appears to have been a young man when entrusted with the care of the churches in this island. In such an extensive district, an aged or infirm man would have been of little service.

Many have observed the affinity that subsists between the First Epistle to Timothy and this to PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE OF PAUL TO TITUS.

Titus. Both epistles are directed to persons left by the writer to preside in their respective churches during his absence. Both epistles are principally occupied in describing the qualifications of those who should be appointed to ecclesiastical offices; and the ingredients in this description are nearly the same in both epistles. Timothy and Titus are both cautioned against the same prevailing corruptions; the phrases and expressions in both letters are nearly the same; and the writer accosts his two disciples with the same salutations, and passes on to the business of his epistle with the same transition. The most natural account which can be given of these resemblances, is to suppose that the two epistles were written nearly at the same time, and whilst the same ideas and phrases dwelt in the writer's mind.

CHAPTER I.

The apostle's statement of his character, his hope, and his function, 1-3. His address to Titus, and the end for which he left him in Crete, 4, 5. The qualifications requisite in those who should be appointed elders and bishops in the Church of God, 6-9. Of false teachers, 10, 11. The character of the Cretans, and how they were to be dealt with, 12-14. Of the pure, the impure, and false professors of religion, 15, 16.

Verse 1. Paul, a servant of God] In several places of his other epistles St. Paul styles himself the servant of Jesus Christ, but this is the only place where he calls himself the servant of God. It is very likely that in the use of the phrase the apostle had no particular design; for, according to him, he who is the servant of Christ is the servant of God, and he who is God's servant is also the servant of Christ.

The faith of God's elect] The Christians, who were now chosen in the place of the Jews.

The acknowledging of the truth] For the propagation of that truth, or system of doctrines, which is calculated to promote godliness, or a holy and useful life.

Verse 2. In hope of eternal life] This includes, not only the salvation of the soul and its eternal beatification, but also the resurrection of the body.

Which God, that cannot lie, promised] We have often seen that the phrase, the foundation of the world, means the Jewish economy; and, before the foundation of the world, the times antecedent to the giving of the law. This is evidently the meaning here. See 2 Tim. i. 9, 10, 11. [This interpretation is by no means infallible.]

Verse 3. But hath in due times] In its own times. See 1 Tim. ii. 6; Gal. iv. 4; Eph. i. 10; ii. 7. God caused the gospel to be published in that time in which it could be published with the greatest effect.

Manifested his word] His doctrine—the doctrine of eternal life, by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

5 For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest ^a set in order the things that are ^b wanting, and ^c ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee:

6 ^d If any be blameless, ^e the husband of one wife, ^f having faithful children, not accused of riot, or unruly.

7 For a bishop must be blameless, as ^g the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, ^h not given to wine, no striker, ⁱ not given to filthy lucre;

8 ^j But a lover of hospitality, a lover of ^k good men, sober, just, holy, temperate;

Which is committed unto me] That is, to preach it among the Gentiles.

According to the commandment of God our Saviour] This evidently refers to the commission which he had received from Christ. See Acts ix. 15.

God our Saviour] As the commission was given by Jesus Christ alone, the person whom he terms here God our Saviour must be Jesus Christ only; and this is another proof that St. Paul believed Jesus Christ to be God.

Verse 4. To Titus, mine own son] See the preface; and see on 1 Tim. i. 2.

Verse 5. For this cause left I thee in Crete] That St. Paul had been in Crete, though nowhere else intimated, is clear from this passage. The journey must have been performed after the time in which St. Luke ends his history, that is, after St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome.

Set in order the things that are wanting] It appears from this that the apostle did not spend much time in Crete, and that he was obliged to leave it before he had got the church properly organized.

Ordain elders in every city] That thou mightest appoint elders—persons well instructed in divine things, who should be able to instruct others, and observe and enforce the discipline of the church. It appears that those who are called elders in this place are the same as those termed bishops in ver. 7.

In every city] This seems to intimate that the apostle had gone over the whole of the hundred cities for which this island was celebrated.

9 ^a Holding fast ^b the faithful word, ^c as he hath been taught, that he may be able ^d by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

10 For ^e there are many unruly and vain talkers and ^f deceivers, ^g specially they of the circumcision:

11 Whose mouths must be stopped; ^h who subvert whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, ⁱ for filthy lucre's sake.

12 ^j One of themselves, even a prophet of their own, said, The Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies.

Verse 6. Having faithful children] Whose family is converted to God.

Verse 7. Not self-willed] Not one who is determined to have his own way in every thing; setting up his own judgment above that of all others; expecting all to pay homage to his understanding.

Not soon angry] Not a choleric man; one who is irritable; one who has not proper command over his own temper.

Verse 8. A lover of hospitality] A lover of strangers. One MS. has a lover of the poor. That minister who neglects the poor, but is frequent in his visits to the rich, knows little of his master's work, and has little of his master's spirit.

A lover of good men] A lover of goodness or of good things in general.

Sober] Prudent in all his conduct. Just in all his dealings. Holy in his heart. Temperate—self-denying and abstemious in his food and raiment; not too nice on points of honour, nor magisterially rigid in the exercise of his ecclesiastical functions. Qualifications rarely found in spiritual governors.

Verse 9. Holding fast the faithful word] Conscientiously retaining, and zealously maintaining, the true Christian doctrine according to the instructions, or according to the institutions, form of sound doctrine, or confession of faith, which I have delivered to thee.

That he may be able by sound doctrine] If the doctrine be not sound, vain is the profession of it, and vain its influence.

And to convince] Refute the objections, confound the sophistry, and convert the gainsayers; and thus defend the truth.

Verse 10. They of the circumcision] The Judaizing teachers who maintained the necessity of circumcision, and of observing the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law, in order to the perfecting of the gospel.

Verse 11. Subvert whole houses] Turn whole Christian families from the faith, attributing to the broad way what belongs only to the strait gate; ministering to disorderly passions, and promising salvation to their proselytes, though not saved from their sins.

Verse 12. One of themselves, even a prophet of their own] This was Epimenides, who was born at Gnosus in Crete, and was reckoned by many the seventh wise man of Greece, instead of Periander, to whom that honour was by them denied. He died about 538 years before the Christian era. When St. Paul calls him a prophet of their own, he only 13 This witness is true. ^k Wherefore rebuke them sharply; that they may be ^l sound in the faith, 14 ^m Not giving heed to Jewish fables, and ⁿ commandments of men that turn from the truth.

15 ^o Unto the pure all things are pure: but ^p unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

intimates that he was, by the Cretans, reputed a prophet. And, according to Plutarch, the Cretans paid him divine honours after his death.

The Cretians are always liars] That the Cretans were reputed to be egregious liars, several of the ancients declare. "To act like a Cretan" was a proverbial expression for lying.

Evil beasts] Ferocious and destructive in their manners. Slow bellies] Addicted to voluptuousness, idleness, and gluttony; sluggish or hoggish men.

Verse 13. This witness is true] What Epimenides said of them nearly 600 years before continued still to be true.

Rebuke them sharply] Cuttingly, severely, show no indulgence to persons guilty of such crimes.

That they may be sound in the faith] That they may receive the incorrupt doctrine, and illustrate it by a holy and useful life.

Verse 14. Commandments of men] The injunctions of the Scribes and Pharisees, which they added to the law of God.

That turn from the truth] Sometimes the verb signifies to be averse from, slight, or despise. So, here, the persons in question despised the truth, and taught others to do the same.

Verse 15. Unto the pure all things are pure] This appears to have been spoken in reference to the Jewish distinctions of clean and unclean meats.

But unto them that are defiled] In their consciences, and unbelieving, unfaithful both to offered and received grace, nothing is pure—they have no part in Christ, and the wrath of God abides upon them.

Verse 16. They profess that they know God] None were so full of pretensions to the knowledge of the true God as the Jews. Hence they became both proud, uncharitable, and intolerant; and in this disposition they continue till the present day.

But in works they deny him] Their profession and practice were at continual variance.

Being abominable] This word sometimes refers to unnatural lusts.

And disobedient] Unpersuadable, unbelieving, and consequently disobedient. Characters remarkably applicable to the Jews through all their generations.

Unto every good work reprobate] Adulterate; like bad coin, deficient both in the weight and goodness of the metal, and without the proper sterling stamp; and consequently not current.

CHAPTER II.

Sundry directions to aged men, 1, 2. To aged women, 3. To young women, 4, 5. To young men, 6. Directions to Titus, relative to his own conduct, 7, 8. Directions to servants, 9, 10. What the gospel of the grace of God teaches all men, 11, 12. The glorious prospect held out by it; salvation from all sin, and final glory, 13-15.

BUT speak thou the things which become sound doctrine:

2 That the aged men be ^bsober, grave, temperate, ^csound in faith, in charity, in patience.

3 ^aThe aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh ^choliness, not ^dfalse accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things;

4 That they may teach the young women to be ^esober, ^fto love their husbands, to love their children,

5 To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, ^gobedient to their own husbands, ^hthat the word of God be not blasphemed.

6 Young men likewise exhort to be ⁱsoberminded.

 v. 14. 1 Pet. ii. 12, 15. iii. 16.—^p 2 Thess. iii. 14.—^q Eph. vi. 6.

Verse 2. That the aged men be sober] It is very likely that the word aged is to be taken here in its literal sense; that it refers to advanced years, and not to any office in the church: the whole context seems to require this sense.

Verse 3. The aged women likewise] I believe elderly women are meant, and not deaconesses.

That they be in behaviour] That they be in their dress, gait, and general deportment, such as their holy calling requires; that they be not like the world but like the church, decent without, and adorned with holiness within.

Not false accusers] Not devils; we have had the same expression applied in the same way, 1 Tim. iii. 11.

Not given to much wine] Not enslaved by much wine, not habitual drunkards or tipplers; habit is a species of slavery. Both among the Greeks and Romans old women were generally reputed to be fond of much wine.

Verse 4. That they may teach the young women to be sober] That it was natural for the young to imitate the old will be readily allowed; it was therefore necessary that the old should be an example of godly living to the young.

To love their husbands] The duties recommended in this and the following verse are so absolutely necessary to the character of a wife, that no one deserves the name who does not live in the practice of them.

Verse 5. Keepers at home] A woman who spends much time in visiting must neglect her family. The idleness, dirtiness, impudence, and profligacy of the children, will soon show how deeply criminal the mother was in rejecting the apostle's advice.

That the word of God be not blasphemed.] The enemies of the gospel are quick-eyed to spy out imperfections in its professors; and, if they find women professing Christianity living an irregular life, they will not fail to decry the Christian doctrine on this account.

Verse 6. Young men—exhort to be sober-minded.] Sober-mindedness in young men is a rare qualification, and they who have it not plunge into excesses and irregularities which in general sap the foundation of their constitution, bring on premature old age, and not seldom lead to a fatal end.

Verse 7. In all things shewing thyself a pattern] Shew-ing thyself a pattern of good works to all these persons—being, in sobriety, gravity, temperance, what thou requirest others to be. [But the Greek term is neuter.]

In doctrine shewing uncorruptness] Mixing nothing with the truth; taking nothing from it; adding nothing to it; and exhibiting it in all its connexion, energy, and fullness.

Verse 8. Sound speech] Sound or healing doctrine. All false doctrines leave men under the influence of spiritual disease; the unadulterated doctrine of the gospel alone can heal men.

Having no evil thing to say of you.] Against a person who is sound in his doctrine, and holy in his life, no evil can be justly alleged. The best MSS. and Versions read "of us."

Verse 9. Exhort servants to be obedient] The apostle refers to those who were slaves, and the property of their masters.

good works: in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity,

8 ^aSound speech that cannot be condemned;
^bthat he that is of the contrary part ^cmay be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

9 ^dExhort ^eservants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well ^fin all things; not ^ganswering again;

10 Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity;
^hthat they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

11 For ⁱthe grace of God ^jthat bringeth salvation
^khath appeared to all men,

12 Teaching us, ^lthat, denying ungodliness ^mand worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world;

Col. iii. 22. 1 Tim. vi. 1, 2. 1 Pet. ii. 18.—ⁿ Eph. v. 24.—^o Or, gain-saying.—^p Matt. v. 16. Phil. ii. 15.—^q Rom. v. 15. Col. i. 6. Ch.

 Rom. vi. 19. Eph. i. 4. Col. i. 22. 1 Thess. iv. 7.—^u 1 Pet. iv. 2.
 1 John ii. 16.

Not answering again] Not contradicting or gainsaying.
 This is no part of a servant's duty; a servant is hired to do his master's work, and this his master has a right to appoint.

Verse 10. Not purloining] Neither giving away, privately selling, nor in any way wasting, the master's goods. The word signifies not only stealing but embezzling another's property; keeping back a part of the price of any commodity sold on the master's account.

Verse 11. The grace of God, that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men] Literally translated, the words stand thus: For the grace of God, that which saves, hath shone forth upon all men. Or, as it is expressed in the margin of our authorised Version: The grace of God, that bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared. Now, it cannot be said, except in a very refined and spiritual sense, that this gospel had then appeared to all men; but it may be well said that it bringeth salvation to all men; this is its design; and it was to taste death for every man that its author came into the world. There is a beauty and energy in the word hath shined out, that is rarely noted; it seems to be a metaphor taken from the sun. As by his rising in the east and shining out, he enlightens, successively, the whole world; so the Lord Jesus, who is called the Sun of righteousness, Mal.
 iv. 2, arises on the whole human race with healing in his wings. And as the light and heat of the sun are denied to no nation nor individual, so the grace of the Lord Jesus, this also shines out upon all; and God designs that all mankind shall be as equally benefited by it in reference to their souls, as they are in respect to their bodies by the sun that shines in the firmament of heaven. But as all the parts of the earth are not immediately illuminated, but come into the solar light successively, not only in consequence of the earth's diurnal revolution round its own axis, but in consequence of its annual revolution round its whole orbit; so this Sun of righteousness, who has shined out, is bringing every part of the habitable globe into his divine light; that light is shining more and more to the perfect day; so that gradually and successively he is enlightening every nation, and every man; and, when his great year is filled up, every nation of the earth shall by brought into the light and heat of this unspotted, un eclipsed, and eternal Sun of righteousness and truth.

Verse 12. Teaching us, that, denying, &c.] Instructing us as children are instructed. Christ is the great teacher; and men, in order to learn, must become his disciples—must put themselves under his tuition, and learn of him.

Denying ungodliness] All things contrary to God; whatever would lead us to doubt his being, or deny any of his essential attributes; his providence or government of the world, and his influence on the souls of men.

Worldly lusts] Gluttony, drunkenness, lasciviousness, anger, malice, and revenge; together with the immoderate love of riches, power, and fame.

We should live soberly] Having every temper, appetite, and desire, under the government of reason, and reason itself under the government of the Spirit of God.

Righteously] Rendering to every man his due; and filling

And godly] Just the reverse of what is implied in ungodliness.

In this present world] Not supposing that anything will be purified in the world to come that is not cleansed in this.

Verse 13. Looking for that blessed hope] Expecting the grand object of our hope, eternal life.

The glorious appearing] This clause, literally translated, is as follows: And the appearing of the glory of the great God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Some think that the blessed hope and glorious appearing mean the same thing; but I do not think so. The blessed hope refers simply to eternal glorification in general; the glorious appearing to the resurrection of the body; for when Christ appears he will change this vile body, and make it like unto his GLORIOUS BODY, according to the working by which he is able even to subdue all things to himself.

Verse 14. Who gave himself for us] Who gave his own life as a ransom price to redeem ours. The verb signifies to redeem or ransom by paying a price; and the word rendered peculiar, signifies such a peculiar property as a man has in what he has purchased with his own money.

Verse 15. These things speak] That is, teach.

And exhort] Repeat them again and again, and urge them on their attention and consciences.

And rebuke] Demonstrate the importance, utility, and necessity of them; and show them that God requires their obedience.

With all authority.] With all that authority with which thy office invests thee, and which thou hast received from God.

Let no man despise thee.] That is: Act so that no person shall have any cause to despise thee, either for thy work, or the manner and spirit in which thou dost perform it.

CHAPTER III.

The necessity of obedience to the civil powers, and of meek and gentle deportment towards all men, is to be diligently enforced, 1, 2. The wretched state of man, previously to the advent of Christ, 3. The wonderful change which the grace of God makes, and the means which it uses to bring men to glory, 4-7. Verse 1. Put them in mind to be subject to principalities, &c.] By principalities we are to understand the Roman Emperors, or the supreme civil powers in any place. By powers, the deputies of the emperors, such as proconsuls, &c., and all such as are in authority under the supreme powers wherever we dwell.

Verse 2. To speak evil of no man] To blaspheme no person, to reproach none, to speak nothing to any man's injury; but, on the contrary, bearing reproach and contumely with patience and meekness.

Verse 3. For we ourselves] All of us, whether Jews or Gentiles, were, before our conversion to Christ, foolish, disobedient, and deceived.

4 But after that ^h the kindness and ⁱ love of ^j God our Saviour toward man appeared, Foolish] Without understanding—ignorant of God, his nature, his providence, and his grace.

Disobedient] Unpersuaded, unbelieving, obstinate, and disobedient.

Deceived] Erring—wandering from the right way in consequence of our ignorance, not knowing the right way; and, in consequence of our unbelief and obstinacy, not choosing to know it.

Serving divers lusts and pleasures] Being in a state of continual thralldom; not served or gratified by our lusts and pleasures, but living, as their slaves, a life of misery and wretchedness.

Divers lusts] Strong and irregular appetites of every kind.

6 *Which he shed on us ^b abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour;

7 ^c That, being justified by his grace, ^d we should be made heirs ^e according to the hope of eternal life.

8 ^f This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful ^g to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men.

9 But ^h avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; ⁱ for they are unprofitable and vain.

Pleasures] Sensual pleasures. Persons intent only on the gratification of sense, living like the brutes, having no rational or spiritual object worthy the pursuit of an immortal being.

Living in malice and envy] Spending our life in wickedness and envy—not bearing to see the prosperity of others, because we feel ourselves continually wretched.

Hateful] Abominable; hateful as hell. The word comes from Styz, the infernal river by which the gods were wont to swear; and he who (according to the mythology of the heathens) violated this oath, was expelled from the assembly of the gods, and was deprived of his nectar and ambrosia for a year; hence the river was hateful to them beyond all things, and the verb formed from this, signifies to shiver with horror.

Hating one another.] The words which the apostle uses in this place give a finished picture of the carnal state of man; and they are not true merely of the Cretans and Jews that then were, but of all mankind in every age and country; they express the wretched state of fallen man.

Verse 4. But after that the kindness and love of God] By this we may understand the essential goodness of the divine nature: that which is the spring whence all kindness, mercy, and beneficence proceed.

Love toward man] Philanthropy is a character which God gives here to himself; while human nature exists, this must be a character of the divine nature. God loves man; he delighted in the idea when formed in his own infinite mind, he formed man according to that idea, and rejoiced in the work of his hands; when man fell, the same love induced him to devise his redemption, and God the Saviour flows from God the Philanthropist.

Verse 5. Not by works of righteousness] Those who were foolish, disobedient, and deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, could not possibly have works of righteousness to plaud; therefore, if saved at all, they must be saved by mercy.

By the washing of regeneration] Undoubtedly the apostle here means baptism, the rite by which persons were admitted into the Church, and the visible sign of the cleansing, purifying influences of the Holy Spirit, which the apostle immediately subjoins. Baptism is only a sign, and therefore should never be separated from the thing signified; but it is a rite commanded by God himself, and therefore the thing signified should never be expected without it.

By the renewing of the Holy Ghost we are to understand, not only the profession of being bound to live a new life, but the grace that renews the heart, and enables us thus to live; so the renewing influences are here intended. Baptism changes nothing; the grace signified by it cleanses and purifies. They who think baptism to be regeneration, neither know the scriptures nor the power of God; therefore they do greatly err.

Verse 6. Which he shed on us abundantly] Which he poured out on us, as the water was poured out on them in baptism, to which there is here a manifest allusion; but as this was sometimes only sprinkled on the person, the heavenly gift was poured out, not in drops, but richly, in great abundance.

12 When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or ^a Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter.

13 Bring Zenas the lawyer and ^b Apollos on their journey diligently, that nothing be wanting unto them.

14 And let ours also learn ^c to ^d maintain good works for necessary uses, that they be ^e not unfruitful.

15 All that are with me salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

It was written to Titus, ordained the first bishop of the church of the Cretians, from Nicopolis of Macedonia.

2 Thess. iii. 6, 14. 2 Tim. iii. 5. 2 John 10.—^a Acts xiii. 46.—^b Acts xx. 4. 2 Tim. iv. 12.—^c Acts xviii. 24.—^d Ver. 8.—^e Or, profess honest trades. Eph. iv. 28.—^f Rom. xv. 28. Phil. i. 11. iv. 17. Col. i. 10. 2 Pet. i. 8.

Through Jesus Christ] Baptism is nothing in itself; and there had been no out-pouring of the Holy Spirit had there been no saving and atoning Christ.

Verse 7. That, being justified by his grace] Being freed from sin; for the term justification is to be taken here as implying the whole work of the grace of Christ on the heart, in order to its preparation for eternal glory.

Verse 8. This is a faithful saying] This is the true doctrine; the doctrine that cannot fail.

And these things I will] And I will, or desire, thee to maintain earnestly what concerns these points.

They which have believed in God] All Christians; for who can maintain good works but those who have the principle from which good works flow, for without faith it is impossible to please God.

Verse 9. Avoid foolish questions, genealogies] In these the Jews particularly delighted; they abounded in the most frivolous questions; and, as they had little piety themselves, they were solicitous to show that they had descended from godly ancestors.

Contentions, and strivings about the law] Of legal contentions, and different and conflicting decisions about the meaning of particular rites and ceremonies, the Talmud is full.

Verse 10. A man that is an heretic] Generally defined, one that is obstinately attached to an opinion contrary to the peace and comfort of society, and will neither submit to scripture nor reason. Here it means a person who maintains Judaism in opposition to Christianity, or who insists on the necessity of circumcision, &c., in order to be saved.

After the first and second admonition reject] Labour to convince him of his error; but if he will not receive instruction, if he have shut his heart against conviction, then—burn him alive? No: even if demonstrably a heretic in any one sense of that word, and a disturber of the peace of the church, God gives no man any other authority over him but to shun him. Do him no harm in body, soul, character, or substance; hold no communion with him; but leave him to God.

Verse 11. Is subverted] Is turned out of the way in which he may be saved, and consequently sinneth—enters into that way that leads to destruction.

Being condemned of himself.] He was conscious of his own insincerity; and that he proclaimed his system not from a conscientious love of truth, but from a desire to get his livelihood.

Verse 12. When I shall send Artemas—or Tychicus] These were either deacons or presbyters, which the apostle intended to send to Crete, to supply the place of Titus.

Be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis] Nicopolis was a city of Epirus, on the gulf of Ambracia, near to Actium, which Augustus built in commemoration of his victory over Mark Antony.

For I have determined there to winter.] Hence the apostle was at liberty, seeing his spending the winter at this or at any other practicable place depended on his own determination.

Verse 13. Bring Zenas the lawyer] This person is only mentioned in this place; whether he was a Jewish, Roman, or Greek lawyer, we cannot tell.

And Apollos] Of this person we have some valuable particulars in Acts xviii. 24; 1 Cor. i. 12, iii. 5, 6, and iv. 6.

On their journey diligently] Afford them the means to defray their expenses.

Verse 14. And let ours also learn to maintain good works] There is something very remarkable in this expression. The words which we translate to maintain good works, occur also in ver. 8; and some think they mean, to provide for our own, and the necessities of others, by working at some honest occupation: and that this was necessary to be taught to the Cretans, let ours also learn, &c., who were naturally and practically idle gluttons.

For necessary uses] That they may be able at all times to help the church of God, and those that are in want.

That they be not unfruitful] As they must be if they indulge themselves in their idle, slothful disposition.

TO THE

EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

P H I L E M O N.

P*HILEMON* was undoubtedly, at the time in which this epistle was sent, an inhabitant of Colosse, and was probably a Colossian by birth, though some suppose that he was of Ephesus. It is evident, from ver. 19 of this epistle, that he was converted to the Christian faith by St. Paul: but as some suppose that the apostle had not visited Colosse previously to the writing of this epistle, they think it probable that he might have met with him at Ephesus, or in some other part of Asia Minor, where he formed an acquaintance with him, and became the means of his conversion.

That Philemon was a person of some consideration in his own city, and in the church in that place, is very evident from this epistle. He had a church in his house, ver. 2, and was so opulent as to be extensive in works of charity, and in entertaining those Christians who from different quarters had occasion to visit Colosse. See ver. 5-7.

Whether he had any office in the church is not clear; some think he was a bishop, others an elder or deacon; but of this there is no evidence. He was probably no more than a private member, whose house, hand, and property were consecrated to God, his church, and the poor.

The occasion of writing this letter was the following: Onesimus, a slave, had, on some pretence or other, run away from his master Philemon, and had come to Rome, where St. Paul was at that time in prison, though not in close confinement, for he dwelt in his own hired house, in which he assiduously preached the gospel, being guarded only by one soldier.

It appears that Onesimus sought out Paul, whose public preaching, both to Jews and Gentiles, had rendered him famous in the city; and it is very likely that he was led to visit the apostle from having formerly seen him at his master's house in Colosse, and the word of life, preached by the apostle, became the means of his conversion. Being thus brought back to God, he became affectionately attached to his spiritual father, and served him zealously as his son in the gospel. Onesimus being thus brought to the acknowledgment of the truth which is according to godliness, gave the apostle a full account of his elopement from his master, and no doubt intimated his wish to return and repair the breach which he had made. Though he was now both dear and necessary to St. Paul, yet, as justice required that reparation should be made, he resolved to send him back; and to remove all suspicion from the mind of Philemon, and to reconcile him to his once unfaithful servant, he wrote the following letter.

It will not be forgotten that Onesimus, the bearer of this epistle, was one of the bearers of that sent to the Colossians, Col. iv. 9; that when the apostle wrote that he was in bonds, Col. iv. 3, 18, which was his case also when he wrote this (see ver. 1, 10, 13, 23); from which, and various other circumstances, we may conclude that they were written about the same time, viz., the ninth year of Nero, A.D. 62.

TO

PHILEMON

CHAPTER I

Paul's salutation to Philemon, and the church at his house, 1-3. He extols his faith, love, and Christian charity, 4-7. Entreats forgiveness for his servant Onesimus, 8-14. Urges motives to induce Philemon to forgive him, 15, 17. Promises to repair any wrong he had done to his master, 18, 19. Expresses his confidence that Philemon will comply with his request, 20, 21. Directs Philemon to prepare him a lodging, 22. Salutations and apostolical benedictions, 23-25.

PAUL, ^aa prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy ^{our} brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved, ^band fellow-labourer, 2 And to ^{our} beloved Apphia, and ^cArchippus ^dour fellow-soldier, and to ^ethe church in thy house:

3 ^fGrace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

4 ^gI thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers, ^aEph. iii. 1. iv. 1. 2 Tim. i. 8. Ver. 9.—^bPhil. ii. 25.—^cCol. iv. 17.—^dPhil. ii. 25.—^eRom. xvi. 5. 1 Cor. xvi. 19.—^fEph. i. 2.—^gEph. i. 16. 1 Thess. i. 2. 2 Thess. i. 3.—^hEph. i. 15. Col. i. 4.

Verse 1. Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ] Some think that the term prisoner does not sufficiently point out the apostle's state, and that the original word should be translated bound with a chain: this is certainly its meaning; and it shows us in some measure his circumstances—one arm was bound with a chain to the arm of the soldier to whose custody he had been delivered.

To the church in thy house] The congregation of Christians frequently assembling in Philemon's house; for at this time the Christians had neither temples, churches, nor chapels.

It is very probable that Apphia was the wife of Philemon, and Archippus their son the pastor of the church at Philemon's house.

Verse 4. I thank my God] For all the good he has bestowed upon you, making mention of thee always in my prayers, that thou mayest hold fast all that thou hast got, and get all that thou dost farther need.

Verse 5. Hearing of thy love and faith] His faith in Christ Jesus, his love to the saints. Several excellent MSS. and some Versions put faith before love, which makes a more natural reading.

Verse 6. That the communication of thy faith] The words may be understood as referring to the work of love towards the saints—the poor Christians, which his faith in Christ enabled him to perform, faith being taken here for its effects; and indeed the word itself is not unfrequently used to denote liberality, almsgiving.

5 ^hHearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints;

6 That the communication of thy faith may become effectual ⁱby the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus.

7 For we have great joy and consolation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints ^jare refreshed by thee, brother.

8 Wherefore, ^kthough I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient, —^lPhil. i. 9, 11.—^m2 Cor. vii. 13. 2 Tim. i. 16. Ver. 20.—ⁿ1 Thess. ii. 6.

May become effectual] “That the many good offices which thou doest to the saints may become effectual in bringing others to the acknowledgment of every good disposition which is in you towards Christ Jesus, or towards his members.”

Verse 8. Wherefore, though I might be much bold] There is something very melting and persuasive in this and every part of the epistle. Yet, in my opinion, the character of St. Paul prevails in it throughout. The warm, affectionate, authoritative teacher, is interceding with an absent friend for a beloved convert. He urges his suit with an earnestness befitting, perhaps, not so much the occasion, as the ardour and sensibility of his own mind. Here also, as everywhere, he shows himself conscious of the weight and dignity of his mission; nor does he suffer Philemon for a moment to forget it. He is careful also to recal, though obliquely, to Philemon's memory, the sacred obligation under which he had laid him, by bringing him to the knowledge of Christ. Without laying aside, therefore, the apostolic character, our author softens the imperative style of his address, by mixing with it every sentiment and consideration that could move the heart of his correspondent. Aged, and in prison, he is content to supplicate and entreat.

Verse 9. Paul the aged] If we allow St. Paul to have been about 25 years of age at the utmost, in the year 81, when he was assisting at the martyrdom of Stephen, Acts vii. 58; as this epistle was written about A. D. 62, he could not have been at this time more than about 56 years old. This could not constitute him an aged man in our sense of 9 Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such an one as Paul the aged, * and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

10 I beseech thee for my son ^b Onesimus, ^c whom I have begotten in my bonds:

11 Which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me:

12 Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him, that is, mine own bowels;

13 Whom I would have retained with me, ^d that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the gospel:

14 But without thy mind would I do nothing; ^e that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

15 ^f For perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him for ever;

16 Not now as a servant, but above a servant, ^g a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, ^h both in the flesh and in the Lord?

17 If thou count me therefore ⁱ a partner, receive him as myself.

* Ver. 1.—Col. iv. 9.—1 Cor. iv. 15. Gal. iv. 19.—1 Cor. xvi. 17. Phil. ii. 30.—2 Cor. ix. 7.—(So Gen. xlv. 5, 8.—Matt. xxiii. 8. 1 Tim. vi. 2.—Col. iii. 22.—2 Cor. viii. 23.—Ver. 7.—

the term; yet, when the whole length of his life is taken in, being martyred about four years after this, he may not improperly be considered an aged or elderly man, though it is generally allowed that his martyrdom took place in the 66th year of our Lord.

But the word signifies not only an old man, but also an ambassador; because old or elderly men were chosen to fulfil such an office because of their experience and solidity.

Verse 10. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus] It is evident from this that Onesimus was converted by St. Paul while he was prisoner at Rome, and perhaps not long before he wrote this epistle.

Verse 11. Was to thee unprofitable] Alluding to the meaning of Onesimus's name; though the apostle uses a different Greek word to express the same idea.

Verse 12. Whom I have sent again] The Christian religion never cancels any civil relations; a slave, on being converted, and becoming a free man of Christ, has no right to claim, on that ground, emancipation from the service of his master. Justice, therefore, required St. Paul to send back Onesimus to his master, and conscience obliged Onesimus to agree in the propriety of the measure; but love to the servant induced the apostle to write this conciliating letter to the master.

Verse 13. That in thy stead he might have ministered unto me] As Philemon was one of Paul's converts, he became thereby his spiritual father, and had a right to his services when in need. This was a strong argument, not only to induce Philemon to forgive his servant, but to send him back to the apostle, that he might minister to him in his master's stead.

Verse 14. That thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity] This is a very delicate touch.

Verse 15. He—departed for a season] This is another most delicate stroke. He departed thy slave, thy unfaithful slave; he departed for a short time; he now returns, not an unfaithful slave, in whom thou couldst repose no confidence, but as a brother, a beloved brother in the Lord, to be in the same heavenly family with thee for ever.

Verse 16. Not now as a servant] Do not receive him merely as thy slave, nor treat him according to that condition; but as a brother—as a genuine Christian, and particularly dear to me.

Both in the flesh and in the Lord?] There is no reason to believe that Onesimus was of the kindred of Philemon; and we must take the term flesh, here, as referring to the right which Philemon had in him. He was a part of his property and of his family; as a slave, this was his condition; but he now stood in a twofold relation to Philemon: 1. According to the flesh, as above explained, he was one of his family. 2. In the Lord; he was now also a member of the heavenly family, and of the church at Philemon's house.

18 If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account;

19 I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides.

20 Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: ^j refresh my bowels in the Lord.

21 ^k Having confidence in thy obedience, I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

22 But withal prepare me also a lodging: for ^l I trust that ^m through your prayers I shall be given unto you.

23 There salute thee ⁿ Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus;

24 ^o Marcus, ^p Aristarchus, ^q Demas, ^r Lucas, my fellow-labourers.

25 ^s The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.

Written from Rome to Philemon, by Onesimus a servant.

* 2 Cor. vii. 16.—1 Phil. i. 25. ii. 24.—2 Cor. i. 11.—Col. i. 7. iv. 12.—Acts xii. 12, 25.—Acts xix. 29. xxvii. 2. Col. iv. 10.—Col. iv. 14.—2 Tim. iv. 11.—2 Tim. iv. 22.

Philemon's interest in him was now doubled in consequence of his conversion to Christianity.

Verse 17. If thou count me therefore a partner] If thou dost consider me as a friend; if I have still the place of a friend in thy affection, receive him as myself; for, as I feel him as my own soul, in receiving him thou receivest me.

Verse 18. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought] He only puts a possible case: If he have wronged thee, or owe thee ought, place all to my account; I will discharge all he oweth thee.

Verse 19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand] It is likely that the whole of the letter was written by St. Paul himself, which was not his usual custom. See on 2 Thess. iii. 17.

Albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me] I ask thee to do this thing to oblige me, though I will not say how much thou owest unto me; even thine own self, as having been the means of thy conversion.

Verse 20. Yea, brother] It is even so, that thou art thus indebted to me. Let me have joy of thee, in forgiving Onesimus, and receiving him into thy favour.

Refresh my bowels] Gratify the earnest longing of my soul in this. I ask neither thy money nor goods; I ask what will enrich, not impoverish thee to give.

Verse 22. But withal prepare me also a lodging] Does not the apostle mention this as conferring an obligation on Philemon? I will begin to repay thee by taking up my abode at thy house as soon as I shall be enlarged from prison. But some think he wished Philemon to hire him a house, that he might have a lodging of his own when he returned to Colosse.

For I trust that through your prayers] It is very likely that this epistle was written a short time before the liberation of the apostle from his first imprisonment at Rome.

Verse 23. Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner] Epaphras was a Colossian, as we learn from Col. iv. 12: Epaphras, who is one of you. Some time or other he had suffered imprisonment for the truth of the gospel; and on that account St. Paul might, in a general way, call him his fellow-prisoner.

Verse 24. Marcus, Aristarchus, &c.] These were all acquaintances of Philemon, and probably Colossians; and may be all considered as joining here with St. Paul in his request for Onesimus.

Demas] Is supposed to be the same who continued in his attachment to Paul till his last imprisonment at Rome; after which he left him for what is supposed to have been the love of the world, 2 Tim. iv. 10.

Lucas] Is supposed to be Luke the evangelist, and author of the Acts of the Apostles.

Verse 25. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit.] By using the plural your, the apostle in effect directs or addresses the epistle, not only to Philemon, but to all the church at his house.

TO THE

EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

H E B R E W S.

THE Epistle to the Hebrews is by far the most important and useful of all the apostolic writings; all the doctrines of the gospel are in it embodied, illustrated, and enforced in a manner the most lucid, by references and examples the most striking and illustrious, and by arguments the most cogent and convincing. It is an epitome of the dispensations of God to man, from the foundation of the world to the advent of Christ. It is not only the sum of the GOSPEL, but the sum and completion of the LAW, on which it is also a most beautiful and luminous comment. Without this, the Law of Moses had never been fully understood, nor God's design in giving it. With this, all is clear and plain, and the ways of God with man rendered consistent and harmonious. The apostle appears to have taken a portion of one of his own epistles for his text—CHRIST is the END of the LAW for RIGHTEOUSNESS to them that BELIEVE; and has most amply and impressively demonstrated his proposition. All the rites, ceremonies, and sacrifices of the Mosaic institution are shown to have had Christ for their object and end, and to have had neither intention nor meaning but in reference to him; yea, as a system to be without substance, as a law to be without reason, and its enactments to be both impossible and absurd, if taken out of this reference and connexion. Never were premises more clearly stated; never was an argument handled in a more masterly manner; and never was a conclusion more legitimately and satisfactorily brought forth. The matter is everywhere the most interesting; the manner is throughout the most engaging; and the language is most beautifully adapted to the whole, everywhere appropriate, always nervous and energetic, dignified as is the subject, pure and elegant as that of the most accomplished Grecian orators, and harmonious and diversified as the music of the spheres.

So many are the beauties, so great the excellency, so instructive the matter, so pleasing the manner, and so exceedingly interesting the whole, that the work may be read a hundred times over without perceiving anything of sameness, and with new and increased information at each reading. This latter is an excellency which belongs to the whole revelation of God; but to no part of it in such a peculiar and supereminent manner as to the Epistle to the Hebrews.

To explain and illustrate this epistle, multitudes have toiled hard; and exhibited much industry, much learning, and much piety. I also will show my opinion; and ten thousand may succeed me,

PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

and still bring out something that is new. That it was written to Jews, naturally such, the whole structure of the epistle proves. Had it been to the Gentiles, not one in ten thousand of them could have comprehended the argument, because unacquainted with the Jewish system; the knowledge of which the writer of this epistle everywhere supposes. He who is well acquainted with the Mosaic law sits down to the study of this epistle with double advantages; and he who knows the Traditions of the Elders, and the Mishnaic illustrations of the written and pretended oral law of the Jews, is still more likely to enter into and comprehend the apostle's meaning. No man has adopted a more likely way of explaining its phraseology than Schoettgen, who has traced its peculiar diction to Jewish sources; and, according to him, the proposition of the whole epistle is this:

JESUS OF NAZARETH IS THE TRUE GOD.

And, in order to convince the Jews of the truth of this proposition, the apostle uses but three arguments: 1. Christ is superior to the angels. 2. He is superior to Moses. 3. He is superior to Aaron.

CHAPTER I.

Different discoveries made of the divine will to the ancient Israelites by the prophets, 1. The discovery now perfected by the revelation of Jesus Christ, of whose excellences and glories a large description is given, 2-13. Angels are ministering spirits to the heirs of salvation, 14.

GOD who at sundry times and ^a in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets,

Verse 1. God, who at sundry times and in divers manners] The infinite God is at once produced to view, not in any of those attributes which are essential to the divine nature, but in the manifestations of his love to the world, by giving a revelation of his will relative to the salvation of mankind, and thus preparing the way, through a long train of years, for the introduction of that most glorious Being, his own Son.

Sundry times] Giving portions of revelation at different times.

Divers manners] The words are intended to point out the imperfect state of divine revelation under the Old Testament; it was not complete, nor can it without the New be considered a sufficiently ample discovery of the divine will. Under the Old Testament, revelations were made at various times, by various persons, in various laws and forms of teaching, with various degrees of clearness, under various shadows, types, and figures, and with various modes of revelation, such as by angels, visions, dreams, mental impressions, &c. But under the New Testament all is done simply by one person, i.e., Jesus, who has fulfilled the prophets, and completed prophecy; who is the way, the truth, and the life; and the founder, mediator, and governor of his own kingdom. [The words which we translate at sundry times and in divers manners, refer to the giving of revelations in distinct portions, and by manifold methods.]

Verse 2. Last days] The gospel dispensation, called the last days and the last time, because not to be followed by any other dispensation; or the conclusion of the Jewish church and state, now at their termination.

By his Son] It is very remarkable that the pronoun his is not found in the text; nor is it found in any MS. or Version. We should not therefore supply the pronoun as our translators have done; but simply read BY A SON, or IN

A SON, whom he hath appointed heir of all things. God has many sons and daughters, and he has many heirs; but he has no Son who is heir of all things, none by whom he made the worlds, none in whom he speaks, and by whom he has delivered a complete revelation to mankind, but Jesus the Christ. [The absence of the article or pronoun does not warrant the proposed rendering. The word Son is used absolutely.]

Verse 3. The brightness of his glory] The resplendent out-beaming of the essential glory of God. The Greek word (augasma) is that which has splendour in itself; the word used in the text is apaugasma, the splendour emitted from it; but the inherent splendour and the exhibited are radically and essentially the same.

The express image of his person] The character or impression of his hypostasis or substance. It is supposed that these words expound the former; image expounding brightness, and person or substance, glory. The hypostasis of God is that which is essential to him as God; and the character or image is that by which all the likeness of the original becomes manifest, and is a perfect fac-simile of the whole. It is a metaphor taken from sealing; the die or seal leaving the full impression of its every part on the wax to which it is applied.

From these words it is evident, 1. That the apostle states Jesus Christ to be of the same essence with the Father, as the proceeding splendour must be the same with the inherent splendour.

2. That Christ, though proceeding from the Father, is of the same essence; for if one splendour produce another splendour, the produced splendour must be of the same essence with that which produces it.

3. That although Christ is thus of the same essence with

6 * And again, when he bringeth in ^b the first-begotten into the world, he saith, ^c And let all the angels of God worship him.

the Father, yet he is a distinct person from the Father; as the splendour of the sun, though of the same essence, is distinct from the sun itself, though each is essential to the other; as the inherent splendour cannot subsist without its proceeding splendour, nor the proceeding splendour subsist without the inherent splendour from which it proceeds.

4. That Christ is eternal with the Father, as the proceeding splendour must necessarily be co-existent with the inherent splendour. If the one, therefore, be uncreated, the other is uncreated; if the one be eternal, the other is eternal. [On this verse, see note at the end of this epistle.]

Upholding all things by the word of his power] He spake, and all things were created; He speaks, and all things are sustained.

Purged our sins] There may be here some reference to the great transactions in the wilderness.

1. Moses, while in communion with God on the mount, was so impressed with the divine glories that his face shone, so that the Israelites could not behold it. But Jesus is infinitely greater than Moses, for he is the splendour of God's glory; and,

2. Moses found the government of the Israelites such a burden that he altogether sank under it. But Christ not only carried all the Israelites, and all mankind; but he upholds ALL THINGS by the word of his power.

3. The Israelites murmured against Moses and against God, and provoked the heavy displeasure of the Most High; and would have been consumed had not Aaron made an atonement for them, by offering victims and incense. But Jesus not only makes an atonement for Israel, but for the whole world; not with the blood of bulls and goats, but with his own blood: hence it is said that he purged our sins by himself, his own body and life being the victim.

The right hand of the Majesty on high] As it were associated with the Supreme Majesty, in glory everlasting, and in the government of all things in time and in eternity; for the right hand is the place of the greatest eminence, 1 Kings ii. 19.

Verse 4. So much better than the angels] Another argument in favour of the divinity of our Lord. The Jews had the highest opinion of the transcendent excellence of angels; they considered them next to God, and none entitled to their adoration but God; and on their own ground the apostle proves Jesus Christ to be God, because God commanded all the angels of heaven to worship him. He, therefore, who is greater than the angels, and is the object of their adoration, is God. But Jesus Christ is greater than the angels, and the object of their adoration; therefore Jesus Christ must be God.

By inheritance obtained] The verb signifies generally to participate, possess, obtain, or acquire. It is not by inheritance that Christ possesses a more excellent name than angels, but as God: he has it naturally and essentially; and, as God manifested in the flesh, he has it in consequence of his humiliation, sufferings, and meritorious death.

Verse 5. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee] These words are quoted from Ps. ii. 7, and they are cited by St. Paul, Acts xiii. 33, as referring to the resurrection of Christ. This application of them is confirmed by the same apostle, Rom. i. 4, as by his resurrection from the dead Christ was declared—manifestly proved, to be the Son of God with power.

The words, This day have I begotten thee, must refer either to his incarnation, when he was miraculously conceived in the womb of the Virgin by the power of the Holy Spirit; or to his resurrection from the dead, when God, by this sovereign display of his almighty energy, declared him to be his Son, vindicated his innocence, and also the purity and innocence of the blessed Virgin, who was the mother of this

Son, and who declared him to be produced in her womb by the power of God. [These words have been viewed by eminent expositors as setting forth the doctrine of the eternal generation of the Son of God, a doctrine which Dr. Clarke repudiated. It is difficult to attach to them any other meaning here. The following verse treats of the incarnation, and clearly stands in contrast with the fifth verse, as to time—the fifth verse representing the relation of the Son to the Father before all worlds.]

He shall be to me a Son?] This place, which is quoted 2 Sam. vii. 14, shows us that the seed which God promised to David, and who was to sit upon his throne, and whose throne should be established for ever, was not Solomon, but Jesus Christ; and indeed he quotes the words so as to intimate that they were so understood by the Jews.

Verse 6. And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten] But when he bringeth again, or the second time, the first-born into the habitable world. This most manifestly refers to his resurrection, which might be properly considered a second incarnation; for as the human soul, as well as the fulness of the Godhead bodily, dwelt in the man Christ Jesus on and during his incarnation, so when he expired upon the cross, both the Godhead and the human spirit left his dead body; and as on his resurrection these were reunited to his revived manhood, therefore, with the strictest propriety, does the apostle say that the resurrection was a second bringing of him into the world. [Delitzsch suggests the following rendering: "And when he shall have again brought in the first-begotten into the world, &c. &c.," referring the passage to the second advent of Christ.]

Let all the angels of God worship him.] To worship any creature is idolatry, and God resents idolatry more than any other evil. Jesus Christ can be no creature, else the angels who worship him must be guilty of idolatry, and God, the author of that idolatry, who commanded those angels to worship Christ.

There has been some difficulty in ascertaining the place from which the apostle quotes these words. Our marginal references send us, with great propriety, to the Septuagint Version of Deut. xxxiii. 43, where the passage is found verbatim et literatim; but there is nothing answering to the words in the present Hebrew text. The apostle undoubtedly quoted the Septuagint, which had then been for more than 800 years a Version of the highest repute among the Jews; and it is very probable that the copy from which the Seventy translated had the corresponding words.

Verse 7. Who maketh his angels spirits] They are so far from being superior to Christ, that they are not called God's sons in any peculiar sense, but his servants, as tempests and lightnings are. In many respects they may have been made inferior even to man as he came out of the hands of his Maker, for he was made in the image and likeness of God; but of the angels, even the highest order of them, this is never spoken.

Verse 8. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever] If this be said of the Son of God, i.e., Jesus Christ, then Jesus Christ must be God; and indeed the design of the apostle is to prove this. The words here quoted are taken from Ps. xlv. 6, 7, which the ancient Chaldean paraphrast, and the most intelligent rabbins, refer to the Messiah.

A sceptre of righteousness] The sceptre, which was a sort of staff or instrument of various forms, was the ensign of government, and is here used for governing itself.

Verse 9. Thou hast loved righteousness] This is the characteristic of a just governor: he abhors and suppresses iniquity; he countenances and supports righteousness and truth.

Therefore God, even thy God] The original may be thus translated: Therefore, O God, thy God hath anointed thee.

12 And as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed: but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail.

13 But to which of the angels said he at any time,

*Ps. cx. 1. Matt. xxii. 44. Mark xii. 86. Luke xx. 42. Ch. x. 12. Ver. 3.—Gen. xix. 16. xxxiii. 1, 2, 24. Ps. xxxiv. 7. xol. 11. col. 20, 21. Dan. iii. 28. vii. 10, x. 11. Matt. xviii. 10. Luke i. 19.

The form of speech is nearly the same with that in the preceding verse; but the sense is sufficiently clear if we read, Therefore God, thy God hath anointed thee, &c.

With the oil of gladness] Anciently, kings, priests, and prophets were consecrated to their several offices by anointing, and this signified the gifts and influences of the Divine Spirit. Christ signifies The Anointed One, the same as the Hebrew Messias; and he is here said to be anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows. None was ever constituted prophet, priest, and king, but himself; some were kings only, prophets only, and priests only; others were kings and priests, or priests and prophets, or kings and prophets; but none had ever the three offices in his own person but Jesus Christ, and none but himself can be a King over the universe, a Prophet to all intelligent beings, and a Priest to the whole human race.

Verse 10. And, Thou, Lord] This is an address to the Son as the Creator, see ver. 2; for this is implied in laying the foundation of the earth.

Verse 11. They shall perish] Permanently fixed as they seem to be, a time shall come when they shall be dissolved.

Shall wear old as doth a garment] It is remarkable that our word world is a contraction of wear old; a term by which our ancestors expressed the sentiment contained in this verse. It was formerly written weorold and werold. [This is very doubtful.]

* Sit on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?

14^b Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

ii. 9, 13. Acts xii. 7. &c. xxvii. 23.—Rom. viii. 17. Tit. iii. 7. James ii. 5. 1 Pet. iii. 7.

Thou remainest] Some good MSS. read the verb in the future—thou shalt remain. The difference between these two readings is of little importance.

Verse 12. And they shall be changed] Not destroyed ultimately, or annihilated.

But thou art the same] These words can be said of no being but God; all others are changeable or perishable, because temporal; only that which is eternal can continue essentially, and, speaking after the manner of men, formally the same.

Thy years shall not fail.] There is in the divine duration no circle to be run, no space to be measured, no time to be reckoned. All is eternity—infinite—and onward.

Verse 14. Are they not all ministering spirits] That is, They are all ministering spirits; for the Hebrews often express the strongest affirmative by an interrogation.

All the angels, even those of the highest order, are employed by their Creator to serve those who believe in Christ Jesus. What these services are, and how performed, it would be impossible to state. Much has been written on the subject, partly founded on scripture, and partly on conjecture. They are, no doubt, constantly employed in averting evil and procuring good. If God help man by man, we need not wonder that he helps man by angels. We know that he needs none of those helps, for he can do all things himself; yet it seems agreeable to his infinite wisdom and goodness to use them.

CHAPTER II.

The use we should make of the preceding doctrine, and the danger of neglecting this great salvation, 1-4. The future world is not put in subjection to the angels, but all is under the authority of Christ, 5-8. Jesus has tasted death for every man, 9. Nor could he accomplish man's redemption without being incarnated and without dying; by which he destroys the devil, and delivers all that believe on him from the fear of death and spiritual bondage, 10-15. Christ took not upon him the nature of angels, but the nature of Abraham, that he might die, and make reconciliation for the sins of the people, 16-18.

THEREFORE we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip.

* Gr. run out as leaking vessels.—Deut. xxxiii. 2. Ps. lxxviii. 17. Acts vii. 53. Gal. iii. 19.

Verse 1. Lest at any time we should let them slip.] "Lest at any time we should leak out." This is a metaphor taken from unstaunch vessels; the staves not being close together, the fluid put into them leaks through the chinks and crevices.

Verse 2. If the word spoken by angels] The law (according to some) which was delivered by the mediation of angels, God frequently employing these to communicate his will to men. But the apostle probably means those particular messages which God sent by angels, as in the case of Lot, Gen. xix., and such like.

Was stedfast] Was so confirmed by the divine authority and so strict, that it would not tolerate any offence, but inflicted punishment on every act of transgression, every case in which the bounds laid down by the law were passed over;

2 For if the word^b spoken by angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompence of reward;

3^d How shall we escape, if we neglect so great and every act of disobedience in respect to the duties enjoined.

Received a just recompence] That kind and degree of punishment which the law prescribed for those who broke it.

Verse 3. How shall we escape] The salvation mentioned here is the whole system of Christianity, with all the privileges it confers; properly called a salvation, because by bringing such an abundance of heavenly light into the world it saves or delivers men from the kingdom of darkness, ignorance, error, superstition, and idolatry; and provides all the requisite means to free them from the power, guilt, and contamination of sin. This salvation is great when compared with that granted to the Jews: 1. The Jewish dispensation was provided for the Jews alone; the Christian dispensation salvation; * which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was ^b confirmed unto us by them that heard him;

4 * God also bearing them witness, ^a both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and ^c gifts of the Holy Ghost, ^e according to his own will?

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection ^b the world to come, whereof we speak.

6 But one in a certain place testified, saying, ¹ What is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that thou visitest him?

for all mankind. 2. The Jewish dispensation was full of significant types and ceremonies; the Christian dispensation is the substance of all those types. 3. The Jewish dispensation referred chiefly to the body and outward state of man—washings and external cleansings of the flesh; the Christian, to the inward state—purifying the heart and soul, and purging the conscience from dead works. 4. The Jewish dispensation promised temporal happiness; the Christian spiritual. 5. The Jewish dispensation belonged chiefly to time; the Christian, to eternity. 6. The Jewish dispensation had its glory; but that was nothing when compared to the exceeding glory of the gospel. 7. Moses administered the former; Jesus Christ, the Creator, Governor, and Saviour of the world, the latter. 8. This is a great salvation, infinitely beyond the Jewish; but how great no tongue or pen can describe.

Those who neglect it are not only they who oppose or persecute it, but they who pay no regard to it; who do not meddle with it, do not concern themselves about it, do not lay it to heart; and consequently do not get their hearts changed by it.

Which at the first began to be spoken] Though John the Baptist went before our Lord to prepare his way, yet he could not be properly said to preach the gospel; and even Christ's preaching was only a beginning of the great proclamation: it was his own Spirit in the apostles and evangelists, the men who heard him preach, that opened the whole mystery of the kingdom of heaven.

Verse 4. God also bearing them witness] He did not leave the confirmation of these great truths to the testimony of men; he bore his own testimony to them by signs, wonders, various miracles, and distributions of the Holy Ghost.

Verse 5. The world to come] That the phrase the world to come, meant the days of the Messiah among the Jews, is most evident, and has been often pointed out in the course of these notes; and that the administration of this kingdom has not been intrusted to angels, who were frequently employed under the law, is also evident, for the government is on the shoulder of Jesus Christ; he alone has the keys of death and hell; he alone shuts, and no man opens; opens, and no man shuts; he alone has the residue of the Spirit; he alone is the Governor of the universe, the Spirit, Soul, Heart, and Head of the Church: all is in his authority, and under subjection to him.

But some think that the world to come means future glory, and suppose the words are spoken in reference to the Angel of God's presence, Exod. xxiii. 20, who introduced the Israelites into the promised land, which land is here put in opposition to the heavenly inheritance.

Verse 6. But one in a certain place] This one is David; and the certain place, Ps. viii. 4, 5, 6. But why does the apostle use this indeterminate mode of quotation? Because it was common thus to express the testimony of any of the inspired writers. The mode of quotation implies, not ignorance, but reverence.

What is man] This quotation is verbatim from the Septuagint. The variation of the terms in the original is very emphatic. Adam is the name given to man at his creation, and expresses his origin and generic distinction from all other animals. Enosh, which signifies sick, weak, wretched, was never given to him till after his fall. The son of Adam means here, any one or all of the fallen posterity of the first man. That God should remember in the way of mercy these

7 Thou madest him ^a a little lower than the angels; thou crownedst him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands:

8 ^a Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now ^b we see not yet all things put under him:

9 But we see Jesus, ^c who was made a little lower than the angels, ^d for the suffering of death, ^e crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death ^f for every man.

10 ^a For it became him, ^b for whom are all things, wretched beings, is great condescension; that he should visit them, manifest himself to them, yea, even dwell among them, and at last assume their nature, and give up his life to ransom them from the bitter pains of eternal death, is mercy and love indescribable and eternal.

Verse 7. Thou madest him a little lower than the angels] If this be spoken of man as he came out of the hands of his Maker, it places him at the head of all God's works; for literally translated the original is: Thou hast made him less than God. And this is proved by his being made in the image and likeness of God, which is spoken of no other creature either in heaven or earth; and it is very likely that in his original creation he stood at the head of all the works of God, and the next to his Maker. If we take the words as referring to Jesus Christ, then they must be understood as pointing out the time of his humiliation, as in ver. 9; and the little lower, in both verses, must mean for a short time, or a little while, as is very properly inserted among our marginal readings.

Thou crownedst him with glory and honour] This was strictly true of Adam in his state of innocence, for he was set over all things in this lower world. So far all this perfectly applies to Adam; but it is evident the apostle takes all in a much higher sense, that of universal dominion; and hence he says, he left nothing that is not put under him. These verses, collated with Philip. ii. 9-11, mutually illustrate each other. And the crowning Christ with glory and honour must refer to his exaltation after his resurrection, in which, as the victorious Messiah, he had all power given to him in heaven and earth. And although we do not yet see all things put under him, for evil men and evil spirits are only under the subjection of control, yet we look forward to that time when the whole world shall be bowed to his sway, and when the stone cut out of the mountain without hands shall become great, and fill the whole earth.

Verse 9. Should taste death for every man.] It was a custom in ancient times to take off criminals by making them drink a cup of poison. The reference in the text seems to point out the whole human race as being accused, tried, found guilty, and condemned, each having his own poisoned cup to drink; and Jesus, the wonderful Jesus, takes the cup out of the hand of each, and cheerfully and with alacrity drinks off the dregs! Thus having drunk every man's poisoned cup, he tasted that death which they must have endured, had not their cup been drunk by another. Is not this the cup to which he refers? Matt. xxvi. 39: O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me!

Several critics contend that the verse should be read thus: "But we see Jesus, who for a little while was made less than angels, that by the grace of God he might taste death for every man, for the suffering of death crowned with glory and honour." Howsoever it be taken, the sense is nearly the same.

Verse 10. For it became him] It was suitable to the divine wisdom, the requisitions of justice, and the economy of grace, to offer Jesus as a sacrifice, in order to bring many sons and daughters to glory.

For whom—and by whom] God is the cause of all things, and he is the object or end of them.

Perfect through sufferings.] Without suffering he could not have died, and without dying he could not have made an atonement for sin. The sacrifice must be consummated and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make ^a the captain of their salvation ^b perfect through sufferings.

in order that he might be qualified to be the Captain or Author of the salvation of men, and lead all those who become children of God, through faith in him, into eternal glory.

Verse 11. For both he that sanctifieth] The word does not merely signify one who sanctifies or makes holy, but one who makes atonement or reconciliation to God; and answers to the Hebrew caphtar, to expiate. See Exod. xxix. 33. 36. He that sanctifies is he that makes atonement; and they who are sanctified are they who receive that atonement, and, being reconciled unto God, become his children by adoption, through grace.

In this sense our Lord uses the word, John xvii. 19.

Are all of one] What this one means has given rise to various conjectures; father, family, blood, seed, race, nature, have all been substituted; nature seems to be that intended, see verse 14; and the conclusion of this verse confirms it. Both the Sanctifier and the sanctified—both Christ and his followers are all of the same nature; for as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, i.e., of human nature, he partook of the same, and thus he was qualified to become a sacrifice for man. [The best critics refer the one to God.]

Verse 12. I will declare thy name] See Psalm xxii. 22. The apostle certainly quotes this psalm as referring to Jesus Christ, and these words as spoken by Christ unto the Father in reference to his incarnation. See the fulfilment of this, John i. 18; Luke x. 21, 22.

Verse 13. Behold I and the children which God hath given me.] This is taken from Isa. viii. 18. The apostle does not intend to say that the portions which he has quoted have any particular reference, taken by themselves, to the subject in question; they are only catch-words of whole paragraphs, which, taken together, are full to the point; because they are prophecies of the Messiah, and are fulfilled in him.

Verse 14. The children are partakers of flesh and blood] Since those children of God, who have fallen and are to be redeemed, are human beings; in order to be qualified to redeem them by suffering and dying in their stead, He himself likewise took part of the same—he became incarnate; and thus he who was God with God, became man with men. By the children here we are to understand not only the disciples and all genuine Christians, as in ver. 13, but also the whole human race; all Jews and all Gentiles; so John xi. 51, 52. As the apostle was writing to the Hebrews only, he in general uses a Jewish phraseology, pointing out to them their own privileges; and rarely introduces the Gentiles, or what the Messiah has done for the other nations of the earth.

That through death] That by the merit of his own death, making atonement for sin, and procuring the mighty energy of the Holy Spirit, he might counterwork or render useless and ineffectual all the operations of him who had the power or influence, to bring death into the world; so that death, which was intended by him who was a murderer from the beginning, to be the final ruin of mankind, becomes the in-part of the same; ^a that through death i.e. might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil;

15 And deliver them who through fear of death were all ^b their lifetime subject to bondage.

16 For verily ^c he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham.

17 Wherefore in all things it behoved him ^d to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be ^e a merciful and faithful high-priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people.

18 ^f For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.

strument of their exaltation and endless glory; and thus the death brought in by Satan is counterworked and rendered ineffectual by the death of Christ.

Him that had the power of death] This is spoken in conformity to an opinion prevalent among the Jews, that there was a certain fallen angel who was called the angel of death, i.e., one who had the power of separating the soul from the body, when God decreed that the person should die. There were two of these, according to some of the Jewish writers; one was the angel of death to the Gentiles, the other to the Jews.

Verse 15. And deliver them who through fear of death] It is very likely that the apostle has the Gentiles here principally in view. As they had no revelation, and no certainty of immortality, they were continually in bondage to the fear of death. But it is also true that all men naturally fear death; even those that have the fullest persuasion and certainty of a future state dread it: genuine Christians, who know that, if the earthly house of their tabernacle were dissolved, they have a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, only they fear it not. In the assurance they have of God's love, the fear of death is removed; and by the purification of their hearts through faith, the sting of death is extracted.

Verse 16. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels] Moreover, he doth not at all take hold of angels; but of the seed of Abraham he taketh hold. This reading is greatly to be preferred to that in the text. Jesus Christ, intending not to redeem the angels, but to redeem man, did not assume the angelic nature, but was made man, coming directly by the seed or posterity of Abraham, with whom the original covenant was made, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and it is on this account that the apostle mentioned the seed of Abraham, and not the seed of Adam. The word itself signifies, not only to take hold of, but to help, succour, save from sinking, &c. The rebel angels, who sinned and fell from God, were permitted to fall down, alle downe, as one of our old writers expresses it, till they fell into perdition; man sinned and fell, and was falling down, alle downe, but Jesus laid hold on him and prevented him from falling into endless perdition. Thus he seized on the falling human creature, and prevented him from falling into the bottomless pit; but he did not seize on the falling angels, and they fell down into outer darkness.

That he might be a merciful and faithful high-priest] That he might be merciful—that he might be affected with a feeling of our infirmities, that, partaking of our nature with all its innocent infirmities and afflictions, he might know how to compassionate poor, afflicted, suffering man. And that he might be a faithful high-priest in those things which relate to God, whose justice requires the punishment of the transgressors, or a suitable expiation to be made for the sins of the people.

Verse 18. For in that he himself hath suffered] A state of suffering disposes persons to be compassionate, and those who endure most afflictions are they who feel most for others.

CHAPTER III.

Jesus is the High-priest of our profession, 1. And is counted worthy of more honour than Moses, as the Son is more worthy than the servant, 2-6. We should not harden our hearts against the voice of God, as the Israelites did, and were excluded from the earthly rest in Canaan, 7-11. We should be on our guard against unbelief, 12. And exhort each other, lest we be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; and we should hold fast the beginning of our confidence to the end, and not provoke God as the Israelites did, and who were destroyed in the wilderness, 13-17. They were promised the earthly rest, but did not enter because of unbelief, 18, 19.

WHEREFORE, holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus; 2 Who was faithful to him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house. 3 For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honour than the house. 4 For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God.

^a Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 2. Eph. iv. 1. Phil. iii. 14. 2 Thess. i. 11. 2 Tim. i. 9. 2 Pet. i. 10.—^b Rom. xv. 8. Ch. i. 3.—^g Ver. 2.—^h Exod. xiv. 31. Num. xii. 7. Deut. xii. 24.

Verse 1. Holy brethren] The not discerning between actual positive holiness, and the call to it, as the consecration of the persons, has led many commentators and preachers into destructive mistakes. Antinomianism has had its origin here: and as it was found that many persons were called saints who, in many respects, were miserable sinners, hence it has been inferred that they were called saints in reference to a holiness which they had in another; and hence the Antinomian imputation of Christ's righteousness to unholy believers, whose hearts were abominable before God, and whose lives were a scandal to the gospel. Let, therefore, a due distinction be made between persons by their profession holy, i.e., consecrated to God; and persons who are faithful to that profession, and are both inwardly and outwardly holy. They are not all Israel who are of Israel: a man, by a literal circumcision, may be a Jew outwardly; but the circumcision of the heart by the Spirit makes a man a Jew inwardly. A man may be a Christian in profession, and not such in heart; and those who pretend that, although they are unholy in themselves, they are reputed holy in Christ, because his righteousness is imputed to them, most awfully deceive their own souls.

Heavenly calling] The Israelites had an earthly calling; they were called out of Egypt to go into the promised land: Christians have a heavenly calling; they are invited to leave the bondage of sin, and go to the kingdom of God.

Apostle and High priest of our profession] Among the Jews the high-priest was considered to be also the apostle of God; and it is in conformity to this notion that the apostle speaks. And he exhorts the Hebrews to consider Jesus Christ to be both their High-priest and Apostle; and to expect these offices to be henceforth fulfilled by him, and by him alone. This was the fullest intimation that the Mosaic economy was at an end, and the priesthood changed. By our profession or that confession of ours, the apostle undoubtedly means the Christian Religion.

Verse 2. Who was faithful to him] House not only means the place where a family dwells, but also the family itself. The whole congregation of Israel was the house or family of God, and God is represented as dwelling among them; and Moses was his steward, and was faithful in the discharge of his office; strictly enforcing the divine rights: zealously maintaining God's honour; carefully delivering the mind and will of God to the people; proclaiming his promises, and denouncing his judgments, with the most inflexible integrity, though often at the risk of his life. Jesus Christ has his house—the whole great family of mankind, for all of whom he offered his sacrificial blood to God; and the Christian Church, which is especially his own

5 ^a And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as ^b a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after;

6 But Christ as a Son over his own house; ^c whose house are we, ^d if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.

7 Wherefore (as ^e the Holy Ghost saith, ^f To-day, if ye will hear his voice,

8 Harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, ^g in the day of temptation in the wilderness;

household, is composed of his own children and servants, among and in whom he lives and constantly resides. He has been faithful to the trust reposed in him as the Apostle of God; he has faithfully proclaimed the will of the Most High; vindicated the divine honour against the corrupters of God's worship; testified against them at the continual hazard of his life; and, at last, not only died as a victim to cancel sin, but also as a martyr to his faithfulness.

Verse 3. For this man was counted] As Jesus Christ, in the character of Apostle and High-priest is here intended, the word apostle, or this person or personage, should have been supplied, if any, instead of man.

More glory than Moses] That he is higher than the angels has been already proved; that he is higher than Moses he is now proving.

He who hath builded the house] The church, here called a house or family, is built by Christ; he is the Head, Governor, Soul, and Life of it; he must therefore be greater than Moses, who was only a member and officer in that church, who never put a stone in this spiritual building, but was even himself put in it by the great Architect.

Verse 4. For every house is builded by some man] The word house here, is still taken in a metaphorical sense as above, it signifies family or church. Now the general meaning of the words, taken in this sense, is: "Every family has an author, and a head or governor. Man may found families, civil and religious communities, and be the head of these; but God alone is the Head, Author, and Governor of all the families of the earth; he is the Governor of the universe. But the apostle has a more restricted meaning in the words all these things; and as he has been treating of the Jewish and Christian Churches, so he appears to have them in view here. Who could found the Jewish and Christian Church but God? Who could support, govern, influence, and defend them, but himself? Communities or societies, whether religious or civil, may be founded by man; but God alone can build his own Church. Now, as all these things could be builded only by God, so he must be God who has built all these things. But as Jesus is the Founder of the Church, and the Head of it, the word God seems here to be applied to him.

Verse 5. As a servant] The fidelity of Moses was the fidelity of a servant; he was not the framer of that church or house; he was employed, under God, to arrange and order it: he was steward to the Builder and Owner.

For a testimony of those things] The faithfulness of Moses consisted in his scrupulous attention to every ordinance of God; his framing everything according to the pattern showed him by the Lord; and his referring all to 9 When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works * forty years.

10 Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways.

11 So I sware in my wrath, ^b They shall not enter into my rest.)

12 Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

13 But exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

14 For we are made partakers of Christ, ^c if we that Christ of whom he spoke as the Prophet, who should come after him, and should be raised up from among themselves; whom they should attentively hear and obey, on pain of being cut off from being the people of the Lord.

Verse 6. But Christ as a Son over his own house [Moses was faithful as a servant IN the house; Jesus was faithful as the first-born Son OVER the house of which he is the Heir and Governor. Here, then, is the conclusion of the argument in reference to Christ's superiority over Moses. Moses did not found the house or family, Christ did; Moses was but IN the house, or one of the family, Christ was over the house as its Ruler; Moses was but servant in the house, Christ was the Son and Heir; Moses was in the house of another, Christ in his own house.]

Whose house are we [We Christians are his church and family; he is our Father, Governor, and Head.]

If we hold fast the confidence [The word which is here translated confidence, and which signifies freedom of speech, liberty of access, &c., seems to be used here to distinguish an important Christian privilege. Under the Old Testament no man was permitted to approach to God; even the very mountain on which God published his laws must not be touched by man or beast; and only the high-priest was permitted to enter the holy of holies, and that only once a year, on the great day of atonement; and even then he must have the blood of the victim to propitiate the divine justice. Under the Christian dispensation the way to the holiest is now laid open; and we have liberty of access, even to the holiest, by the blood of Jesus.]

Verse 7. Wherefore (as the Holy Ghost saith, To-day) [These words are quoted from Ps. xcv. 7; and as they were written by David, and attributed here to the Holy Ghost, it proves that David wrote by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit. They strongly imply, as indeed does the whole epistle, the possibility of falling from the grace of God, and perishing everlastingly; and without this supposition, these words, and all such like, which make more than two-thirds of the whole of divine revelation, would have neither sense nor meaning. What contemptible quibbling have men used to maintain a false and dangerous tenet against the whole tenor of the word of God! Angels fell—Adam fell—Solomon fell—and multitudes of believers have fallen, and, for aught we know, rose no more; and yet we are told that we cannot finally lose the benefits of our conversion!]

Verse 8. Harden not your hearts [Which ye will infallibly do, if ye will not hear his voice.]

Provocation [Swear unto them. The Israelites provoked God to wrath in the wilderness, from the day they came out of the land of Egypt until their arrival in Canaan, as Moses told them, Deut. ix. 7: but their greatest provocation, the provocation in which they showed the greatest degree of evil disposition, undoubtedly was their refusing to go into Canaan from Kadesh. This was very properly termed the bitter provocation and the day of temptation, by way of eminence; and justly brought on them the oath of God, excluding them from his rest in Canaan. [The reference is more probably to Meribah and Massah.]]

Verse 9. When your fathers tempted me [It would be better to translate where than when, as the Vulgate has done.]

Verse 10. They do always err in their heart [They are radically evil; and they are evil continually. They have every proof of my power and goodness, and lay nothing to hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end;

15 While it is said, ^d To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

16 ^e For some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses.

17 But with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had sinned, ^f whose carcases fell in the wilderness?

18 And ^g to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not?

19 ^h So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

heart. They might have been saved, but they would not. God was grieved on this account. Now, can we suppose that it would have grieved him if, by a decree of his own, he had rendered their salvation impossible?

Verse 11. So I swear in my wrath [God's grief at their continued disobedience became wrath at their final impenitence, and therefore he excluded them from the promised rest.]

Verse 12. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you [The apostle shows here five degrees of apostasy: 1. Consenting to sin, being deceived by its solicitations. 2. Hardness of heart, through giving way to sin. 3. Unbelief in consequence of this hardness, which leads them to call even the truth of the gospel in question. 4. This unbelief causing them to speak evil of the gospel, and the provision God has made for the salvation of their souls. 5. Apostasy itself, or falling off from the living God; and thus extinguishing all the light that was in them, and finally grieving the Spirit of God, so that he takes his flight, and leaves them to a seared conscience and reprobate mind. He who begins to give the least way to sin is in danger of final apostasy; the best remedy against this is to get the evil heart removed, as one murderer in the house is more to be dreaded than ten without.]

Verse 13. But exhort one another daily [This supposes a state of close church fellowship, without which they could not have had access to each other.]

While it is called To-day [Use time while you have it, for byc and bye there will be no more present time; all will be future; all will be eternity. Daily signifies time continued. To-day, all present time.]

Verse 14. For we are made partakers of Christ [Our participation of glory depends on our continuing steadfast in the faith, to the end of our Christian race.]

The word which we here translate confidence, signifies properly a basis or foundation; that on which something else is builded, and by which it is supported. Their faith in Christ Jesus was this hypostasis or foundation; on that all their peace, comfort, and salvation were builded. If this were not held fast to the end, Christ, in his saving influences, could not be held fast; and, no Christ, no heaven.]

Verse 16. For some, when they had heard, did provoke [The whole clause may be read interrogatively; But who were those hearers that did bitterly provoke, but all those who came out of Egypt by Moses? This mode of reading is followed by some editions and fathers, and by several learned moderns. It is more likely that this is the true reading, as all that follows to the end of the 18th verse is a series of interrogations.]

Should it be said that all did not provoke, for Joshua and Caleb are expressly excepted; I answer, that the term all may be with great propriety used, when out of many hundreds of thousands only two persons were found who continued faithful.]

Verse 17. Whose carcases fell [Whose members fell; an allusion to the scattered, bleached bones of this people that were a long time apparent in the wilderness, continuing there as a proof of their crimes, and of the judgments of God.]

Verse 18. To whom sware he [God never acts by any kind of caprice; whenever he pours out his judgments, there are the most positive reasons to vindicate his conduct.]

Verse 19. So we see that they could not enter in [It was no decree of God that prevented them, it was no want of necessary strength to enable them, it was through no deficiency of divine counsel to instruct them; all these they had in abundance: but they chose to sin, and would not believe. Unbelief produced disobedience, and disobedience produced hardness of heart and blindness of mind; and all these drew down the judgments of God, and wrath came upon them to the uttermost.

CHAPTER IV.

As the Christian rest is to be obtained by faith, we should beware of unbelief, lest we lose it, as the Hebrews did theirs, 1. The reason why they were not brought into the rest promised to them, 2. The rest promised to the Hebrews was a type of that promised to Christians, 3-10. Into this rest we should earnestly labour to enter, 11. A description of the word of God, 12, 13. Jesus is our sympathetic High-priest, 15. Through him we have confidence to come to God, 16.

LET us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it.

2 For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them; but ^b the word preached did not profit them, ^c not being mixed with faith in them that heard it.

3 ^a For we which have believed do enter into rest,

^a Ch. xii. 15.—^b Gr. the word of hearing.—^c Or, because they were not united by faith to.

Verse 1. Let us therefore fear] Seeing the Israelites lost the rest of Canaan, through obstinacy and unbelief, let us be afraid lest we come short of the heavenly rest, through the same cause.

Should seem to come short of it.] Lest any of us should actually come short of it, i.e., miss it. See the note on the verb to seem, Luke viii. 18.

Come short] The verb is applied here metaphorically: it is an allusion, of which there are many in this epistle, to the races in the Grecian Games: he that came short was he who was any distance, no matter how small, behind the winner.

Verse 2. For unto us was the gospel preached] For we also have received good tidings as well as they. They had a gracious promise of entering into an earthly rest; we have a gracious promise of entering into a heavenly rest. God gave them every requisite advantage; he has done the same to us. They might have persevered; so may we: they disbelieved, disobeyed, and fell; and so may we.

But the word preached did not profit them] But the word of hearing did not profit them. The word and promise to which the apostle most probably refers is that in Deut. i. 20, 21.

Not being mixed with faith in them that heard] The word rendered mixed is peculiarly expressive; it is a metaphor taken from the nutrition of the human body by mixing the aliment taken into the stomach with the saliva and gastric juice, in consequence of which it is concocted, digested, reduced into chyle, which, absorbed by the lacteal vessels, and thrown into the blood, becomes the means of increasing and supporting the body, all the solids and fluids being thus generated; so that on this process, properly performed, depend (under God) strength, health, and life itself. Should the most nutritive aliment be received into the stomach, if not mixed with the above juices, it would be rather the means of death than of life; or, in the words of the apostle, it would not profit, because not thus mixed.

Verse 3. For we which have believed do enter into rest] The great spiritual blessings, the forerunners of eternal glory, which were all typified by that earthly rest or felicity promised to the ancient Israelites, we Christians do, by believing in Christ Jesus, actually possess. We have peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost; are saved from the guilt and power of sin; and thus enjoy an inward rest.

as he said, ^c As I have sworn in my wrath, If they shall enter into my rest: although the works were finished from the foundation of the world.

4 For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, ^d And God did rest the seventh day from all his works.

5 And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest.

^d Ch. iii. 14.—^e Ps. xcv. 11. Ch. iii. 11.—^f Gen. ii. 2. Exod. xx. 11. xxxi. 17.

But this is a rest differing from the seventh day's rest, or sabbath, which was the original type of Canaan, the blessings of the gospel, and eternal glory; seeing God said, concerning the unbelieving Israelites in the wilderness, I have sworn in my wrath that they shall not enter into my rest, notwithstanding the works of creation were finished, and the seventh day's rest was instituted from the foundation of the world; consequently the Israelites had entered into that rest before the oath was sworn.

From the foundation of the world.] The foundation of the world means the completion of the work of creation in six days.

Verse 4. For he spake in a certain place] This certain place or somewhere, is probably Gen. ii. 2; and refers to the completion of the work of creation, and the setting apart the seventh day as a day of rest for man, and a type of everlasting felicity.

Verse 5. And in this place again] In the ninety-fifth psalm, already quoted, ver. 3. This was a second rest which the Lord promised to the believing, obedient seed of Abraham; and as it was spoken of in the days of David, when the Jews actually possessed this long promised Canaan, therefore it is evident that that was not the rest which God intended, as the next verse shows.

Verse 6. It remaineth that some must enter therein] Why our translators put in the word must here I cannot even conjecture. The words, literally translated, are as follows: Seeing then it remaineth for some to enter into it; and they to whom the promise was given, i.e., the Israelites, to whom was given the promise of entering into the rest of Canaan, did not enter in because of their unbelief; therefore, some other rest must be intended.

Verse 7. He limiteth a certain day] The day or time of rest relative to the ancient Jews being over and past, and a long time having elapsed between God's displeasure shown to the disobedient Jews in the wilderness and the days of David, and the true rest not having been enjoyed, God in his mercy has instituted another day—has given another dispensation of mercy and goodness by Christ Jesus; and now it may be said, as formerly, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

Verse 8. For if Jesus had given them rest] This word should have been written Joshua, and not Jesus.

6 Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, *and they to whom ^bit was first preached entered not in because of unbelief:

7 (Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, To-day, after so long a time; as it is said, *To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

8 For if ^aJesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day.

9 There remaineth therefore a * rest to the people of God.

10 For he that is entered into his rest, he also

^aCh. iii. 19.—^bOr, the gospel was first preached.—^cPs. cxv. 7. Ch. iii. 7.—^dThat is, Joshua.—^eOr, keeping of a sabbath.—^fCh. iii. 12, 18, 19.—^gOr, disobedience.—^hIsa. xlix. 2. Jer. xxxi. 29. 2 Cor.

18, the apostle sheweth that, although Joshua did bring the children of Israel into the promised land, yet this could not be the intended rest, because long after this time the Holy Spirit, by David, speaks of this rest; the apostle, therefore, concludes,

Verse 9. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. It was not, 1. The rest of the sabbath; it was not, 2. The rest in the promised land, for the psalmist wrote long after the days of Joshua; therefore there is another rest, a state of blessedness for the people of God; and this is the gospel, the blessings ^{it} procures and communicates, and the eternal glory which it prepares for, and has promised to, genuine believers.

There are two words in this chapter which we indifferently translate rest, the first signifying a cessation from labour, so that the weary body is rested and refreshed; the second meaning, not only a rest from labour, but a religious rest; sabbatismus, a rest of a sacred kind, of which both soul and body partake. This is true, whether we understand the rest as referring to gospel blessings, or to eternal felicity, or to both.

Verse 10. For he that is entered into his rest. The man who has believed in Christ Jesus has entered into his rest; the state of happiness which he has provided, and which is the forerunner of eternal glory.

Hath ceased from his own works. No longer depends on the observance of Mosaic rites and ceremonies for his justification and final happiness. He rests from all these works of the law as fully as God has rested from his works of creation.

Those who restrain the word rest to the signification of eternal glory say, that ceasing from our own works relates to the sufferings, tribulations, afflictions, &c., of this life; as in Rev. xiv. 13. I understand it as including both.

Verse 11. Let us labour therefore. The word implies every exertion of body and mind which can be made in reference to the subject.

Lest any man fall. Lest he fall off from the grace of God, from the gospel and its blessings, and perish everlastingly.

Verse 12. For the word of God is quick, and powerful. Commentators are greatly divided concerning the meaning of the phrase, the word of God: some supposing the whole of divine revelation to be intended; others, the doctrine of the gospel faithfully preached; others, the mind of God or the divine intellect; and others, the Lord Jesus Christ, who is thus denominated in John i. 1, &c., and Rev. xix. 13; the only places in which he is thus incontestably characterized in the New Testament. That Jesus Christ, the eternal, uncreated word, is not meant here, is more than probable from this consideration, that St. Paul, in no part of his thirteen acknowledged epistles, ever thus denominates our blessed Lord; nor is he thus denominated by any other of the New Testament writers except St. John.

It is more natural, says Calmet, to explain the term of the word, order, and will of God, for the Hebrews represent the revelation of God as an active being, living, all-powerful, illumined, executing vengeance, discerning and penetrating all things.

Mr. Wesley's note on this verse is expressed with his usual precision and accuracy:

"For the word of God—preached, ver. 2, and armed with threatenings, ver. 3, is living and powerful—attended with the power of the living God, and conveying either life or death to the hearers; sharper than any two-edged sword—penetrating the heart more than this does the body; piercing hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his.)

11 Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of * unbelief.

12 For the word of God is ^b quick, and powerful, and ^c sharper than any ^d two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow; and is ^e a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

13 Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked ^a and

x. 4, 5. 1 Pet. i. 23.—^aProv. v. 4.—^bEph. vi. 17. Rev. i. 18. ii. 16.—^c1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25.—^dPs. xxxiii. 13, 14. xc. 8. cxxxix. 11, 12.—^eJob xxvi. 6. xxxiv. 21. Prov. xv. 11.

quite through, and laying open the soul and spirit, joints and marrow—the inmost recesses of the mind, which the apostle beautifully and strongly expresses by this heap of figurative words; and is a discerner, not only of the thoughts, but also of the intentions."

Is a discerner of the thoughts] Is a critic of the propensities and suggestions of the heart. How often has it happened that a man hath seen the whole of his own character, and some of the most private transactions of his life, held up as it were to public view by the preacher; and yet the parties absolutely unknown to each other!

But while this effect of the word or true doctrine of God is acknowledged, let it not be supposed that it, of itself, can produce such effects. It is an instrument the most apt for the accomplishing of its work; but it will do nothing, can do nothing, but as used by the heavenly workman. To this is the reference in the next verse.

Verse 13. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest.] God, from whom this word comes, and by whom it has all its efficacy, is so infinite in his knowledge, and so omnipresent, that the whole creation is constantly exposed to his view; nor is there a creature of the affections, mind, or imagination, that is not constantly under his eye.

But all things are naked and opened.] The verb signifies to have the neck bent back so as to expose the face to full view, that every feature might be seen; and this was often done with criminals, in order that they might be the better recognized and ascertained.

The term was also used to describe the action of wrestlers who, when they could, got their hand under the chin of their antagonists, and thus, by bending both the head and the neck, could the more easily give them a fall; this stratagem is sometimes seen in ancient monuments.

With whom we have to do.] To whom we must give an account. He is our Judge, and is well qualified to be so, as all our hearts and actions are naked and open to him.

Verse 14. Seeing then that we have a great high-priest] It is contended, and very properly, that the particle, which we translate seeing, as if what followed was an immediate inference from what the apostle had been speaking, should be translated now; for the apostle, though he had before mentioned Christ as the High-priest of our profession, chap. iii. 1, and as the High-priest who made reconciliation for the sins of the people, chap. ii. 17, does not attempt to prove this in any of the preceding chapters, but now enters upon that point, and discusses it at great length to the end of chap. x.

Verse 15. For we have not an high-priest.] To the objection, "Your high-priest, if entered into the heavens, can have no participation with you, and no sympathy for you, because out of human feelings and infirmities," he answers: We have not an high-priest who cannot sympathize with our weakness. Though he be the Son of God, as to his human nature, and equal in his divine nature with God; yet, having partaken of human nature, and having submitted to all its trials and distresses, and being in all points tempted like as we are, without feeling or consenting to sin; he is able to succour them that are tempted.

The words might be translated, in all points according to the likeness, i.e., as far as his human nature could bear affinity to ours; for, though he had a perfect human body and human soul, yet that body was perfectly tempered; it was free from all morbid action, and consequently from all irregular movements. His mind, or human soul, being free from all sin, being every way perfect, could feel no irregular opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do.

14 Seeing then that we have ^a a great high-priest, ^b that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, ^c let us hold fast our profession.

15 For ^d we have not an high-priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but temper, nothing that was inconsistent with infinite purity. In all these respects he was different from us; and cannot, as man, sympathize with us in any feelings of this kind: but, as God, he has provided support for the body under all its trials and infirmities, and for the soul he has provided an atonement and purifying sacrifice; so that he cleanses the heart from all unrighteousness, and fills the soul with his holy Spirit, and makes it his own temple and continual habitation. He took our flesh and blood, a human body and a human soul, and lived a human life. Here was the likeness of human flesh, Rom. viii. 5; and by thus assuming human nature, he was completely qualified to make an atonement for the sins of the world.

Verse 16. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace] The allusion to the high-priest, and his office on the day of atonement, is here kept up. The approach mentioned here is to the propitiatory or mercy seat. This was the covering of the ark of the testimony or covenant, at each end of which was a cherub, and between them the shechinah, or symbol of Divine Majesty, which appeared to, and conversed with, the high-priest. Here the apostle shows the great superiority of the privileges of the New Testament above those of the Old; for there the high-priest only, and he with fear and trembling, was permitted to approach; and that not without the blood of the victim; and if in any thing he transgressed, he might expect to be struck with death. The throne of grace in heaven answers to this propitiatory, but to this ALL may approach who feel their need of salvation; and they may approach with freedom, ^e was in all points tempted like as we are, ^f yet without sin.

16 ^g Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

¹ 2 Cor. v. 21. Ch. vii. 26. 1 Pet. ii. 22. 1 John iii. 5.—² Eph. ii. 13. iii. 12. Ch. x. 19, 21, 22.

confidence, liberty of speech, in opposition to the fear and trembling of the Jewish high-priest.

That we may obtain mercy] That we may take mercy—that we may receive the pardon of all our sins; there is mercy for the taking.

And find grace] Mercy refers to the pardon of sin, and being brought into the favour of God. Grace is that by which the soul is supported after it has received this mercy, and by which it is purified from all unrighteousness, and upheld in all trials and difficulties, and enabled to prove faithful unto death.

To help in time of need.] For a seasonable support; that is, support when necessary, and as necessary, and in due proportion to the necessity. The word is properly rendered assistance, help, or support; but it is an assistance in consequence of the earnest cry of the person in distress, for the word signifies to run at the cry. So, even at the throne of grace, or great propitiatory, no help can be expected where there is no cry, and where there is no cry there is no felt necessity; for he that feels he is perishing will cry aloud for help, and to such a cry the compassionate High-priest will run; and the time of need is the time in which God will show mercy; nor will he ever delay it when it is necessary. We are not to cry to-day to be helped to-morrow, or at some indefinite time, or at the hour of death. We are to call for mercy and grace when we need them; and we are to expect to receive them when we call. This is a part of our liberty or boldness; we come up to the throne, and we call aloud for mercy, and God hears and dispenses the blessing we need.

CHAPTER V.

The nature of the high-priesthood of Christ; his pre-eminence, qualifications, and order, 1-10. Imperfect state of the believing Hebrews, and the necessity of spiritual improvement, 11-14.

FOR every high-priest taken from among men is ordained for men ^b in things pertaining to God, ^c that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins:

2 ^d Who ^e can have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that ^f he himself also is compassed with infirmity.

^a Ch. iii. 3.—^b Ch. ii. 17.—^c Ch. viii. 3. 4. ix. 9. x. 11. xi. 4.—^d Ch. ii. 18. iv. 15.—^e Or, can reasonably bear with.—(Ch. vii. 28.—^f Lev. iv. 3. ix. 7. xvi. 6. xv. 16, 17. Ch. vii. 27. ix. 7.—² 2 Chron.

Verse 1. For every high priest taken from among men] This seems to refer to Lev. xxi. 10, where it is intimated that the high-priest shall be taken from his brethren, i.e., he shall be of the tribe of Levi, and of the family of Aaron.

Is ordained for men] Is appointed to preside over the divine worship in those things which relate to man's salvation.

That he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins] The gifts mentioned here by the apostle, included every kind of eucharistical offering. The sacrifices included victims of every sort, or animals whose lives were to be offered in 3 And ^g by reason hereof he ought, as for the people, so also for himself, to offer for sins.

4 ^h And no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as ⁱ was Aaron.

5 ^j So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high-priest; but he that said unto him, ^k Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee.

xxvi. 18. John iii. 27.—¹ Exod. xxviii. 1. Num. xvi. 5, 40. 1 Chron. xxiii. 13.—² John viii. 54.—³ Ps. ii. 7. Ch. i. 5.

sacrifice, and their blood poured out before God, as an atonement for sins. The high-priest was the mediator between God and the people; and it was his office, when the people had brought these gifts and sacrifices, to offer them to God in their behalf. The people could not legitimately offer their own offerings, they must be all brought to the priest, and he alone could present them to God.

Verse 2. Who can have compassion on the ignorant] The word signifies not merely to have compassion, but to act with moderation, and to bear with each in proportion to his ignorance, weakness, and untoward circumstances, all 6 As he saith also in another place, "Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec.

7 Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications, "with strong crying and tears, unto him "that was able to save him from death, and was heard "in "that he feared;

8 "Though he were a Son, yet learned he "obedience by the things which he suffered; taken into consideration with the offences he has committed: in a word, to pity, feel for, and excuse, as far as possible; and, when the provocation is at the highest, to moderate one's passion towards the culprit, and be ready to pardon: and when punishment must be administered, to do it in the gentlest manner.

The reason given why the high-priest should be slow to punish and prone to forgive is, that he himself is also compassed with weakness; weakness lies all around him, it is his clothing; and as he feels his clothing, so should he feel it; and as he feels it, so he should deplore it, and compassionate others.

Verse 4. This honour] The office, which is one meaning of the word in the best Greek writers. It is here an honourable office, because the man is the high-priest of God, and is appointed by God himself to that office.

But he that is called of God, as was Aaron.] Some make this "an argument for the uninterrupted succession of popes and their bishops in the church, who alone have the authority to ordain for the sacerdotal office; and whosoever is not thus appointed is, with them, illegitimate." It is idle to employ time in proving that there is no such thing as an uninterrupted succession of this kind; it does not exist, it never did exist. It is a silly fable, invented by ecclesiastical tyrants, and supported by clerical coxcombs. But were it even true, it has nothing to do with the text. It speaks merely of the appointment of a high-priest, the succession to be preserved in the tribe of Levi, and in the family of Aaron. But even this succession was interrupted and broken, and the office itself was to cease on the coming of Christ, after whom there could be no high-priest; nor can Christ have any successor, and therefore he is said to be a priest for ever, for he ever liveth the intercessor and sacrifice for mankind.

Verse 5. Thou art my Son] See on chap. i. 5; and thus it appears that God can have no high-priest but his Son; and to that office none can now pretend without blasphemy, for the Son of God is still the high-priest in his temple.

Verse 6. He saith also in another place] For the mode of quotation here, see the note on chap. ii. 6.

Thou art a priest for ever] If he be a priest for ever, there can be no succession of priests; and if he have all power in heaven and in earth, and if he be present wherever two or three are gathered together in his name, he can have no vicars; nor can the church need one to act in his place, when he, from the necessity of his nature, fills all places, and is every where present. This one consideration nullifies all the pretensions of the Romish Pontiff, and proves the whole to be a tissue of imposture.

After the order of Melchisedec.] Who this person was must still remain a secret. We know nothing more of him than is written in Gen. xiv. 18, &c., where see the notes.

Verse 7. Who in the days of his flesh] The time of his incarnation, during which he took all the infirmities of human nature upon him, and was afflicted in his body and human soul just as other men are, irregular and sinful passions excepted.

Offered up prayers and supplications] It is probable that the apostle refers to something in the agony of our Lord, which the evangelists have not distinctly marked.

The Redeemer of the world appears here as simply man; but he is the representative of the whole human race. He must make expiation for sin by suffering, and he can suffer only as man. Suffering was as necessary as death; for man, because he has sinned, must suffer, and because he has broken the law, should die. Jesus took upon himself the nature of man, subject to all the trials and distresses of human nature. He is now making atonement; and he begins with sufferings, as sufferings commence with human life;

9 And "being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him;

10 Called of God an high-priest, "after the order of Melchisedec.

11 Of whom "we have many things to say, and hard to be uttered, seeing ye are "dull of hearing.

12 For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be and he terminates with death, as that is the end of human existence in this world. Though he was the Son of God, conceived and born without sin, or any thing that could render him liable to suffering or death, and only suffered and died through infinite condescension; yet, to constitute him a complete Saviour, he must submit to whatever the law required; and therefore he is stated to have learned obedience by the things which he suffered, ver. 8, that is, subjection to all the requisitions of the law; and being made perfect, that is, having finished the whole by dying, he, by these means, became the author of eternal salvation to all them who obey him, ver. 9; to them who, according to his own command, repent and believe the gospel, and, under the influence of his Spirit, walk in holiness of life. The fear of death was in Christ a widely different thing from what it is in men; they fear death because of what lies beyond the grave; they have sinned, and they are afraid to meet their Judge. Jesus could have no fear on these grounds; he was now suffering for man, and he felt as their expiatory victim; and God only can tell, and perhaps neither men nor angels can conceive, how great the suffering and agony must be which, in the sight of infinite Justice, was requisite to make this atonement. Death, temporal and eternal, was the portion of man; and now Christ is to destroy death by agonizing and dying! The tortures and torments necessary to effect this destruction, Jesus Christ alone could feel, Jesus Christ alone could sustain, Jesus Christ alone can comprehend. We are referred to them in this most solemn verse; but the apostle himself only drops hints, he does not attempt to explain them: he prayed; he supplicated with strong crying and tears; and he was heard in reference to that which he feared. His prayers, as our Mediator, were answered; and his sufferings and death were complete and effectual as our Sacrifice. This is the glorious sum of what the apostle here states; and it is enough. We may bear it with awful respect; and adore him with silence whose grief had nothing common in it to that of other men, and is not to be estimated according to the measures of human miseries.

To save him from death] Here we may consider the pronoun him as implying the collective body of mankind; the children who were partakers of flesh and blood, chap. ii. 14; the seed of Abraham, ver. 16, who through fear of death were all their life subject to bondage. So he made supplication with strong crying and tears to him who was able to save THEM from death; for I consider the them, of chap. ii. 15, the same or implying the same thing as him, in this verse; and, thus understood, all the difficulty vanishes away.

If it should be objected that this interpretation occasions a very unnatural change of person in these verses, I may reply that the change made by my construction is not greater than that made between verses 6 and 7; in the first of which the apostle speaks of Melchisedec, who at the conclusion of the verse appears to be antecedent to the relative who in ver. 7; and yet, from the nature of the subject, we must understand Christ to be meant. And I consider ver. 8, Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered, as belonging, not only to Christ considered in his human nature, but also to him in his collective capacity, i.e., belonging to all the sons and daughters of God, who, by means of suffering and various chastisements, learn submission, obedience, and righteousness; and this very subject the apostle treats in considerable detail in chap. xii. 2-11, to which the reader will do well to refer. [This interpretation is entirely untenable. The whole passage is illustrated by the story of Gethsemane.]

Verse 9. And being made perfect] And having finished all—having died and risen again, he became the cause of eternal salvation unto all them who obey him. He was con-separated both high priest and sacrifice by his offering upon the cross.

Verse 10. Called of God an high priest] Being constituted, hailed, and acknowledged to be an high priest.

Verse 11. Of whom we have many things to say] The words which we translate of whom, are variously applied, 1. To Melchisedec; 2. To Christ; 3. To the endless priesthood. It is more likely that the words are to be understood as meaning Jesus, or that endless priesthood, of which he was a little before speaking, and which is a subject that carnal Christians cannot easily comprehend.

Hard to be uttered] Difficult to be interpreted, because Melchisedec was a typical person. Or if it refer to the priesthood of Christ, that is still more difficult to be explained, as it implies, not only his being constituted a priest after this typical order, but his paying down the ransom for the sins of the whole world; and his satisfying the divine justice by this sacrifice, but also thereby opening the kingdom of heaven to all believers, and giving the whole world an entrance to the holy of holies by his blood.

Dull of hearing] Your souls do not keep pace with the doctrines and exhortations delivered to you. As the word signifies a person who walks heavily and makes little speed, it is here elegantly applied to those who are called to the Christian race, have the road laid down plain before them, how to proceed specified, and the blessings to be obtained enumerated, and yet make no exertions to get on, but are always learning, and never able to come to the full knowledge of the truth.

Verse 12. For when for the time] They had heard of the gospel many years, and had professed to be Christians for a long time; on those accounts they might reasonably have been expected to be well instructed in divine things, so as to be able to instruct others.

Which be the first principles] Certain first principles or elements. The literal translation of the passage is this: Ye have need that one teach you a second time, certain elements of the doctrines of Christ, or oracles of God, i.e., the notices which the prophets gave concerning the priesthood of Jesus Christ, such as are found in Ps. cx, and in Isa. liii. By the oracles of God the writings of the Old Testament are undoubtedly meant.

And are become such] The words seem to intimate that they had once been better instructed, and had now forgotten that teaching; and this was occasioned by their being dull of hearing; either they had not continued to hear, or they had heard so carelessly that they were not profited by what they heard.

Such as have need of milk] Milk is a metaphor by which many authors, both sacred and profane, express the first principles of religion and science; and they apply sucking to learning; and every student in his novitiate, or commence-in the word of righteousness; for he is ^a a babe.

14 But strong meat belongeth to them that are ^e of full age, even those who, by reason ^f of use, have their senses exercised ^g to discern both good and evil.

h. 6. Eph. iv. 13. Phil. iii. 15.—^f Or, of an habit, or perfection.—^g Isa. vii. 16. 1 Cor. ii. 14, 15.

ment of his studies, was likened to an infant that derives all its nourishment from the breast of its mother, not being able to digest any other kind of food. On the contrary, those who had well learned all the first principles of religion and science, and knew how to apply them, were considered as adults who were capable of receiving solid food, i.e., the more difficult and sublime doctrines.

Verse 13. For every one that useth milk] It is very likely that the apostle, by using this term, refers to the doctrines of the law, which were only the rudiments of religion, and were intended to lead us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

The word of righteousness] The doctrine of justification. I believe this to be the apostle's meaning. He that uses milk—rests in the ceremonies and observances of the law, is unskilful in the doctrine of justification; for this requires faith in the sacrificial death of the promised Messiah.

Verse 14. But strong meat] The high and sublime doctrines of Christianity; the atonement, justification by faith, the gift of the Holy Ghost, the fulness of Christ dwelling in the souls of men, triumph in and over death, the resurrection of the body, the glorification of both body and soul in the realms of blessedness, and an endless union with Christ in the throne of his glory. This is the strong food which the genuine Christian understands, receives, digests, and by which he grows.

By reason of use] Who, by constant hearing, believing, praying, and obedience, use all the graces of God's Spirit; and, in the faithful use of them, find every one improved, so that they daily grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Have their senses exercised] The word signifies the different organs of sense, as the eyes, ears, tongue and palate, nose, and finger-ends, and the nervous surface in general, through which we gain the sensations called seeing, hearing, tasting, smelling, and feeling.

There is something in the soul that answers to all these senses in the body. And as universal nature presents to the other senses their different and appropriate objects, so religion presents to these interior senses the objects which are suited to them. Hence in scripture we are said, even in spiritual things, to see, hear, taste, smell, and touch or feel. These are the means by which the soul is rendered comfortable, and through which it derives its happiness and perfection.

In the adult Christian these senses are said to be exercised, a metaphor taken from the athletes or contenders in the Grecian Games, who were wont to employ all their powers, skill, and agility in mock fights, running, wrestling, &c., that they might be the better prepared for the actual contests when they took place.

CHAPTER VI.

We must proceed from the first principles of the doctrine of Christ unto perfection, and not lay the foundation a second time, 1-3. Those who were once enlightened, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghost and the various blessings of the gospel, if they apostatize from Christ, and finally reject him as their Saviour, cannot be renewed again to repentance, 4-6. The double similitude of the ground blessed of God, and bearing fruit; and of that ground which is cursed of God, and bears briers and thorns, 7, 8. The apostle's confidence in them, and his exhortation to diligence and perseverance, 9-12. God's promise and oath to Abraham, by which the immutability of his counsel is shown, in order to excite our hope, 13-18. Hope is the anchor of the soul, and enters within the veil, 19, 20.

THEREFORE, ^a leaving ^b the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance ^c from dead works, and of faith toward God,

2 ^d Of the doctrine of baptisms, ^e and of laying on of hands, ^f and of resurrection of the dead, ^g and of eternal judgment.

3 And this will we do, ^h if God permit.

4 For ⁱ it is impossible for those ^j who were once enlightened, and have tasted of ^k the heavenly gift, and ^l were made partakers of the Holy Ghost,

5 And have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of ^m the world to come,

Verse 1. Therefore] Because you have been so indolent, slow of heart, and have still so many advantages.

Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ] Ceasing to continue in the state of babes, who must be fed with milk—with the lowest doctrines of the gospel, when you should be capable of understanding the highest.

Let us go on unto perfection] Let us never rest till we are adult Christians—till we are saved from all sin, and are filled with the Spirit and power of Christ. The original is very emphatic; let us be carried on to this perfection. God is ever ready, by the power of his Spirit, to carry us forward to every degree of life, light, and love, necessary to prepare us for an eternal weight of glory. There can be little difficulty in attaining the end of our faith, the salvation of our souls from all sin, if God carry us forward to it; and this he will do if we submit to be saved in his own way, and on his own terms.

Laying again the foundation of repentance] The phrase dead works occurs but once more in the sacred writings, and that is in chap. ix. 14 of this epistle; and in both places it seems to signify such works as deserve death—works of those who were dead in trespasses, and dead in sins; and dead by sentence of the law, because they had by those works broken the law. Repentance may be properly called the foundation of the work of God in the soul of man, because by it we forsake sin, and turn to God to find mercy.

Faith toward God] Is also a foundation, or fundamental principle, without which it is impossible to please God, and without which we cannot be saved. By repentance we feel the need of God's mercy, by faith we find that mercy.

But it is very likely that the apostle refers here to the Levitical law, which, in its painful observances, and awful denunciations of divine wrath against every breach of that law, was well calculated to produce repentance, and make it a grievous and bitter thing to sin against God. And as to faith in God, that was essentially necessary, in order to see the end of the commandment; for without faith in him who was to come, all that repentance was unavailable, and all ritual observances without profit.

Verse 2. Of the doctrine of baptisms] I am inclined to think that all the terms in this verse, as well as those in the former, belong to the Levitical law, and are to be explained on that ground.

Baptisms, or immersions of the body in water, sprinklings, and washings, were frequent as religious rites among the Hebrews, and were all emblematical of that purity which a holy God requires in his worshippers, and without which they cannot be happy here, nor glorified in heaven.

Laying on of hands] Was also frequent, especially in sacrifices: the person bringing the victim laid his hands on its head, confessed his sins over it, and then gave it to the priest to be offered to God, that it might make atonement for his transgressions. This also had respect to Jesus Christ, that Lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world.

The doctrine also of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment, were both Jewish; but were only partially revealed, and then referred to the gospel. Of the resurrection of the dead there is a fine proof in Isa. xxvi. 19. The valley of dry bones, Ezek. xxxvii. 1, &c., is both an illustration and proof of it. And Daniel has taught both the resurrection and the eternal judgment, chap. xii. 2.

6 If they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; ^a seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame.

7 For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them ^b by whom it is dressed, ^c receiveth blessing from God:

8 ^d But that which beareth thorns and briers is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing; whose end is to be burned.

9 But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things that accompany salvation, though we thus speak.

10 ^e For ^f God is not unrighteous, to forget ^g your 20, 21. 1 John v. 18.—^a Ch. x. 32.—^b John iv. 10. vi. 32. Eph. ii. 8.—^c Gal. iii. 2, 5. Ch. ii. 4.—^d Ch. x. 29.—^e Or, for.—^f Ps. lxx. 10.—^g Isa. v. 6.—^h Prov. xiv. 31. Matt. x. 42. xxv. 40. John xiii. 20.—ⁱ Rom. iii. 4. 2 Thess. i. 6, 7.—^j 1 Thess. i. 3.

Now the foundation of all these doctrines was laid in the Old Testament, and they were variously represented under the law, but they were all referred to the gospel for their proof and illustration. The apostle, therefore, wishes them to consider the gospel as holding forth these in their full spirit and power. It preaches, 1. Repentance unto life. 2. Faith in God through Christ, by whom we receive the atonement. 3. The baptism by water, in the name of the Holy Trinity; and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. 4. The imposition of hands, the true sacrificial system; and, by and through it, the communication of the various gifts of the Holy Spirit, for the instruction of mankind and the edification of the church. 5. The resurrection of the dead, which is both proved and illustrated by the resurrection of Christ. 6. The doctrine of the eternal or future judgment, which is to take place at the bar of Christ himself, God having committed all judgment to his Son, called here eternal or everlasting judgment, because the sentences then pronounced shall be irreversible.

Verse 3. And this will we do] God being my helper, I will teach you all the sublime truths of the gospel; and show you how all its excellences were typified by the law, and particularly by its sacrificial system.

Verse 4. For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened] 1. I do not consider these words as having any reference to any person professing Christianity. 2. They do not belong, nor are they applicable, to backsliders of any kind. 3. They belong to apostates from Christianity; to such as reject the whole Christian system, and its author, the Lord Jesus. 4. And to those of them only who join with the blaspheming Jews, call Christ an impostor, and vindicate his murderers in having crucified him as a malefactor; and thus they render their salvation impossible, by wilfully and maliciously rejecting the Lord that bought them. No man believing in the Lord Jesus as the great sacrifice for sin, and acknowledging Christianity as a divine revelation, is here intended, though he may have unfortunately backslidden from any degree of the salvation of God.

Once enlightened—Thoroughly instructed in the nature and design of the Christian religion, having received the knowledge of the truth, chap. x. 32; and being convinced of sin, righteousness, and judgment; and led to Jesus the Saviour of sinners.

Tasted of the heavenly gift] Having received the knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins.

Partakers of the Holy Ghost] The Spirit himself witnessing with their spirits that they were the children of God.

Verse 5. And have tasted the good word of God] Having had this proof of the excellence of the promise of God in sending the gospel, the gospel being itself the good word of a good God, the reading and preaching of which they find sweet to the taste of their souls.

The powers of the world to come] These words are understood two ways: 1. The powers of the world to come may refer to the stupendous miracles wrought in confirmation of the gospel, the gospel dispensation being the world to come in the Jewish phraseology, as we have often seen.

2. The words have been supposed to apply to those communications and foretastes of eternal blessedness, or of the joys of the world to come, which they who are justified through the blood of the covenant, and walk faithfully with their God, experience; and to this sense the word rendered have tasted work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister.

11 And we desire^b that every one of you do shew the same diligence^c to the full assurance of hope unto the end:

12 That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience^d inherit the promises.

13 For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swore by himself, is thought more properly to apply. But the original signifies to experience or have full proof of a thing. Thus, to taste death, Matt. xvi. 28, is to die, to come under the power of death, fully to experience its destructive nature as far as the body is concerned. See also Luke ix. 27; John viii. 52. And it is used in the same sense in chap. ii. 9 of this epistle, where Christ is said to taste death for every man.

^aRom. xv. 25. 2 Cor. viii. 4. ix. 1, 12. 2 Tim. i. 18.—^bCh. iii. 6, 14.—^cCol. ii. 2.—^dCh. xiii. 86.—^eGen. xxii. 16, 17. Ps. cv. 9.

It seems, therefore, that the first opinion is the best founded.

Verse 6. If they shall fall away] And having fallen away.

It appears from this, whatever sentiment may gain or lose by it, that there is a fearful possibility of falling away from the grace of God; and if this scripture did not say so, there are many that do say so. And were there no scripture express on this subject, the nature of the present state of man, which is a state of probation or trial, must necessarily imply it. Let him who most assuredly standeth, take heed lest he fall.

To renew them again unto repentance] As repentance is the first step that a sinner must take in order to return to God, and as sorrow for sin must be useless in itself unless there be a proper sacrificial offering, these having rejected the only available sacrifice, their repentance for sin, had they any, would be nugatory, and their salvation impossible on this simple account; and this is the very reason which the apostle immediately subjoins:

Seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God] They reject him on the ground that he was an impostor, and justly put to death. And thus they are said to crucify him to themselves—to do that in their present apostasy which the Jews did; and they show thereby that, had they been present when he was crucified, they would have joined with his murderers.

And put him to an open shame.] And have made him a public example; or, crucifying unto themselves and making the Son of God a public example. That is, they show openly that they judge Jesus Christ to have been worthy of the death which he suffered, and justly made a public example by being crucified. This shows that it is final apostacy, by the total rejection of the gospel, and blasphemy of the Saviour of men, that the apostle has in view.

Verse 7. For the earth which drinketh in the rain] As much as if he had said: In giving up such apostates as utterly incurable, we act as men do in cultivating their fields; for as the ground which drinketh in the rain by which the providence of God waters it, brings forth fruit to compensate the toil of the tiller, and continues to be cultivated, God granting his blessing to the labours of the husbandman; so,

Verse 8. That which beareth thorns and briers is rejected] That is: The land which, notwithstanding the most careful cultivation, receiving also in due time the early and latter rain, produces nothing but thorns and briers, or noxious weeds of different kinds, is rejected, is given up as unimprovable; its briers, thorns, and brushwood burnt down; and then left to be pastured on by the beasts of the field.

Is nigh unto cursing] It is acknowledged, almost on all hands, that this epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. This verse, is, in my opinion, a proof of it, and here I suppose the apostle refers to that approaching destruction; and perhaps he has this all along in view, but speaks of it covertly, that he might not give offence.

Verse 9. But, beloved] Here he softens what he had before said; having given them the most solemn warning against apostasy, he now encourages them to persevere, commends the good that is in them, and excites them to watchfulness and activity.

Better things of you] Than that you should resemble that 14 Saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee.

15 And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise.

16 For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife.

17 Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath;

18 That by two immutable things, in which it unfruitful ground that can be improved by no tillage, and is thrown into waste, and is fit only for the beasts of the forest to roam in.

Things that accompany salvation] Things that are suitable to a state of salvation; you give proofs still that you have not, whatever others have done, departed from the living God.

Verse 10. God is not unrighteous] God is only bound to men by his own promise: this promise he is not obliged to make; but, when once made, his righteousness or justice requires him to keep it; therefore, whatever he has promised he will certainly perform. But he has promised to reward every good work and labour of love, and he will surely reward yours; God's promise is God's debt.

Ministered to the saints] Have contributed to the support and comfort of the poor Christians who were suffering persecution in Judea.

Verse 11. We desire] We earnestly wish that each person among you may continue to manifest, exhibit to full view, the same diligence. There might be reason to suspect that some, through fear of man, might not wish the good they did to be seen, lest they also should suffer persecution. This would not comport with the generous, noble spirit of the gospel; the man who is afraid to let his decided attachment to God be known, is not far from backsliding. He who is more afraid of man than he is of God Almighty, can have very little religion.

The same diligence] They had an active faith and a labouring love, and the apostle wishes them to persevere in both. They were diligent, very diligent, and he desires them to continue so.

To the full assurance of hope] This full assurance does not imply that the man will absolutely persevere to the end; but that, if he do persevere in this grace, he shall infallibly have an eternal glory. There is no unconditional perseverance in the Scripture, nor can there be such in a state of probation.

Verse 12. That ye be not slothful] This shows how the full assurance of hope is to be regulated and maintained. They must be diligent; slothfulness will deprive them both of hope and faith.

Followers of them] That ye be imitators of them who are inheriting the promises. The promises may be considered as referring to the rest of faith here, and the rest of glory hereafter.

Verse 13. When God made promise to Abraham] The promised referred to is that made to Abraham when he had offered his son Isaac on the altar, Gen. xxii. 16-18. Of this promise the apostle only quotes a part, as is generally the case, because he knew that his readers were well acquainted with the scriptures of the Old Testament, and particularly with the Law.

He swore by himself] He pledged his eternal power and Godhead for the fulfilment of the promise; there was no being superior to himself to whom he could make appeal, or by whom he could be bound, therefore he appeals to and pledges his immutable truth and Godhead.

Verse 14. Saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee] I will continue to bless thee.

Multiplying I will multiply thee.] I will continue to increase thy posterity. In the most literal manner God continues to fulfil this promise; genuine Christians are Abraham's seed, and God is increasing their number daily. See the notes on Gen. xxii. 12-18; and xxiii. 1.

Verse 15. He obtained the promise.] Isaac was supernaturally born; and in his birth God began to fulfil the promise; while he lived, he saw a provision made for the multiplication of his seed; and, having continued steadfast in the faith, he received the end of all the promises in the enjoyment of an eternal glory.

Verse 16. Men verily swear by the greater] One who has greater authority; who can take cognizance of the obligation, and punish the breach of it.

Verse 17 The heirs of promise] All the believing posterity of Abraham, and the nations of the earth or Gentiles in general.

The immutability of his counsel] His unchangeable purpose to call the Gentiles to salvation by Jesus Christ; to justify every penitent by faith; to accept faith in Christ for justification in place of personal righteousness; and finally to bring every persevering believer, whether Jew or Gentile, to eternal glory.

Verse 18. That by two immutable things] The promise and oath of God; the promise pledged his faithfulness and justice; the oath, all the infinite perfections of his Godhead, for he swore by himself.

We might have a strong consolation] There appears to be an allusion here to the cities of refuge, and to the persons who fled to them for safety.

It is easy to apply this to the case of a truly penitent sinner. Thou hast sinned against God and against thy own life! The avenger of blood is at thy heels! Jesus hath shed his blood for thee, he is thy intercessor before the throne; flee to him! Lay hold on the hope of eternal life which is offered unto thee in the gospel! God invites thee! Jesus spreads his hands to receive thee! God hath sworn that he will not the death of a sinner; that he cannot will thy death: take God's oath, take his promise, credit what he hath spoken and sworn!

both sure and steadfast, ^b and which entereth into that within the veil;

20 ^c Whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, ^d made an high-priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

^c Ch. iv. 14. viii. 1. ix. 24.—^d Ch. iii. 1. v. 6. 10. vii. 17.

Verse 19. Which hope we have as an anchor] The apostle here changes the allusion; he represents the state of the followers of God in this lower world as resembling that of a vessel striving to perform her voyage through a troublesome, tempestuous, dangerous sea. At last she gets near the port; but the tempest continues, the water is shallow, broken, and dangerous, and she cannot get in: in order to prevent her being driven to sea again she heaves out her sheet anchor, which she has been able to get within the pier head by means of her boat, though she could not herself get in; then, swinging at the length of her cable, she rides out the storm in confidence, knowing that her anchor is sound, the ground good in which it is fastened, and the cable strong. Though agitated, she is safe; though buffeted by wind and tide, she does not drive; by and by the storm ceases, the tide flows in, her sailors take to the capstan, wear the ship against the anchor, which still keeps its bite or hold, and she gets safely into port. See on ver. 20.

Verse 20. Whither the forerunner] The word does not merely signify one that goes or runs before another, but also one who shows the way, he who first does a particular thing; also the first-fruits.

The metaphorical allusion is to the person who carries the anchor within the pier-head, because there is not yet water sufficient to carry the ship in; and to this I have already referred. [This interpretation is rather strained.]

After the order of Melchisedec.] After a long digression, the apostle resumes his explanation of Ps. cx. 4, which he had produced, chap. v. 6-10, in order to prove the permanency of the high-priesthood of Christ.

CHAPTER VII.

Concerning the greatness of Melchisedec, after whose order Christ is an high-priest, 1-4. The Levites had authority to take tithes of the people; yet Abraham, their representative, paid tithes to Melchisedec, 5-10. Perfection cannot come by the Mosaic law, else there could be no need for another priest after the order of Melchisedec, according to the prediction of David in Psalm cx., which priest is sprung from a tribe to which the priesthood, according to the law, did not appertain; but Christ is a priest for ever, not according to the law, but after the power of an endless life, 11-17. The law, therefore, is disannulled, because of its unprofitableness and imperfection; and Christ has an unchangeable priesthood, 18-24. He is therefore able always to save them that come unto him, being in every respect a suitable Saviour; and he has offered up himself for the sins of the people, 25-27. The law makes those priests who have infirmity; but he who is consecrated by the oath is perfect, and endures for ever, 28.

FOR this * Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God, who met Abraham returning from the slaughter of the kings, and blessed him;

* Gen. xiv.

Verse 1. For this Melchisedec, king of Salem] See the whole of this history largely explained in the notes on Gen. xiv. 18, &c., and the concluding observations at the end of that chapter.

Verse 2. Gave a tenth part of all] It was an ancient custom, among all the nations of the earth, to consecrate a

2 To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all; first being, by interpretation, King of righteousness, and after that also, King of Salem, which is, King of peace;

18, &c.

part or tenth of the spoils taken in war to the objects of their worship. Many examples of this kind occur. This however was not according to any provision in law, but merely ad libitum, and as a eucharistic offering to those to whom they imagined they owed the victory. But neither Abraham's decimation, nor theirs, had anything to do, either

3 Without father, without mother, ^a without descent, ^b having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but, made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually.

4 Now consider how great this man was, ^c unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave the tenth of the spoils.

5 And verily ^d they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham:

6 But he, whose ^e descent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, ^f and blessed ^g him that had the promises.

7 And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better.

with tithes as prescribed under the Mosaic dispensation, or as claimed under the Christian.

Verse 3. Without father, without mother] The object of the apostle, in thus producing the example of Melchisedec, was to answer the objections of the Jews against the legitimacy of the priesthood of Christ, taken from the stock from which he proceeded. The objection is this: If the Messiah is to be a true priest, he must come from a legitimate stock, as all the priests under the law have regularly done; otherwise we cannot acknowledge him to be a priest: but Jesus of Nazareth has not proceeded from such a stock; therefore we cannot acknowledge him for a priest, the antitype of Aaron. To this objection the apostle answers, that it was not necessary for the priest to come from a particular stock, for Melchisedec was a priest of the most high God, and yet was not of the stock either of Abraham or Aaron, but a Canaanite. It is well known that the ancient Hebrews were exceedingly scrupulous in choosing their high-priest; partly by divine command, and partly from the tradition of their ancestors, who always considered this office to be of the highest dignity.

When any person aspired to the sacerdotal function, his genealogical table was carefully inspected; and, if he was unable to prove his descent from Aaron, with other conditions, he was rejected.

He who could not support his pretensions by just genealogical evidences, was said by the Jews to be without father. This sort of phraseology was not uncommon when the genealogy of a person was unknown or obscure.

The old Syriac has given the true meaning by translating thus: "Whose father and mother are not inscribed among the genealogies."

Made like unto the Son of God] Melchisedec was without father and mother, having neither beginning of days nor end of life. His genealogy is not recorded; when he was born and when he died, is unknown. His priesthood, therefore, may be considered as perpetual. In these respects he was like to Jesus Christ, who, as to his Godhead, had neither father nor mother, beginning of time, nor end of days; and has an everlasting priesthood. The priesthood of Melchisedec is to abide continually on the same ground, that he is said to be without father and mother, i.e., there is no record of the end of his priesthood or life, no more than there is any account of his ancestry.

Verse 4. Consider how great this man was] There is something exceedingly mysterious in the person and character of this king of Salem; and to find out the whole is impossible.

The patriarch Abraham] The title is here applied, by way of eminence, to him who was the head or chief of all the fathers—or patriarchs of the patriarchs, and father of the faithful. The Syriac translates it "head of the fathers." The character and conduct of Abraham place him, as a man, deservedly at the head of the human race.

Verse 5. They that are of the sons of Levi] The priests who are of the posterity of the Levites, and receive the priesthood in virtue of their descent from Aaron, have authority from the law of God to receive tithes from the people.

According to the law] The apostle is proceeding to show that Melchisedec was greater even than Abraham, the head of the fathers, for to him Abraham gave tithes; and as the 8 And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, ^h of whom it is witnessed that he liveth.

9 And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, payed tithes in Abraham.

10 For he was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchisedec met him.

11 ⁱ If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood (for under it the people received the law), what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?

12 For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law.

13 For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar.

pedegree.—^f Gen. xiv. 19.—^g Rom. iv. 13. Gal. iii. 16.—^h Ch. v. 6. vi. 20.—ⁱ Gal. ii. 21. Ver. 18, 19. Ch. viii. 7.

Levites were the posterity of Abraham, they are represented here as paying tithes to Melchisedec through him. Yet Melchisedec was not of this family, and therefore must be considered as having a more honourable priesthood than even Aaron himself; for he took the tenth from Abraham, not for his maintenance, for he was a king, but in virtue of his office as universal high-priest of all that region.

Verse 6. Blessed him that had the promises] Abraham received a sacerdotal blessing from Melchisedec, who was the representative of the Messiah, the promised seed, to show that it was through him, as the high priest of the human race, that this blessing was to be derived on all mankind.

Verse 7. The less is blessed of the better] That the superior blesses the inferior is a general proposition; but Abraham was blessed of Melchisedec, therefore Melchisedec was greater than Abraham.

Verse 8. Here men that die receive tithes] Under the Jewish dispensation, though the priests were successively removed by death, yet they were as duly replaced by others appointed from the same family, and the payment of tithes was never interrupted. But as there is no account of Melchisedec ceasing to be a priest, or of his dying, he is represented as still living, the better to point him out as a type of Christ, and to show his priesthood to be more excellent than that which was according to the law, as an unchanging priesthood must be more excellent than that which was continually changing.

But there he receiveth them] The adverb here, in the first clause of this verse, refers to Mosaic institutions as then existing; the adverb there, in this clause, refers to the place in Genesis (chap. xiv. 20) where it is related that Abraham gave tithes to Melchisedec, who is still considered as being alive, or without a successor, because there is no account of his death, nor of any termination of his priesthood.

Verse 9. And as I may so say] And so to speak a word. This form of speech, which is very frequent among the purest Greek writers, is generally used to soften some harsh expression, or to limit the meaning when the proposition might otherwise appear to be too general.

Payed tithes in Abraham] The Levites, who were descendants of Abraham, paid tithes to Melchisedec, through Abraham, their progenitor and representative.

Verse 10. For he was yet in the loins of his father] That is: Levi was seminally included in Abraham his forefather.

Verse 11. If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood] Applied here to the Levitical priesthood, the word perfection signifies the accomplishment of that for which a priesthood is established, viz., giving the Deity an acceptable service, enlightening and instructing the people, pardoning all offences, purging the conscience from guilt, purifying the soul and preparing it for heaven, and regulating the conduct of the people according to the precepts of the moral law. This perfection never came, and never could come, by the Levitical law; it was the shadow of good things to come, but was not the substance.

For under it the people received the law] That is, as most interpret this phrase, under the priesthood, the word perfection being understood; because, on the priesthood the whole Mosaic law and the Jewish economy depended: but it is much 14 For it is evident that ^a our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood.

15 And it is yet far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest.

16 Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life.

17 For he testifieth, ^b Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

18 For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for ^c the weakness and unprofitableness thereof.

19 For ^d the law made nothing perfect, ^e but the bringing in of ^f a better hope did; by the which we ^g draw nigh unto God.

^a Isa. xi. 1. Matt. i. 3. Luke iii. 33. Rev. v. 5.—^b Ps. cx. 4. Ch. v. 6. 10. vi. 20.—^c Rom. viii. 3. Gal. iv. 9.—^d Acts xiii. 39. Rom. iii. 20, 21, 28. viii. 3. Gal. ii. 16. Ch. ix. 9.—^e Or, but it was the bringing in. Gal. ii. 24.—^f Ch. vi. 18. viii. 6.—^g Rom. v. 2. Eph.

better to understand on account of it instead of under it; for it is a positive fact that the law was given before any priesthood was established, for Aaron and his sons were not called nor separated to this office till Moses came down the second time from the mount with the tables renewed, after that he had broken them, Exod. xl. 12-14. But it was in reference to the great sacrificial system that the law was given, and on that law the priesthood was established; for, why was a priesthood necessary, but because that law was broken and must be fulfilled.

[That another priest should rise] The law did not contain the original priesthood; this existed typically in Melchisedec, and really in Jesus Christ.

Verse 12. [The priesthood being changed] That is, the order of Aaron being now abrogated, to make way for that which had preceded it, the order of Melchisedec.

[There is made of necessity a change also of the law.] Jesus coming in the place of Aaron, the law of ordinances and ceremonies, which served only to point out the Messiah, must of necessity be changed also.

Verse 13. [For he of whom these things are spoken] That is, Jesus the Messiah, spoken of in Ps. cx. 4, who came, not from the tribe of Levi, but from the tribe of Judah, of which tribe no priest ever ministered at a Jewish altar, nor could minister, according to the law.

Verse 14. [For it is evident] As the apostle speaks here with so much confidence, it follows that our Lord's descent from the tribe of Judah was incontrovertible.

Verse 15. [And it is yet far more evident] And besides, it is more abundantly, strikingly manifest. It is very difficult to translate these words, but the apostle's meaning is plain, viz., that God designed the Levitical priesthood to be changed, because of the oath in Ps. cx., where, addressing the Messiah, he says: Thou art a Priest for ever after the order or similitude of Melchisedec, who was not only a priest, but also a king.

Verse 16. [Who is made] Appointed to this high office by God himself, not succeeding one that was disabled or dead, according to that law or ordinance directed to weak and perishing men, who could not continue by reason of death.

This is probably all that the apostle intends by the words carnal commandment; for carnal does not always mean sinful or corrupt, but feeble, frail, or what may be said of or concerning man in his present dying condition.

[But after the power of an endless life.] Not dying, or ceasing through weakness to be a priest; but properly immortal himself, and having the power to confer life and immortality on others.

Verse 17. [For he testifieth] That is, either the scripture, in the place so often quoted, or God by that scripture.

[Thou art a priest for ever] This is the proof that he was not appointed according to the carnal commandment, but according to the power of an endless life, because he is a priest for ever, i.e., one that never dies, and is never disabled from performing the important functions of his office; for if he be a priest for ever, he ever lives.

Verse 18. [For there is verily a disannulling] There is a total abrogation of the former law relative to the Levitical priesthood.

20 And inasmuch as not without an oath he was made priest;

21 [For those priests were made ^b without an oath; but this with an oath, by him that said unto him, ^c The Lord sware and will not repent, Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec;]

22 By so much ^d was Jesus made a surety of a better testament.

23 And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death:

24 But this man, because he continueth ever, hath ^e an unchangeable priesthood.

25 Wherefore he is able also to save them ^f to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth ^g to make intercession for them.

ii. 18. in. 12. Ch. iv. 16. x. 19.—^b Or, without swearing of an oath.—^c Ps. cx. 4.—^d [Ch. viii. 6. ix. 15. xii. 24.—^e Or, which passeth not from one to another.—^f Or, evermore.—^g Rom. viii. 34. 1 Tim. ii. 5. Ch. ix. 24. 1 John ii. 1.

[For the weakness] It had no energy; it communicated none; it had no Spirit to minister; it required perfect obedience, but furnished no assistance to those who were under it.

[And unprofitableness] No man was benefited by the mere observance of its precepts: it pardoned no sin, changed no heart, reformed no life; it found men dead in trespasses and sins, and it consigned them to eternal death.

Verse 19. [For the law made nothing perfect] It completed nothing; it was only the outline of a great plan, the shadow of a glorious substance. See on ver. 11.

[But the bringing in of a better hope] The original is very emphatic, the superintroduction, or the after introduction; and this seems to be put in opposition to the preceding commandment or former Levitical law, of ver. 18. This went before to prepare the way of the Lord; to show the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and the strict justice of God. The better hope, which referred not to earthly but to spiritual good, not to temporal but eternal felicity, founded on the priesthood and atonement of Christ, was afterwards introduced for the purpose of doing what the law could not do, and giving privileges and advantages which the law would not afford.

[By the which we draw nigh unto God.] This is a sacerdotal phrase: the high priest alone could approach to the divine presence in the holy of holies; but not without the blood of the sacrifice, and that only once in the year. But through Christ, as our high-priest, all believers in him have an entrance to the holiest by his blood, and through him perform acceptable service to God.

Verse 21. [Those priests] The Levitical, were made without an oath, to show that the whole system was changeable, and might be abolished.

[But this] The everlasting priesthood of Christ, with an oath, to show that the gospel dispensation should never change, and never be abolished.

[By him] God the Father, that said unto him—the promised Messiah, Ps. cx. 4, The Lord swar, to show the immutability of his counsel, and will not repent—can never change his mind nor purpose, Thou art a priest for ever—as long as time shall run, and the generations of men be continued on earth.

Verse 22. [By so much] This solemn, unchangeable oath of God, was Jesus made a surety, a mediator, one who brings the two parties together, witnesses the contract, and offers the covenant sacrifice on the occasion.

[A better testament.] A better covenant; called, in the title to the sacred books which contain the whole Christian code, THE NEW COVENANT, thus contradistinguished from the Mosaic, which was the old covenant; and this is called the new and better covenant, because God has in it promised other blessings to other people, on other conditions than the old covenant did.

Verse 23. [And they truly were many priests] Under the Mosaic law it was necessary there should be a succession of priests, because, being mortal, they were not suffered to continue always by reason of death.

Verse 24. [But this] But he, that is Christ, because he continueth ever—is eternal, hath an unchangeable priest-

26 For such an high-priest became us, ^a who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, ^b and made higher than the heavens;

27 Who needeth not daily, as those high-priests, to offer up sacrifice, ^c first for his own sins, ^d and hood, a priesthood that passeth not away from him; he lives for ever, and he lives a priest for ever.

^a Ch. iv. 15. — ^b Eph. i. 20. iv. 10. Ch. viii. 1. — ^c Lev. ix. 7. xvi. 6, 11. Ch. v. 3. ix. 7.

Verse 25. Wherefore] Because he is an everlasting priest, and has offered the only available sacrifice, he is able to save from the power, guilt, nature, and punishment of sin, to the uttermost, to all intents, degrees, and purposes, and always, and in and through all times, places, and circumstances; for all this is implied in the original word: but in and through all times seems to be the particular meaning here, because of what follows, he ever liveth to make intercession for them; this depends on the perpetuity of his priesthood and the continuance of his mediatorial office.

The phrase, to make intercession for a person, has a considerable latitude of meaning. It signifies, 1. To come to or meet a person on any cause whatever. 2. To intercede, pray for, or entreat in the behalf of, another. 3. To defend or vindicate a person. 4. To commend. 5. To furnish any kind of assistance or help. 6. And, with the preposition against, to accuse or act against another in a judicial way.

Verse 26. Such an high-priest became us] Such an high-priest was in every respect suitable to us, every way qualified to accomplish the end for which he came into the world. There is probably here an allusion in the first instance to the qualifications of the Jewish high-priest.

But these things suit our Lord in a sense in which they cannot be applied to the high-priest of the Jews.

1. He was holy, infinitely so; and merciful, witness his shedding his blood for the sins of mankind.

2. Harmless—perfectly without sin in his humanity, as well as his divinity.

3. Undefiled—contracted no sinful infirmity in consequence of his dwelling among men.

then for the people's: for ^e this he did once, when he offered up himself.

28 For the law maketh ^f men high-priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, ^g who is ^h consecrated for evermore.

^d Lev. xvi. 15. — ^e Rom. vi. 10. Ch. ix. 12, 26. x. 12. — ^f Ch. v. 1, 2. — ^g Ch. ii. 10. v. 9. — ^h Gr. perfected.

4. Separate from sinners—absolutely unblameable in the whole of his conduct, so that he could challenge the most inveterate of his enemies with, Which of you convicteth me of sin? Who of you can show in my conduct the slightest deviation from truth and righteousness?

5. Higher than the heavens—more exalted than all the angels of God, than all created beings, whether thrones, dominions, principalities, or powers, because all these were created by him and for him, and derive their continued subsistence from his infinite energy.

Verse 27. Who needeth not daily] Though the high-priest offered the great atonement only once in the year, yet in the Jewish services there was a daily acknowledgment of sin, and a daily sacrifice offered by the priests, at whose head was the high priest, for their own sins and the sins of the people. The Jews held that a priest who neglected his own expiatory sacrifice would be smitten with death.

For this he did once] For himself he offered no sacrifice; and the apostle gives the reason—he needed none, because he was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners: and for the people he offered himself once for all, when he expired upon the cross.

Verse 28. For the law maketh men high-priests] The Jewish priests have need of these repeated offerings and sacrifices, because they are fallible, sinful men: but the word of the oath (still referring to Ps. cx. 4), which was since the law; for David, who mentions this, lived nearly 500 years after the giving of the law, and consequently that oath, constituting another priesthood, abrogates the law; and by this the Son is consecrated, is perfected for evermore. Being an high-priest without blemish, immaculately holy, every way perfect, immortal, and eternal, He is a priest to ETERNITY.

CHAPTER VIII.

The sum, or chief articles of what the apostle has spoken concerning the eternal priesthood of Christ, 1-5. The excellency of the new covenant beyond that of the old, 6-9. The nature and perfection of the new covenant stated from the predictions of the prophets, 10-12. By this new covenant the old is abolished, 13.

NOW of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an high-priest, ^a who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens;

^a Eph. i. 20. Col. iii. 1. Ch. i. 3. x. 12. xii. 2. — ^b Or, of holy things.

Verse 1. Who is set on the right hand of the throne] This is what the apostle states to be the chief or most important point of all that he had yet discussed. His sitting down at the right hand of the throne of God proves, 1. That he is higher than all the high priests that ever existed. 2. That the sacrifice which he offered for the sins of the world was sufficient and effectual, and as such accepted by God. 3. That he has all power in the heavens and in the earth, and is able to save and defend to the uttermost all that come to God through him. 4. That he did not, like the Jewish high-priest, depart out of the holy of holies, after having offered the atonement; but abides, there at the throne of God, as a continual priest, in the permanent act of offering his crucified body unto God, in behalf of all the succeeding generations of mankind.

Verse 2. A minister of the sanctuary] A public minister of the holy things or places. The original word means a person who officiated for the public, a public officer; in whom, and his work, all the people had a common right: from it is derived our word liturgy, the public work of prayer and praise designed for the people at large; all having a right to attend it, and each having an equal interest in it. Properly speaking, the Jewish priest was the servant of the public; he transacted the business of the people with God.

and sacrifices: wherefore * it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer.

4 For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that ^b there are priests that offer gifts according to the law;

5 Who serve unto the example and ^c shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: ^d for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount.

6 But now ^e hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better ^f covenant, which was established upon better promises.

7 ^g For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second.

8 For finding fault with them, he saith, ^h Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah;

* Eph. v. 2. Ch. ix. 14.—^b Or, they are priests.—^c Col. ii. 17. Ch. ix. 23. x. 1.—^d Exod. xxv. 40. xxvi. 30. xxvii. 8. Num. viii. 4. Acts vii. 44.—^e 2 Cor. iii. 6, 8, 9. Ch. vii. 22.—^f Or, testament.—

Jesus Christ is also the same kind of public officer; both as Priest and Mediator he transacts the business of the whole human race with God.

Which the Lord pitched] The Jewish tabernacle was man's work, though made by God's direction; the heavens, the true tabernacle, the work of God alone, and infinitely more glorious than that of the Jews.

Verse 3. Every high-priest is ordained] Is set apart for this especial work.

Gifts and sacrifices] Eucharistic offerings and sacrifices for sin. By the former, God's government of the universe, and his benevolence to his creatures in providing for their support, were acknowledged. By the latter, the destructive and ruinous nature of sin, and the necessity of an atonement, were confessed.

Wherefore—of necessity] If Christ be a high-priest, and it be essential to the office of a high-priest to offer atoning sacrifices to God, Jesus must offer such. Now it is manifest that, as he is the public minister, officiating in the true tabernacle as high-priest, he must make an atonement; and his being at the right hand of the throne shows that he has offered, and continues to offer, such an atonement.

Verse 4. For if he were on earth] As the Jewish temple was standing when this epistle was written, the whole temple service continued to be performed by the legal priests, descendants of Aaron, of the tribe of Levi; therefore if Christ had been then on earth, he could not have performed the office of a priest, being of the tribe of Judah, to which tribe the office of the priesthood did not appertain.

Verse 5. Who serve] Who perform divine worship. Unto the example and shadow] With the representation and shadow. The whole Levitical service was a representation and shadow of heavenly things; it appears, therefore, absurd to say that the priests served unto an example or representation of heavenly things; they served rather unto the substance of those things, with appropriate representations and shadows.

As Moses was admonished] As Moses was divinely warned or admonished of God.

According to the pattern] According to the type, plan, or form. It is very likely that God gave a regular plan and specification of the tabernacle and all its parts to Moses; and that from this divine plan the whole was constructed.

Verse 6. Now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry] His office of priesthood is more excellent than the Levitical, because the covenant is better, and established on better promises: the old covenant referred to earthly things; the new covenant to heavenly.

Verse 7. If that first—had been faultless] This is nearly the same argument with that in chap. vii. 11.

Verse 8. For finding fault with them] As this place refers to Jer. xxxi. 31-34, the words finding fault with them may refer to the Jewish people, of whom the Lord complains that 9 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord.

10 For ⁱ this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will ^j put my laws into their mind, and write them ^k in their hearts; and ^l I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people:

11 And ^m they shall not teach every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for all shall know me, from the least to the greatest.

12 For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, ⁿ and their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more.

13 ^o In that he saith, A new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away.

* Ch. vii. 11, 18.—^b Jer. xxxi. 31-34.—^c Ch. x. 16.—^d Gr. give.—^e Or, upon.—^f Zeoh. viii. 8.—^g Isa. liv. 13. John vi. 45. 1 John ii. 27.—^h Rom. xi. 27. Ch. x. 17.—ⁱ 2 Cor. v. 17.

they had broken his covenant though he was a husband to them.

With the house of Israel and with the house of Judah] That is, with all the descendants of the twelve sons of Jacob.

Verse 9. Not according to the covenant] The new covenant is totally different from this, as we have already seen; and such a covenant, or system of religion, the Jews should have been prepared to expect, as the prophet Jeremiah had, in the above place, so clearly foretold it.

They continued not in my covenant] The word which we translate covenant, often means religion itself and its various precepts.

And I regarded them not] And I neglected them or despised them; but the words in the Hebrew text of the prophet are reanochi baalti bam, which we translate, although I was an husband to them. If our translation be correct, is it possible to account for this most strange difference between the apostle and the prophet? Let it be observed: 1. That the apostle quotes from the Septuagint; and in quoting a version accredited by and commonly used among the Jews, he ought to give the text as he found it, unless the Spirit of God dictated an extension of meaning, as is sometimes the case; but in the present case there seems to be no necessity to alter the meaning. 2. The Hebrew words will bear a translation much nearer to the Septuagint and the apostle than our translation intimates. The words might be literally rendered, And I was Lord over them, or, I lorded or ruled over them, i.e., I chastised them for their transgressions, and punished them for their iniquities; I took no further care of them, and gave them up into the hands of their enemies, and so they were carried away into captivity. This pretty nearly reconciles the Hebrew and the Greek, as it shows the act of God in reference to them is nearly the same when the proper meaning of the Hebrew and Greek words is considered.

Verse 10. This is the covenant] This is the nature of that glorious system of religion which I shall publish among them after those days, i.e., in the times of the gospel.

I will put my laws into their mind] I will influence them with the principles of law, truth, holiness, &c.; and their understandings shall be fully enlightened to comprehend them.

And write them in their hearts] All their affections, passions, and appetites shall be purified and filled with holiness and love to God and man; so that they shall willingly obey, and feel that love is the fulfilling of the law; instead of being written on tables of stone, they shall be written on the fleshy tables of their hearts.

I will be to them a God] To be God's people implies that they should give God their whole hearts, serve him with all their light and strength, and have no other object of worship or dependence but himself. Any of these conditions broken, the covenant is rendered null and void, and the other party absolved from his engagement.

Verse 11. They shall not teach every man his neighbour] The prophecy indicates that there should be, under the gospel dispensation, a profusion of divine light; and this we find to be the case by the plentiful diffusion of the sacred writings, and by an abundant gospel ministry: and these blessings are not confined to temples or palaces, but are found in every corner of the land; so that, literally, all the people, from the least to the greatest, know and acknowledge the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent.

Verse 12. I will be merciful to their unrighteousness] In order to be their God, as mentioned under the preceding verse, it is requisite that their iniquity should be pardoned; this is, provided for by the immolation of Jesus Christ as the covenant sacrifice. By his blood, redemption has been purchased, and all who with penitent hearts believe on the Lord Jesus receive remission of sins, and God remembers their iniquities no more against them so as to punish them on that account.

Verse 13. He hath made the first old.] That is: He has considered it as antiquated, and as being no longer of any force.

That which decayeth and waxeth old] Here is an allusion to the ancient laws, which either had perished from the tables on which they were written, through old age, or were fallen into disuse, or were abrogated.

Is ready to vanish away.] Is about to be abolished. The apostle intimates that the old covenant was just about to be abolished; but he expresses himself cautiously and tenderly, that he might not give unnecessary offence.

CHAPTER IX.

Of the first covenant and its ordinances. 1. The tabernacle, candlestick, table, shew-bread, veil, holy of holies, censer, ark, pot of manna, Aaron's rod, tables of the covenant, cherubim of glory, and mercy-seat, 2-5. How the priests served, 6, 7. What was signified by this service, 8-10. The superior excellency of Christ's ministry and sacrifice, and the efficacy of his blood, 11-26. As men must once die and be judged, so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and shall come, without a sin-offering, a second time, to them that expect him, 27, 28.

THEN verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary.

2 For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew-bread; which is called the Sanctuary.

3 And after the second veil, the tabernacle, which is called the Holiest of all;

4 Which had the golden censer, and the ark of Verse 1. The first covenant had also ordinances] Our translators have introduced the word covenant, as if it had been, if not originally in the text, yet in the apostle's mind. Ordinances] Rites and ceremonies.

A worldly sanctuary.] It is supposed that the term worldly, here, is opposed to the term heavenly, chap. viii. 5; and that the whole should be referred to the carnality or secular nature of the tabernacle service. But I think there is nothing plainer than that the apostle is speaking here in praise of this sublimely emblematic service; hence I am led to believe that the word rendered worldly is here taken in its proper natural meaning, and signifies adorned, embellished, splendid.

If my exposition be not admitted, the next most likely is, that God has a worldly tabernacle as well as a heavenly one; that he as truly dwelt in the Jewish tabernacle as he did in the heaven of heavens; the one being his worldly house, the other his heavenly house. [Neither exposition is admissible. The common interpretation is doubtless correct.]

Verse 2. For there was a tabernacle made; the first, wherein] The sense is here very obscure, and the construction involved: For, there was the first tabernacle constructed, in which were the candlestick, &c. And this tabernacle or dwelling may be called the first dwelling-place which God had among men, to distinguish it from the second dwelling-place, the temple built by Solomon; for tabernacle here is to be considered in its general sense, as implying a dwelling.

Which is called the Sanctuary.] This is called holy. This the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant;

5 And over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy-seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly.

6 Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God:

—¹ Exod. xxv. 16, 21. xxxiv. 29. xl. 20. Deut. x. 2, 5. 1 Kings viii. 9, 21. 2 Chron. v. 10.—² Exod. xxv. 18, 22. Lev. xvi. 2. 1 Kings viii. 6, 7.—³ Num. xxviii. 3. Dan. viii. 11.

clause may apply to any of the nouns in this verse, in the nominative case, which are all of the feminine gender; and the adjective holy may be considered here as the nominative singular feminine. [The clearest rendering is that which refers the relation which to tabernacle: "which tabernacle is called the holy place."]

Verse 3. And after the second veil] The first veil was at the entrance of the holy place, and separated the temple from the court, and prevented the people, and even the Levites, from seeing what was in the holy place. The second veil of which the apostle speaks here, separated the holy place from the holy of holies.

The tabernacle, which is called the Holiest of all] That is, that part of the tabernacle which is called the holy of holies.

Verse 4. Which had the golden censer] It is evident that the apostle speaks here of the tabernacle built by Moses, and of the state and contents of that tabernacle as they were during the life-time of Moses.

He says that the golden censer was in the holy of holies: but this is nowhere mentioned by Moses. But he tells us that the high-priest went in, once every year, with the golden censer, to burn incense; and Calmet thinks this censer was left there all the year, and that its place was supplied by a new one, brought in by the priest the year following. Others think it was left just within the veil, so that the priest, by putting his hand under the curtain, could take it out, and prepare it for his next entrance into the holiest. [The passage is very difficult, and it is not an easy matter to judge upon the various solutions proposed.]

The ark of the covenant] This was a sort of chest overlaid with plates of gold, in which the two tables of the law, Aaron's rod, the pot of manna, &c., were deposited. Its top, or lid, was the propitiatory or mercy-seat.

Verse 5. And over it the cherubims of glory] Cherubim is the plural of cherub, and it is absurd to add our plural termination (s) to the plural termination of the Hebrew. The glory here signifies the shekinah or symbol of the divine presence.

Shadowing the mercy-seat] One at each end of the ark, with their faces turned toward each other, but looking down on the cover or propitiatory, here called the mercy-seat.

Verse 6. When these things were thus ordained] When the tabernacle was made, and its furniture placed in it, according to the divine direction.

The priests went always into the first tabernacle] That is, into the first part of the tabernacle, or holy place, into which he went every day twice, accomplishing the services, which included his burning the incense at the morning and evening sacrifice, dressing the lamps, removing the old shewbread and laying on the new, and sprinkling the blood of the sin-offerings before the veil, Lev. iv. 6; and for these works he must have constant access to the place.

Verse 7. But into the second] That is, the holy of holies, or second part of the tabernacle, the high-priest alone, once every year, that is, on one day in the year only, which was the day on which the general atonement was made. The high-priest could enter into this place only on one day in the year; but on that day he might enter several times. See Lev. xvi.

Not without blood] The day prescribed by the law for this great solemnity was the tenth of the month Tisri, in which the high-priest brought in the incense or perfumes, which he placed on the golden censer; he brought also the blood of the bullock, and sprinkled some portion of it seven times before the ark, and the veil which separated the holy place from the holy of holies. See Lev. xvi. 14. He then came out, and, taking some of the blood of the goat which had been sacrificed, he sprinkled it between the veil and the ark of the covenant, ver. 15. Which he offered for himself and for the errors of the people, i.e., for their sins of ignorance.

Verse 8. The Holy Ghost this signifying] These services were divinely appointed, and by each of them the Holy Spirit of God is supposed to speak.

The way into the holiest] That full access to God was not the common privilege of the people, while the Mosaic economy subsisted. That the apostle means that it is only by Christ that any man and every man can approach God, is evident from chap. x. 19-22; and it is about this, and not about the tabernacle of this world, that he is here discoursing.

Verse 9. Which] Tabernacle and its services was a figure, a dark enigmatical representation, for the time then present—for that age and dispensation, and for all those who lived under it.

In which, during which, time or dispensation were offered both gifts and sacrifices—eucharistic offerings and victims for sin, that could not make him that did the service, whether the priest who made the offering, or the person who brought it in the behalf of his soul, perfect as pertaining to the conscience—could not take away guilt from the mind, nor purify the conscience from dead works.

Verse 10. In meats and drinks, and divers washings] He had already mentioned eucharistic and sacrificial offerings, and nothing properly remained but the different kinds of clean and unclean animals which were used, or forbidden to be used, as articles of food; together with the different kinds of drinks, washings, baptisms, immersions, sprinklings and washings of the body and the clothes, and carnal ordinances, or things which had respect merely to the body, and could have no moral influence upon the soul, unless considered in reference to that of which they were the similitudes or figures.

Carnal ordinances] Rites and ceremonies pertaining merely to the body. The word carnal is not used here, nor scarcely in any part of the New Testament, in that degrading sense in which many preachers and professors of Christianity take the liberty to use it.

Imposed on them until the time of reformation]

The time of reformation, the time of rectifying, signifies the gospel dispensation, under which every thing is set straight; every thing referred to its proper purpose and end; the ceremonial law fulfilled and abrogated; the moral law exhibited, and more strictly enjoined; and the spiritual nature of God's worship taught, and grace promised to purify the heart; so that, through the power of the eternal Spirit, all that was wrong in the soul is rectified; the affections, passions, and appetites purified; the understanding enlightened; the judgment corrected; the will refined; in a word, all things made new.

Verse 11. But Christ being come an high-priest of good things]

High-priest of good things] Or services to come. He is the high-priest of Christianity; he officiates in the behalf of all mankind; for by him are all the prayers, praises, and services of mankind offered to God; and he ever appears in the presence of God for us.

A greater and more perfect tabernacle] This appears to mean our Lord's human nature. That, in which dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, was fitly typified by the tabernacle and temple, in both of which the majesty of God dwelt.

Not made with hands] Though our Lord's body was a perfect human body, yet it did not come in the way of natural generation; his miraculous conception will sufficiently justify the expressions used here by the apostle.

Verse 12. But by his own blood] Here the redemption of man is attributed to the blood of Christ; and this blood is stated to be shed in a sacrificial way, precisely as the blood of bulls, goats, and calves was shed under the law.

Once] Once for all, in opposition to the annual entering of the high-priest into the holiest, with the blood of the annual victim.

The holy place] Or sanctuary, signifies heaven, into which Jesus entered with his own blood, as the high-priest entered into the holy of holies with the blood of the victims which he had sacrificed.

Eternal redemption] A redemption price which should stand good for ever, when once offered; and an endless redemption from sin, in reference to the pardon of which, and reconciliation to God, there needs no other sacrifice: it is eternal in its merit and efficacy.

Verse 13. Sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh] Answers the end proposed by the law; namely, to remove legal disabilities and punishments, having the body and its interests particularly in view, though adumbrating or typifying the soul and its concerns.

Verse 14. Who through the eternal Spirit] This expression is understood two ways: 1. Of the Holy Ghost himself. As Christ's miraculous conception was by the Holy Spirit, and he wrought all his miracles by the Spirit of God, so his death or final offering was made through or by the eternal Spirit; and by that Spirit he was raised from the dead, 1 Pet. iii. 18. 2. Of the eternal Logos or Deity which dwelt in the man Christ Jesus, through the energy of which the offering of his humanity became an infinitely meritorious victim; therefore the Deity of Christ is here intended. But we cannot well consider one of these distinct from the other; and hence probably arose the various readings in the MSS. and Versions on this article.

Purge your conscience] Purify your conscience. The term purify should be everywhere, both in the translation of the scriptures, and in preaching the gospel, preferred to the word purge, which, at present, is scarcely ever used in the sense in which our translators have employed it.

Dead works] Sin in general, or acts to which the penalty of death is annexed by the law.

Verse 15. And for this cause] Some translate an account of this (blood). Perhaps it means no more than a mere inference, such as therefore, or wherefore.

He is the Mediator of the new testament] There was no proper reason why our translators should render the original by testament here, when in almost every other case they render it covenant, which is its proper ecclesiastical meaning, as answering to the Hebrew berith, which see largely explained, Gen. xv. 10, and in other places of the Pentateuch.

That by means of death] His own death upon the cross.

For the redemption of the transgressions] To make atonement for the transgressions which were committed under the old covenant, which the blood of bulls and calves could not do; so the death of Jesus had respect to all the time antecedent to it, as well as to all the time afterwards till the conclusion of the world.

They which are called] How frequently the Gentiles are termed the called, all St. Paul's writings show. And they were thus termed because they were called and elected in the place of the Jews, the ancient called and elect, who were now divorced and reprobated because of their disobedience.

Verse 16. For where a testament is] A friend furnishes me with the following translation of this and the 17th verse: "For where there is a covenant, it is necessary that the death of the appointed victim should be exhibited, because a covenant is confirmed over dead victims, since it is not at all valid while the appointed victim is alive."

Verse 18. Whereupon] Wherefore, as a victim was required for the ratification of every covenant, the first covenant made between God and the Hebrews, by the mediation of 20 Saying, 'This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you.

21 Moreover, ^ahe sprinkled likewise with blood both the tabernacle and all the vessels of the ministry.

22 And almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and ^bwithout shedding of blood is no remission.

23 It was therefore necessary that ^cthe patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these.

24 For ^dChrist is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of ^ethe true; but into heaven itself, now ^fto appear in the presence of God for us:

Lev. viii. 15, 19. xvi. 14, 15, 16, 18, 19.—¹Lev. xvii. 11.—²Ch. viii. 5.—³Ch. vi. 20.—⁴Ch. viii. 2.—⁵Rom. viii. 44. Ch. vii. 25. 1 John ii. 1.

Moses, was not dedicated, renewed or solemnized, without blood—without the death of a victim, and the aspersion of its blood.

Verse 19. When Moses had spoken every precept] The place to which the apostle alludes is Exod. xiv. 4-8, where the reader is requested to consult the notes.

And sprinkled both the book] The sprinkling of the book is not mentioned in the place to which the apostle refers (see above), nor did it in fact take place. The words, and the book itself, should be referred to having taken, and not to he sprinkled.

Some think that the blood was actually sprinkled upon the book itself, which contained the written covenant, to signify that the covenant itself was ratified by the blood. [This is the only interpretation which the construction will allow.]

Verse 20. This is the blood of the testament (Covenant) Our Lord refers to the conduct of Moses here, and partly quotes his words in the institution of the eucharist, Matt. xxvi. 28. And by thus using the words and applying them, he shows that his sacrificial blood was intended by the blood shed and sprinkled on this occasion, and that by it alone the remission of sins is obtained.

Verse 21. He sprinkled—with blood—all the vessels of the ministry.] To intimate that everything used by sinful man is polluted, and that nothing can be acceptable in the sight of a holy God that has not in effect the sprinkling of the atoning blood.

Verse 22. And almost all things are—purged with blood] The apostle says almost, because in some cases certain vessels were purified by water, some by fire, Num. xxxi. 23, and some with the ashes of the red heifer, Num. xix. 2-10, but it was always understood that everything was at first consecrated by the blood of the victim.

And without shedding of blood is no remission.] The apostle shows fully here what is one of his great objects in the whole of this epistle, viz., that there is no salvation but through the sacrificial death of Christ, and to prefigure this, the law itself would not grant any remission of sin without the blood of a victim.

Verse 23. The patterns of things in the heavens] That is: The tabernacle and all its utensils, services, &c. These are called patterns, exemplars, earthly things, which were the representatives of heavenly things. And there is no doubt that everything in the tabernacle, its parts, divisions, utensils, ministry, &c., as appointed by God, were representations of celestial matters; but how far and in what way we cannot now see.

Purification implies, not only cleansing from defilement, but also dedication or consecration. All the utensils employed in the tabernacle service were thus purified, though incapable of any moral pollution.

But the heavenly things themselves] It was necessary, therefore, for God had appointed it so, that the tabernacle and its parts, &c., which were patterns of things in the heavens, should be consecrated and entered with such sacrifices as have already been mentioned; but the heaven of heavens, into which Jesus entered, and whither he will bring all his faithful followers, must be propitiated, consecrated,

25 Nor yet that he should offer himself often, as
* the high-priest entereth into the holy place every year with blood of others ;

26 For then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world : but now ^b once, ^c in the end of the world, hath he appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.

and entered, by the infinitely better sacrifice of his own body and blood.

Verse 24. Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands] He is not gone into the holy of holies of the tabernacle or temple, as the Jewish high-priest does once in the year with the blood of the victim, to sprinkle it before the mercy-seat there, but into heaven itself, which he has thus opened to all believers, having made the propitiatory offering by which both he and those whom he represents are entitled to enter and enjoy eternal blessedness.

Verse 25. Nor yet that he should offer himself often] The sacrifice of Christ is not like that of the Jewish high-priest ; his must be offered every year, Christ has offered himself once for all : and this sacrificial act has ever the same efficacy, his crucified body being still a powerful and infinitely meritorious sacrifice before the throne.

Verse 26. For then must he often have suffered] In the counsel of God Christ was considered the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, Rev. xiii. 8, so that all believers before his advent were equally interested in his sacrificial death with those who have lived since his coming. Humanly speaking, the virtue of the annual atonement could not last long, and must be repeated ; Christ's sacrifice is ever the same ; his life's blood is still considered as in the act of being continually poured out. See Rev. v. 6.

The end of the world] The conclusion of the Jewish dispensation, the Christian dispensation being that which shall continue till the end of time.

27 ^d And as it is appointed unto men once to die,
* but after this the judgment ;

28 So 'Christ was once ^e offered to bear the sins ^b of many ; and unto them that 'look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation.

To put away sin] To abolish sin-offerings, i.e., to put an end to the Mosaic economy by his one offering of himself.
It is certain that, after Christ had offered himself, the typical sin-offerings of the law ceased ; and this was expressly foretold by the prophet Daniel, chap. ix. 24. Some think that the expression should be applied to the putting away the guilt, power, and being of sin from the souls of believers. [Which is the most likely interpretation.]

Verse 27. As it is appointed] It is laid before them by the divine decree : Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return.

But after this the judgment] They shall die but once, and be judged but once, therefore there is no metempsychosis, no transmigration from body to body ; judgment succeeds to dying ; and as they shall be judged but once, they can die but once.

Verse 28. So Christ was once offered] He shall die no more ; he has borne away the sins of many, and what he has done once shall stand good for ever. Yet he will appear a second time without sin, without a sin offering ; that he has already made. [Alford's note is valuable : At His first appearance in the world He came with sin, not in Him, but on Him : He was made to be Sin ; but this sin has been once for all taken away by His bearing it as our Sacrifice ; and at His second appearance, He shall appear without, having done with, separate from, Sin.]

Unto salvation.] To deliver the bodies of believers from the empire of death, re-unite them to their purified souls, and bring both into his eternal glory.

CHAPTER X.

The insufficiency of the legal sacrifices to take away sin, 1-4. The purpose and will of God, as declared by the Psalmist, relative to the salvation of the world by the incarnation of Christ ; and our sanctification through that will, 5-10. Comparison between the priesthood of Christ and that of the Jews, 11-14. The new covenant which God promised to make, and the blessings of it, 15-17. The access which genuine believers have to the holiest by the blood of Jesus, 18-20. Having an High-priest over the Church of God, we should have faith, walk uprightly, hold fast our profession, exhort and help each other, and maintain Christian communion, 21-25. The danger and awful consequences of final apostasy, 26-31. In order to our perseverance, we should often reflect on past mercies, and the support afforded us in temptations and afflictions ; and not cast away our confidence, for we shall receive the promise if we patiently fulfil the will of God, 32-37. The just by faith shall live ; but the soul that draws back shall die, 38. The apostle's confidence in the believing Hebrews, 39.

FOR the law, having a ^ashadow ^bof good things to come, and not the very image of the things, ^ccan never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto ^dperfect.

2 For then ^ewould they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have no more conscience of sins.

3 ^fBut in those sacrifices there is a remembrance again made of sins every year.

4 For ^git is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins.

5 Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he

^a Col. ii. 17. Ch. viii. 5. ix. v3. — ^b Ch. ix. 11. — ^c Ch. ix. 9 — ^d Ver. 14. — ^e Or, they would have ceased to be offered, because, &c. — ^f Lev. xvi. 21. Ch. ix. 7. — ^g Mic. vi 6, 7. Ch. ix. 13 Ver. 11. —

Verse 1. The law, having a shadow of good things to come] The law, with all its ceremonies and sacrifices, was only a shadow of spiritual and eternal good. The gospel is the image or thing itself, as including every spiritual and eternal good.

Can never—make the comers thereunto perfect.] Cannot remove guilt from the conscience, or impurity from the heart.

Verse 2. Would they not have ceased to be offered?] No Jew pretended to believe that even the annual atonement cancelled his sin before God; yet he continued to make his offerings, the law of God having so enjoined, because these sacrifices pointed out that which was to come. They were offered, therefore, not in consideration of their own efficacy, but as referring to Christ; see on chap. ix. 9.

Verse 4. For it is not possible] Common sense must have taught them that shedding the blood of bulls and goats could never satisfy divine justice, nor take away guilt from the conscience; and God intended that they should understand the matter so.

Verse 5. When he (the Messiah) cometh into the world] Was about to be incarnated, He saith to God the Father, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not—it was never thy will and design that the sacrifices under thy own law should be considered as making atonement for sin, they were only designed to point out my incarnation and consequent sacrificial death, and therefore a body hast thou prepared me, by a miraculous conception in the womb of a virgin.

A body hast thou prepared me] The quotation in this and the two following verses is taken from Psalm xl. 6th, 7th, and 8th verses, as they stand now in the Septuagint, with scarcely any variety of reading; but, although the general meaning is the same, they are widely different in verbal expression in the Hebrew. David's words might be more properly rendered: My ears hast thou bored, that is, Thou hast made me thy servant for ever, to dwell in thine own house; for the allusion is evidently to the custom mentioned, xxi. 2, &c.

But how is it possible that the Septuagint and the apostle should take a meaning so totally different from the sense of the Hebrew? Some suppose that the Septuagint and apostle express the meaning of the words as they stood in the copy from which the Greek translation was made; and that the present Hebrew text is corrupted.

Verse 6. Thou hast had no pleasure] Thou couldst never be pleased with the victims under the law; thou couldst never consider them as atonements for sin; as they could never satisfy thy justice, nor make thy law honourable.

Verse 7. In the volume of the book] Kingjillath sepher, "in the roll of the book" Anciently, books were written on skins, and rolled up. The book mentioned here must be the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses; for in David's time no other part of divine revelation had been committed to writing. This whole book speaks about Christ, and his accomplishing the will of God; not only in, The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent, and, In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, but in all the sacrifices and sacrificial rites mentioned in the law.

To do thy will] God willed not the sacrifices under the law, but he willed that a human victim of infinite merit should be offered for the redemption of mankind. That there might be such a victim, a body was prepared for the eternal Logos; and in that body he came to do the will of saith. ^hSacrifice and offering thou wouldst not, but a body ⁱhast thou prepared me:

6 In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure:

7 Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God.

8 Above, when he said, Sacrifice, and offering, and burnt-offerings, and offering for sin, thou wouldst not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law;

9 Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second.

^h Ps. xl. 6. &c. i. 8. &c. Isa. i. 11. Jer. vi. 20. Amos v. 21, 22. — ⁱ Or, thou hast fitted me.

God, that is, to suffer and die for the sins of the world.

Verse 9. He taketh away the first] The offerings, sacrifices, burnt-offerings, and sacrifices for sin, which were prescribed by the law.

That he may establish the second.] The offering of the body of Jesus once for all. It will make little odds in the meaning if we say, he taketh away the first covenant that he may establish the second covenant; he takes away the first dispensation that he may establish the second; he takes away the law that he may establish the gospel. In all these cases the sense is nearly the same. I prefer the first.

Verse 10. By the which will we are sanctified] Closing in with this so solemnly declared WILL of God, that there is no name given under heaven among men by which we can be saved, but Jesus the Christ, we believe in him, find redemption in his blood, and are sanctified unto God through the sacrificial offering of his body.

Verse 11. Every priest standeth] The office of the Jewish priest is here compared with the office of our High-priest. The Jewish priest stands daily at the altar, like a servant ministering, repeating the same sacrifices; our High-priest offered himself once for all, and sat down at the right hand of God, as the only-begotten Son and Heir of all things, ver. 12. This continual offering argued the imperfection of the sacrifices. Our Lord's once offering proves his was complete.

Verse 13. Till his enemies be made his footstool.] Till all that oppose his high-priesthood and sacrificial offering shall be defeated, routed, and confounded; and acknowledge, in their punishment, the supremacy of his power as universal and eternal King, who refused to receive him as their atoning and sanctifying Priest. There is also an oblique reference here to the destruction of the Jews, which was then at hand; for Christ was about to take away the second with an overwhelming flood of desolations.

Verse 14. For by one offering] His death upon the cross. He hath perfected for ever] He has procured remission of sins and holiness; for it is well observed here, and in several parts of this epistle, that to make perfect is the same as to procure remission of sins.

Them that are sanctified] Them that have received the sprinkling of the blood of this offering. These, therefore, receiving redemption through that blood, have no need of any other offering; as this was a complete atonement, purification, and title to eternal glory.

Verse 15. The Holy Ghost—is a witness to us] The words are quoted from Jer. xxxi. 33, 34, and here we are assured that Jeremiah spoke by the inspiration of the Spirit of God.

Verse 18. Now where remission of these is] In any case, where sin is once pardoned, there is no farther need of a sin-offering; but every believer in Christ has his sin blotted out, and therefore needs no other offering for that sin.

Verse 19. Boldness to enter] Liberty, full access to the entrance of the holy place This is an allusion to the case of the high-priest going into the holy of holies. He went with fear and trembling, because, if he had neglected the smallest item prescribed by the law, he could expect nothing but death. Genuine believers can come even to the throne of God with confidence, as they carry into the divine presence the infinitely meritorious blood of the great atonement; and, being justified through that blood, they have a right to all the blessings of the eternal kingdom.

Verse 20. By a new and living way] It is a new way; no human being had ever before entered into the heaven of 10 * By the which will we are sanctified, ^b through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.

11 And every priest standeth ^c daily ministering and offering oftentimes the same sacrifices, ^d which can never take away sins:

12 * But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God;

13 From henceforth expecting ^e till his enemies be made his footstool.

14 For by one offering ^f he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified.

15 Whereof the Holy Ghost also is a witness to us: for after that he had said before,

16 ^h This is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them;

17 ⁱ And their sins and iniquities will I remember no more.

18 Now where remission of these is, there is no more offering for sin.

heavens; Jesus in human nature was the first, and thus he has opened the way to heaven to mankind, his own resurrection and ascension to glory being the proof and pledge of ours.

The way is called new or fresh, and living. This is evidently an allusion to the blood of the victim newly shed, uncoagulated, and consequently proper to be used for sprinkling. The blood of the Jewish victims was fit for sacrificial purposes only so long as it was warm and fluid, and might be considered as yet possessing its vitality; but when it grew cold, it coagulated, lost its vitality, and was no longer proper to be used sacrificially. Christ is here in allusion, represented as newly slain, and yet living; the blood ever considered as flowing and giving life to the world. The way by the old covenant neither gave life, nor removed the liability to death. The way to peace and reconciliation, under the old covenant, was through the dead bodies of the animals slain; but Christ is living, and ever liveth, to make intercession for us; therefore he is a new and living way.

Through the veil] His pierced side is the way to the holiest. Here the veil—his humanity, is rent, and the kingdom of heaven opened to all believers.

Verse 21. An high-priest over the house of God] The house or family of God is the Christian Church, or all true believers in the Lord Jesus. Over this church, house, or family, Christ is the high-priest—in their behalf he offers his own blood, and their prayers and praises; and as the high-priest had the ordering of all things that appertained to the house and worship of God, so has Christ in the government of his church. This government he never gave into other hands.

Verse 22 Let us draw near] Let us come with the blood of our sacrifice to the throne of God: the expression is sacrificial.

With a true heart] Deeply convinced of our need of help, and truly in earnest to obtain it.

In full assurance of faith] Being fully persuaded that God will accept us for the sake of his Son, and that the sacrificial death of Christ gives us full authority to expect every blessing we need.

Having our hearts sprinkled] Not our bodies, as was the case among the Hebrews, when they had contracted any pollution, for they were to be sprinkled with the water of separation, see Numb. xix. 2-10; but our hearts, sprinkled by the cleansing efficacy of the blood of Christ, without which we cannot draw nigh to God.

From an evil conscience] Having that deep sense of guilt which our conscience felt taken all away, and the peace and love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto us.

Our bodies washed with pure water.] The apostle refers 19 Having therefore, brethren, ^j boldness ^k to enter ^l into the holiest by the blood of Jesus,

20 By ^m a new and living way, which he hath ⁿ consecrated for us, ^o through the veil, that is to say, his flesh;

21 And having ^p an high-priest over ^q the house of God;

22 * Let us draw near with a true heart, ^r in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled ^s from an evil conscience, and ^t our bodies washed with pure water.

23 * Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for ^u he is faithful that promised;)

24 And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works:

25 * Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and ^v so much the more, as ye see ^w the day approaching.

26 For ^x if we sin wilfully ^y after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins,

^z 1 Tim. iii. 15.—^a Ch. iv. 16.—^b Eph. i. 12. James i. 6. 1 John iii. 21.—^c Ch. ix. 14.—^d Ezek. xxxvi. 25. 2 Cor. vii. 1.—^e Ch. iv. 14.—^f 1 Cor. i. 9. x. 13. 1 Thess. v. 24. 2 Thess. iii. 3. principally to baptisms, the washing by which was an emblem of the purification of the soul by the grace and Spirit of Christ: but it is most likely that it is to the Jewish baptisms, and not the Christian, that the apostle alludes. [On the contrary, it is most likely that the reference is to Christian baptism.]

Verse 23. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith] The word implies that general consent that was among Christians on all the important articles of their faith and practice; particularly their acknowledgment of the truth of the gospel, and of Jesus Christ, as the only victim for sin, and the only Saviour from it.

He is faithful that promised] The eternal life, which is the object of your hope, is promised to you by him who cannot lie; as he then is faithful who has given you this promise, hold fast the profession of your hope.

Verse 24. And let us consider one another] Let us diligently and attentively consider each other's trials, difficulties, and weaknesses; feel for each other, and exhort each other to an increase of love to God and man; and, as the proof of it, to be fruitful in good works. The words, to the provocation, are often taken in a good sense, and signify excitement, stirring up, to do anything laudable, useful, honourable, or necessary.

Verse 25. Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves] Whether this means public or private worship is hard to say; but as the word is but once more used in the New Testament (2 Thess. ii. 1), and there means the gathering together of the redeemed of the Lord at the day of judgment, it is as likely that it means here private religious meetings for the purpose of mutual exhortation: and this sense appears the more natural here, because it is evident that the church was now in a state of persecution, and therefore their meetings were most probably held in private. For fear of persecution, it seems as if some had deserted these meetings, as the custom of certain persons is. They had given up these strengthening and instructive means, and the others were in danger of following their example.

The day approaching.] That day—the time in which God would come and pour out his judgments on the Jewish nation. We may also apply it to the day of death and the day of judgment. Both these are approaching to every human being.

Verse 26. For if we sin wilfully] This is the case of a deliberate apostate—one who has utterly rejected Jesus Christ and his atonement, and renounced the whole gospel system. It has nothing to do with backsliders in our common use of that term. A man may be overtaken in a fault, or he may deliberately go into sin, and yet neither renounce the gospel nor deny the Lord that bought him. His case is dreary and 27 But a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and a fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries.

28 ^b He that despised Moses' law died without mercy, ^c under two or three witnesses :

29 ^d Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and ^e hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, ^f and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace ?

30 For we know him that hath said, ^g Vengeance belongeth unto me, ^h I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, ⁱ The Lord shall judge his people.

31 ^j It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

dangerous, but it is not hopeless ; no case is hopeless but that of the deliberate apostate, who rejects the whole gospel system, after having been saved by grace, or convinced of the truth of the gospel. To him there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin ; for there was but the ONE, Jesus, and this he has utterly rejected.

Verse 27. A certain fearful looking for of judgment] From this it is evident that God will pardon no man without a sacrifice for sin.

And fiery indignation] A zeal or fervour of fire ; something similar to the fire that came down from heaven and destroyed Korah and his company, Num. xvi. 35.

Verse 28. He that despised Moses' law] He that rejected it, threw it aside, and denied its divine authority by presumptuous sinning, died without mercy — without any extenuation or mitigation of punishment, Num. xv. 30.

Under two or three witnesses] That is, when convicted by the testimony of two or three respectable witnesses. See Deut. xix. 6.

Verse 29. Of how much sorer punishment] Such offences were trifling in comparison of this, and in justice the punishment should be proportioned to the offence.

Trodden under foot the Son of God] Treated him with the utmost contempt and blasphemy.

The blood of the covenant — an unholy thing] The blood of the covenant means here the sacrificial death of Christ, by which the new covenant between God and man was ratified, sealed, and confirmed. And counting this unholy or common, intimates that they expected nothing from it in a sacrificial or atoning way.

Despite unto the Spirit of grace] Hath insulted the Spirit of grace. The apostle means the Holy Spirit, whose gifts were bestowed in the first age on believers for the confirmation of the gospel.

Verse 30. Vengeance belongeth unto me] This is the saying of God, Deut. xxxii. 35, in reference to the idolatrous Gentiles, who were the enemies of his people ; and is here with propriety applied to the above apostates, who, being enemies to God's ordinances, and Christ's ministry and merits, must also be enemies to Christ's people ; and labour for the destruction of them, and the cause in which they are engaged.

The Lord shall judge his people.] That is, he shall execute judgment for them ; for this is evidently the sense in which the word is used in the place from which the apostles quote, Deut. xxxii. 36.

Verse 31. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.] To fall into the hands of God is to fall under his displeasure ; and he who lives for ever can punish for ever. How dreadful to have the displeasure of an eternal, almighty Being, to rest on the soul for ever !

Verse 32. But call to remembrance] It appears from this, both by reproaches and afflictions ; and partly, whilst ^a ye became companions of them that were so used.

34 For ye had compassion of me ^b in my bonds, and ^c took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing ^d in yourselves that ^e ye have in heaven a better and an enduring substance.

35 Cast not away therefore your confidence, ^f which hath great recompence of reward.

36 ^g For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ^h ye might receive the promise.

37 For ⁱ yet a little while, and ^j he that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

38 Now ^k the just shall live by faith : but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him.

39 But we are not of them ^l who draw back unto perdition, but of them that ^m believe to the saving of the soul.

and indeed from some parts of the gospel history, that the first believers in Judea were greatly persecuted.

A great fight of afflictions] A great combat or contention of sufferings ; an allusion to the combats at the Grecian Games, or to exhibitions of gladiators at the public spectacles ; and an intimation how honourable it was to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and to overcome through the blood of the Lamb and their own testimony.

Verse 33. Ye were made a gazing-stock] Ye were exhibited as wild beasts and other shows at the theatres. See the note on 1 Cor. iv. 9, where all this is illustrated.

Companions of them that were so used.] When any victim of persecuting rage was marked out, the rest of the Christians were prompt to take his part, and acknowledge themselves believers in the same doctrine for which he suffered.

Verse 34. Ye had compassion of me in my bonds] Ye suffered with me, ye sympathized with me, when bound for the testimony of Jesus. This probably refers to the sympathy they showed towards him, and the help they afforded him, during his long imprisonment in Cæsarea and Jerusalem. But instead of my bonds, the prisoners is the reading of several MSS., Versions, and Fathers. This reading shows that there had been, and perhaps were then, several bound for the testimony of Jesus, and that the Church in Judea had shown its attachment to Christ by openly acknowledging these prisoners, and ministering to them.

Took joyfully the spoiling of your goods] To suffer such persecution patiently was great ; to endure it without a murmur was greater ; to rejoice in it was greatest of all. But how could they do all this ? The next clause informs us.

Knowing in yourselves] They had the fullest evidence that they were the children of God, the Spirit itself bearing this witness to their spirits ; and if children theu heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ. They knew that heaven was their portion, and that to it they had a sure right and indefensible title by Christ Jesus.

Verse 35. Cast not away therefore your confidence] Your liberty of access to God ; your title and right to approach his throne ; your birthright as his sons and daughters ; and the clear evidence you have of his favour, which, if you be not steady and faithful, you must lose. Do not throw it away ; neither men nor devils can take it from you, and God will never deprive you of it if you continue faithful. There is a reference here to cowardly soldiers who throw away their shields and run away from the battle.

Great recompence of reward.] No less than God's continual approbation ; the peace that passeth all understanding ruling the heart here ; and the glories of heaven as an eternal portion. Conscientiously keep the shield, and all these shall be thine.

Verse 36. Ye have need of patience] Having so great a fight of sufferings to pass through, and they of so long continuance. God furnishes the grace, you must exercise it. The grace or principle of patience comes from God; the use or exercise of that grace is of yourselves. Here ye must be workers together with God.

Have done the will of God] By keeping the faith, and patiently suffering for it.

Verse 37. For yet a little while] For yet a very little time. In a very short space of time the Messiah will come and execute judgment upon your rebellious country.

Verse 38. Now the just shall live by faith] But the just by faith, i.e., he who is justified by faith, shall live—shall be preserved when this overflowing scourge shall come. See this meaning of the phrase vindicated, Rom. i. 17. And it is evident, both from this text, and Gal. iii. 11, that it is in this sense that the apostle uses it.

But if any man draw back] But if he draw back; he, the man who is justified by faith; for it is of him, and none other, that the text speaks. The insertion of the words any man, if done to serve the purpose of a particular creed, is a wicked perversion of the words of God. They were evidently intended to turn away the relative from the antecedent, in order to save the doctrine of final and unconditional perseverance; which doctrine this text destroys.

My soul shall have no pleasure in him.] My very heart shall be opposed to him who makes shipwreck of faith and a good conscience. The word signifies not only to draw back, but to slink away and hide through fear. As dastards and cowards are hated by all men, so those that slink away from Christ and his cause, for fear of persecution or secular loss, God must despise; in them he cannot delight; and his Spirit, grieved with their conduct, must desert their hearts, and leave them to darkness and hardness.

Verse 39. But we are not of them who draw back] “We are not the cowards, but the courageous.” I have no doubt of this being the meaning of the apostle, and the form of speech requires such a translation; it occurs more than once in the New Testament.

CHAPTER XI.

A definition of faith, 1, 2. What are its immediate objects, 3. What are its effects, instanced in Abel, 4. In Enoch, 5, 6. In Noah, 7. In Abraham, 8-10. In Sara, 11. In their righteous posterity, 12-16. In Abraham's offering of his son Isaac, 17-19. In Isaac, 20. In Jacob, 21. In Joseph, 22. In Moses, 23-28. In the Israelites in the wilderness, 29. In the fall of Jericho, 30. In Rahab, 31. In several of the judges; and in David, Samuel, and the prophets, 32-34. The glorious effects produced by it in the primitive martyrs. 35-40.

NOW faith is the “substance of things hoped for, the evidence^b of things not seen.

2 For^c by it the elders obtained a good report.

3 Through faith we understand that^d the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.

^a Or, ground; or, confidence.—^b Rom. viii. 24, 25. 2 Cor. iv. 18, v. 7.—^c Gen. 39.—^d Gen. i. 1. Ps. xxxiii. 6. John i. 3. Ch. i. 2. 2 Pet. iii. 5.—^e Gen. iv. 4. 1 John iii. 12.—^f Gen. iv. 10.—^g Matt.

Verse 1. Faith is the substance of things hoped for] Faith is the SUBSTANCE of things hoped for; the DEMONSTRATION of things not seen. The word which we translate substance, signifies subsistence, that which becomes a foundation for another thing to stand on. And the word rendered evidence signifies such a conviction as is produced in the mind by the demonstration of a problem, after which demonstration no doubt can remain, because we see from it that the thing is; that it cannot but be; and that it cannot be otherwise than as it is, and is proved to be. Such is the faith by which the soul is justified; or rather, such are the effects of justifying faith: on it subsists the peace of God, which passeth all understanding; and the love of God is shed abroad in the heart where it lives, by the Holy Ghost.

Things hoped for] A penitent hopes for the pardon of his sins and the favour of his God; faith in Christ puts him in possession of this pardon, and thus the thing that was hoped for is enjoyed by faith.

In an extended sense the things hoped for are the resurrection of the body, the new heavens and the new earth, the introduction of believers into the heavenly country, and the possession of eternal glory.

The things unseen, as distinguished from the things hoped for, are, in an extended sense, the creation of the world from nothing, the destruction of the world by the deluge, the miraculous conception of Christ, his resurrection

4 By faith^a Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he, being dead, ^b yet ^c speaketh.

5 By faith^b Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found, because God had translated him: for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God.

xxiii. 35. Ch. xii. 24. Or, is yet spoken of.—^a Gen. v. 22, 24. Wisd. iv. 10. Eccles. xlv. 16. xlix. 14.

from the dead, his ascension to glory, his mediation at the right hand of God, his government of the universe, &c. &c., all which we as firmly believe on the testimony of God's word as if we had seen them. But this faith has particular respect to the being, goodness, providence, grace, and mercy of God, as the subsequent verses sufficiently show.

Verse 2. For by it the elders obtained a good report.] By the elders are meant ancestors, forefathers, such as the patriarchs and prophets, several of whom he afterwards particularly names, and produces some fact from the history of their lives.

It is very remarkable that among the whole there is not one word concerning poor Adam and his wife, through both Abraham and Sarah are mentioned. There was no good report concerning them; not a word of their repentance, faith, or holiness. God has covered the whole of their spiritual and eternal state with a thick and impenetrable veil. Conjectures relative to their state would be very pernicious; little else than hope can be exercised in their favour: but as to them the promise of Jesus was given, so we may believe they found redemption in that blood which was shed from the foundation of the world. Adam's rebellion against his Maker was too great and too glaring to permit his name to be ever after mentioned with honour or respect.

Verse 3. Through faith we understand] By worlds, we 6 But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

7 By faith ^a Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, ^b moved with fear, ^c prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of ^d the righteousness which is by faith.

8 By faith ^e Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

9 By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, ^f dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, ^g the heirs with him of the same promise:

^a Gen. vi. 13, 22. Eccles. iv. 17.—^b Or, being wary.—^c 1 Pet. iii. 20.—^d Rom. iii. 22. iv. 13. Phil. iii. 9.—^e Gen. xii. 1, 4. Acts vii. 2, 3, 4.—^f Gen. xii. 8. xiii. 3, 18. xviii. 1, 9.—^g Ch. vi. 17.—^h Ch. xii. 22. xiii. 14.—ⁱ Ch. iii. 4. Rev. xxi. 2, 10.—^j Gen. xvii. 19. xviii.

are to understand the material fabric of the universe; and as the word is used in the plural number, it may comprehend, not only the earth and visible heavens, but the whole planetary system; the different worlds which, in our system at least, revolve round the sun. The apostle states that these things were not made out of pre-existent matter: for if they were, that matter, however extended or modified, must appear in that thing into which it is compounded and modified, consequently it could not be said that the things which are seen are not made of the things that appear; and he shows us also, by these words, that the present mundane fabric was not formed or reformed from one anterior, as some suppose. According to Moses and the apostle we believe that God made all things out of nothing. See the notes on Gen. i. 1, &c.

Verse 4. By faith Abel offered—a more excellent sacrifice] More sacrifice; as if he had said: Abel, by faith, made more than one offering; and hence it is said, God testified of his gifts. See this transaction explained at large on Gen. iv. 3, &c. [But the adjective refers to quality rather than quantity.]

Verse 5. By faith Enoch was translated] It is said, in Gen. v. 24, that Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him. Here the apostle explains what God's taking him means, by saying that he was translated that he should not see death; from which we learn that he did not die, and that God took him to a state of blessedness without obliging him to pass through death.

Verse 6. He that cometh to God] The man who professes that it is his duty to worship God must, if he act rationally, do it on the conviction that there is such a Being, infinite, eternal, unoriginated, and self-existent; the cause of all other being; on whom all being depends; and by whose energy, bounty, and providence, all other beings exist, live, and are supplied with the means of continued existence and life. He must believe, also, that he rewards them that diligently seek him; that he is not indifferent about his own worship; that he requires adoration and religious service from men; and that he blesses, and especially protects and saves those who in simplicity and uprightness of heart seek and serve him.

Verse 7. By faith Noah] See the whole of this history, Gen. vi. 13.

Warned of God] As we know from the history in Genesis that God did warn Noah, we see from this the real import of this verb, as used in various parts of the New Testament; it signifies to utter oracles, to give divine warning.

Moved with fear] Influenced by religious fear or reverence towards God. This is mentioned to show that he acted not from a fear of losing his life, but from the fear of God; and hence that fear is here properly attributed to faith.

He condemned the world] He credited God, they did not; he walked in the way God had commanded, they did not; he repeatedly admonished them, 1 Pet. iii. 20, they regarded it not; this aggravated their crimes, while it exalted his faith and righteousness.

Became heir of the righteousness] He became entitled to 10 For he looked for a ^b city which hath foundations, ^c whose builder and maker is God.

11 Through faith also ^d Sara herself received strength to conceive seed, and ^e was delivered of a child when she was past age, because she judged him ^f faithful who had promised.

12 Therefore sprang there even of one, and him ^g as good as dead, ^h so many as the stars of the sky in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea shore innumerable.

13 These all died ⁱ in faith, ^j not having received the promises, but ^k having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and ^l confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth.

14 For they that say such things ^m declare plainly that they seek a country.

that justification which is by faith; and his temporal deliverance was a pledge of the salvation of his soul.

Verse 8. Abraham, when he was called] See on Gen. xii. 1-4.

Not knowing whither he went] Therefore his obedience was the fullest proof of his faith in God, and his faith was an implicit faith; he obeyed, and went out from his own country, having no prospect of any good or success but what his implicit faith led him to expect from God, as the rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

Verse 9. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise] It is remarkable that Abraham did not acquire any right in Canaan, except that of a burying place; nor did he build any house in it; his faith showed him that it was only a type and pledge of a better country, and he kept that better country continually in view: he, with Isaac and Jacob, who were heirs of the same promise, were contented to dwell in tents, without any fixed habitation.

Verse 10. For he looked for a city which hath foundations] He knew that earth could afford no permanent residence for an immortal mind, and he looked for that heavenly building of which God is the architect and owner; in a word, he lost sight of earth, that he might keep heaven in view. And all who are partakers of his faith possess the same spirit, walk by the same rule, and mind the same thing.

Whose builder and maker is God] The word signifies an architect, one who plans, calculates, and constructs a building. The word rendered maker signifies the governor of a people; one who forms them by institutions and laws; the framer of a political constitution. God is here represented the Maker or Father of all the heavenly inhabitants and the Planner of their citizenship in that heavenly country.

Verse 11. Through faith also Sara] Her history, as far as the event here is concerned, may be seen, Gen. xvii. 19, and xxi. 2.

Verse 12. Him as good as dead] According to nature, long past the time of the procreation of children.

Verse 13. These all died in faith] That is, Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Jacob, continued to believe, to the end of their lives, that God would fulfil this promise; but they neither saw the numerous seed, nor did they get the promised rest in Canaan.

Strangers and pilgrims] How many use these expressions, professing to be strangers and pilgrims here below, and yet the whole of their conduct, spirit, and attachments, show that they are perfectly at home! How little consideration and weight are in many of our professions, whether they relate to earth or heaven!

Verse 14. Declare plainly that they seek a country] No intelligent Jew could suppose that Canaan was all the rest which God had promised to his people.

Verse 15. If they had been mindful of that country] They considered their right to the promises of God as dependant on their utter renunciation of Chaldea; and it was this that induced Abraham to cause his steward Eliezer to swear that he would not carry his son Isaac to Chaldea, see Gen. xxiv. 5-8. There idolatry reigned; and God had called them to 15 And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned:

16 But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed ^a to be called their God; for ^b he hath prepared for them a city.

17 By faith ^c Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac; and he that had received the promises ^d offered up his only-begotten son,

18 ^e Of whom it was said, ^f That in Isaac shall thy seed be called:

19 Accounting that God ^g was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure.

20 By faith ^h Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come.

be the patriarchs and progenitors of a people among whom the knowledge of the true God, and the worship required by him, should be established and preserved.

Verse 16. But now they desire a better] Though to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the promises were made in which Canaan was so particularly included, yet God did not give them any inheritance in that country, no, not so much as to set a foot on, Acts vii. 5. Therefore, if they had not understood the promises to belong to spiritual things, far from enduring, as seeing him who is invisible, they must have considered themselves deceived and mocked. The apostle, therefore, with the highest propriety, attributes their whole conduct and expectation to faith.

Verse 17. Abraham, when he was tried] See the history of this whole transaction explained at large in the notes on Gen. xxii. 1-9.

Offered up his only-begotten] Abraham did, in effect, offer up Isaac; he would have slain him had he not been prevented by the same authority by which the sacrifice was enjoined. Isaac is here called his only-begotten, as he was the only son he had by his legitimate wife, who was heir to his property, and heir of the promises of God.

Verse 19. To raise him up, even from the dead] Abraham staggered not at the promise through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God. The resurrection of the dead must have been a doctrine of the patriarchs; they expected a heavenly inheritance, they saw they died as did other men, and they must have known that they could not enjoy it but in consequence of a resurrection from the dead.

He received him in a figure] The original word sometimes means a daring exploit, a jeoparding of the life; I think it should be so understood here, as pointing out the very imminent danger he was in of losing his life. The clause may therefore be thus translated: "Accounting that God was able to raise him up from the dead, from whence he had received him, he being in the most imminent danger of losing his life." [Such a sense of this word is quite alien to classic or Hellenistic Greek.]

Verse 20. By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau] He believed that God would fulfil his promise to his posterity and God gave him to see what would befall them in their future generations. The apostle does not seem to intimate that one should be an object of the divine hatred, and the other of divine love, in reference to their eternal states. This is wholly a discovery of later ages.

Verse 21. Blessed both the sons of Joseph] That is, Ephraim and Manasseh. See the account and the notes, Gen. xlviii. 5, &c.

Worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff] This subject is particularly considered in the note on Gen. xlvii. 31.

The Romanists allege this in favour of image worship. This is too contemptible to require confutation. To make it speak this language the Rheims Version renders the verse thus: By faith Jacob dying, blessed every one of the sons of Joseph, and adored the top of his rod. A pretty object of adoration, indeed, for a dying patriarch! Here, the preposi-both the sons of Joseph; and ^j worshipped, leaning upon the top of his staff.

22 By faith ^k Joseph, when he died, ^l made mention of the departing of the children of Israel; and gave commandment concerning his bones.

23 By faith ^m Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's ⁿ commandment.

24 By faith ^o Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter;

25 ^p Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season;

26 Esteeming ^q the reproach ^r of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto ^s the recompence of the reward.

Verse 22. Joseph when he died] When he was dying, gave commandment concerning his bones. See the notes on Gen. i. 23.

Verse 23. By faith Moses, &c.] See the notes on Exod. ii. 2, and Acts vii. 20. We know that Moses was bred up at the Egyptian court, and there was considered to be the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and probably might have succeeded to the throne of Egypt; but finding that God had visited his people, and given them a promise of spiritual and eternal blessings, he chose rather to take the lot of this people, i.e., God as his portion for ever, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin, which, however gratifying to the animal senses, could only be temporary.

Verse 26. The reproach of Christ] Many have been stumbled by the word Christ here; because they cannot see how Moses should have any knowledge of him. It may be said that it was just as easy for God Almighty to reveal Christ to Moses, as it was for him to reveal him to Isaiah, or to the shepherds, or to John Baptist; or to manifest him in the flesh. After all there is much reason to believe that by Christ, or the anointed, the apostle means the whole body of the Israelitish or Hebrew people; for, as the word signifies the anointed, and anointing was a consecration to God, to serve him in some particular office, as prophet, priest, king, or the like, all the Hebrew people were considered thus anointed or consecrated; it is worthy of remark that the word is used in this very sense by the Septuagint, 1 Sam. ii. 35, Ps. cv. 15, and Hab. iii. 13, where the word is necessarily restrained to this meaning. [Some think that the expression here is used as in 2 Cor. i. 5, Col. i. 24, that is, of Christ dwelling, striving, suffering, in His Church, as in His body.]

He had respect unto the recompence] He looked attentively to it; his eyes were constantly directed to it.

Verse 27. He forsook Egypt] He believed that God would fulfil the promise he had made; and he cheerfully changed an earthly for a heavenly portion.

Not fearing the wrath of the king] The apostle speaks here of the departure of Moses with the Israelites, not of his flight to Midian, Exod. ii. 14, 15.

As seeing him who is invisible] He continued to act as one who had the Judge of his heart and conduct always before his eyes.

Verse 28. He kept the passover] See the notes on Exod. xii.

Verse 29. By faith they passed through the Red Sea] See the notes on Exod. xiv. 22. The one walked by faith, the other by sight; one perished, the other was saved.

Verse 30. The walls of Jericho fell down] This is particularly explained, Josh. vi. 1, &c.

Verse 31. The harlot Rahab perished not] See this account, Josh. ii. 1, 9, 11, and vi. 23, where it is rendered exceedingly probable that the word sonah in Hebrew, which we translate harlot, should be rendered innkeeper or tavern-keeper, as there is no proper evidence that the person in Abed-nego, who, for their steady attachment to God's worship, were cast into a fiery furnace, in which they were preserved, and from which they escaped unhurt, Dan. iii.

Escaped the edge of the sword] Moses, who escaped the sword of Pharaoh, Exod. xviii. 4; Elijah, that of Jezebel; and David, that of Saul: and many others.

Out of weakness were made strong] Were miraculously restored from sickness, which seemed to threaten their life; as Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 21.

Waxed valiant in fight] Like Gedeon, who overthrew the camp of the Midianites, and Jonathan, that of the Philistines, in such a way as must have proved that God was with them.

Verse 35. Women received their dead] As did the widow of Zarephath, 1 Kings xvii. 21, and the Shunamite, 2 Kings iv. 34. What other cases under all the above heads the apostle might have in view, we know not.

Others were tortured] This is a word concerning the meaning of which the critics are not agreed. I am inclined to think that the bastinado on the soles of the feet is what is here designed. [Some think the punishment was that of being broken on the wheel.]

Not accepting deliverance] This looks very like a reference to the case of the mother and her seven sons, mentioned 2 Mac. vii. 1, &c.

Verse 36. Had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings] We do not know the cases to which the apostle refers. It is probable that he refers to public exhibitions of the people of God at idol-feasts and the like; and Samson's case before Dagon, when the Philistines had put out his eyes, is quite in point. As to scourgings, this was a common way of punishing minor culprits; and even those who were to be punished capitally were first scourged. See the case of our Lord.

Bonds and imprisonment] Joseph was cast into prison; Jeremiah was cast into a dungeon full of mire, chap. xxxvii. 16, and xxxviii. 6; and the prophet Micaiah was imprisoned by Ahab, 1 Kings xxii. 27.

Verse 37. They were stoned] As Zochariah, the son of Barachiah or Jehoiada, was, between the altar and the temple, see the account, 2 Chron. xxiv. 21, and see the notes on Matt. xxiii. 35. And as Naboth the Jezreelite, who, on refusing to give up his father's inheritance to a covetous king, because it had respect to the promise of God, was falsely accused and stoned to death, 1 Kings xxi. 1-14.

They were sawn asunder] There is a tradition that the prophet Isaiah was thus martyred.

Were tempted] I believe this word has vexed the critics more than any other in the New Testament. How being tempted can be ranked among the heavy sufferings of the primitive martyrs and confessors is not easy to discern, because to be tempted is the common lot of every godly man. This difficulty has induced learned men to mend the text by conjecture. Of all such conjectures, that of Knatchbull appears to me to be the most probable: they were transfused or impaled; and even the present reading might be construed in this sense.

question was such a woman as our translation represents her.

Received the spies with peace.] The same as beshalom, giving them a kind welcome, good fare, and protection.

Verse 32. Time would fail me] A very usual mode of expression with the best Greek writers, when they wish to intimate that much important intelligence remains to be communicated on the subject already on hand, which must be omitted because of other points which have not yet been handled.

Gedeon] Who by faith in God, with 300 men, destroyed a countless multitude of Midianites and Amalekites, and delivered Israel from oppression and slavery, Judg. vi. vii., viii.

Barak] Who overthrew Jabin, king of Canaan, and delivered Israel from servitude, Judg. iv.

Samson] Who was appointed by God to deliver Israel from the oppressive yoke of the Philistines; and, by extraordinary assistance, discomfited them on various occasions, Judg. xiii. xvi.

Jephthae] Who, under the same guidance, defeated the Ammonites, and delivered Israel, Judg. xi., xii.

David] It is probable he is referred to here for that act of faith and courage which he showed in his combat with Goliath. See 1 Sam. xvii.

Samuel] The last of the Israelitish judges, to whom succeeded a race of kings, of whom Saul and David were the two first, and were both anointed by this most eminent man. See his history in the first book of Samuel.

It may be observed here, that the apostle does not produce these in chronological order; for Barak lived before Gedeon, and Jephthae before Samson, and Samuel before David. He was not producing facts in their chronological order, but instances of the power of God exerted in the behalf of men who had strong confidence in him.

Verse 33. Who through faith subdued kingdoms] As Joshua, who subdued the seven Canaanitish nations; and David, who subdued the Moabites, Syrians, Ammonites, and Edomites, 2 Sam. viii., &c.

Wrought righteousness] Did a great variety of works indicative of that faith in God, without which it is impossible to do anything that is good.

Obtained promises] This is supposed to refer to Joshua and Caleb, who, through their faith in God, obtained the promised land, while all the rest of the Israelites were excluded; to Phineas also, who, for his act of zealous faith in slaying Zimri and Cozbi, got the promise of an everlasting priesthood; and to David, who, for his faith and obedience, obtained the kingdom of Israel, and had the promise that from his seed the Messiah should spring.

Stopped the mouths of lions] Daniel, who, though cast into a den of lions for his fidelity to God, was preserved among them unhurt, and finally came to great honour.

Verse 34. Quenched the violence of fire] As in the case of the three faithful Hebrews, Shadrach, Meshaiah, and wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth.

39 And these all, ^b having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise :

^a 1 Kings xviii. 4. xix. 9.—^b Ver. 2, 13.—^c Or, forseen.

Were slain with the sword] As in the case of the eighty-five priests slain by Doeg, see 1 Sam. xxii. 18; and the prophets, of whose slaughter by the sword Elijah complains, 1 Kings xix. 10. Probably the word means being beheaded, which was formerly done with a sword, and not with an axe; and in the East is done by the sword to the present day.

They wandered about in sheep-skins] Sheep-skins dressed with the wool on. This was probably the sort of mantle that Elijah wore, and which was afterwards used by Elisha. It was most probably on this account that Elijah was called a hairy man, 2 Kings i. 8; and not on account of having a preposterously long beard, as those rarrors of all the unities of time, place, circumstances, and common sense, the painters, represent him. And it is likely that the prophets themselves wore such garments, and that the false prophets imitated them in this, in order that they might gain the greater credit.

Being destitute] In want of all the comforts and conveniences of life, and often of its necessities.

Afflicted] In consequence of enduring such privations.

Tormented] Maltreated, harassed, variously persecuted by those to whom they brought the message of salvation.

Verse 38. Of whom the world was not worthy] Yet they were obliged to wander by day in deserts and mountains, driven from the society of men, and often obliged to hide by night in dens and caves of the earth to conceal themselves from the brutal rage of men.

Verse 39. Having obtained a good report (having been witnessed to, see ver. 2) through faith] It was faith in God which supported all those eminent men who, in different parts of the world, and in different ages, were persecuted for righteousness' sake.

Received not the promise] They had all heard of the promises made to Abraham of a heavenly rest, and of the promise of the Messiah, for this was a constant tradition; but they died without having seen this Anointed of the Lord.

Verse 40. God having provided some better thing for us] This is the dispensation of the gospel, with all the privileges and advantages it confers.

That they without us should not be made perfect] Believers before the flood, after the flood, under the law, and since the law, make but one church. The gospel dispensation is the last, and the church cannot be considered as complete till the believers under all dispensations are gathered together. As the gospel is the last dispensation, the preceding believers cannot be consummated even in glory till the gospel church arrive in the heaven of heavens.

CHAPTER XII.

Having so many incitements to holiness, patience, and perseverance, we should lay aside every hinderance, and run with patience the race that is set before us, taking our blessed Lord for our example, 1-4. These sufferings are to be considered as fatherly chastisements from God, and to be patiently submitted to on account of the benefits to be derived from them, 5-11. They should take courage and go forward, 12, 13. Directions to follow peace with all men, and to take heed that they fall not from the grace of God, 14, 15. References to the case of Esau, 16, 17. The privileges of Christians compared with those of the Jews, by which the superior excellence of Christianity is shown, 18-24. They must take care not to reject Jesus, who now addressed them from heaven, and who was shortly to be their Judge, 25-27. As they were called to receive a kingdom, they should have grace, whereby they might serve God acceptably, 28, 29.

WHEREFORE seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, ^a let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and ^b let us run ^c with patience the race that is set before us,

2 Looking unto Jesus, the ^d author and finisher of our faith; ^e who, for the joy that was set before

Verse 1. Wherefore] This is an inference drawn from the examples produced in the preceding chapter, and on this account both should be read in connexion.

Compassed about] Here is another allusion to the Olympic Games: the agonistas, or contenders, were often greatly animated by the consideration that the eyes of the principal men of their country were fixed upon them; and by this they were induced to make the most extraordinary exertions.

Cloud of witnesses] Both the Greeks and Latins frequently

3 ^a For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, ^b lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

4 ^a Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin.

5 And ye have forgotten the exhortation, which use the term cloud to express a great number of persons or things.

Let us lay aside every weight] As those who ran in the Olympic races would throw aside everything that might impede them in their course; so Christians, professing to go to heaven, must throw aside everything that might hinder them in their Christian race.

The sin which doth so easily beset] The sin that stands well, or is favourably situated, ever surrounding the person, speakeſt unto you as unto children, * My ſon, deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him :

6 For ^b whom the Lord loveth he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth.

7 ^c If ye endure chaſtening, God dealeth with you as with ſons; for what ſon is he whom the father chaſteneth not ?

8 But if ye be without chaſtiſement, ^d whereof all are partakers, then are ye baſtards, and not ſons.

9 Furthermore, we have had fathers of our fleſh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence: ſhall we not much rather be in ſubjection unto ^e the Father of ſpirits, and live ?

10 For they verily for a few days chaſtened us ^f after their own pleaſure; but he for our profit, ^g that we might be partakers of his holineſs.

11 Now no chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth to and ſoliciting his acquieſcence. What we term the eaſily beſetting ſin is the ſin of our conſtitution, the ſin of our trade, that in which our worldly honour, ſecular profit, and ſenſual gratification are moſt frequently felt and conſulted. Some underſtand it of original ſin, as that by which we are enveloped in body, ſoul, and ſpirit. Whatever it may be, the word gives us to underſtand that it is what meets us at every turn; that it is always preſenting itſelf to us.

Let us run with patience the race] Let us ſtart, run on, and continue running, till we get to the goal.

Verse 2. Looking unto Jeſus] Looking off and on, or from and to; looking off or from the world and all ſecular concerns to Jeſus, and all the ſpiritual and heavenly things connected with him. This is ſtill an alluſion to the Grecian Games: thoſe who ran were to keep their eyes fixed on the mark of the prize; they muſt keep the goal in view.

The author and finiſher of faith] The word translated here author, ſignifies in general captain or leader, or the firſt inventor of a thing, ſee chap. ii. 10. But the reference ſeems to be here to the judge in the games, whoſe buſineſs it was to admit the contenders, and to give the prize to the conqueror. Jeſus is here repreſented as this officer; every Chriſtian is a contender in this race of life, and for eternal life. The heavenly courſe is begun under Jeſus; and under him it is completed. He is the finiſher, by awarding the prize to them that are faithful unto death.

Who, for the joy that was ſet before him] The joy of fulfilling the will of the Father, Pſalm xl. 6, &c., in taſting death for every man.

Verse 3. For conſider him] Attentively obſerve and analyſe every part of his conduct, enter into his ſpirit, examine his motives and object, and remember that, as he acted, ye are called to act; he will furniſh you with the ſame Spirit, and will ſupport you with the ſame ſtrength.

Verse 4. Ye have not yet reſiſted unto blood] Though you have had oppoſition and perſecution, yet you have not been called, in bearing your teſtimony againſt ſin and ſinners, to ſeal the truth with your blood.

Striving againſt ſin] An alluſion to boxing at the Grecian Games. In the former paſſages the apoſtle principally refers to the foot races.

Verse 5. And ye have forgotten] Or, have ye forgotten the exhortation? This quotation is made from Prov. iii. 11, 12, and ſhows that the addreſs there, which at firſt ſight appears to be from Solomon to his ſon, or from ſome fatherly man to a perſon in affliction, is properly from God himſelf to any perſon in perſecution, affliction, or diſtreſs.

Deſpiſe not thou the chaſtening] Do not neglect the correction of the Lord. That man who neglects correction, and profits not by it, who does not ſee the hand of God in it; or, in other words, does not fear the rod, and him who hath appointed it, and conſequently does not humble himſelf under the mighty hand of God, deplore his ſin, deprecate divine judgment, and pray for mercy.

be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth ^b the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſs unto them which are exerciſed thereby.

12 Wherefore ^c lift up the hands which hang down, and the feeble knees;

13 ^d And make ^e ſtraight paths for your feet, leſt that which is lame be turned out of the way; ^f but let it rather be healed.

14 ^g Follow peace with all men, and holineſs, ^h without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord :

15 ⁱ Looking diligently, ^j leſt any man ^k fail of the grace of God; ^l leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled;

16 ^m Leſt there be any fornicator, or profane perſon, as Eſau, ⁿ who for one morſel of meat ſold his birth-right.

17 For ye know how that afterward, ^o when he Nor faint] Do not be diſcouraged, nor deſpair, for the reaſons immediately alleged.

Verse 6. For whom the Lord loveth he chaſteneth] Here is the reaſon why we ſhould neither neglect correction nor faint under it: it is a proof of the fatherly love of God Almighty, and ſhows his moſt gracious deſigns towards us; from which we may be fully convinced that the affliction will prove the means of good to our ſouls, if we make a proper uſe of it.

And ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth] This is a quotation, literatim from the Septuagint, of Prov. iii. 12, of which place our verſion is: Even as the Father the ſon in whom he delighteth. The tranſlation of the Septuagint and apoſtle is perfectly conſonant with the Hebrew text. Our verſion of Prov. iii. 12 is wrong.

Verse 7. If ye endure chaſtening] If ye ſubmit to his authority, humble yourſelves under his hand, and pray for his bleſſing.

God dealeth with you as with ſons] He acknowledges by this that you belong to the family, and that he, as your Father, has you under proper diſcipline.

Verse 8. Then are ye baſtards] This proceeds on the general fact that baſtards are neglected in their manners and education; the fathers of ſuch feeling little affection for, or obligation to regard, their ſpurious iſſue. But all that are legitimate children are partakers of chaſtiſement or diſcipline; for the original word does not imply stripes and puniſhments, but the whole diſcipline of a child, both at home and at ſchool.

Verse 9. We have had fathers of our fleſh] The fathers of our fleſh, i.e., our natural parents, were correctors; and we revered them, notwithstanding their corrections often aroſe from whim or caprice; but ſhall we not rather be in ſubjection to the Father of ſpirits; to him from whom we have received both body and ſoul; who is our Creator, Preſerver, and Supporter; to whom both we and our parents owe our life and our bleſſings; and who corrects us only for our profit; that we may live and be partakers of his holineſs?

Verse 10. For—a few days] The chaſtiſement of our earthly parents laſted only a ſhort time; that of our heavenly Father will alſo be but a ſhort time, if we ſubmit: and as our parents ceaſed to correct when we learned obedience; ſo will our heavenly Father, when the end for which he ſent the chaſtiſement is accompliſhed. God delights not in the rod; judgment is his ſtrange work.

Verse 11. No chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous] Neither correction, whoſome reſtraint, domeſtic regulations, nor gymnastic diſcipline, are pleaſant to them that are thus exerciſed; but it is by theſe means that obedient children, ſcholars, and great men are made. And it is by God's diſcipline that Chriſtians are made. He who does not bear the yoke of Chriſt is good for nothing to others, and never gains reſt to his own ſoul.

would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: * for he found no ^b place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears.

The peaceable fruit of righteousness] i.e., The joyous, prosperous fruits; those fruits by which we gain much, and through which we are made happy.

Exercised thereby.] To the trained. There is still an allusion to the Grecian Games; and in the word before us to those gymnastic exercises by which the candidates for the prizes were trained to the different kinds of exercises in which they were to contend when the games were publicly opened.

Verse 12. Wherefore lift up the hands] The apostle refers to Isa. xxxv. 3.

Verse 13. Make straight paths for your feet] That is, Take the straight path that is before you, do not go in crooked or rough ways, where are stones, briars, and thorns, by which you will be inevitably lamed, and so totally prevented from proceeding in the way; whereas, if you go in the even, proper path, though you have been wounded by getting into a wrong way, that which was wounded will be healed by moderate, equal exercise, all impediments being removed. The application of all this to a correct, holy deportment in religious life, is both natural and easy.

Verse 14. Follow peace with all men] Cultivate, as far as you possibly can, a good understanding both with Jews and Gentiles.

And holiness] That state of continual sanctification, that life of purity and detachment from the world and all its lusts, without which detachment and sanctity no man shall see the Lord—shall ever enjoy his presence in the world of blessedness. To see God, in the Hebrew phrase, is to enjoy him; and without holiness of heart and life this is impossible. No soul can be fit for heaven that has not suitable dispositions for the place.

Verse 15. Looking diligently] Looking about, over, and upon; being constantly on your guard.

Lest any man fail of the grace of God] Lest any person should come behind, or fall off from, this grace or gift of God; this state of salvation, viz., the gospel system or Christianity; for this is most evidently the meaning of the apostle. It is not the falling from a work of grace in their own souls, but from the gospel, to apostatize from which they had now many temptations; and to guard them against this, the whole epistle was written.

Lest any root of bitterness springing up] A root of bitterness signifies a poisonous plant. The root of bitterness is here used metaphorically for a bad man, or a man holding unsound doctrines, and endeavouring to spread them in the church.

Trouble you] This alludes to the effects of poison taken into the body. The blood itself (the principle, under God, of life) becomes putrescent; and probably to this the intelligent apostle alludes when he says, and thereby many be defiled, corrupted, or contaminated.

Verse 16. Lest there be any fornicator] Any licentious person who would turn the gospel of the grace of God into lasciviousness.

Or profane person, as Esau] It is not intimated that Esau was a fornicator; and the disjunctive or separates the profane person from the fornicator. And Esau is here unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels,

23 To the general assembly and church of ⁱ the first-born, ^j which are ^k written in heaven, and to God ^l the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men ^m made perfect, 24 And to Jesus ⁿ the mediator of the new ^o covenant, and to ^p the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things ^q than that of Abel.

25 See that ye refuse not him that speaketh. For ^r if they escaped not who refused him that spake on earth, much more shall not we escape, if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven:

26 * Whose voice then shook the earth: but now he hath promised, saying, * Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven.

termed profane, because he so far disregarded the spiritual advantages connected with his rights of primogeniture, that he alienated the whole for a single mess of pottage. The word which we translate profane, was applied to those who were despisers of sacred things, and consequently were to be denied admittance to the temple, and were not permitted to assist at holy rites.

The Latin profanus, from which we have our word, is compounded of procul a fano, "far from the temple," properly an irreligious man.

Sold his birthright.] The first-born, in patriarchal times, 1. Had a right to the priesthood, Exod. xxii. 29. 2. And a double portion of all the father's possessions, Deut. xxi. 17. 3. And was lord over his brethren, Gen. xxvii. 29, 37; xlix. 3. 4. And in the family of Abraham the first-born was the very source whence the Messiah, as the Redeemer of the world, and the Church of God, were to spring. Farther, 5. The first-born had the right of conveying especial blessings and privileges when he came to die.

Verse 17. When he would have inherited the blessing] When he wished to have the lordship over the whole family conveyed to him.

Repentance] Here is not to be taken in a theological sense, as implying contrition for sin, but merely change of mind or purpose; nor does the word here refer to Esau at all, but to his father, whom Esau could not, with all his tears and entreaties, persuade to reverse what he had done. I have blessed him, said he, yea, and he must be blessed; I cannot reverse it now. Nothing spoken here by the apostle, nor in the history in Genesis to which he refers, concerns the eternal state of either of the two brothers.

Verse 18-21. For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched] I believe the words should be translated to a palpable or material mountain; for that it was not a mountain that on this occasion might be touched, the history, Exod. xix. 12, 13, shows; and the apostle himself, in ver. 20, confirms. It is called here a palpable or material mount, to distinguish it from that spiritual mount Zion of which the apostle is speaking. The apostle's design is to show that the dispensation of the law engendered terror; that it was most awful and exclusive; that it belonged only to the Jewish people; and that, even to them, it was so terrible that they could not endure that which was commanded, and entreated that God would not communicate with them in his own person, but by the ministry of Moses; and even to Moses, who held the highest intimacy with Jehovah, the revealed glories, the burning fire, the blackness, the darkness, the tempest, the loud sounding trumpet, and the voice of words, were so terrible, that he said, I exceedingly fear and tremble.

Verse 22. But ye are come unto mount Zion] 1. The description in these verses does not refer to a heavenly state; for the terrible nature of the Mosaic dispensation is never opposed to heaven or life eternal, but to the economy of the New Testament. 2. In heaven there is no need of a mediator or sprinkling of blood; but these are mentioned in the state which the apostle describes. [Nevertheless, the difficulties attending the interpretation which Dr. Clarke

27 And this word, Yet once more, signifieth * the removing of those things that ^bare shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain.

^b Or, may be shaken.—^c Or, let us hold fast.

gives, are more than those which occur in the ordinary interpretation, viz., that the apostle is speaking of God's own abode in heaven.]

The heavenly Jerusalem] This phrase means the Church of the New Testament.

To an innumerable company of angels] To myriads, tens of thousands, of angels. These are represented as the attendants upon God, when he manifests himself in any external manner to mankind. Though angels make a part of the inhabitants of the New Jerusalem, yet they belong also to the Church below. Christ has in some sort incorporated them with his followers, for "they are all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to them that shall be heirs of salvation," and they are all ever considered as making a part of God's subject.

Verse 23. To the general assembly] This word is joined to the preceding by some of the best MSS., and is quoted in connexion by several of the Fathers: Ye are come—to the general assembly of innumerable angels; and this is probably the true connexion.

The first-born] Those who first received the gospel of Christ, and who are elsewhere termed the first-fruits: this is spoken in allusion to the first-born among the Israelites, who were all considered as the Lord's property, and were dedicated to him. The church of the first-born is the assembly of the most excellent.

Which are written in heaven] Who are enrolled as citizens of the New Jerusalem, and are entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the church here, and of heaven above.

God the Judge of all] The supreme God is ever present in this general assembly: to him they are all gathered; by him they are admitted to all those rights, &c.; under his inspection they continue to act; and it is he alone who erases from the register those who act unworthily of their citizenship. Judge here is to be taken in the Jewish use of the term, i.e., one who exercises sovereign rule and authority.

The spirits of just men made perfect] The spirits of the just men made perfect, or the righteous perfect, are the full grown Christians; those who are justified by the blood and sanctified by the Spirit of Christ. Being come to such, implies that spiritual union which the disciples of Christ have with each other, and which they possess how far soever separate; for they are all joined in one spirit, Eph. ii. 18; they are in the unity of the spirit, Eph. iv. 3, 4; and of one soul, Acts iv. 32. This is a unity which was never possessed even by the Jews themselves in their best state; it is peculiar to real Christianity: as to nominal Christianity, wars and desolations between man and his fellows are quite consistent with its spirit.

Verse 24. And to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant] The old covenant and its mediator, Moses, are passed away. The new covenant, i.e., the gospel, is now in force, and will be to the end of the world; and Jesus, the Son of God, the brightness of the Father's glory, the Maker and Preserver of all things, the Saviour and the Judge of all men, is its mediator.

To the blood of sprinkling] This is an allusion, as was before observed, to the sprinkling of the blood of the covenant sacrifice upon the people, when that covenant was made upon Mount Sinai; to the sprinkling of the blood of the sin-offerings before the mercy-seat; and probably to the sprinkling of the blood of the paschal lamb on their houses, to prevent their destruction by the destroying angel. But all these sprinklings were partial and inefficacious, and had no meaning but as they referred to this: the blood of sprinkling under the new covenant is ever ready; all may have it applied; it continues through ages; and is the highest glory of Christianity, because by it we draw nigh to God, and through it get our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience; and, in a word, have an entrance unto the holiest by the blood of Jesus.

Better things than that of Abel.] The blood of Christ's sacrifice was infinitely more precious than Abel's sacrifice, cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear:

29 For ^dour God is a consuming fire.

^d Exod. xxiv. 17. Deut. iv. 24. ix. 3. Ps. i. 3. xciv. 3. Isa. lxvi. 15. 2 Thess. i. 8. Ch. x. 27.

as Jesus is infinitely greater than Abel; and the blood of Christ avails for the sins of the whole world, whereas the blood of Abel's sacrifice could avail only for himself.

Many have supposed that the blood of Abel means here the blood that was shed by Cain in the murder of this holy man, and that the blood of Jesus speaks better things than it does, because the blood of Abel called for vengeance, but the blood of Christ for pardon; this interpretation reflects little credit on the understanding of the apostle.

Verse 25. See] Take heed, that ye refuse not him—the Lord Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, who now speaketh from heaven, by his gospel, to the Jews and to the Gentiles, having in his incarnation come down from God.

Him that spake on earth] Moses, who spoke on the part of God to the Hebrews, every transgression of whose word received a just recompence of reward, none being permitted to escape punishment.

Verse 26. Whose voice then shook the earth] Namely, at the giving of the Law on Mount Sinai; and from this it seems that it was the voice of Jesus that then shook the earth, and that it was he who came down on the mount. But others refer this simply to God the Father giving the Law.

Not the earth only, but also heaven.] Probably referring to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, and the total abolition of the political and ecclesiastical constitution of the Jews; the one being signified by the earth, the other by heaven; for the Jewish state and worship are frequently thus termed in the prophetic writings. And this seems to be the apostle's meaning, as he evidently refers to Haggai ii. 6, where this event is predicted. It may also remotely refer to the final dissolution of all things.

Verse 27. The removing of those things that are shaken] The whole of the Jewish polity, which had been in a shaken state from the time that Judea had fallen under the power of the Romans.

As of things that are made] That is, subjects intended to last only for a time. God never designed that the Jewish religion should become general, nor be permanent.

Those things which cannot be shaken] The whole gospel system, which cannot be moved by the power of man.

May remain.] Be permanent; God designing that this shall be the last dispensation of his grace and mercy, and that it shall continue till the earth and the heavens are no more.

Verse 28. We receiving a kingdom] The gospel dispensation, frequently termed the kingdom of God and the kingdom of heaven, because in it God reigns among men, and he reigns in the hearts of them that believe, and his kingdom is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

Which cannot be moved] Which never can fail, because it is the last dispensation.

Let us have grace] Let us have, keep, or hold fast, the benefit or gift, that is, the heavenly kingdom which God has given us. This is the meaning of the word, 2 Cor. viii. 4, and is so rendered by our translators; and it is only by this heavenly gift of the gospel that we can serve God acceptably, for he can be pleased with no service that is not performed according to the gospel of his Son.

Acceptably] In such a way as to please him well.

Reverence] With shamefacedness or modesty.

Godly fear] Religious fear. We have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, but let that boldness be ever tempered with modesty and religious fear; for we should never forget that we have sinned, and that God is a consuming fire.

Verse 29. For our God is a consuming fire.] The apostle quotes Deut. iv. 24, and by doing so he teaches us this great truth, that sin under the gospel is as abominable in God's sight as it was under the Law; and that the man who does not labour to serve God with the principle and in the way already prescribed, will find that fire to consume him which would otherwise have consumed his sin.

Exhortations to hospitality to strangers, 1, 2. Kindness to those in bonds, 3. Concerning marriage, 4. Against covetousness, 5, 6. How they should imitate their teachers, 7, 8. To avoid strange doctrines, 9. Of the Jewish sin-offerings, 10, 11. Jesus suffered without the gate, and we should openly confess him and bear his reproach, 12, 13. Here we have no permanent residence; and while we live should devote ourselves to God, and live to do good, 14-16. We should obey them that have the rule over us, 17. The apostle exhorts them to pray for him, that he might be restored to them the sooner, 18, 19. Commends them to God in a very solemn prayer, 20, 21. Entreats them to bear the word of exhortation, mentions Timothy, and concludes with the apostolical benediction, 22-25.

LET ^a brotherly love continue. ² ^b Be not forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby ^c some have entertained angels unawares.

³ ^d Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body.

Verse 1. Let brotherly love continue.] Be all of one heart and one soul. Feel for, comfort, and support each other; and remember that he who professes to love God should love his brother also.

Verse 2. To entertain strangers.] In those early times, when there were scarcely any public inns or houses of entertainment, it was an office of charity and mercy to receive, lodge, and entertain travellers; and this is what the apostle particularly recommends.

Entertained angels.] Abraham and Lot are the persons particularly referred to.

Verse 3. Remember them that are in bonds.] He appears to refer to those Christians who were suffering imprisonment for the testimony of Jesus.

As bound with them.] Feel for them as you would wish others to feel for you were you in their circumstances.

Verse 4. Marriage is honourable in all.] Let this state be highly esteemed as one of God's own instituting, and as highly calculated to produce the best interest of mankind.

The bed undefiled.] Every man cleaving to his own wife, and every wife cleaving to her own husband, because God will judge, i.e., punish all fornicators and adulterers.

Verse 5. Let your conversation.] That is, the whole tenor of your conduct, the manner of your life, or rather the disposition of your hearts in reference to all your secular transactions; for in this sense the original is used by the best Greek writers.

Be without covetousness.] Desire nothing more than what God has given you; and especially covet nothing which the Divine Providence has given to another man, for this is the very spirit of robbery.

Content with such things as ye have.] Being satisfied with present things. The covetous man is ever running out into futurity with insatiable desires after secular good; and, if this disposition be not checked, it increases as the subject of it increases in years. Covetousness is the vice of old age.

I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.] These words were, in sum, spoken to Joshua, chap. i. 5; also by David to Solomon, 1 Chron. xxviii. 20. The apostle, in referring to the same promises, feels authorised to strengthen the expressions, as the Christian dispensation affords more consolation and confidence in matters of this kind than the old covenant did. The words are peculiarly emphatic.

Verse 7. Remember them which have the rule over you.] Remember your guides who have spoken unto you the doctrine of God. Theodoret's note on this verse is very judicious: "He intends the saints who were dead, Stephen the first martyr, James the brother of John, and James called the Just. And there were many others who were taken off by the Jewish rage. Consider these (said he); and, observing their example, imitate their faith."

Considering the end of their conversation.] "The issue of whose course of life most carefully consider." God never left them; no, he never forsook them; so that they were happy in their afflictions, and glorious in their death. Carefully consider this; act as they did; keep the faith, and God will keep you.

Verse 8. Jesus Christ the same yesterday.] This Jesus was thus witnessed of by your guides, who are already departed to glory. Remember HIM; remember them; and take heed to yourselves.

Verse 9. Be not carried about.] Be not whirled about. But the best MSS., Versions, and Fathers have be not carried away, which is undoubtedly the true reading, and signifies here, do not apostatize; permit not yourselves to be carried off from Christ and his doctrine.

Divers and strange doctrines.] Variegated doctrines; those that blended the law and the gospel, and brought in the Levitical sacrifices and institutions in order to perfect the Christian system.

Strange doctrines, foreign doctrines; such as have no apostolical authority to recommend them.

That the heart be established with grace.] It is well to have the heart, the mind, and conscience, fully satisfied with the truth and efficacy of the gospel; for so the word should be understood here, in opposition to meats, signifying here the Levitical institutions, and especially its sacrifices, these being emphatically termed meats, because the offerers were permitted to feast upon them after the blood had been poured out before the Lord. See Lev. vii. 15; Deut. xii. 6, 7.

Which have not profited them] Because they neither took away guilt, cleansed the heart, nor gave power over sin.

Verse 10. We have an altar] The altar is here put for the sacrifice on the altar; the Christian altar is the Christian sacrifice, which is Christ Jesus, with all the benefits of his passion and death. To these privileges they had no right who continued to offer the Levitical sacrifices, and to trust in them for remission of sins.

Verse 12. That he might sanctify the people] That he might consecrate them to God, and make an atonement for their sins, he suffered without the gate at Jerusalem, as the sin-offering was consumed without the camp, when the tabernacle abode in the wilderness. Perhaps all this was typical of the abolition of the Jewish sacrifices, and the termination of the whole Levitical system of worship. He left the city, denounced its final destruction, and abandoned it to its fate; and suffered without the gate to bring the Gentiles to God.

Verse 13. Let us go forth therefore unto him] Let us leave this city and system, devoted to destruction, and take refuge in Jesus alone, bearing his reproach—being willing to be accounted the refuse of all things, and the worst of men, for his sake who bore the contradiction of sinners against himself, and was put to death as a malefactor.

Verse 14. For here have we no continuing city] Here is an elegant and forcible allusion to the approaching destruction of Jerusalem. The Jerusalem that was below was about to be burnt with fire, and rased to the ground; the Jerusalem that was from above was that alone which could be considered to be permanent.

Verse 15. By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise] He has now fulfilled all vision and prophecy, has offered the last bloody sacrifice which God will ever accept; and, as he is the gift of God's love to the world, let us through him offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, this being the substitute for all the Levitical sacrifices.

Verse 16. But to do good and to communicate] Praise, prayer, and thanksgiving to God, with works of charity and mercy to man, are the sacrifices which every genuine follower of Christ must offer: and they are the proofs that a man belongs to Christ; and he who does not bear these fruits gives full evidence, whatever his creed may be, that he is no Christian.

Verse 17. Obey them that have the rule over you] Obey your leaders. He is not fit to rule who is not capable of guiding. See on ver. 7.

Verse 18. Pray for us] Even the success of apostles depended, in a certain way, on the prayers of the church. Few Christian congregations feel, as they ought, that it is their bounden duty to pray for the success of the gospel, both among themselves and in the world. The church is weak, dark, poor, and imperfect, because it prays little.

We trust we have a good conscience] We are persuaded that we have a conscience that not only acquits us of all fraud and sinister design, but assures us that in simplicity and godly sincerity we have laboured to promote the welfare of you and of all mankind.

To live honestly.] Willing in all things to conduct ourselves well—to behave with decency and propriety.

Verse 19. The rather to do this] That is, Pray for us, that, being enabled to complete the work which God has given us here to do, we may be the sooner enabled to visit you.

Verse 20. Now the God of peace] We have often seen that peace among the Hebrews signifies prosperity of every kind.

Brought again from the dead our Lord] The raising of Christ is, with the utmost propriety, attributed to God the Father, as this proves his acceptance of the sacrificial offering.

That great Shepherd of the sheep] This is a title of our blessed Lord, given to him by the prophets; so Isa. xl. 11; Ezek. xxxiv. 23. Our blessed Lord appropriates it to himself, John x. 11, by calling himself the good Shepherd who lays down his life for the sheep.

Through the blood of the everlasting covenant] The sense, however, will appear much plainer if we connect this with the following verse: "Now the God of peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep, make you, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, perfect in every good work to do his will." The Christian system is termed the everlasting covenant, to distinguish it from the temporary covenant made with the Israelites at Mount Sinai; and to show that it is the last dispensation of grace to the world, and shall endure to the end of time.

Verse 21. Make you perfect] Put you completely in joint. See the note on 2 Cor. xiii. 9, where the meaning of the original word is largely considered. From the following terms we see what the apostle meant by the perfection for which he prays. They were to do the will of God in every good work, from God working in them that which is well pleasing in his sight. 1. This necessarily implies a complete change in the whole soul, that God may be well pleased with whatsoever he sees in it; and this supposes its being cleansed from all sin, for God's sight cannot be pleased with any thing that is unholty. 2. This complete inward purity is to produce an outward conformity to God's will, so they were to be made perfect in every good work. 3. The perfection within and the perfection without were to be produced by the blood of the everlasting covenant; for although God is love, yet it is not consistent with his justice or holiness to communicate any good to mankind but through his Son, and through him as having died for the offences of the human race.

To whom be glory for ever] As God does all in, by, and through Christ Jesus, to him be the honour of his own work ascribed through time and eternity. Amen.

Verse 22. Suffer the word of exhortation] Bear the word or doctrine of this exhortation. This seems to be an epithet of this whole epistle.

I have written a letter unto you in few words] Perhaps it would be better to translate I have written to you briefly.

Verse 23. Is set at liberty] Is sent away; for there is no evidence that Timothy had been imprisoned. It is probable that the apostle refers here to his being sent into Macedonia, Phil. ii. 19-24, in order that he might bring the apostle an account of the affairs of the church in that country. In none of St. Paul's epistles, written during his confinement in Rome, does he give any intimation of Timothy's imprisonment, although it appears from Phil. i. 1, Col. i. 1, and Phil. 1, that he was with Paul during the greatest part of the time.

With whom, if he come shortly, I will see you] Therefore Paul himself, or the writer of this epistle, was now at liberty, as he had the disposal of his person and time in his own power. Some suppose that Timothy did actually visit Paul about this time, and that both together visited the Churches in Judea.

Verse 24. Salute all them that have the rule over you] Salute all your leaders or guides. See on verses 7 and 17.

And all the saints] All the Christians; for this is the general meaning of the term in most parts of St. Paul's writings. But a Christian was then a saint, i.e., by profession a holy person; and most of the primitive Christians were actually such. But in process of time the term was applied to all that bore the Christian name; as elect, holy people, sanctified, &c., were to the nation of the Jews, when both their piety and morality were at a very low ebb.

They of Italy salute you] By they of Italy probably the apostle means the Jews there who had embraced the Christian faith. These salutations show what a brotherly feeling existed in every part of the Christian Church; even those who had not seen each other yet loved one another, and felt deeply interested for each other's welfare.

The Editor has much pleasure in subjoining the following note on the Eternal Sonship controversy, from the pen of the Rev. Thomas Jackson, late Theological Tutor at the Wesleyan College, Richmond.

"Having given a critical exposition of the terms which are applied to our blessed Lord in Heb. i. 3, Dr. Adam Clarke deduces from them the following theological conclusions:—

"From those words it is evident,

"1. That the apostle states Jesus Christ to be [the term which the apostle uses is the SON] of the same essence with the Father, as the apausma or proceeding splendour must be the same with the augasma or inherent splendour.

"2. That Christ [the SON], though proceeding from the Father, is of the same essence; for if one auge or splendour produce another auge or splendour, the produced splendour must be of the same essence with that which produces it.

"3. That although Christ [the SON] is thus of the same essence with the Father, yet he is a distinct Person from the Father; as the splendour of the sun, though of the same essence, is distinct from the sun itself, though each is essential to the other; as the augasma or inherent splendour cannot subsist without its proceeding splendour, nor the proceeding splendour subsist without the inherent splendour from which it proceeds.

"4. That Christ [the SON] is eternal with the Father, as the proceeding splendour must necessarily be co-existent with the inherent splendour. If the one therefore be uncreated, the other is uncreated; if the one be eternal, the other is eternal."

Here then we have the very doctrine which the Catholic Church has ever held concerning the Divinity of the Son of God, although the terms in which it is expressed are somewhat peculiar. The Doctor explains this important text as referring to the Divine Nature of our blessed Lord; yet he drops the name of SON, which the apostle uses, and which is expressive of nature, and he adopts the title of "Jesus Christ," which is not a title of nature, but of office. He declines to mention the "generation" of the Son; yet he speaks of our Saviour, even with regard to his Godhead, as "proceeding" from the Father; and he describes this "proceeding" as analogous to the emanation of "splendour" from the sun. He speaks of the First and Second Persons of the Holy Trinity under the names of "Inherent Splendour," and "Proceeding Splendour;" and he contends that in respect of essence they are identical, and that both are alike eternal. If these words mean anything, they mean that "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is an Eternal Father;" and that our Lord Jesus Christ is an "Eternal Son;" "God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God, begotten not made, being of one substance with the Father." We decidedly prefer the phraseology of the ancient and modern creeds, to that which the Doctor has chosen to employ, especially when they speak of our blessed Lord as "the only begotten Son of God," because such phraseology is scriptural, and more intelligible than the terms "Inherent Splendour," and "Proceeding Splendour," when applied to the Divine Nature, which are not to be literally but analogically understood, as are also the terms Father and Son; yet we accept his doctrine as it is here propounded, and rejoice to find Dr. Adam Clarke avowing his belief of that which in an unguarded hour he denominated the "awful heresy of Arianism," but which is an essential element of revealed truth, among the advocates of which he here takes his place: for "Inherent Splendour" and "Proceeding Splendour" convey the same idea as the terms Father and Son; they denote that one is an emanation from the other. Great is truth, and in honest minds it will prevail in spite of theory. Dr. Clarke refutes his own reasoning concerning the Sonship of our blessed Saviour, and takes his place among the advocates of the Nicene Faith; and we hail his admission into that honourable fraternity with a hearty cheer; for, with all his eccentricities, he was a true man, both great and good."

THIS epistle, with those of Peter, John, and Jude, is termed Catholic, for the application of which term Œcumenius gives the following reason: "These epistles are called Catholic, universal, or circular, because they were not written to one nation or city, but to believers everywhere." Yet, as these epistles had some difficulty at first to get into general circulation, but at last were everywhere received, it is more likely that they obtained the term Catholic from the circumstance of their being at last universally acknowledged as canonical; so that the word Catholic is to be understood here in the same sense as canonical.

Who the writer of the epistle in question was, it is difficult to say; all that we know certainly is, from his own words, that his name was James, and that he was a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus. Two persons of this name are mentioned in the New Testament; James the son of Zebedee, called also James the elder; and James the less or the little one, called the son of Alphaeus, and brother of our Lord: but whether one of these, or, if one of them, which, or whether one of the same name different from both, are points that cannot be satisfactorily determined. Michaelis, who has examined the subject with his usual ability, leaves the matter in doubt; but leans to the opinion that James the son of Zebedee was the author, and that this epistle was written before any of those in the New Testament. Other great authorities ascribe it to James, called the brother of our Lord, who was President or Bishop of the Church in Jerusalem.

That James the Less may have been our Lord's cousin-german, or even our Lord's brother by a former wife of Joseph, or even by the Virgin, is perfectly possible; and that he was an apostle, and an eminent man among both Jews and Christians, may be readily credited; and that he was author of this epistle, is also possible: but we have neither decisive nor satisfactory evidence on this subject. The chief and proper evidence of the canonicity of the epistle must be taken from the fact that it was universally received by the Church of Christ, and without scruple incorporated with those writings, which were, on all hands, allowed to have been given by the inspiration of God.

The epistle itself is entirely different in its complexion from all those in the sacred canon; the style and manner are more that of a Jewish prophet than a Christian apostle. It scarcely touches on any subject purely Christian. Our blessed Lord is only mentioned twice in it, chap. i. 1, ii. 1; but it has nothing of his miracles or teaching, of his death or resurrection, nor of any redemption by him. It begins without any apostolical salutation, and ends without any apostolical benediction. In short, had it not been for the two slight notices of our blessed Lord, we had not known that this was the work of any Christian writer. It may be considered a sort of connecting link between Judaism and Christianity, as the ministry of John Baptist was between the Old Covenant and the New. There is neither plan nor arrangement in it; but it contains many invaluable lessons which no serious person can read without profit.

James the Less was martyred at Jerusalem about A.D. 62; and the epistle is supposed to have been written a short time before his death. I however believe it to be the work of an unknown author, not long after the ascension of our Lord.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE

OF

CHAPTER I.

He addresses the dispersed of the twelve tribes, 1. Shows that they should rejoice under the cross, because of the spiritual good which they may derive from it; especially in the increase and perfecting of their patience, 2-4. They are exhorted to ask wisdom of God, who gives liberally to all, 5. But they must ask in faith, and not with a doubting mind, 6-8. Directions to the rich and the poor, 9-11. The blessedness of the man that endures trials, 12. How men are tempted and drawn away from God, 13-15. God is the Father of lights, and all good proceeds from him, 16-18. Cautions against hasty words and wrong tempers, 19-21. We should be doers of the word, and not hearers merely, lest we resemble those who, beholding their natural face in a glass, when it is removed forget what manner of persons they were, 22-24. We should look into the perfect law of liberty, and continue therein, 25. The nature and properties of pure religion, 26, 27.

JAMES, ^a a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, ^c to the twelve tribes ^d which are scattered abroad, greeting.

2 My brethren, ^e count it all joy ^f when ye fall into divers temptations;

3 ^g Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience.

4 But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

5 ^h If any of you lack wisdom, ⁱ let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and ^j it shall be given him.

6 ^k But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.

7 For let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord.

8 ^l A double minded man is unstable in all his ways.

9 Let the brother of low degree ^m rejoice in that he is exalted:

10 But the rich, in that he is made low: because ⁿ as the flower of the grass he shall pass away.

11 For the sun is no sooner risen with a burning

Verse 1. James, a servant of God] He neither calls himself an apostle, nor does he say that he was the brother of Christ, or bishop of Jerusalem; whether he was James the Elder, son of Zebedee, or James the Less, called our Lord's brother, or some other person of the same name, we know not. The assertions of writers concerning these points are worthy of no regard. The church has always received him as an apostle of Christ.

To the twelve tribes—scattered abroad] To the Jews, whether converted to Christianity or not, who lived out of Judea, and sojourned among the Gentiles for the purpose of trade or commerce. At this time there were Jews partly travelling, partly sojourning, and partly resident in most parts of the civilized world; particularly in Asia, Greece, Egypt, and Italy. I see no reason for restricting it to Jewish believers only; it was sent to all whom it might concern, but particularly to those who had received the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ; much less must we confine it to those who were scattered abroad at the persecution raised concerning Stephen, Acts viii. 1, &c.; xi. 19, &c. The Jews of the dispersion were more numerous than even the Jews in Judea, and James very properly inscribed this letter to the twelve tribes which were in the dispersion, seeing the twelve tribes really existed then, and do still exist, although not distinguished by separate habitations, as they were anciently in their own land.

Greeting.] Health; a mere expression of benevolence, a wish for their prosperity; a common form of salutation. See Acts xv. 23, xxiii. 26; 2 John ver. 11.

Verse 2. Count it all joy] The word which we translate temptation, signifies affliction, persecution, or trial of any kind; and in this sense it is used here, not intending diabolic suggestion, or what is generally understood by the word temptation.

Verse 3. The trying of your faith] Trials put religion, and all the graces of which it is composed, to proof; the man heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth, and the grace of the fashion of it perisheth; so also shall the rich man fade away in his ways.

12 Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive ^b the crown of life, ^c which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.

13 Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with ^d evil, neither tempteth he any man.

14 But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed.

^a Job v. 17. Prov. iii. 11, 12. Heb. xii. 5. Rev. iii. 19.—^b 1 Cor. ix. 25. 2 Tim. iv. 8. Ch. ii. 5. 1 Pet. v. 4. Rev. ii. 10.—^c Matt. x. 22. xix. 28, 29. Ch. ii. 6.—^d Or, evils.—^e Job xv. 35. Ps. vii. 14.—^f Rom. vi. 21, 23.—^g John iii. 27. 1 Cor. iv. 7.—

that stands in such trials gives proof that his religion is sound, and the evidence afforded to his own mind induces him to take courage, bear patiently, and persevere.

Verse 4. Let patience have her perfect work] That is, Continue faithful, and your patience will be crowned with its full reward; for in this sense is the word which we translate work to be understood. It is any effect produced by a cause, as interest from money, fruit from tillage, gain from labour, a reward for services performed; the perfect work is the full reward.

That ye may be perfect and entire] Fully instructed in every part of the doctrine of God, and in his whole will concerning you. Entire, having all your parts, members, and portions; that you may have every grace which constitutes the mind that was in Christ, so that your knowledge and holiness may be complete, and bear a proper proportion to each other. I think the expressions are borrowed from the sacrifices under the law. A victim was perfect, that was perfectly sound, having no disease; it was entire, if it had all its members, having nothing redundant, nothing deficient.

Verse 5. If any of you lack wisdom] Wisdom signifies in general knowledge of the best end, and the best means of attaining it; but in scripture it signifies the same as true religion, the thorough practical knowledge of God, of one's self, and of a Saviour.

Let him ask of God] Because God is the only teacher of this wisdom.

That giveth to all men liberally] Who has all good, and gives all necessary good to every one—that asks fervently. He who does not ask thus does not feel his need of divine teaching.

Verse 6. Let him ask in faith] Believing that God is; that he has all good; and that he is ever ready to impart to his creatures whatever they need.

Nothing wavering] Not judging otherwise; having no doubt concerning the truth of those grand and fundamental principles, never supposing that God will permit him to ask in vain, when he asks sincerely and fervently.

Is like a wave of the sea] He is in a state of continual agitation; driven by the wind, and tossed; now rising by hope, then sinking by despair.

Verse 7. Let not that man think] Such persons may pray, but having no faith, they can get no answer.

Verse 8. A double minded man] The man of two souls, who has one for earth, and another for heaven; who wishes to secure both worlds; he will not give up earth, and he is loth to let heaven go. This was a usual term among the Jews, to express the man who attempted to worship God, and yet retained the love of the creature. Perhaps St. James refers to those Jews who were endeavouring to incorporate the law with the gospel, who were divided in their minds and affections, not willing to give up the Levitical rites, and yet unwilling to renounce the gospel. Such persons could make no progress in divine things.

Verse 9. Let the brother of low degree] The poor, destitute Christian, may glory in the cross of Christ, and the blessed hope laid up for him in heaven; for, being a child of God, he is an heir of God, and a joint-heir with Christ.

Verse 10. But the rich, in that he is made low] In his humiliation—in his being brought to the foot of the cross to receive, as a poor and miserable sinner, redemption through the blood of the cross; and especially let him rejoice in this,

15 Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, ^a bringeth forth death.

16 Do not err, my beloved brethren.

17 Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, ^b with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

18 Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, ^c that we should be a kind of ^d first-fruits of his creatures.

19 Wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear, ^e slow to speak, ^f slow to wrath:

^b Num. xxiii. 19. 1 Sam. xv. 29. Mal. iii. 6. Rom. xi. 29.—^c John i. 13. iii. 9. 1 Cor. iv. 15. 1 Pet. i. 23.—^d Eph. ii. 12.—^e Jer. ii. 3. Rev. xiv. 4.—^f Eccles. v. 1.—^g Prov. x. 19. xvii. 27. Eccles. v. 2.—^h Prov. xiv. 17. xvi. 32. Eccles. vii. 9.

because all outward glory is only as the flower of the field, and like that, will wither and perish.

Verse 11. For the sun is no sooner risen] All human things are transitory; rise and fall, or increase and decay, belong to all the productions of the earth, and to all its inhabitants. This is unavoidable, for in many cases the very cause of their growth becomes the cause of their decay and destruction.

Verse 12. Blessed is the man that endureth temptation] This is a mere Jewish sentiment, and on it the Jews speak some excellent things. Every man is in this life in a state of temptation or trial, and in this state he is a candidate for another and a better world; he that stands in his trial shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him. It is only love to God that can enable a man to endure the trials of life. Love feels no loads; all practicable things are possible to him who loveth.

There may be an allusion here to the contests in the Grecian Games. He is crowned who conquers, and none else.

Verse 13. Let no man say] Lest the former sentiment should be misapplied, as the word temptation has two grand meanings, solicitation to sin, and trial from providential situation or circumstances, James, taking up the word in the former sense, after having used it in the latter, says: Let no man say, when he is tempted (solicited to sin), I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he (thus) any man. Thus the author has explained and guarded his meaning.

Verse 14. But every man is tempted] Successfully solicited to sin, when he is drawn away of his own lust—when, giving way to the evil propensity of his own heart, he does that which he is solicited by the enemy of his soul.

Verse 15. When lust hath conceived] When the evil propensity works unchecked, it bringeth forth sin—the evil act between the parties is perpetrated.

And sin, when it is finished] When this breach of the law of God and of innocence has been a sufficient time completed, it bringeth forth death—the spurious offspring is the fruit of the criminal connexion, and the evidence of that death or punishment due to the transgressors.

Sin is a small matter in its commencement; but by indulgence it grows great, and multiplies itself beyond all calculation. To use a Rabbinical metaphor it is, in the commencement, like the thread of a spider's web—almost imperceptible through its extreme tenuity or fineness, and as easily broken, for it is as yet but a simple irregular imagination; afterwards it becomes like a cart-ropes—it has, by being indulged, produced strong desire and delight; next consent; then, time, place, and opportunity serving, that which was conceived in the mind, and finished in the purpose, is consummated by act.

Verse 16. Do not err] By supposing that God is the author of sin, or that he impels any man to commit it.

Verse 17. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above] Whatever is good is from God; whatever is evil is from man himself. As from the sun, which is the father or fountain of light, all light comes; so from God, who is the infinite Fountain, Father, and Source of good, all good comes. And whatever can be called good, or pure, or light, or excellence of any kind, must necessarily spring from him, as he is the only source of all goodness and perfection.

With whom is no variableness] He is never affected

20 For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God.

21 Wherefore, ^a lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, ^b which is able to save your souls.

22 But ^c be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves.

23 For ^d if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass:

24 For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and

^a Col. iii. 8. 1 Pet. ii. 1.—^b Acts xiii. 26. Rom. i. 16. 1 Cor. xv. 2. Eph. i. 13. Tit. ii. 11. Heb. ii. 3. 1 Pet. i. 9.—^c Matt. vii. 21. Luke vi. 46. xi. 28. Rom. ii. 13. 1 John iii. 7.—^d Luke vi. 47, &c.

by the changes and chances to which mortal things are exposed. He occupies no one place in the universe; he fills the heavens and the earth, is every where present, sees all, pervades all, and shines upon all; dispenses his blessings equally to the universe; hates nothing that he has made; is loving to every man; and his tender mercies are over all his work: therefore he is not affected with evil, nor does he tempt, or influence to sin, any man.

Verse 18. Of his own will begat he us] God's will here is opposed to the lust of man, ver. 15; his truth, the means of human salvation, to the sinful means referred to in the above verse; and the new creatures, to the sin conceived and brought forth, as above. As the will of God is essentially good, all its productions must be good also; as it is infinitely pure, all its productions must be holy. The word or doctrine of truth, what St. Paul calls the word of the truth of the gospel, Col. i. 5, is the means which God uses to convert souls.

A kind of first-fruits] By creatures we are here to understand the Gentiles, and by first-fruits the Jews, to whom the gospel was first sent; and those of them that believed were the first-fruits of that astonishing harvest which God has since reaped over the whole Gentile world.

Verse 19. Swift to hear] Talk little and work much, is a Rabbinical adage.

Slow to wrath] Those who are hasty in speech are generally of a peevish or angry disposition. A person who is careful to consider what he says is not likely to be soon angry.

Verse 20. The wrath of man] A furious zeal in matters of religion is detestable in the sight of God; he will have no sacrifice that is not consumed by fire from his own altar.

Verse 21. All filthiness] This word signifies any impurity that cleaves to the body; but applied to the mind, it implies all impure and unholy affections, such as those spoken of, ver. 15, which pollute the soul; in this sense it is used by the best Greek writers.

The engrafted word] That doctrine which has already been planted among you, which has brought forth fruit in all them that have meekly and humbly received it, and is as powerful to save your souls as the souls of those who have already believed.

Verse 22. But be ye doers of the word] They had heard this doctrine; they had believed it; but they had put it to no practical use. They were downright Antinomians, who put a sort of stupid, inactive faith, in the place of all moral righteousness.

Deceiving your own selves] Imposing on your own selves by sophistical arguments; this is the meaning of the words. They had reasoned themselves into a state of carnal security, and the object of St. James is to awake them out of their sleep.

Verse 23. Beholding his natural face in a glass] This metaphor is very simple, but very expressive. The doctrines of God, faithfully preached, are a mirror; he who hears cannot help discovering his own character, and being affected with his own deformity; he sorroweth, and purposes amendment; but when the preaching is over, the mirror is removed, and not being careful to examine the records of his salvation, the perfect law of liberty, ver. 25, or not continuing to look therein, he soon forgets what manner of man he was; or, reposing some unscriptural trust in God's mercy, he reasons himself out of the necessity of repentance and amendment of life, and thus deceives his soul.

straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was.

25 But ^a whoso looketh into the perfect ^b law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, ^c this man shall be blessed in his ^d deed.

26 If any man among you seem to be religious, and ^e bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain.

27 Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father is this, ^f To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, ^g and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

See ch. ii. 14, &c.—^a 2 Cor. iii. 18.—^b Ch. ii. 12.—^c John xiii. 17.—^d Or, doing.—^e Ps. xxxiv. 13. xxxix. 1. 1 Pet. iii. 10.—^f Isa. i. 16, 17. lviii. 6, 7. Matt. xxv. 38.—^g Rom. xii. 2. Ch. iv. 4. 1 John v. 13.

Verse 25. But whoso looketh into the perfect law] The word which we translate looketh into is very emphatic, and signifies that deep and attentive consideration given to a thing or subject which a man cannot bring up to his eyes, and therefore must bend his back and neck, stooping down, that he may see it to the greater advantage. The law of liberty must mean the gospel; it is a law, for it imposes obligations from God, and prescribes a rule of life; and it punishes transgressors, and rewards the obedient. It is, nevertheless, a law that gives liberty from the guilt, power, dominion, and influence of sin; and it is perfect, providing a fulness of salvation for the soul; in opposition to the law, which was a system of types and representations, of which the gospel is the sum and substance. Some think that the word perfect is added here to signify that the whole of the gospel must be considered and received, not a part; all its threatenings with its promises, all its precepts with its privileges.

And continueth] Takes time to see and examine the state of his soul, the grace of his God, the extent of his duty, and the height of the promised glory. The metaphor here is taken from those females who spend much time at their glass, in order that they may decorate themselves to the greatest advantage, and not leave one hair, or the smallest ornament, out of its place.

He being not a forgetful hearer] This seems to be a reference to Deut. iv. 9.

Shall be blessed in his deed] As the path of duty is the way of safety, so it is the way of happiness; he who obeys God from a loving heart and pure conscience, will infallibly find continual blessedness.

Verse 26. Seem to be religious] The words which we translate religious and religion, are of very uncertain etymology. Whatever their derivation may be, the words are used both to signify true religion, and superstition or heterodoxy.

Bridleth not his tongue] He who speaks not according to the oracles of God, whatever pretences he makes to religion, only shows, by his want of spiritual knowledge, that his religion is false, or empty of solid truth, profit to others, and good to himself. Such a person should bridle his tongue, put the bit in his mouth; and particularly if he be a professed teacher of religion; no matter where he has studied, or what else he has learned, if he have not learned religion, he can never teach it.

Verse 27. Pure religion, and undefiled] St. James's definition rather refers to the effects of pure religion than to its nature. The life of God in the soul of man, producing love to God and man, will show itself in the acts which St. James mentions here. It is pure in the principle, for it is divine truth and divine love. It is undefiled in all its operations: it can produce nothing unholy, because it ever acts in the sight of God; and it can produce no ungentle word nor unkind act, because it comes from the Father.

The words pure and undefiled, are supposed to have reference to a diamond or precious stone, whose perfection consists in its being free from flaws; not cloudy, but of a pure water. True religion is the ornament of the soul, and its effects, the ornament of the life.

To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction] Works of charity and mercy are the proper fruits of religion; and none are more especially the objects of charity and mercy than the orphans and widows. False religion may perform acts of mercy and charity; but its motives not being pure, and its principles being defiled, the flesh, self, and hypocrisy, spot the man, and spot his acts. True religion does not merely give something for the relief of the distressed, but it visits them, it takes the oversight of them, it takes them under its care; so the word means. It goes to their houses, and speaks to their hearts; it relieves their wants, sympathizes with them in their distresses, instructs them in divine things, and recommends them to God. And all this it does for the Lord's sake. This is the religion of Christ. The religion that does not prove itself by works of charity and mercy is not of God.

CHAPTER II.

We should not prefer the rich to the poor, nor show any partiality inconsistent with the gospel of Christ, 1-4. God has chosen the poor, rich in faith, to be heirs of his kingdom, even those whom some among their brethren despised and oppressed, 5, 6. They should love their neighbour as themselves, and have no respect of persons, 7-9. He who breaks one command of God is guilty of the whole, 10, 11. They should act as those who shall be judged by the law of liberty; and he shall have judgment without mercy, who shows no mercy, 12, 13. Faith without works of charity and mercy is dead; nor can it exist where there are no good works, 14-20. Abraham proved his faith by his works, 21-24. And so did Rahab, 25. As the body without the soul is dead, so is faith without good works, 26.

MY brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, ^a the Lord of glory, with ^b respect of persons.

2 For if there come unto your ^c assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel; and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment;

3 And ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here ^d in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool:

4 Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of evil thoughts?

^a 1 Cor. ii. 8.—^b Lev. xix. 15. Deut. i. 17. xvi. 19. Prov. xxiv. 23. xxviii. 21. Matt. xxii. 16. Ver. 9. Jude 16.—^c Gr. synagogue.—^d Or, well, or, seemly.—^e John vii. 48. 1 Cor. i. 26, 28.—^f Luke xii. 21. 1 Tim. vi. 18. Rev. ii. 9.—^g Or, that.—^h Exod. xx. 6

Verse 1. My brethren, have not] This verse should be read interrogatively: My brethren, do ye not make profession of the faith or religion of our glorious Lord Jesus Christ with acceptance of persons? That is, preferring the rich to the poor merely because of their riches, and not on account of any moral excellence, personal piety, or public usefulness. Faith is put here for religion; and of glory, should, according to some critics, be construed with it as the Syriac and Coptic have done.

Verse 2. If there come unto your assembly] Into the synagogue. Our word assembly does not express the original; and we cannot suppose that these synagogues were at this time occupied with Christian worship, but that the Christian Jews continued to frequent them for the purpose of hearing the law and the prophets read, as they had formerly done, previously to their conversion to the Christian faith. But St. James may refer here to proceedings in a court of justice.

With a gold ring, in goodly apparel] The ring on the finger and the splendid garb were proofs of the man's opulence; and his ring and his coat, not his worth, moral good qualities, or the righteousness of his cause, procured him the respect of which St. James speaks.

There come in also a poor man] It is probable that the case here adduced was one of the judicial kind, where, of the two parties, one was rich and the other poor; and the master or ruler of the synagogue, or he who presided in this court, paid particular deference to the rich man, and neglected the poor man; though, as plaintiff and defendant, they were equal in the eye of justice, and should have been considered so by an impartial judge.

Verse 3. Sit here under my footstool] Thus evidently pre-

5 Harken, my beloved brethren, ^e Hath not God chosen the poor of this world ^f rich in faith, and heirs ^g of the kingdom ^h which he hath promised to them that love him?

6 But ⁱ ye have despised the poor. Do not rich men oppress you, ^j and draw you before the judgment-seats?

7 Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?

8 If ye fulfil the royal law, according to the scripture, ^k Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, ye do well;

judging the cause, and giving the poor man to see that he was to expect no impartial administration of justice in his cause.

Verse 4. Are ye not then partial] Do ye not make a distinction, though the case has not been heard, and the law has not decided?

Judges of evil thoughts?] Judges of evil reasonings: that is, judges who reason wickedly; who, in effect, say in your hearts, we will espouse the case of the rich, because they can befriend us; we will neglect that of the poor, because they cannot help us, nor have they power to hurt us.

Verse 5. Hath not God chosen the poor of this world] This seems to refer to Matt. xi. 5: And the poor have the gospel preached to them. These believed on the Lord Jesus, and found his salvation; while the rich despised, neglected, and persecuted him.

Verse 6. Do not rich men oppress you] The original words, which may be rendered exceedingly oppress, and drag you to courts of justice, show how grievously oppressed and maltreated the Christians were by their countrymen the Jews, who made law a pretext to afflict their bodies and spoil them of their property.

Verse 7. Blaspheme that worthy name] They took every occasion to asperse the Christian name and the Christian faith, and have been, from the beginning to the present day, famous for their blasphemies against Christ and his religion.

Verse 8. The royal law] This epithet, of all the New Testament writers, is peculiar to James; but it is frequent among the Greek writers in the sense in which it appears St. James uses it. It is used to signify anything that is of general concern, is suitable to all, and necessary for all, as 9 But ^a if ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convinced of the law as transgressors.

11 For ^c he that said, ^d Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law.

12 So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by ^e the law of liberty.

13 For ^f he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and ^g mercy ^h rejoiceth against judgment.

brotherly love is. [It is the royal law because it is the king, the chief of laws.]

Verse 9. But if ye have respect to persons] In judgment, or in any other way; ye commit sin against God, and against your brethren, and are convicted by law; by this royal law, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself; as transgressors, having shown this sinful acceptance of persons, which has led you to refuse justice to the poor man, and uphold the rich in his oppressive conduct.

Verse 10. For whosoever shall keep the whole law, &c.] This is a rabbinical form of speech. The truth is, any sin is against the divine authority; and he who has committed one transgression is guilty of death; and by his one deliberate act, dissolves, as far as he can, the sacred connexion that subsists between all the divine precepts and the obligations which he is under to obey, and then casts off, in effect, his allegiance to God. For, if God should be obeyed in any one instance, he should be obeyed in all, as the authority and reason of obedience are the same in every case; he therefore who breaks one of these laws is, in effect, if not in fact, guilty of the whole.

Verse 11. For he that said] That is, The authority that gave one commandment gave also the rest; and he who breaks one resists this authority; so that the breach of any one commandment may be justly considered a breach of the whole law.

Verse 12. So speak ye, and so do] Have respect to every commandment of God, for this is the law of liberty—the gospel of Jesus Christ, particularly requires; and this is the law by which all mankind, who have had the opportunity of knowing it, shall be judged. But all along St. James particularly refers to the precept, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

Verse 13. For he shall have judgment] He who shows no mercy to man, or, in other words, he who does not exercise himself in works of charity and mercy to his needy fellow-creatures, shall receive no mercy at the hand of God; for he hath said, Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. The unmerciful therefore are cursed, and they shall obtain no mercy.

Mercy rejoiceth against judgment.] In the MSS. and Versions there is a considerable variety of readings on this verse. The Spirit of the saying may be found in another scripture, I will have mercy and not sacrifice—I prefer works of charity and mercy to everything else, and especially to all acts of worship. The ROYAL LAW, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, should particularly prevail among men, because of the miserable state to which all are reduced by sin, so that each particularly needs the help of his brother.

Verse 14. What doth it profit—though a man say he hath faith] It has been thought that James teaches the doctrine of justification by the merit of good works, while Paul asserts this to be insufficient, and that man is justified by faith. Learned men have spent much time in striving to reconcile these two writers, and to show that St. Paul and St. James perfectly accord; one teaching the pure doctrine, the other guarding men against the abuse of it. Mr. Wesley sums the whole up in the following words, with his usual accuracy and precision: "From chap. i. 22, the apostle has been en-

17 Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being ^l alone.

18 Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith ^m without thy works, ⁿ and I will shew thee my faith by my works.

20 But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?

forcing Christian practice. He now applies to those who neglect this under the pretence of faith. St. Paul had taught that a man is justified by faith without the works of the law. This some already began to wrest to their own destruction. Wherefore St. James, purposely repeating, ver. 21, 23, 25, the same phrases, testimonies, and examples which St. Paul had used, Rom. iv. 3, Heb. xi. 17, 31, refutes not the doctrine of St. Paul, but the error of those who abused it. There is therefore no contradiction between the apostles; they both delivered the truth of God, but in a different manner, as having to do with different kinds of men."

The Jews in general were very strenuous in maintaining the necessity of good works or righteousness, in order to justification, wholly neglecting the doctrine of faith; hence it is not to be wondered at that those who were converted, and saw the absolute necessity of faith in order to their justification, should have gone into the contrary extreme.

Can faith save him?] That is, his profession of faith; for it is not said that he has faith, but that he says, I have faith. St. James probably refers to that faith which simply took in the being and unity of God.

Verse 15. If a brother or sister be naked] That is, ill-clothed; for naked, has this meaning in several parts of the New Testament, signifying bad clothing, or the want of some particular article of dress.

Verse 16. Be ye warmed and filled] Your saying so to them, while you give them nothing, will just profit them as much as your professed faith, without those works, which are the genuine fruits of true faith, will profit you in the day when God comes to sit in judgment upon your soul.

Verse 17. If it hath not works, is dead] The faith that does not produce works of charity and mercy is without the living principle which animates all true faith, that is, love to God and love to man.

Verse 18. Shew me thy faith without thy works] Your pretending to have faith, while you have no works of charity or mercy, is utterly vain: for as faith, which is a principle in the mind, cannot be discerned but by the effects, that is, good works; he who has no good works has, presumptively, no faith.

I will shew thee my faith by my works.] My works of charity and mercy will show that I have faith; and that it is the living tree, whose root is love to God and man, and whose fruit is the good works here contended for.

Verse 19. Thou believest that there is one God] This is the faith in which these persons put their hope of pleasing God, and of obtaining eternal life. Believing in the being and unity of God distinguished them from all the nations of the world; and having been circumcised, and thus brought into the covenant, they thought themselves secure of salvation. The insufficiency of this St. James sufficiently shows.

The devils also believe, and tremble.] Even the devils believe there is one only true God; this truth universal nature proclaims. But far from justifying or saving them, it leaves them in their damned state, and every act of it only increases their torment; they shudder with horror, they believe and tremble, are increasingly tormented; but they can neither love nor obey.

works, * when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar?

22 ^b Seest thou ^c how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?

23 And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, ^d Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called ^e the Friend of God.

* Gen. xxii. 9, 12.—^b Or, Thou seest.—^c Heb. xi. 17.—
^d Gen. xv. 6. Rom. iv. 3. Gal. iii. 6.

Verse 20. But wilt thou know] Art thou willing to be instructed in the nature of true saving faith? Then attend to the following examples.

Verse 21. Was not Abraham our father] Did not the conduct of Abraham, in offering up his son Isaac on the altar, sufficiently prove that he believed in God, and that it was his faith in him that led him to this extraordinary act of obedience?

Verse 22. Seest thou how faith wrought] Here is a proof that faith cannot exist without being active in works of righteousness. His faith in God would have been of no avail to him, had it not been manifested by works; for by works—by his obedience to the commands of God, his faith was made perfect—it dictated obedience, he obeyed; and thus faith had its consummation. Even true faith will soon die, if its possessor do not live in the spirit of obedience.

Verse 23. The Friend of God.] The highest character ever given to man. As among friends everything is in common; so God took Abraham into intimate communion with himself, and poured out upon him the choicest of his blessings; for as God can never be in want because he possesses all things; so Abraham his friend could never be destitute, because God was his friend.

Verse 24. Ye see then how] It is evident from this ex-

24 Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.

25 Likewise also ^a was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way?

26 For as the body without the ^a spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

ample that Abraham's faith was not merely believing that there is a God, but a principle that led him to credit God's promises relative to the future Redeemer, and to implore God's mercy: this he received, and was justified by faith. His faith now began to work by love, and therefore he was found ever obedient to the will of his Maker. He brought forth the fruits of righteousness; and his works justified—proved the genuineness of, his faith; and he continued to enjoy the divine approbation, which he could not have done had he not been thus obedient; for the Spirit of God would have been grieved, and his principle of faith would have perished.

Verse 25. Rahab the harlot] Rahab had the approbation due to genuine faith which she actually possessed, and gave the fullest proof that she did so by her conduct. ^a A justification signifies, not only the pardon of sin, but receiving the divine approbation, James seems to use the word in this latter sense. God approved of them, because of their obedience to his will; and he approves of no man who is not obedient.

Verse 26. For as the body without the spirit is dead] There can be no more a genuine faith without good works, than there can be a living human body without a soul.

CHAPTER III.

They are exhorted not to be many masters, 1. And to bridle the tongue, which is often an instrument of much evil, 2-12. The character and fruits of true and false wisdom, 13-18.

MY brethren, ^a be not many masters, ^b knowing that we shall receive the greater ^c condemnation.

2 For ^d in many things we offend all. ^e If any man offend not in word, ^f the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body.

Verse 1. Be not many masters] Do not affect the teacher's office, for many wish to be teachers who have more need to learn. This caution is still necessary.

Verse 2. In many things we offend all.] We all stumble or trip. There are very few who walk so closely with God, and inoffensively with men, as never to stumble; and although it is the privilege of every follower of God to be sincere and without offence to the day of Christ, yet few of them are so. Some have produced these words as a proof that "no man can live without sinning against God; for James himself, a holy apostle, speaking of himself, all the apostles, and the whole Church of Christ, says, In many things we offend all." This is a very bad and dangerous doctrine; and, pushed to its consequences, would greatly affect the credibility of the whole gospel system. Besides,

3 Behold, ^a we put bits in the horses' mouths, that they may obey us; and we turn about their whole body.

4 Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth.

were the doctrine as true as it is dangerous and false, it is foolish to ground it upon such a text; because St. James, after the common mode of all teachers, includes himself in his addresses to his hearers. To soften his reproofs, and to cause them to enter the more deeply into their hearts, he appears to include himself in his own censure; and yet none of his readers would understand him as being a brother delinquent.

Offend not in word, the same is a perfect man] The man who advanced no false doctrine, and gave no imperfect view of any of the great truths of Christianity, that man proved himself thereby to be thoroughly instructed in divine things; to be no novice, and consequently, among the many teachers, to be a perfect master, and worthy of the sacred vocation. tongue, not on the part of public teachers only, but generally?]

Verse 3. Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths] In order to show the necessity of regulating the tongue, to which St. James was led by his exhortation to them who wished to thrust themselves into the teacher's office, supposing, because they had the gift of a ready flow of speech, that therefore they might commence teachers of divine things; he proceeds to show that the tongue must be bridled as the horse, and governed as the ships; because, though it is small, it is capable of ruling the whole man, and of irritating and offending others.

Verse 5. Boasteth great things] That is, can do great things, whether of a good or evil kind.

Behold, how great a matter] See what a flame of discord and insubordination one man, merely by his persuasive tongue, may kindle among the common people.

Verse 6. The tongue is a fire] It is often the instrument of producing the most desperate contentions and insurrections.

A world of iniquity] This is an unusual form of speech, but the meaning is plain enough; world signifies here a mass, a great collection, an abundance. We use the term in the same sense—a world of troubles, a world of toil, a world of anxiety; for great troubles, oppressive toil, most distressing anxiety.

Setteth on fire the course of nature] And setteth on fire the wheel of life. I question much whether this verse be in general well understood. There are three different interpretations of it: 1. St. James does not intend to express the whole circle of human affairs, so much affected by the tongue of man; but rather the penal wheel of the Greeks, and not unknown to the Jews, on which they were accustomed to extend criminals, to induce them to confess, or to punish them for crimes; under which wheels of fire were often placed to add to their torments.

To set on fire the wheel of life is thus to increase a man's torments; and to be set on fire from hell implies having these miseries rendered more active by diabolic agency; or, in other words, bad men, instigated by the devil, through their lies and calumnies, make life burdensome to the objects of their malicious tongue. The wheel and the fire, so pointedly mentioned by St. James, make it probable that this sort of punishment might have suggested the idea to him.

2. But is it not possible that by the wheel of life St. James may have the circulation of the blood in view? Angry or irritating language has an astonishing influence on the circulation of the blood; the heart beats high and frequent; the blood is hurried through the arteries to the veins, through the veins to the heart, and through the heart to the arteries again, and so on; an extraordinary degree of heat is at the same time engendered; and, in short, the whole wheel of nature is set on fire of hell.

3. It is true, however, that the rabbins use the term gilgal toledoth, "the wheel of generations," to mark the successive generations of men; and it is possible that St. James might refer to this; as if he had said: "The tongue has been the instrument of confusion and misery through all the ages of the world." But the other interpretations are more likely.

10 Out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing. My brethren, these things ought not so to be.

11 Doth a fountain send forth at the same ^a place sweet water and bitter?

12 Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive berries? either a vine, figs? so can no fountain both yield salt water and fresh.

13 ^b Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him shew out of a good conversation ^c his works ^d with meekness of wisdom.

14 But if ye have ^e bitter envying and strife in your hearts, ^f glory not, and lie not against the truth.

15 ^g This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, ^h sensual, devilish.

^a Gen. i. 26. v. 1. ix. 6.—^b Or, hole.—^c Gal. vi. 4.—^d Ch. ii. 18.—^e Ch. i. 21.—^f Rom. xiii. 13.—^g Rom. ii. 17, 23.—^h Ch. i. 17. Phil. iii. 19.—ⁱ Or, natural. Jude 19.

[On the whole the authorized version seems to give the most rational interpretation of this difficult expression.]

Verse 7. Every kind of beasts] That is, every species of wild beasts is tamed, i.e., brought under man's power and dominion. Beasts, birds, serpents, and some kinds of fishes have been tamed so as to be domesticated; but every kind, particularly of sea monsters, has not been thus tamed; but all have been subjected to the power of man; both the shark and whale become an easy prey to the skill and influence of the human being.

Verse 8. But the tongue can no man tame] No cunning, persuasion, or influence has ever been able to silence it. Nothing but the grace of God, excision, or death, can bring it under subjection.

It is an unruly evil] An evil that cannot be restrained; it cannot be brought under any kind of government; it breaks all bounds.

Full of deadly poison.] He refers here to the tongues of serpents, supposed to be the means of conveying their poison into wounds made by their teeth. Throughout the whole of this poetic and highly declamatory description, St. James must have the tongue of the slanderer, calumniator, backbiter, whisperer, and tale-bearer, particularly in view. Vipers, basilisks, and rattlesnakes are not more dangerous to life, than these are to the peace and reputation of men.

Verse 9. Therewith bless we God] The tongue is capable of rehearsing the praises, and setting forth the glories, of the eternal King: what a pity that it should be ever employed in a contrary work! It can proclaim and vindicate the truth of God, and publish the gospel of peace and goodwill among men: what a pity that it should ever be employed in falsehoods, calumny, or in the cause of infidelity!

And therewith curse we men] In the true Satanic spirit, many pray to God the Father to destroy those who are objects of their displeasure! These are the common swearers, whose mouths are generally full of dire imprecations against those with whom they are offended.

Verse 11. Doth a fountain send forth—sweet water and bitter?] In many things nature is a sure guide to man, but no such inconsistency is found in the natural world as this blessing and cursing in man. It is depraved man alone that can act the monstrous part already referred to.

Verse 13. Who is a wise man] One truly religious; who, although he can neither bridle nor tame other men's tongues, can restrain his own.

And endued with knowledge] And qualified to teach others.

Let him shew] Let him by a holy life and chaste conversation, show, through meekness and gentleness, joined to his divine information, that he is a Christian indeed; his works and his spirit proving that God is in him of a truth; and that, from the fulness of a holy heart, his feet walk, his hands work, and his tongue speaks. We may learn from this that genuine wisdom is ever accompanied with meekness and gentleness. Those proud, overbearing, and disdainful men, who pass for great scholars and eminent critics, may have learning, but they have not wisdom. Their learning implies their correct knowledge of the structure of language, and of composition in general; but wisdom they have none, nor any self-government. That learning is not only little worth, but despicable, that does not teach a man to govern his own spirit, and to be humble in his conduct towards

Verse 14. If ye have bitter envying and strife] Let all writers on what is called polemic (fighting, warring) divinity lay this to heart.

Verse 15. This wisdom descendeth not from above] God is not the author of it, because it is bitter—not meek.

Is earthly] Having this life only in view.

Sensual] Animal—having for its object the gratification of the passions and animal propensities.

Devilish] Demoniacal—inspired by demons, and maintained in the soul by their indwelling influence.

Verse 16. For where envying and strife is] Zeal—fiery and inflammatory passion, and contention—altercations about different points of the law, of no use for edification; such as those mentioned, Tit. iii. 9. The Jews were the most intolerant of all mankind; it was a maxim with them to kill those who would not conform to their law; and their salvation they believed to be impossible.

Verse 17. The wisdom that is from above] The pure religion of the Lord Jesus, bought by his blood, and infused by his Spirit. The rabbinical meaning of this phrase is a peculiar inspiration of the Almighty.

Is first pure] Chaste, holy, and clean.

Peaceable] Living in peace with others, and promoting peace among men.

Gentle] Meek, modest, of an equal mind, taking everything in good part, and putting the best construction upon all the actions of others.

yielding disposition in all indifferent things; obsequious, and docile.

Full of mercy] Ready to pass by a transgression, and to grant forgiveness to those who offend, and performing every possible act of kindness.

Good fruits] Each temper and disposition producing fruits suited to and descriptive of its nature.

Without partiality] Without making a difference—rendering to every man his due; and being never swayed by self-interest, worldly honour, or the fear of man; knowing no man after the flesh. One of the Versions has it irreprehensible.

Without hypocrisy] Without dissimulation; without pretending to be what it is not; acting always in its own character; never working under a mask. Seeking nothing but God's glory, and using no other means to attain it than those of his own prescribing.

Verse 18. And the fruit of righteousness is sown] The whole is the principle of righteousness in the soul, and all the above virtues are the fruits of that righteousness.

Is sown in peace] When the peace of God rules the heart, all these virtues and graces grow and flourish abundantly.

Of them that make peace] The peace-makers are continually recommending this wisdom to others, and their own conduct is represented as a sowing of heavenly seed, which brings forth divine fruits. Perhaps sowing in peace signifies sowing prosperously—being very successful. This is not only the proper disposition for every teacher of the gospel, but for every professed follower of the Lord Jesus.

the time in which St. James wrote, whether we follow the earlier or the later date of this epistle, we find, according to the accounts given by Josephus, that the Jews under pretence of defending their religion, and procuring that liberty to which they believed themselves entitled, made various insurrections in Judea against the Romans, which occasioned much bloodshed and misery to their nation. The factions also, into which the Jews were split, had violent contentions among themselves, in which they massacred and plundered each other. These are probably the wars and fightings to which St. James alludes; and which they undertook rather from a principle of covetousness than from any sincere desire to convert the heathen.

Come they not hence—of your lusts] This was the principle from which these Jewish contentions and predatory wars proceeded, and the principle from which all the wars that have afflicted and desolated the world have proceeded.

5 Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain, 'The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?'

6 But he giveth more grace. Wherefore he saith, 'God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble.'

7 Submit yourselves therefore to God. 'Resist the devil, and he will flee from you.'

8 'Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. 'Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and 'purify your hearts, ye 'double-minded.'

9 'Be afflicted, and mourn, and weep: let your laughter be turned to mourning, and your joy to heaviness.'

* See Gen. vi. 5. vii. 21. Num. xi. 29. Prov. xxi. 10.—b Or, enviously.

These wars and fightings could not be attributed to the Christians in that time; for, howsoever fallen or degenerate, they had no power to raise contentions; and no political consequence to enable them to resist their enemies by the edge of the sword, or resistance of any kind.

Verse 2. Ye lust, and have not] Ye are ever covetous, and ever poor.

Ye kill, and desire to have] Ye are constantly engaged in insurrections and predatory wars, and never gain any advantage.

Ye have not, because ye ask not] Ye get no especial blessing from God as your fathers did, because ye do not pray. Worldly good is your god; ye leave no stone unturned in order to get it; and as ye ask nothing from God but to consume it upon your evil desires and propensities, your prayers are not heard.

Verse 3. Ye ask, and receive not] Some think that this refers to their prayers for the conversion of the heathen; and on the pretence that they were not converted thus, they thought it lawful to extirpate them and possess their goods.

Ye ask amiss] Ye ask evilly, wickedly. Ye have not the proper dispositions of prayer, and ye have an improper object. Ye ask for worldly prosperity, that ye may employ it in riotous living. This is properly the meaning of the original, That ye may expend it upon your pleasures. Whether the lusting of which St. James speaks were their desire to make proselytes, in order that they might increase their power and influence by means of such, or whether it were a desire to cast off the Roman yoke, and become independent; the motive and the object were the same, and the prayers were such as God could not hear.

Verse 4. Ye adulterers and adulteresses] The Jews, because of their covenant with God, are represented as being espoused to him; and hence their idolatry, and their iniquity in general, are represented under the notion of adultery. And although they had not since the Babylonish captivity been guilty of idolatry, according to the letter: yet what is intended by idolatry, having their hearts estranged from God, and seeking their portion in this life and out of God, is that of which the Jews were then notoriously guilty.

The friendship of the world] The world was their god; here they committed their spiritual adultery; and they cultivated this friendship in order that they might gain this end.

Whosoever will be a friend of the world] When the world gets into the church, the church becomes a painted sepulchre; its spiritual vitality being extinct.

Verse 5. Do ye think that the scripture saith in vain] This verse is exceedingly obscure. We cannot tell what scripture St. James refers to; many have been produced by learned men as that which he had particularly in view. He may probably refer, not to any particular portion, but to the spirit and design of the scripture in those various places where it speaks against envying, covetousness, worldly associations &c., &c.

I must leave this sense as the best I can give, without asserting that I have hit the true meaning. There is not a critic in Europe, who has considered the passage, that has not been puzzled with it. I think the 5th verse should be understood as giving a contrary sense to that in our translation. Every genuine Christian is a habitation of the Holy Ghost, and that Spirit excites strong desires against envy;

10 'Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up.'

11 'Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law, and judgeth the law: but if thou judge the law, thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.'

12 There is one lawgiver, who is able to save and to destroy: who art thou that judgest another?

13 Go to now, ye that say, To-day, or to-morrow, we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain:

14 Whereas ye know not what shall be on the

a man must not suppose that he is a Christian if he have an envious or covetous heart.

Verse 6. But he giveth more grace] A greater benefit than all the goods that the world can bestow; for he gives genuine happiness, and this the world cannot confer. May this be St. James's meaning?

God resisteth the proud] Sets himself in battle array against him.

Giveth grace unto the humble] The sure way to please God is to submit to the dispensations of his grace and providence; and when a man acknowledges him in all his ways he will direct all his steps. The covetous man grasps at the shadow, and loses the substance.

Verse 7. Submit to God] Continue to bow to all his decisions, and to all his dispensations.

Resist the devil] He cannot conquer you if you continue to resist. Strong as he is, God never permits him to conquer the man who continues to resist him. He cannot force the human will. He who, in the terrible name of Jesus, opposes even the devil himself, is sure to have a speedy and glorious conquest. He flees from that name, and from his conquering blood.

Verse 8. Draw nigh to God] Approach Him, in the name of Jesus, by faith and prayer, and he will draw nigh to you—he will meet you at your coming.

Cleanse your hands, ye sinners] Washing or cleansing the hands was a token of innocence and purity.

Purify your hearts] Separate yourselves from the world and consecrate yourselves to God: this is the true notion of sanctification.

Verse 9. Be afflicted, and mourn] Without true and deep repentance ye cannot expect the mercy of God.

Let your laughter be turned to mourning] It appears most evidently that many of those to whom St. James addressed this epistle had lived a very irregular and dissolute life. He had already spoken of their lusts and pleasures, and he had called them adulterers and adulteresses; and perhaps they were so in the grossest sense of the words. He speaks here of their laughter and their joy; and all the terms taken together show that a dissolute life is intended.

Verse 10. Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord] Submission to God's authority will precede humiliation of soul, and genuine repentance is performed as in the sight of God; for when a sinner is truly awakened to a sense of his guilt and danger, he seems to see, whithersoever he turns, the face of a justly incensed God turned against him.

He shall lift you up] Mourners and penitents lay on the ground, and rolled themselves in the dust. When comforted and pardoned, they arose from the earth, shook themselves from the dust, and clothed themselves in their better garments.

Verse 11. Speak not evil one of another] Perhaps this exhortation refers to evil speaking, slander, and backbiting in general, the writer having no particular persons in view. It may, however, refer to the contentions among the zealots, and different factions then prevailing among this wretched people, or to their calumnies against those of their brethren who had embraced the Christian faith.

Speaketh evil of the law] He who is guilty of these, and allows himself in these vices, in effect judges and condemns the law, i.e., he considers it unworthy to be kept, and that it is no sin to break it.

morrow. For what is your life? *It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away.

15 For that ye ought to say, ° If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that.

*Or, for it is.—^a Job vii. 7. ^b Ps. cii. 3. Ch. i. 10. 1 ^c Pet. i. 24. 1 John ii. 17.—^d Acts xviii. 21. 1 Cor. iv. 19. xvi. 7. Heb. vi. 3.

Thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge.] Thou rejectest the law of God, and settest up thy own mischievous conduct as a rule of life; or, by allowing this evil speaking and detraction, dost intimate that the law that condemns them is improper, imperfect, or unjust.

Verse 12. There is one lawgiver] The man who breaks the law, and teaches others so to do, thus in effect sets himself up as a lawgiver and judge. But there is only one such lawgiver and judge—God Almighty, who is able to save all those who obey him, and able to destroy all those who trample under feet his testimonies.

Who art thou that judgest another?] Who art thou who darest to usurp the office and prerogative of the Supreme Judge?

Verse 18. Go to now] Come now, the same in meaning as the Hebrew habah, come, Gen. xi. 3, 4, 7. Come, and hear what I have to say, ye that say, &c.

To-day or to-morrow we will go] This presumption on a precarious life is here well reprov'd; and the ancient Jewish rabbins have some things on the subject which probably St. James had in view.

And continue there a year, and buy and sell] This was the custom of those ancient times; they traded from city to city, carrying their goods on the backs of camels.

Verse 14. Whereas ye know not] This verse should be read in a parenthesis. It is not only impious, but grossly absurd, to speak thus concerning futurity, when ye know 16 But now ye rejoice in your boastings: ° all such rejoicing is evil.

17 Therefore ° to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.

—^a 1 Cor. v. 6.—^b Luke xii. 47. John ix. 41. xv. 22. Rom. i. 29, 31, 32. H. 17, 18, 23.

not what a day may bring forth. Life is utterly precarious; and God has not put it within the power of all the creatures he has made to command one moment of what is future.

It is even a vapour] It is a smoke, always fleeting, uncertain, evanescent, and obscured with various trials and afflictions. This is a frequent metaphor with the Hebrews; see Ps. cii. 11; Job. viii. 9; 1 Chron. xxix. 15.

Verse 15. For that ye ought to say] Instead of saying, or instead of which ye should say.

Verse 16. But now ye rejoice in your boastings] Ye glory in your proud and self-sufficient conduct, exulting that ye are free from the trammels of superstition, and that ye can live independently of God Almighty. All such boasting is wicked, is impious.

Verse 17. To him that knoweth to do good] As if he had said: After this warning none of you can plead ignorance; if, therefore, any of you shall be found to not their ungodly part, not acknowledging the divine providence, the uncertainty of life, and the necessity of standing every moment prepared to meet God—as you will have the greater sin, you will infallibly get the greater punishment. This may be applied to all who know better than they act, Luke xii. 47, 48. St. James may have the Christians in view who were converted from Judaism to Christianity. They had much more light and religious knowledge than the Jews had; and God would require a proportionable improvement from them.

CHAPTER V.

The profligate rich are in danger of God's judgments, because of their pride, fraudulent dealings, riotous living, and cruelty, 1-6. The oppressed followers of God should be patient, for the Lord's coming is nigh; and should not grudge against each other, 7-9. They should take encouragement from the example of the prophets, and of Job, 10, 11. Swearing forbidden, 12. Directions to the afflicted, 13-15. They should confess their faults to each other, 16. The great prevalence of prayer instanced in Elijah, 17, 18. The blessedness of converting a sinner from the error of his way, 19, 20.

GO *to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.

2 Your riches are corrupted, and ° your garments are moth-eaten.

3 Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust

*Prov. xi. 28. Luke vi. 24. 1 Tim. vi. 9.—^b Job xiii. 28. Matt. vi. 20. Ch. ii. 2.

Verse 1. Weep and howl for your miseries] St. James seems to refer here, in the spirit of prophecy, to the destruction that was coming upon the Jews, not only in Judea, but in all the provinces where they sojourned.

Verse 2. Your riches are corrupted] Are putrefied. The term riches is to be taken here, not for gold, silver, or precious stones (for these could not putrefy), but for the produce of the fields and flocks, the different stores of grain, wine, and oil, which they had laid up in their granaries, and the various changes of raiment which they had amassed in their wardrobes.

Verse 3. Your gold and silver is cankered] Instead of helping the poor, and thus honouring God with your substance, ye have, through the principle of covetousness, kept all to yourselves.

The rust of them shall be a witness against you] Your putrefied stores, your moth-eaten garments, and your tarnished coin, are so many proofs that it was not for want of property that you assisted not the poor, but through a principle of avarice; loving money, not for the sake of what it could procure, but for its own sake, which is the genuine principle of the miser.

Shall eat your flesh as it were fire.] This is a very bold and sublime figure. He represents the rust of their coin as by fraud, crieth : and * the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth.

5 ^b Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton ; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter.

6 ^c Ye have condemned and killed the just ; and he doth not resist you.

7 ^d Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive * the early and latter rain.

becoming a canker that should produce gangrenes and phagodontous ulcers in their flesh, till it should be eaten away from their bones.

Ye have heaped treasure together] This verse is variously pointed. The word rendered like as, in the preceding clause, is left out by the Syriac, and some others ; and fire is added here from that clause ; so that the whole verse reads thus : "Your gold and your silver is cankered ; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall consume your flesh. Ye have treasured up fire against the last days." This is a bold and fine image ; instead of the treasures of corn, wine, and oil, rich stuffs, with silver and gold, which ye have been laying up, ye shall find a treasure, a magazine, of fire, that shall burn up your city, and consume even your temple.

By the last days we are not to understand the day of judgment, but the last days of the Jewish commonwealth, which were not long distant from the date of this epistle, whether we follow the earlier or later computation, of which enough has been spoken in the preface.

Verse 4. The hire of the labourers] The law, Lev. xix. 13, had ordered : The wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning, every day's labour being paid for as soon as ended. This is more clearly stated in another law, Deut. xxiv. 15. And that God particularly resented this defrauding of the hiring we see from Mal. iii. 5.

The Lord of sabaoth] St. James often conceives in Hebrew though he writes in Greek. It is well known that Yehovah tsebaoth, Lord of hosts, or Lord of armies, is a frequent appellation of God in the Old Testament ; and signifies his uncontrollable power, and the infinitely numerous means he has for governing the world, and defending his followers, and punishing the wicked.

Verse 5. Ye have lived in pleasure] Ye have lived luxuriously ; feeding yourselves without fear, pampering the flesh.

And been wanton] Ye have lived lasciviously. Ye have indulged all your sinful and sensual appetites to the uttermost ; and your lives have been scandalous.

Ye have nourished your hearts] Ye have fattened your hearts, and have rendered them incapable of feeling, as in a day of slaughter, a day of sacrifice, where many victims are offered at once, and where the people feast upon sacrifices ; many, no doubt, turning, on that occasion, a holy ordinance into a riotous festival.

Verse 6. Ye have condemned and killed the just ; and he doth not resist you.] Several by the just one understand Jesus Christ, who is so called, Acts iii. 14 ; vii. 52 ; xxii. 14 ; but the structure of the sentence, and the connexion in which it stands, seem to require that we should consider this as applying to the just or righteous in general, who were persecuted and murdered by those oppressive rich men ; and their death was the consequence of their dragging them before the judgment-seats, chap. ii. 6, where, having no influence, and none to plead their cause, they were unjustly condemned and executed.

And he doth not resist you.—In this, as in the just, there is an enallage of the singular for the plural number. And in the word he doth not resist, the idea is included of defence in a court of justice. These poor righteous people had none to plead their cause ; and if they had it would have been useless, as their oppressors had all power and all influence, 8 Be ye also patient ; stablish your hearts ; * for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

9 ^a Grudge ^b not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned : behold, the judge ^c standeth before the door.

and those who sat on these judgment-seats were lost to all sense of justice and right.

Verse 7. Be patient therefore] Because God is coming to execute judgment on this wicked people, therefore be patient till he comes. He seems here to refer to the coming of the Lord to execute judgment on the Jewish nation, which shortly afterwards took place.

The husbandman waiteth] The seed of your deliverance is already sown, and by and by the harvest of your salvation will take place. God's counsels will ripen in due time.

The early and latter rain.] The ruin of seed-time ; and the rain of ripening before harvest : the first fell in Juden, about the beginning of November, after the seed was sown ; and the second towards the end of April, when the ears were filling, and this prepared for a full harvest. Without these two rains, the earth would have been unfruitful.

Verse 8. Be ye also patient] Wait for God's deliverance, as ye wait for his bounty in providence.

Stablish your hearts] Take courage ; do not sink under your trials.

The coming of the Lord draweth nigh.] Is at hand. He is already on his way to destroy this wicked people, to raze their city and temple, and to destroy their polity for ever ; and this judgment will soon take place.

Verse 9. Grudge not] Groan not ; grumble not ; do not murmur through impatience ; and let the not ill treatment which you receive, induce you to vent your feelings in imprecations against your oppressors. Leave all this in the hands of God.

Lest ye be condemned] By giving way to a spirit of this kind, you will get under the condemnation of the wicked.

The judge standeth before the door.] His eye is upon every thing that is wrong in you, and every wrong that is done to you ; and he is now entering into judgment with your oppressors.

Verse 10. Take—the prophets] The prophets who had spoken to their forefathers by the authority of God, were persecuted by the very people to whom they delivered the divine message ; but they suffered affliction and persecution with patience, commending their cause to him who judgeth righteously ; therefore, imitate their example.

Verse 11. We count them happy which endure] According to that saying of our blessed Lord, Matt. v. 11, &c.

Ye have heard of the patience of Job] Stripped of all his worldly possessions, deprived of a stroke of all his children, tortured in body with sore disease, tempted by the devil, harassed by his wife, and calumniated by his friends, he nevertheless held fast his integrity, resigned himself to the divine dispensations, and charged not God foolishly.

And have seen the end of the Lord] The issue to which God brought all his afflictions and trials, giving him children, increasing his property, lengthening out his life, and multiplying to him every kind of spiritual and secular good. This was God's end with respect to him ; but the devil's end was to drive him to despair, and to cause him to blaspheme his Maker. This mention of Job shows him to have been a real person ; for a fictitious person would not have been produced as an example of any virtue so highly important as that of patience and perseverance. The end of the Lord is a Hebraism for the issue to which God brings any thing or business.

The Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.] Instead of the word which we translate very pitiful, and which might be rendered of much sympathy, (because any thing that affects us with commiseration causes us to feel an indescribable emotion of the bowels), several MSS., have, a word not easy to be translated; but it signifies one whose commiseration is easily excited, and whose commiseration is great or abundant.

Verse 12. Above all things—swear not! What relation this exhortation can have to the subject in question, I confess I cannot see. It may not have been designed to stand in any connexion, but to be a separate piece of advice, as in the several cases which immediately follow. That the Jews were notoriously guilty of common swearing, is allowed on all hands; and that swearing by heaven, earth, Jerusalem, the temple, the altar, different parts of the body, was not considered by them as binding oaths, has been sufficiently proved.

Let your yea be yea, &c.] Do not pretend to say yea with your lips, and annul it in your heart; let the yea or the nay which you express be bonâ fide such. Do not imagine that any mental reservation can cancel any such expressions of obligation in the sight of God.

Lest ye fall into condemnation.] Lest ye fall into judgment. Several MSS. have: Lest ye fall into hypocrisy.

Verse 13. Is any among you afflicted? let him pray.] The Jews taught that the meaning of the ordinance, Lev. xiii. 45, which required the leper to cry unclean! unclean! was, "that thus making known his calamity, the people might be led to offer up prayers to God in his behalf.

Is any merry? let him sing psalms.] These are all general but very useful directions. It is natural for a man to sing when he is cheerful and happy. Now no subject can be more noble than that which is divine; and as God alone is the author of all that good which makes a man happy, then his praise should be the subject of the song of him who is merry. But where persons rejoice in iniquity, and not in the truth, God and sacred things can never be the subject of their songs.

Verse 14. Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders] This was also a Jewish maxim.

St. James very properly sends all such to the elders of the church, who had power with God through the great Mediator, that they might pray for them.

Anointing him with oil] What is here recommended was to be done as a natural means of restoring health, which, while they used prayer and supplication to God, they were not to neglect. Oil in Judea was celebrated for its sanative qualities; so that they scarcely ever took a journey without carrying oil with them (see in the case of the Samaritan), with which they anointed their bodies, healed their wounds, bruises, &c. It was, and is frequently used in the east as a means of cure in very dangerous diseases; and in Egypt it is often used in the cure of the plague. But that it was the custom of the Jews to apply it as a means of healing, and that St. James refers to this custom, is not only evident from the case of the wounded man ministered to by the good Samaritan, Luke x. 34, but from the practice of the Jewish rabbins. They had recourse to this as a natural remedy; and we find that the disciples used it also in this way to heal the sick, not exerting the miraculous power but in cases where natural means were ineffectual, Mark vi. 13. On this latter place I have supposed that it might have been done symbolically, in order to prepare the way for a miraculous cure: this is the opinion of many commentators; but I am led, effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.

17 Elias was a man ^asubject to like passions as we are, and ^bhe prayed earnestly that it might not rain; ^cand it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months.

18 And ^dhe prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit.

19 Brethren, ^eif any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him;

20 Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way ^fshall save a soul from death, and ^gshall have a multitude of sins.

John ix. 31. 1 John iii. 22.—^a Acts xiv. 15.—^b 1 Kings xvii. 1.—^c Or, in prayer.—^d Luke iv. 25.—^e 1 Kings xviii. 42, 45.—^f Matt. xviii. 15.—^g Rom. xi. 14. 1 Cor. ix. 22. 1 Tim. iv. 16.—^h Prov. x. 12. 1 Pet. iv. 8.

on more mature consideration, to doubt its propriety, yet dare not decide. In short, anointing the sick with oil, in order to their recovery, was a constant practice among the Jews. And here, I am satisfied that it has no other meaning than as a natural means of restoring health; and that St. James desires them to use natural means while looking to God for an especial blessing. And no wise man would direct otherwise.

Verse 15. And the prayer of faith shall save the sick] That is, God will often make those the means of a sick man's recovery; but there often are cases where faith and prayer are both ineffectual, because God sees it will be prejudicial to the patient's salvation to be restored; and therefore all faith and prayer on such occasions should be exerted on this ground: "If it be most for thy glory, and the eternal good of this man's soul, let him be restored; if otherwise, Lord, pardon, purify him, and take him to thy glory."

The Lord shall raise him up] Not the elders, how faithfully and fervently soever they have prayed.

And if he have committed sins] So as to have occasioned his present malady, they shall be forgiven him; for being the cause of the affliction it is natural to conclude that, if the effect be to cease, the cause must be removed. We find that in the miraculous restoration to health, under the powerful hand of Christ, the sin of the party is generally said to be forgiven, and this also before the miracle was wrought on the body: hence there was a maxim among the Jews, and it seems to be founded in common sense and reason, that God never restores a man miraculously to health till he has pardoned his sins; because it would be incongruous for God to exert his miraculous power in saving a body, the soul of which was in a state of condemnation to eternal death, because of the crimes it had committed against its Maker and Judge. Here then it is God that remits the sin, not in reference to the unction, but in reference to the cure of the body which he is miraculously to effect.

Verse 16. Confess your faults one to another] This is a good general direction to Christians who endeavour to maintain among themselves the communion of saints. This social confession tends much to humble the soul, and to make it watchful.

And pray one for another] There is no instance in auricular confession where the penitent and the priest pray together for pardon; but here the people are commanded to pray for each other that they may be healed.

The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.] The words signify energetic supplication, or such a prayer as is suggested to the soul and wrought in it by a divine energy. When God designs to do some particular work in his church he pours out on his followers the spirit of grace and supplication; and this he does sometimes when he is about to do some especial work for an individual. When such a power of prayer is granted, faith should be immediately called into exercise, that the blessing may be given: the spirit of prayer is the proof that the power of God is present to heal. Long prayers give no particular evidence of divine inspiration.

Verse 17. Elias was a man subject to like passions] The word signifies of the same constitution, a human being just as ourselves are. There was some reason to apprehend that because Elijah was translated, therefore he was more than human, and if so, his example could be no pattern for us.

That it might not rain] See this history, 1 Kings xvii. 1, &c.

And it rained not on the earth] On that land, viz., the land of Judea, for this drought did not extend elsewhere.

Three years and six months.] This is the term mentioned by our Lord, Luke iv. 25; but this is not specified in the original history.

Verse 18. And he prayed again] This second prayer is not mentioned in the history in express words, but as in 1 Kings xvii. 42, it is said, He cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees; that was probably the time of the second praying, viz., that rain might come, as this was the proper posture of prayer.

Verse 19. Err from the truth] Stray away from the gospel of Christ; and one convert him—reclaim him from his error, and bring him back to the fold of Christ.

Verse 20. Let him know] Let him duly consider, for his encouragement, that he who is the instrument of converting a sinner shall save a soul from eternal death, and a body from ruin, and shall hide a multitude of sins; for in being the means of his conversion we bring him back to God, who, in his infinite mercy, hides or blots out the numerous sins which he had committed during the time of his backsliding. It is not the man's sins who is the means of his conversion, but the sins of the backslider, which are here said to be hidden.

THE FIRST GENERAL EPISTLE

OF PETER.

CHAPTER I.

Of the persons to whom this epistle was directed, and their spiritual state, 1, 2. He describes their privileges, and thanks God for the grace by which they were preserved faithful in trials and difficulties, 3-5. The spiritual benefit they were to receive out of their afflictions, 6, 7. Their love to Christ, 8. And the salvation they received through believing, 9. This salvation was predicted by the prophets, who only saw it afar off, and had only a foretaste of it, 10-12. They should take encouragement, and be obedient and holy, 13-16. They should pray, and deeply consider the price at which they were purchased, that their faith and hope might be in God, 17-21. As their souls had been purified by obeying the truth through the Spirit, they should love each other with a pure and fervent love, 22, 23. The frailty of man, and the unchangeableness of God, 24, 25.

[Dr. Clarke's Introduction to the First and Second Epistle of St. Peter is taken entirely from Michaelis and Lardner; and is therefore omitted in this edition. The authenticity of the First Epistle has never been questioned by a competent authority. It is frequently alluded to by Polycarp in his Epistle to the Philipppians; it is quoted by Papias, and repeatedly by Irenaeus, Clemens of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Origen. The internal evidence of the authorship is equally strong. It was probably written, according to the tradition of the Church, at Babylon, the ancient capital of the East, where the Jews had, at the time, a rich and prosperous settlement. Christianity made considerable progress in that city and the adjoining district in the first century. Silvanus, by whom the epistle was conveyed to the Churches of Asia Minor, has been thought by some to have been the amanuensis of the Apostle. Of this there is no evidence; but the marked similarity between the tone of Peter's thought and that of St. Paul, may be the result of the influence of Silvanus, whose connexions with the great Apostle were most intimate.]

Verse 1. Peter, an apostle] Simon Peter, called also Kephaz: he was a fisherman, son of Jonah, brother of

The strangers scattered throughout] Jews first, who had believed the gospel in the different countries here specified; and converted Gentiles also. The word strangers may refer to all truly religious people, see Gen. xlvii. 9, Ps. xxxix. 12, in the Septuagint, and Heb. xi. 13.

Pontus] An ancient kingdom of Asia Minor, originally a part of Cappadocia; bounded on the east by Colchis, on the west by the river Halys, on the north by the Euxine Sea, and on the south by Armenia Minor.

Galatia] The ancient name of a province of Asia Minor, now called Amasia. It was called also Gallogræcia, and Gallia Parva. It was bounded on the east by Cappadocia, on the south by Pamphylia, on the north by the Euxine Sea, and on the west by Bithynia.

Cappadocia] An ancient kingdom of Asia, comprehending all the country lying between Mount Taurus and the Euxine Sea.

Asia] This word is taken in different senses: It signifies, 1. One of the three general divisions of our continent, and one of the four of the whole earth.

2. Asia Minor, that part of Turkey in Asia, now called Natolia, which comprehends a great number of provinces situated between the Euxine, Mediterranean, and Archipelago.

3. That province of Asia Minor of which Ephesus was the capital. It appears, says Calmet, that it is in this latter sense that it is used here by St. Peter, because Pontus, Galatia, and Bithynia, are comprised in the provinces of Asia Minor.

Bithynia. An ancient kingdom of Asia, formerly called Mysia, Mygdonia, Bebrycia, and Bithonia. It was bounded on the west by the Bosporus Thracicus and part of the Propontis, on the south by the river Rhynadacus and Mount Olympus, on the north by the Euxine Sea, and on the east by the river Parthenius.

Verse 2. Elect according to the foreknowledge of God. If the apostle had directed his letter to persons elected to eternal life, no one could have received such a letter, because no one could have been sure of his election in this way till he had arrived in heaven. But the persons to whom the apostle wrote were all, with propriety, said to be elect according to the foreknowledge of God; because, agreeably to the original purpose of God discovered in the prophetic writings, Jews and Gentiles, indiscriminately, were called to be the visible church, and entitled to all the privileges of the people of God, on their believing the gospel. In this sense the word elected is used in other places of scripture; see 1 Thess. i. 4, and the note there. See also Wesley's notes in loco.

Through sanctification of the Spirit. Through the renewing and purifying influences of his Spirit on their souls, unto obedience—to engage and enable them to yield themselves up to all holy obedience, the foundation of all which is the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ—the atoning blood of Jesus Christ which was typified by the sprinkling of the blood of sacrifices under the law, in allusion to which it is called the blood of sprinkling.

Verse 3. Blessed be the God and Father. Blessed be God even the Father, or blessed be God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Begotten us again unto a lively hope. I think the apostle has reference here to his own case, and that of his fellow-apostles, at the time that Christ was taken by the Jews and put to death. Previously to this time they had strong confidence that he was the Messiah, and that it was he who should redeem Israel; but when they found that he actually expired upon the cross, and was buried, they appear to have lost all hope of the great things which before they had in prospect. See Luke xxiv. 18-24. By his resurrection the hope was revived. This is very properly expressed here by being begotten again to a living hope, or, as some MSS. and Versions have it, to the hope of life.

The expressions, however, may include more particulars than what are above specified; as none can inherit eternal life except those who are children in the heavenly family, and none are children but those who are born again: then St. Peter may be considered as laying here the foundation of the hope of eternal life in the regeneration of the soul; for 12 ⁱ Unto whom it was revealed, that ^j not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things, which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with ^k the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; ^l which things the angels desire to look into.

13 Wherefore ^m gird up the loins of your mind, ⁿ be sober, and hope ^o to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you ^p at the revelation of Jesus Christ;

14 As obedient children, ^q not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts ^r in your ignorance:

15 ^s But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation;

none can legally inherit but the children, and none are children of God till they are spiritually begotten and born again.

Verse 4. To an inheritance. Called an inheritance because it belongs to the children of God. Eternal life cannot be a gift to any but these; for, even in heaven, the lot is dealt out according to law: if children, then heirs; if not children, then not heirs.

Incorruptible. It has no principles of dissolution or decay in it; and, therefore, must be totally different from this earth.

Undefiled. Nothing impure can enter it; it not only has no principles or seeds of dissolution in itself, but it can never admit any; therefore its deterioration is impossible.

Fadeth not away. It cannot wither, it is always in bloom; a metaphor taken from those flowers that never lose their sweet nor their fragrance. From the original word we have our flowers called amaranths, because they preserve their hue and odour for a long time.

Verse 5. Who are kept. Who are defended as in a fortress or castle. The true disciples of Christ are under the continual watchful care of God, and the inheritance is guarded for them. In some countries military posts are constantly kept on the confines, in order to prevent irruptions from a neighbouring people; and, in many cases, heirs, while in their minority, are kept in fortified places under military guards.

By the power of God. By the mighty and miracle-working power of God; for nothing less is necessary to keep and preserve, in this state of continual trial, a soul from the contagion that is in the world. But this power of God is interested in the behalf of the soul by faith; to believe is our work, the exertion of the almighty power is of God. No persevering without the power, and no power without faith.

Ready to be revealed. Or rather, Prepared to be revealed. The inheritance is prepared for you; but its glories will not be revealed till the last time—till ye have done with life, and passed through your probation, having held fast faith and a good conscience.

Verse 6. Wherein ye greatly rejoice. Some refer wherein to the salvation mentioned above; others, to the last time, in ver. 5; others think that it applies to the being kept by the power of God through faith; and others, that it refers to all the preceding advantages and privileges. It was in the present salvation of God that they rejoiced or gloried, though not without having an eye to the great recompence of reward.

Though now for a season. A little while yet—during your pilgrimage here below, which is but a point when compared with eternity.

If need be. If it be necessary—if your situation and circumstances be such that you are exposed to trials and persecutions which you cannot avoid, unless God were to work a miracle for your deliverance, which would not be for your ultimate good, as he purposes to turn all your trials and difficulties to your advantage.

Sometimes there is a kind of necessity that the followers of God should be afflicted; when they have no trials they are apt to get careless, and when they have secular prosperity they are likely to become worldly-minded. But the disciples of Christ may be very happy in their souls, though grievously afflicted in their bodies and in their estates. Those to whom St. Peter wrote rejoiced greatly, danced for joy, while they were grieved with various trials.

Verse 7. That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold] As by the action of fire gold is separated from all alloy and heterogeneous mixtures, and is proved to be gold by its enduring the action of the fire without losing anything of its nature, weight, colour, or any other property, so genuine faith is proved by adversities, especially such as the primitive Christians were obliged to pass through.

Though it be tried with fire] That is: Though gold will bear the action of the fire for any given time, even millions of years, were that possible, without losing the smallest particle of weight or value, yet even gold, in process of time will wear away by continual use; and the earth, and all its works, will be burnt up by that supernatural fire whose action nothing can resist. But on that day the faith of Christ's followers will be found brighter, and more glorious. God himself will praise such faith, angels and men will hold it in honour, and Christ will crown it with glory.

Verse 8. Whom having not seen, ye love] Those to whom the apostle wrote had never seen Christ in the flesh; and yet, such is the realizing nature of faith, they loved him as strongly as any of his disciples could, to whom he was personally known.

Ye rejoice with joy unspeakable] Ye have unutterable happiness through believing; and ye have the fullest, clearest, strongest evidence of eternal glory.

Verse 9. Receiving the end of your faith] Ye are put in possession of the salvation of your souls, which was the thing presented to your faith when ye were called by the gospel of Christ.

Salvation of your souls.] The object of the Jewish expectations in their Messiah was the salvation or deliverance of their bodies from a foreign yoke; but the true Messiah came to save the soul from the yoke of the devil and sin. This glorious salvation these believers had already received.

Verse 10. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired] The prophets plainly saw that the grace which was to come under the Messiah's kingdom was vastly superior to anything that had ever been exhibited under the law; and in consequence they made all possible inquiry, and searched as after grains of gold, hidden among sand or compacted with ore (for such is the meaning of the original word), in order to ascertain the time, and the signs of that time, in which this wondrous display of God's love and mercy to man was to take place; but all that God thought fit to instruct them in, was what is mentioned ver. 12.

Verse 11. The glory that should follow.] Not only the glory of his resurrection, ascension, exaltation, and the effusion of his Spirit; but that grand manifestation of God's infinite love to the world in causing the gospel of his Son to be everywhere preached, and the glorious moral changes which should take place in the world under that preaching, and the final glorification of all them who had here received the report, and continued faithful unto death.

Verse 12. Unto whom it was revealed] We may presume that, in a great variety of cases, the prophets did not understand the meaning of their own predictions. When they wished to find out the times, the seasons, and the circumstances, God gave them to understand that it was not for themselves, but for us, that they did minister the things which are now reported unto us by the preaching of the gospel. This was all the satisfaction they received in consequence of their earnest searching; and this was sufficient to repress all needless curiosity, and to induce them to rest satisfied that the Judge of all the earth would do right. If all succeeding interpreters of the prophecies had been contented with the same information relative to the predictions still unaccomplished, we should have had fewer books, and more wisdom.

Angels desire to look into] To stoop down to; the posture of those who are earnestly intent on finding out a thing, especially a writing difficult to be read. There is evidently an allusion here to the attitude of the cherubim who stood at the ends of the ark of the covenant, in the inner tabernacle, with their faces turned towards the mercy-seat or propitiatory in a bending posture, as if looking attentively, or, as we term it, poring upon it.

We learn from the above that it was the Spirit of Christ in the Jewish prophets that prophesied of Christ; it was that Spirit which revealed him; and it is the same Spirit which takes of the things of Christ and shows them unto us.

Verse 13. Gird up the loins of your mind] The allusion here is to the long robes of the Asiatics which, when they were about to perform any active service, they tucked in their girdles: this they did also when they waited on their superiors at meals.

Hope to the end for the grace] Continue to expect all that God has promised, and particularly that utmost salvation, that glorification of body and soul, which ye shall obtain at the revelation of Christ, when he shall come to judge the world.

Verse 14. Not fashioning yourselves] As the offices of certain persons are known by the garb or livery they wear, so are transgressors: where we see the world's livery we see the world's servants; they fashion or habit themselves according to their lusts, and we may guess that they have a worldly mind by their conformity to worldly fashions.

Verse 15. But as he which hath called you] Heathenism scarcely produced a god whose example was not the most abominable; their greatest gods, especially, were paragons of impurity; none of their philosophers could propose the objects of their adoration as objects of imitation. God is holy, and he calls upon all who believe in him to imitate his holiness; and the reason why they should be holy is, that God who has called them is holy, ver. 15.

Verse 17. And if ye call on the Father] Seeing ye invoke the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and your Father through Christ, and profess to be obedient children, and sojourners here below for a short time only, see that ye maintain a godly reverence for this Father, walking in all his testimonies blameless.

Who without respect of persons] God is said to be no respecter of persons for this reason among many others, that, being infinitely righteous, he must be infinitely impartial. He cannot prefer one to another, because he has nothing to hope or fear from any of his creatures. All partialities among men spring from one or other of these two principles, hope or fear; God can feel neither of them, and therefore God can be no respecter of persons. He approves or disapproves of men according to their moral character. He pities all, and provides salvation for all, but he loves those who resemble him in his holiness; and he loves them in proportion to that resemblance, i.e., the more of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently:

of his image he sees in any, the more he loves him; and contra. And every man's work will be the evidence of his conformity or nonconformity to God; and according to this evidence will God judge him.

Verse 18. Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things] To redeem, signifies to procure life for a captive or liberty for a slave by paying a price, and the precious blood of Christ is here stated to be the price at which the souls of both Jews and Gentiles were redeemed; it was a price paid down, and a price which God's righteousness required.

Corruptible things means here anything that man usually gives in exchange for another; but the term necessarily includes all created things, as all these are corruptible and perishing. The meaning of the apostle is, evidently, that created things could not purchase the souls of men, else the sacrifice of Christ had not been offered; could any thing less have done, God would not have given up his only-begotten Son.

Vain conversation] Empty, foolish, and unprofitable conduct, full of vain hopes, vain fears, and vain wishes.

Received by tradition from your fathers] The Jews had innumerable burdens of empty ceremonies and useless ordinances, which they received by tradition from their fathers, rabbins, or doctors. The Gentiles were not less encumbered with such than the Jews; all were wedded to their vanities, because they received them from their forefathers, as they had done from theirs.

Verse 19. The precious blood of Christ] The valuable blood; how valuable neither is nor could be stated.

As of a lamb] Such as was required for a sin-offering to God; and the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world.

Without blemish] In himself, and without spot from the world; being perfectly pure in his soul, and righteous in his life.

Verse 20. Who verily was fore-ordained] Fore known; appointed in the divine purpose to be sent into the world, because infinitely approved by the divine justice.

Before the foundation of the world] Before the law was given, or any sacrifice prescribed by it, its whole sacrificial system was appointed in reference to this fore-appointed Lamb, and consequently from him derived all its significance and virtue. The phrase, foundation of the world, occurs often in the New Testament, and is supposed by some learned men and good critics to signify the commencement of the Jewish state. But if we take it here in its common signification, the creation of universal nature, then it shows that God, foreseeing the fall and ruin of man, appointed the remedy that was to cure the disease. It may here have a reference to the opinion of the Jewish doctors, who maintain that seven things existed before the creation of the world, one of which was the Messiah.

of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away:

25 ^a But the word of the Lord endureth for ever. ^b And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you.

Last times] The gospel dispensation, called the last times, as we have often seen, because never to be succeeded by any other.

Verse 21. Who by him do believe in God] This is supposed to refer to the Gentiles, who never knew the true God till they heard the preaching of the gospel: the Jews had known him long before, but the Gentiles had everything to learn when the first preachers of the gospel arrived amongst them.

Gave him glory] Raised him to his right hand, where, as a Prince and a Saviour, he gives repentance and remission of sins.

That your faith] In the fulfilment of all his promises, and your hope of eternal glory, might be in God, who is unchangeable in his counsels, and infinite in his mercies.

Verse 22. Seeing ye have purified your souls] Having purified your souls, in obeying the truth—by believing in Christ Jesus, through the influence and teaching of the Spirit; and giving full proof of it by unfeigned love to the brethren; ye love one another or ye will love each other, with a pure heart fervently.

Verse 23. Being born again] For being born of Abraham's seed will not avail to the entering of the kingdom of heaven.

Not of corruptible seed] By no human generation, or earthly means; but of incorruptible—a divine and heavenly principle which is not liable to decay, nor to be effected by the changes and chances to which all sublunary things are exposed.

By the word of God] By the doctrine of the living God, which remaineth for ever; which doctrine shall never change, any more than the source shall whence it proceeds.

Verse 24. For all flesh is as grass] Earthly seeds, earthly productions, and earthly generations, shall fail and perish like as the grass and flowers of the field; for the grass withereth, and the flower falleth off, though, in the ensuing spring and summer, they may put forth new verdure and bloom.

Verse 25. But the word of the Lord] The doctrine delivered by God concerning Christ endureth for ever, having, at all times and in all seasons, the same excellence and the same efficacy.

And this is the word] What is spoken, by the gospel preached unto you. All human schemes of salvation, and plans for the melioration of the moral state of man, shall come to nought; and the doctrine of Christ crucified, though a stumbling-block to the Jews, and foolishness to the Gentiles, shall be alone the power of God, for salvation to every soul that believeth.

CHAPTER II.

We should lay aside all evil dispositions, and desire the sincere milk of the word, that we may grow thereby, 1-3. And come to God to be made living stones, and be built up into a spiritual temple, 4, 5. The prophecy of Christ, as chief corner-stone, precious to believers, but a stumbling-stone to the disobedient, 6-8. True believers are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, &c., 9, 10. They should abstain from fleshly lusts, 11. Walk uprightly among the Gentiles, 12. Be obedient to civil authority, according to the will of God, 13-15. Make a prudent use of their Christian liberty, 16. Fear God, and honour the king, 17. Servants should be subject to their masters, and serve them faithfully, and suffer indignities patiently, after the example of Christ, 18-23. Who bore the punishment due to our sins in his own body upon the tree, 24. They were formerly like sheep going astray, but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls, 25.

Verse 1. Wherefore, laying aside [This is in close connexion with the preceding chapter, from which it should not have been separated; and the subject is continued to the end of the 10th verse.]

These tempers and dispositions indicated must have been common among the Jews, as they are frequently spoken against: Christianity can never admit of such; they show the mind, not of Christ, but of the old murderer.

Verse 2. As new-born babes [The figure is very expressive: as a child newly born shows an immediate desire for that nourishment, and that only, which is its most proper food; so they, being just born of God, should show that the incorruptible seed abides in them, and that they will receive nothing that is not suited to that new nature: and, indeed, they can have no spiritual growth but by the pure doctrines of the gospel.]

That ye may grow thereby [Unto salvation is added here by many MSS., Versions, and ancient Fathers. The reading is undoubtedly genuine, and is very important. It shows why they were regenerated, and why they were to desire the unadulterated doctrines of the gospel, viz., that they might grow up unto salvation.]

Verse 3. If so be ye have tasted [Seeing ye have tasted. There could be no doubt that they had tasted the goodness of Christ who were born again of incorruptible seed, and whose hearts were purified by the truth, and who had like precious faith with the apostles themselves.]

That the Lord is gracious. [This seems to refer to Ps. xxxiv. 8: O taste and see that the Lord is good. And there is still a reference to the sucking child that, having once tasted its mother's milk, ever after desires and longs for it.]

Verse 4. To whom coming, as unto a living stone [This is a reference to Isa. xxviii. 16. Jesus Christ is, in both the prophet and apostle, represented as the foundation on which the Christian Church is built, and on which it must continue to rest: and the stone or foundation is called here living, to intimate that he is the source of life to all his followers, and that it is in union with him that they live, and answer the end of their regeneration; as the stones of a building are of no use but as they occupy their proper places in a building, and rest on the foundation.]

Disallowed indeed of men [That is, rejected by the Jews. This is a plain reference to the prophecy, Ps. cxviii. 22.]

Chosen of God [As Christ is the choice of the Father, we need have no doubt of the efficacy and sufficiency of all that he has suffered and done for the salvation of a lost world.]

Precious [Honourable. Howsoever despised and rejected by men, Jesus, as the sacrifice for a lost world, is infinitely honourable in the sight of God; and those who are united by faith to him partake of the same honour, being members of that great and glorious body of which he is the head, and stones in that superb building of which he is the foundation.]

Verse 5. Ye also, as lively stones [Living stones; each being instinct with the principle of life, which proceeds from him who is the foundation, called above a living stone.]

Verse 6. Behold, I lay in Sion [This intimates that the 6 Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, ¹ Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.]

7 Unto you therefore which believe he is ^a precious: but unto them which be disobedient, ^b the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, foundation of the Christian Church should be laid at Jerusalem; and there it was laid, for there Christ suffered, and there the preaching of the gospel commenced.]

A chief corner-stone [This is the same as the foundation-stone; and it is called here the chief corner-stone because it is laid in the foundation, at an angle of the building where its two sides form the ground-work of a side and end wall.]

Elect, precious [Chosen and honourable. See on ver. 4.]

Shall not be confounded. [These words are quoted from Isa. xxviii. 16; but rather more from the Septuagint than from the Hebrew text. The latter we translate, He that believeth shall not make haste—he who comes to God, through Christ, for salvation, shall never be confounded; he need not haste to flee away, for no enemy shall ever be able to annoy him.]

Verse 7. Unto you therefore which believe [You, both Jews and Gentiles.]

He is precious [The honour is to you who believe, i.e., the honour of being in this building, and of having your souls saved through the blood of the Lamb, and becoming sons and daughters of God Almighty.]

Them which be disobedient [The Jews, who continue to reject the gospel; that very person whom they reject is head of the corner—is Lord over all, and has all power in the heavens and the earth.]

Verse 8. A stone of stumbling [Because in him all Jews and Gentiles who believe are united; and because the latter were admitted into the church, and called by the gospel to enjoy the same privileges which the Jews, as the peculiar people of God, had enjoyed for two thousand years before; therefore they rejected the Christian religion, they would have no partakers with themselves in the salvation of God.]

Whereunto also they were appointed. [The disobedient being appointed to stumble against the word, or being prophesied of as persons that should stumble, necessarily means, from the connexion in which it stands, and from the passage in the prophet, that their stumbling, falling, and being broken, is the consequence of their disobedience or unbelief; but there is no intimation that they were appointed or decreed to disobey, that they might stumble, and fall, and be broken. They stumbled and fell through their obstinate unbelief; and thus their stumbling and falling, as well as their unbelief, were of themselves; in consequence of this they were appointed to be broken; this was God's work of judgment. This seems to be the meaning which our Lord attaches to this very prophecy, which he quotes against the chief priests and elders, Matt. xxi. 44.]

Verse 9. Ye are a chosen generation [The titles formerly given to the whole Jewish Church, i.e., to all the Israelites without exception, all who were in the covenant of God by circumcision, whether they were holy persons or not, are here given to Christians in the same way, i.e., to all who believed in Christ, whether Jews or Gentiles, and who received baptism in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.]

Verse 10. Which in time past were not a people] This is a quotation from Hosea i. 9, 10, and ii. 23.

Verse 11. As strangers and pilgrims] See the note on Heb. xi. 13. These were strangers and pilgrims in the most literal sense of the word, see chap. i. 1, for they were strangers scattered through Asia, Pontus, &c.

Abstain from fleshly lusts] As ye are strangers and pilgrims, and profess to seek a heavenly country, do not entangle your affections with earthly things. All kinds of earthly desires, whether those of the flesh or of the eye, or those included in the pride of life, are here comprised in the words fleshly lusts.

Which war against the soul] Which are marshalled and drawn up in battle array, to fight against the soul; either to slay it, or to bring it into captivity. This is the object and operation of every earthly and sensual desire. How little do those who indulge them think of the ruin which they produce!

Verse 12. Having your conversation honest] Living in such a manner among the Gentiles, in whose country ye sojourn, as becomes the gospel which ye profess.

That whereas they speak against you as evil doers] In all the heathen countries, in the first age of the Church, the Christians and the Jews were confounded together; and as the latter were everywhere exceeding troublesome and seditious, the Christians shared in their blame, and suffered no small measure of obloquy and persecution on this very account.

In the day of visitation.] I believe this refers to the time when God should come to execute judgment on the disobedient Jews, in the destruction of their civil polity, and the subversion of their temple and city. God did at that time put a remarkable difference between the Jews and the Christians: all the former were either destroyed or carried into slavery; not one of the latter: nor did they deserve it; for not one of them had joined in the sedition against the Roman government. The words, however, may refer to the time in which the Christians should be called to suffer for the testimony of Christ; the heathens, seeing them bear their sufferings with unconquerable patience, were constrained to confess that God was with them; and not a few, from being spectators of their sufferings, became converts to Christianity.

Verse 13. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man] In every settled state, and under every form of political government, where the laws are not in opposition to the laws of God, it may be very soundly and rationally said: Genuine Christians have nothing to do with the laws but to obey them.

Verse 14. Or unto governors] By king, as supreme, the Roman emperor is meant; and by governors, are meant leaders, governors, presidents, proconsuls, and other chief magistrates, sent by him into the provinces dependant on the Roman empire.

For the punishment of evil doers] This was the object

15 For so is the will of God, that ^lwith well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men:

16 ^mAs free, and not ⁿusing your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as ^othe servants of God.

18 ^tServants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

19 For this is ^uthankworthy, ^vif a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

20 For ^wwhat glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is ^xacceptable with God.

of their mission; they were to punish delinquents, and encourage and protect the virtuous.

Verse 15. For so is the will of God] God, as their supreme governor, shows them that it is his will that they should act uprightly and obediently at all times, and thus confound the ignorance of foolish men, who were ready enough to assert that their religion made them bad subjects. The word which we translate, put to silence, signifies to muzzle, i.e., stop their mouths, leave them nothing to say; let them assent, but ever be unable to bring proof to support it.

Verse 16. As free] The Jews pretended that they were a free people, and owed allegiance to God alone; hence they were continually rebelling against the Roman government, to which God had subjected them because of their rebellion against him: thus they used their liberty for a cloak of maliciousness—for a pretext of rebellion, and by it endeavoured to vindicate their seditious and rebellious conduct.

But as the servants of God] These were free from sin and Satan, but they were the servants of God—bound to obey him; and, as he had made it their duty to obey the civil magistrate, they served God by submitting to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake.

Verse 17. Honour all men.] That is, Give honour to whom honour is due, Rom. xiii. 7.

Love the brotherhood] All true Christians, who form one great family of which God is the head.

Fear God.] Who gives you those commandments; lest he punish you for disobedience.

Honour the king.] Pay that respect to the emperor which his high authority requires, knowing that civil power is of God; that the authority with which he, in the course of his providence, has invested him, must be respected in order to its being obeyed; and that if the man be even bad, and as a man be worthy of no reverence, yet he should be respected on account of his office.

Verse 18. Servants, be subject] See the notes on Eph. vi. 5; Col. iii. 22; and Tit. ii. 9.

With all fear] With all submission and reverence.

The good and gentle] Those who are ever just in their commands, never requiring more work than is necessary or proper, and always allowing sufficient food and sufficient time.

The froward.] The crooked, perverse, unreasonable, morose, and austere.

Verse 19. For this is thankworthy] If, in a conscientious discharge of your duty, you suffer evil, this is in the sight of God thankworthy, pleasing, and proper; it shows that you prefer his authority to your own ease, peace, and emolument.

Verse 20. For what glory is it] It appears from this that the poor Christians, and especially those who had been converted to Christianity while in a state of slavery, were often grievously abused.

Verse 21. Hereunto were ye called] Ye were called to a state of suffering when ye were called to be Christians; for the world cannot endure the yoke of Christ, and they that will live godly in Christ must suffer persecution; they will meet with it in one form or other.

Christ also suffered for us] And left us the example of his meekness and gentleness; for when he was reviled, he reviled not again.

Verse 22. Who did no sin] He suffered, but not on account of any evil he had either done or said. In deed and word he was immaculate, and yet he was exposed to suffering; expect the same, and when it comes, bear it in the same spirit.

Verse 23. But committed himself] Though he could have inflicted any kind of punishment on his persecutors, yet to give us, in this respect also, an example that we should follow his steps, he committed his cause to Him who is the righteous Judge.

Verse 24. Who his own self] Not another in his place, as some anciently supposed, because they thought it impossible that the Christ should suffer.

Bare our sins in his own body] Bore the punishment due to our sins. In no other sense could Christ bear them. To say that they were so imputed to him as if they had been his own, and that the Father beheld him as blackened with imputed sin, is monstrous, if not blasphemous.

That we, being dead to sins] That we, being freed from sin—delivered out of its power, and from under its tyranny.

24 ⁱWho his own self bare our sins in his own body ^jon the tree, ^kthat we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: ^lby whose stripes ye were healed.

25 For ^mye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned ⁿunto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls.

Should live unto righteousness] That righteousness should be our master now, as sin was before. He is speaking still to servants who were under an oppressive yoke, and were cruelly used by their masters, scourged, buffeted, and variously maltreated.

By whose stripes ye were healed] The apostle refers here to Isa. liii. 4-6; and he still keeps the case of these persecuted servants in view, and encourages them to suffer patiently by the example of Christ, who was buffeted and scourged, and who bore all this that the deep and inveterate wounds, inflicted on their souls by sin, might be healed.

Verse 25. For ye were as sheep going astray] Formerly ye were not in a better moral condition than your oppressors; ye were like stray sheep, in the wilderness of ignorance and sin, till Christ, the true and merciful Shepherd, called you back from your wanderings, by sending you the gospel of his grace.

Bishop of your souls.] Unless we consider the word bishop as a corruption of the word episcopos, and that this literally signifies an overseer, an inspector, or one that has the oversight, it can convey to us no meaning of the original. Jesus Christ is the Overseer of souls; he has them continually under his eye; he knows their wants, wishes, dangers, &c., and provides for them.

see that ye join modesty, chastity, and the purest manners, to the fear of God. Or perhaps fear is taken, as in Eph. v. 33, for the reverence due to the husband.

Verse 3. Whose adorning] See the note on Heb. ix. 1, where the word is defined; and also the note on Gen. ii. 1.

Plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold] Plaiting the hair, and variously folding it about the head, was the most ancient and most simple mode of disposing of this chief ornament of the female head. Thin plates of gold were often mixed with the hair, to make it appear more ornamental by the reflection of light and of the solar rays. Small golden buckles were also used in different parts; and among the Roman ladies, pearls and precious stones of different colours. But it is evident, from many remaining monuments, that in numerous cases the hair differently plaited and curled was the only ornament of the head. Often a simple pin, sometimes of ivory, pointed with gold, seemed to connect the plaits.

Verse 4. The hidden man of the heart] This phrase is of the same import with that of St. Paul, Rom. vii. 22, the inner man; that is, the soul, with the whole system of affections and passions. Every part of the Scripture treats man as a compound being: the body is the outward or visible man; the soul, the inward, hidden, or invisible man.

A meek and quiet spirit] That is, a mind that will not give provocation to others, nor receive irritation by the provocation of others. Meekness will prevent the first; quietness will guard against the last.

Great price] All the ornaments placed on the head and body of the most illustrious female are, in the sight of God, of no worth; but a meek and silent spirit are, in his sight, invaluable, because proceeding from and leading to himself, being incorruptible, surviving the ruins of the body and the ruins of time, and enduring eternally.

Verse 5. For after this manner] Simplicity reigned in primitive times; natural ornaments alone were then in use. Trade and commerce brought in luxuries; and luxury brought pride, and all the excessive nonsense of dress. No female head ever looks so well as when adorned with its own hair alone. This is the ornament appointed by God. To cut it off or to cover it is an unnatural practice; and to exchange the hair which God has given, for hair of some other colour, is an insult to the Creator.

Who trusted in God] The women who trust not in God are fond of dress and frippery; those who trust in God follow nature and common sense.

Being in subjection unto their own husbands] It will rarely be found that women who are fond of dress, and extravagant in it, have any subjection to their husbands but what comes from mere necessity. Indeed, their dress, which they intend as an attraction to the eyes of others, is a sufficient proof that they have neither love nor respect for their own husbands.

Verse 6. Even as Sara obeyed] The words of the apostle imply that she acknowledged his superiority, and her own subjection to him, in the order of God.

10 For ^g he that will love life, and see good days, ^h let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile:

11 Let him ⁱ eschew evil, and do good; ^j let him seek peace, and ensue it.

12 For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, ^k and his ears are open unto their prayers: but the face of the Lord is ^l against them that do evil.

13 ^m And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?

Whose daughters ye are] A son of Abraham is a true believer; a daughter of Sarah is the same.

As long as ye do well] For you cannot maintain your relationship to her longer than ye believe; and ye cannot believe longer than ye continue to obey.

And are not afraid with any amazement] It is difficult to extract any sense out of this clause. The original may be rendered, And not fearing with any terror. If ye do well, and act conscientiously your part as faithful wives, ye will at no time live under the distressing apprehension of being found out, or terrified at every appearance of the discovery of infidelities, or improper conduct. Being not guilty of these, you will not have occasion to fear detection.

Verse 7. Dwell with them according to knowledge] Give your wives, by no species of unkind carriage, any excuse for delinquency.

Giving honour unto the wife] The word signifies maintenance as well as respect—maintain, provide for the wife.

As—the weaker vessel] The female has what the man wants—beauty and delicacy. The male has what the female wants—courage and strength. The one is as good in its place as the other: and by these things God has made an equality between the man and the woman, so that there is properly very little superiority on either side.

That your prayers be not hindered] That ye may not be prevented, by disputes or misunderstandings, from uniting daily in that most important duty—family and social prayer.

Verse 8. Be ye all of one mind] Unity, both in the family and in the church, being essentially necessary to peace and salvation.

Having compassion] Being sympathetic; feeling for each other; bearing each other's burdens.

Love as brethren] Be lovers of the brethren.

Pitiful] Tender-hearted; let your bowels yearn over the distressed and afflicted.

Courteous] Be friendly-minded; acquire and cultivate a friendly disposition. But instead of this word, one which signifies be-humble-minded, is probably the true reading.

Verse 9. Ye are thereunto called] This is your calling—your business in life, to do good, and to do good for evil. And this is not only your duty, but your interest; for in so doing you shall obtain God's blessing, even life for evermore.

Verse 10. For he that will love life] Ps. xxxiv. 12-16. He who wishes to live long and prosperously, must act as he is here directed. 1. He must refrain from evil-speaking, lying, and slandering. 2. He must avoid flattery and fair speeches, which cover hypocritical or wicked intentions. 3. He must avoid evil, keep going away from evil. 4. He must do good; he must walk in the way of righteousness. 5. He must live peaceably with all men; seek peace where it has been lost; restore it where it has been broken; and pursue it where it seems to be flying away. And as excess in action and passion always tends to the shortening of life, and nothing preys on the constitution more than disorderly passions, he must live not only happiest, but longest, who avoids them.

Verse 12. The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous] That is, He is continually under God's notice and his care;

14 * But and if ye suffer for righteousness' sake, happy are ye : and ^b be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled ;

15 But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts ; and ^c be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and ^d fear :

16 * Having a good conscience ; ^e that, whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ.

17 For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing.

18 For Christ also hath ^f once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to 21 ^o The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of ^p the filth of the flesh, ^q but the answer of a good conscience towards God), ^r by the resurrection of Jesus Christ :

22 Who is gone into heaven, and ^s is on the right hand of God ; ^t angels and authorities and powers being made subject unto him.

God continually watches for him and watches over him, and he is under his constant protection.

And his ears are open unto their prayers] The original is very emphatic : The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears to their prayers.

But the face of the Lord] Far from his eye being upon them, or his ear open to their requests (for prayer they have none), his face, his approbation, his providence and blessing, are turned away from them ; and he only looks upon them to abhor them, and to turn the arm of his justice against them.

Verse 13. Who is he that will harm you] Is it possible that a man can be wretched who has God for his friend ?

If ye be followers, &c.] If ye be imitators of the Good One, i.e., of God. The Good One, is one of God's prime epithets, see Matt. xix. 17, and Satan is distinguished by the reverse, the EVIL one, Matt. xxiii. 19, where see the notes. [The true reading of this passage, according to the best MSS., &c., is, be ye zealous of that which is good.]

Verse 14. But and if ye suffer] God may permit you to be tried and persecuted for righteousness' sake, but this cannot essentially harm you ; he will press even this into your service, and make it work for your good.

Happy are ye] This seems to refer to Matt. v. 10, &c.

Be not afraid of their terror] Fear not their fear. See Isa. viii. 12. Sometimes fear is put for the object of a man's religious worship. See Gen. xxi. 42 ; Prov. i. 26 ; and the place in Isaiah just quoted. The exhortation may mean, Fear not their gods, they can do you no hurt ; and supposing that they curse you by them, yet be not troubled ; " He who fears God need have no other fear." [A better sense is : be not afraid with the fear which they endeavour to inspire.]

Verse 15. But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts] To sanctify God may signify to offer him the praises due to his grace ; but as to sanctify literally signifies to make holy, it is impossible that God should be thus sanctified. We have often already seen that this word signifies to separate from earth, that is, from any common use or purpose, that the thing or person thus separated may be devoted to a sacred use. Perhaps we should understand Peter's words thus : Entertain just notions of God ; of his nature, power, will, justice, goodness, and truth. Do not conceive of him as being actuated by such passions as men ; separate him in your hearts from everything earthly, human, fickle, rigidly severe, or capriciously merciful. Consider the goodness of his nature ; for goodness, in every possible state of perfection and infinitude, belongs to him. By so doing, you separate him from all that is imperfect, human, evil, capricious, changeable, and unkind.

Instead of God, many MSS. and Versions read CHRIST. Sanctify Christ in your hearts. [This is the true reading ; and the passage evidently bears a much simpler meaning than that which is here suggested.]

A reason of the hope] An account of your hope of the resurrection of the dead and eternal life in God's glory. This was the great object of their hope, as Christ was the grand object of their faith.

With meekness and fear] Several excellent MSS. add the word but here, and it improves the sense considerably. Do not permit your readiness to answer, nor the confidence you have in the goodness of your cause, to lead you to answer perty or superciliously to any person ; defend the truth with all possible gentleness and fear.

Verse 16. Having a good conscience] The testimony of God in your own soul, that in simplicity and godly sincerity you have your conversation in the world.

Verse 18. Christ also hath once suffered] See the notes on Rom. v. 6 ; Heb. ix. 28.

Put to death in the flesh] In his human nature.

But quickened by the Spirit] That very dead body revived by the power of his divinity.

Verse 19. By which] Spirit, his own divine energy and authority.

He went and preached] By the ministry of Noah, one hundred and twenty years.

Unto the spirits in prison] The inhabitants of the antediluvian world, who, having been disobedient, and convicted of the most flagrant transgressions against God, were sentenced by his just law to destruction. But their punishment was delayed to see if they would repent ; and the long-suffering of God waited one hundred and twenty years, which were granted to them for this purpose ; during which time, as criminals tried and convicted, they are represented as being in prison—detained under the arrest of divine justice, which waited either for their repentance or the expiration of the respite, that the punishment pronounced might be inflicted. This I have long believed to be the sense of this difficult passage, and no other that I have seen is so consistent with the whole scope of the place. [It is scarcely necessary to say that great difficulties beset every interpretation of this passage.]

Verse 20. Were saved by water.] While the ark was preparing, only Noah's family believed ; these amounted to eight persons ; and these only were saved from the deluge, on the water ; all the rest perished in the water ; though many of them, while the rains descended, and the waters daily increased, did undoubtedly humble themselves before God, call for mercy, and receive it ; but as they had not repented at the preaching of Noah, and the ark was now closed, and the fountains of the great deep broken up, they lost their lives, though God might have extended mercy to their souls.

Verse 21. The like figure whereunto, &c.] But was it the deluge itself, or the ark, or the being saved by that ark from the deluge, that was the antitype of which St. Peter speaks ? Noah and his family were saved by water, i.e., it was the instrument of their being saved through the good providence of God. So the water of baptism, typifying the regenerating influence of the Holy Spirit, is the means of salvation to all those who receive this Holy Spirit in its quickening, cleansing efficacy. Now, as the waters of the flood could not have saved Noah and his family, had they not made use of the ark, so the water of baptism saves no man, but it is the means of his getting his heart purified by the Holy Spirit, and typifying to him that purification. The ark was not immersed in the water ; had it been so they must all have perished ; but it was borne up on the water, and sprinkled with the rain that fell from heaven. This text, as far as I can see, says nothing in behalf of immersion in baptism; but is rather, from the circumstances mentioned above, in favour of sprinkling. In either case it is not the sprinkling, washing, or cleansing the body, that can be of any avail to the salvation of the soul, but the answer of a good conscience towards God—the internal evidence and external proof that the soul is purified in the laver of regeneration, and the person enabled to walk in newness of life. We are therefore strongly cautioned here, not to rest in the letter, but to look for the substance. Verse 22. Who is gone into heaven] Having given the fullest proof of his resurrection from the dead, and of his having accomplished the end for which he came into the world.

On the right hand of God] In the place of the highest dignity, honour, and influence.

Angels and authorities and powers] That is, all creatures and beings, both in the heavens and in the earth, are put under subjection to Jesus Christ.

CHAPTER IV.

We should suffer patiently, after the example of Christ, 1. And no longer live according to our former custom, but disregard the scoffs of those who are incensed against us because we have forsaken their evil ways, who are shortly to give account to God for their conduct, 2-5. How the gospel was preached to Jews and Gentiles, 6. As the end of all things was at hand, they should be sober, watchful, charitable, benevolent, good stewards of the bounty of Providence; and, when called to instruct others, speak as the oracles of God, 7-11. Of the persecutions and trials which were coming upon them, and how they were to suffer so as not to disgrace their Christian character, 12-16. Judgment was about to begin at the house of God, and even the righteous would escape with difficulty from the calamities coming upon the Jews; but they must continue in well doing, and thus commit the keeping of their souls to their faithful Creator, 17-19.

FORASMUCH then ^aas Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for ^bhe that hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sin;

2 ^cThat he no longer ^dshould live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, ^ebut to the will of God.

3 ^fFor the time past of our life may suffice us

Verse 1. As Christ hath suffered] He is your proper pattern; have the same disposition he had; the same forgiving spirit, with meekness, gentleness, and complete self-possession.

He that hath suffered in the flesh, hath ceased from sin] This is a general maxim, if understood literally: The man who suffers generally reflects on his ways, is humbled, fears approaching death, loathes himself because of his past iniquities, and ceases from them; for, in a state of suffering, the mind loses its relish for the sins of the flesh, because they are embittered to him through the apprehension which he has of death and judgment; and on his application to God's mercy, he is delivered from his sin.

Verse 2. That he no longer should live—in the flesh] Governed by the base principle of giving up his faith to save his life; to the lusts of men—according to the will of his idolatrous persecutors; but to the will of God; which will of God is, that he should retain the truth, and live according to its dictates, though he should suffer for it.

Verse 3. The time past of our life] This is a complete epitome of the Gentile or heathen state, and a proof that those had been Gentiles to whom the apostle wrote. With this monstrous wickedness Christianity had everywhere to struggle.

Verse 4. They think it strange] They wonder and are astonished at you, that ye can renounce these gratifications of the flesh for a spiritual something, the good of which they cannot see.

^gto have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revelings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries:

4 Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, ^hspeaking evil of you:

Excess of riot] Flood of profligacy, bearing down all rule, order, and restraints before it.

Speaking evil of you] Literally, blaspheming, i.e., speaking impiously against God, and calumniously of you.

Verse 5. To judge the quick and the dead] They shall give account of the irregularities to Him who is prepared to judge both the Jews and the Gentiles. [This can scarcely be the meaning of the phrase.]

Verse 6. Was the gospel preached also to them that are dead] There are as many different translations of this verse, and comments upon it, as there are translators and commentators.

But if the apostle had the same fact in view which he mentions, chap. iii. 19, 20, then the antediluvians are the persons intended: For this cause, that Christ is prepared to judge the quick and the dead, and to dispense righteous judgment in consequence of having afforded them every necessary advantage, was the gospel preached by Noah to them also who are dead—the antediluvian world, then dead in trespasses and sins, and condemned to death by the righteous judgment of God; but in his great compassion he afforded them a respite, that though they were condemned as men in the flesh, yet, hearing this gospel by Noah, they may believe, and live according to God in the spirit—live a blessed life in eternity according to the mercy of God, who sent his Spirit to strive with them.

Verse 7. But the end of all things is at hand] I think that here also St. Peter keeps the history of the deluge before also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.

7 But ^a the end of all things is at hand: ^b be ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer.

8 ^c And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for ^d charity ^e shall cover the multitude of sins.

9 ^f Use hospitality one to another ^g without grudging.

10 ^h As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, ⁱ as good stewards of ^j the manifold grace of God.

11 ^k If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; ^l if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that ^m God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ; ⁿ to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

his eyes, finding a parallel to the state of the Jews in his own time in that of the antediluvians in the days of Noah.

If these words could be taken in any general sense, then we might say to every present generation, The end of all things is at hand; the end of all the good which the wicked enjoy, and the end of all the evil which the righteous suffer.

Be—sober, and watch unto prayer. Be sober—make a prudent and moderate use of all you possess; and watch against all occasions of sin; and pray for the supporting hand of God to be upon you for good.

Verse 8. Have fervent charity. Intense love; for love shall cover a multitude of sins. A loving disposition leads us to pass by the faults of others, to forgive offences against ourselves, and to excuse and lessen, as far as is consistent with truth, the transgressions of men. It does not mean that our love to others will induce God to pardon our offences.

Verse 9. Use hospitality. Be ever ready to divide your bread with the hungry, and succour the stranger.

Without grudging. Without grumbings. Do nothing merely because it is commanded; but do it from love to God and man; then it will be without grumbling.

Verse 10. Hath received the gift. A gift; any blessing of providence or grace. I cannot think that the word means here the Holy Ghost, or any of his supernatural gifts or influences; it may include those, but it signifies anything given by the mercy and bounty of God: but perhaps in this place it may signify some or any office in the church; and this sense, indeed, the connexion seems to require.

Stewards of the manifold grace. Whatever gifts or endowments any man may possess, they are, properly speaking, not his own; they are the Lord's property, and to be employed in his work, and to promote his glory.

Verse 11. If any man speak. In order to explain or enforce God's word, and edify his neighbour, let him do it as those did to whom the living oracles were committed; they spoke as they were inspired by the Holy Ghost. This command is sent to every man upon earth in holy orders, in pretended holy orders, or pretending to holy orders.

Of the ability which God giveth. Perhaps the ministering here may refer to the care of the poor, and the ability is the quantum of means which God has placed in their hands; and they are to minister this as coming immediately from God, and lead the minds of the poor to consider him as their benefactor, that he in all things may be glorified through Christ Jesus.

Verse 12. Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial.

of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy.

14 ^a If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: ^b on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified.

15 But ^c let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, ^d or as a busy-body in other men's matters.

16 Yet if ^e any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; ^f but let him glorify God on this behalf.

17 For the time is come ^g that judgment must begin at the house of God: and ^h if it first begin at us, ⁱ what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?

18 ^j And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

19 Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God ^k commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator.

The burning. St. Peter returns here to what he had often touched upon in this epistle, namely, to exhort the Christians to behave with patience and integrity under their present severe persecution.

Verse 14. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ. To be reproached for the name of Christ is to be reproached for being a Christian, that is, for being like Christ. This is the highest honour to which any man can arrive in this world, and therefore the apostle says to such, Happy are ye.

The spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you. As this Divine Spirit rested upon Jesus, so does it rest upon his persecuted followers. So that what constituted them unhappy in the sight of the world was the chief happiness in the sight of God; they carried Christ, the fountain of blessedness, in their heart, and therefore could not be unhappy.

On their part he is evil spoken of. By them he is blasphemed, by you he is honoured.

Verse 15. But let none of you suffer—as a busybody in other men's matters. The inspector of another; meddling with other people's concerns, and forgetting their own; such persons are hated by all men.

Verse 16. Yet if—as a Christian. If he be persecuted because he has embraced the Christian faith; let him not be ashamed, but let him rather glorify God on this very account. Christ suffered by the Jews because he was holy; Christians suffer because they resemble him.

The word Christian is used only here and in Acts xi. 26, xvi. 23.

Verse 17. Judgment must begin at the house of God. Our Lord had predicted that, previously to the destruction of Jerusalem, his own followers would have to endure various calamities. See Matt. xxiv. 9, 21, 22; Mark xiii. 12, 13; John xvi. 2, &c. Here true disciples are called the house or family of God.

And if it first begin at us. Jews, who have repented, and believed on the Son of God; what shall the end be of them—the Jews who continue impenitent, and obey not the gospel of God? [The force of this passage is weakened by any interpretation which limits the word judgment to the destruction of Jerusalem.]

Verse 18. And if the righteous scarcely be saved. If it shall be with extreme difficulty that the Christians shall escape from Jerusalem, when the Roman armies shall come against it with the full commission to destroy it, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

ousness' sake; and who, being reviled, reviles not again. Commit the keeping of their souls] Place their lives confidently in his hand, who, being their Creator, will also be their preserver, and keep that safely which is committed to his trust.

But they had no reason to hope that he would care for their lives and souls unless they continued in well doing. He who is employed in God's work will have God's protection. The path of duty ever was, and ever will be, the only way of safety.

CHAPTER V.

Directions to the elders to feed the flock of God, and not to be lords over God's heritage, that, when the Chief Shepherd does appear, they may receive a crown of glory. 1-4. The young are to submit themselves to the elder, and to humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, and cast all their care upon him. 5-7. They should be sober and watchful, because their adversary the devil is continually seeking their destruction, whom they are to resist, steadfast in the faith, 8, 9. They are informed that the God of all grace had called them to his eternal glory, 10, 11. Of Silvanus, by whom this epistle was sent, 12. Salutations from the Church at Babylon, 13. The apostolic benediction, 14.

Verse 1. The elders which are among you] In this place, the term elders or presbyters is the name of an office. They were as pastors or shepherds of the flock of God, the Christian people among whom they lived. They were the same as bishops, presidents, teachers, and deacons, Acts xiv. 23; 1 Tim. v. 17. And that these were the same as bishops, the next verse proves.

Who am also an elder] A fellow-elder; one on a level with yourselves. Had he been what the Pope of Rome says he was—the prince of the apostles, and head of the church, and what they affect to be, could he have spoken of himself as he here does? It is true that the Roman Pontiffs, in all their bulls, style themselves servus servorum Dei, servant of the servants of God, while each affects to be rex regum, king of kings, and vicar of Jesus Christ. But the Popes and the scriptures never agree.

A witness of the sufferings of Christ] He was with Christ in the garden; he was with him when he was apprehended, and he was with him in the high-priest's hall. Whether he followed him to the cross we know not.

A partaker of the glory] He had a right to it through the blood of the Lamb; he had a blessed anticipation of it by the power of the Holy Ghost; and he had the promise from his Lord and Master that he should be with him in heaven, to behold his glory, John xvii. 21, 24.

Verse 2. Feed the flock] Do not fleece the flock.

Taking the oversight] Discharging the office of bishops or superintendents. This is another proof that bishop and presbyter were the same order in the apostolic times, though afterwards they were made distinct.

Not by constraint] The office was laborious and dangerous, especially in those times of persecution.

Not for filthy lucre] Could the office of a bishop, in those early days, and in the time of persecution, be a lucrative office? Does not the Spirit of God lead the apostle to speak these things rather for posterity than for that time? See the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 8.

4 And when ¹the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive ^ma crown of glory ⁿthat fadeth not away.

5 Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, ^oall of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for ^pGod resisteth the proud, and ^qgiveth grace to the humble.

6 Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

2 Cor. i. 24.—¹ Ps. xxxii. 12. lxxiv. 2.—^m Phil. iii. 17. 2 Thess. iii. 9. 1 Tim. iv. 12. Tit. ii. 7.—ⁿ Heb. xii. 20.—^o 1 Cor. ix. 25. 2 Tim. iv. 8. James i. 12.—^p Chri. 4.—^q Rom. xii. 10. Eph. v. 21. Phil. ii. 3.—^r James iv. 6.—^s Isa. lvi. 15. lxxi. 2.—^t James iv. 10.

But of a ready mind] Doing all for Christ's sake, and through love to immortal souls.

Verse 3. Neither as being lords over God's heritage] This is the voice of St. Peter in his Catholic epistle to the Catholic Church! According to him there are to be no lords over God's heritage, the bishops and presbyters who are appointed by the head of the church are to feed the flock, to guide and to defend it, not to fleece and waste it; and they are to look for their reward in another world, and in the approbation of God in their consciences. And in humility, self-abasement, self-renunciation, and heavenly-mindedness, they are to be ensamples, types to the flock, moulds of a heavenly form, into which the spirits and lives of the flock may be cast, that they may come out after a perfect pattern.

Verse 4. When the chief Shepherd] That is, the Lord Jesus Christ, whose is the flock, and who provides the pasture, and from whom, if ye are legally called to the most awful work of preaching the gospel, ye have received your commission.

Verse 5. Likewise, ye younger] This probably means inferiors, or those not in sacred offices; and may be understood as referring to the people at large who are called to obey them that have the rule over them in the Lord. In this sense our Lord, it appears, uses the word, Luke xxii. 26.

Be subject one to another] Strive all to serve each other; let the pastors strive to serve the people, and the people the pastors; and let there be no contention, but who shall do most to oblige and profit all the rest.

Be clothed with humility] To be clothed with a thing or person is a Greek mode of speech for being that thing or person with which a man is said to be clothed. Be ye truly humble; and let your outward garb and conduct be a proof of the humility of your hearts.

Verse 6. Humble yourselves] Those who submit patiently to the dispensations of God's providence, he lifts up; those who lift themselves up, God thrusts down.

Verse 7. Casting all your care] Your anxiety, your dis-

7 ^a Casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you.

8 ^b Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour:

9 ^d Whom resist, steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

10 But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

trusting care on him, for he careth for you, for he meddles or concerns himself with the things that interest you. What-ever things concern a follower of God, whether they be spiritual or temporal, or whether in themselves great or small, God concerns himself with them; what affects them affects him; in all their afflictions he is afflicted.

Verse 8. Be sober] Avoid drunkenness of your senses, and drunkenness in your souls; be not overcharged with the concerns of the world.

Be vigilant] Awake, and keep awake; be always watchful; never be off your guard; your enemies are alert, they are never off theirs.

Your adversary the devil] This is the reason why ye should be sober and vigilant; ye have an ever active, implacable, subtle enemy to contend with.

As a roaring lion] Satan tempts under three forms: 1. The subtle serpent; to beguile our senses, pervert our judgment, and enchant our imagination. 2. As an angel of light, to deceive us with false views of spiritual things, refinements in religion, and presumption on the providence and grace of God. 3. As a roaring lion, to bear us down, and destroy us by violent opposition, persecution, and death.

Walketh about] Traversing the earth; a plain reference to Job ii. 2, which see.

Seeking whom he may devour] Whom he may gulp down.

Verse 9. Whom resist] Stand against him. Though invulnerable, he is not unconquerable: the weakest follower of God can confound and overpower him, if he continue steadfast in the faith—believing on the Son of God, and walking uprightly before him. To a soul thus engaged he can do no damage.

The same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren] It is the lot of all the disciples of Christ to suffer persecution.

Verse 10. But the God of all grace] The Fountain of infinite compassion, mercy, and goodness.

Who hath called us] By the preaching of the gospel.

Unto his eternal glory] To the infinite felicity of the heavenly state.

By Christ Jesus] Through the merit of his passion and death, by the influence of his Holy Spirit, by the precepts of his gospel, and by the splendour of his own example.

After that ye have suffered a while] Having suffered a little time; that is, while ye are enduring these persecutions, God will cause all to work together for your good.

Make you perfect, &c.] All these words are read in the future tense by the best MSS. and Versions.

He will make you perfect] Put you in complete joint as the timbers of a building.

Stablish] Make you firm in every part; adapt you strongly to each other, so that you may be mutual supports, the whole building being one in the Lord.

11 ¹ To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

12 ^k By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose, I have written briefly, exhorting, and testifying that this is the true grace of God wherein ye stand.

13 The church that is at Babylon, elected together with you saluteth you; and so doth Marcus my son.

13 ^o Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity. Peace be with you all that are in Christ Jesus. Amen.

Strengthen] Cramp and bind every part, so that there shall be no danger of warping, splitting, or falling.

Settle] Cause all to rest so evenly and firmly upon the best and surest foundation, that ye may grow together to a holy temple in the Lord: in a word, that ye may be complete in all the mind that was in Christ; supported in all your trials and difficulties; strengthened to resist and overcome all your enemies; and, after all, abide, firmly founded, in the truth of grace. All these phrases are architectural; and the apostle has again in view the fine image which he produced, chap. ii. 5, where see the notes.

Verse 12. By Silvanus, a faithful brother unto you, as I suppose] I see no reason why the clause may not thus be translated: I have written to you, as I consider, briefly, by Silvanus, the faithful brother. But if the words as I suppose be applied to Silvanus, they must be taken in a sense in which they are often used: "I conclude him to be a trustworthy person: one by whom I may safely send this letter; who will take care to travel through the different regions in Asia, Pontus, Galatia, and Bithynia; read it in every church; and leave a copy for the encouragement and instruction of Christ's flock."

Exhorting] Calling upon you to be faithful, humble, and steady.

And testifying] Earnestly witnessing, that it is the true grace—the genuine gospel of Jesus Christ, in which ye stand, and in which ye should persevere to the end.

Verse 13. The church that is at Babylon] After considering all that has been said by learned men and critics on this place, I am quite of opinion that the apostle does not mean Babylon in Egypt, nor Jerusalem, nor Rome, as figurative Babylon, but the ancient celebrated Babylon in Assyria, which was the metropolis of the eastern dispersion of the Jews.

Elected together with you] Fellow elect, or elected jointly with you. Probably meaning that they, and the believers at Babylon, received the gospel about the same time. On the election of those to whom St. Peter wrote, see the notes on chap. i. 2.

And—Marcus my son] This is supposed to be the same person who is mentioned, Acts xii. 12, and who is known by the name of John Mark; he was sister's son to Barnabas, Col. iv. 10, his mother's name was Mary, and he is the same who wrote the gospel that goes under his name. He is called here Peter's son, i.e., according to the faith, Peter having been probably the means of his conversion. This is very likely, as Peter seems to have been intimate at his mother's house.

Verse 14. Greet ye one another with a kiss of charity] See the notes on Rom. xvi. 16, and on 1 Cor. xvi. 20.

Peace be with you all] May all prosperity, spiritual and temporal, be with all that are in Christ Jesus—that are truly converted to him, and live in his Spirit obedient to his will.

THE SECOND GENERAL EPISTLE

OF

P E T E R

CHAPTER I.

The apostolical address, and the persons to whom the epistle was sent described by the state into which God had called, and in which he had placed, them, 1-4. What graces they should possess, in order to be fruitful in the knowledge of God, 5-8. The miserable state of those who either have not these graces, or have fallen from them, 9. Believers should give diligence to make their calling and election sure, 10, 11. The apostle's intimation of his speedy dissolution, and his wish to confirm and establish those churches in the true faith, 12-15. The certainty of the gospel, and the convincing evidence which the apostle had of its truth from being present at the transfiguration, by which the word of prophecy was made more sure, 16-19. How the prophecies came, and their nature, 20, 21.

SIMON PETER, apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained ^b like precious faith with us, through the righteousness ^c of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.

2 ^d Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord.

^a Or, Symeon. Acts xv. 14.—^b Rom. i. 12. 2 Cor. iv. 13. Eph. iv. 5. Tit. i. 4.—^c Gr. of our God and Saviour. Tit. ii. 13.—^d Dan. iv. i. vi. 25. 1 Pet. i. 2. Jude 2.—^e John xvii. 3.—^f 1 Thess. ii. 12.

[The authenticity of the Second Epistle of St. Peter does not rest on evidence so strong as that on which the authenticity of his First Epistle stands. There are few references to it, if indeed there be any of a positive character, in the writings of the Fathers. The style is different from that of the former epistle, and its remarkable similarity to the Epistle of St. Jude has been viewed as a questionable feature. It was not admitted into the Canon until the year 393, at the Council of Hippo. But these difficulties, although considerable, are not of sufficient weight to warrant the rejection of the Epistle. Strong arguments on the other side sanction the judgment of the early Church and that of more recent critics of unchallenged competence, in accepting it as authentic.]

Verse 1. Simon Peter] Symeon is the reading of almost all the Versions, and of all the most important MSS. And this is the more remarkable, as the surname of Peter occurs upwards of seventy times in the New Testament, and is invariably read Simon, except here and in Acts xv. 14, where James gives him the name of Symeon.

And an apostle] Commissioned immediately by Jesus Christ himself to preach to the Gentiles, and to write these epistles for the edification of the Church. As the writer was an apostle, the epistle is therefore canonical.

Precious faith] Valuable faith; faith worth a great price, and faith which cost a great price. The word precious is used in the low religious phraseology for dear, comfortable, delightful, &c.; but how much is the dignity of the subject let down by expressions and meanings more proper for the nursery than for the noble science of salvation.

With us] God having given to you—believing Gentiles,

3 According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, ^a through the knowledge of him ^b that hath called us ^c to glory and virtue:

4 ^b Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be ^c partakers of the divine nature, ^d having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

iv. 7. 2 Thess. ii. 14. 2 Tim. i. 9. 1 Pet. ii. 9. iii. 9.—^a Or, by.—^b 2 Cor. vii. 1.—^c 2 Cor. iii. 18. Eph. iv. 24. Heb. xii. 10. 1 John iii. 2.—^d Ch. ii. 18, 20.

the same faith and salvation which he had given to us—believing Jews.

Through the righteousness of God] Through his method of bringing a lost world, both Jews and Gentiles, to salvation by Jesus Christ; through his gracious impartiality, providing for Gentiles as well as Jews.

Of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.] This is not a proper translation of the original, which is literally, Of our God and Saviour Jesus Christ; and this reading, which is indicated in the margin, should have been received into the text; and it is an absolute proof that St. Peter calls Jesus Christ God, even in the properest sense of the word, with the article prefixed.

Verse 2. Grace] God's favour; peace—the effects of that favour in the communication of spiritual and temporal blessings.

Through the knowledge of God] By the acknowledging of God, and of Jesus our Lord. For those who acknowledge him in all their ways he will direct their steps.

Verse 3. As his divine power] His power, which no power can resist because it is divine—that which properly belongs to the infinite Godhead.

Hath given unto us] Hath endowed us with the gifts; or, hath gifted us.

By life and godliness we may understand, 1. a godly life; or, 2. eternal life as the end, and godliness the way to it; or, 3. what was essentially necessary for the present life, food, raiment, &c., and what was requisite for the life to come.

That hath called us to glory and virtue] To virtue or courage as the means; and glory—the kingdom of heaven, as the end.

5 And beside this, ^a giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue ^b knowledge;

6 And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness;

7 And to godliness brotherly kindness; and ^c to brotherly kindness charity.

8 For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be ^d barren ^e nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

9 But he that lacketh these things ^f is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was ^g purged from his old sins.

10 Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence ^h to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ⁱ ye shall never fall.

^aCh. iii. 18.—^b1 Pet. iii. 7.—^cGal. vi. 10. 1 Thess. iii. 12. v. 15. 1 John iv. 21.—^dGr. idle.—^eJohn xv. 2. Tit. iii. 14.—^f1 John ii. 9, 11.—^gEph. v. 26. Heb. ix. 14. 1 John i. 7.—^h1 John iii. 19.—ⁱCh. iii. 17.—^jRom. xv. 14, 15. Phil. iii. 1. Ch. iii. 1.

But there is a various reading here which is of considerable importance, and which, from the authorities by which it is supported, appears to be genuine. Through the knowledge of him who hath called us by his own glory and power, or by his own glorious power.

Verse 4. Whereby are given unto us] By his own glorious power he hath freely given unto us exceeding great and invaluable promises.

That by these ye might be partakers] The object of all God's promises and dispensations was to bring fallen man back to the image of God, which he had lost. This, indeed, is the sum and substance of the religion of Christ. We have partaken of an earthly, sensual, and devilish nature; the design of God by Christ is to remove this, and to make us partakers of the divine nature; and save us from all the corruption in principle and fact which is in the world; the source of which is lust, irregular, unreasonable, inordinate, and impure desire; desire to have, to do, and to be, what God has prohibited, and what would be ruinous and destructive to us were the desire to be granted.

Verse 5. And beside this] Notwithstanding what God hath done for you, in order that ye may not receive the grace of God in vain;

Giving all diligence] Furnishing all earnestness and activity: the original is very emphatic.

Add to your faith] Lead up hand in hand; alluding, as most think, to the chorus in the Grecian dance, who danced with joined hands.

Your faith.—That faith in Jesus by which ye have been led to embrace the whole gospel, and by which ye have the evidence of things unseen.

Virtue] Courage or fortitude, to enable you to profess the faith before men, in these times of persecution.

Knowledge] True wisdom, by which your faith will be increased, and your courage directed and preserved from degenerating into rashness.

Verse 6. Temperance] A proper and limited use of all earthly enjoyments, keeping every sense under proper restraints, and never permitting the animal part to subjugate the rational.

Patience] Bearing all trials and difficulties with an even mind, enduring in all, and persevering through all.

Godliness] Piety towards God; a deep reverential religious fear; not only worshipping God with every becoming outward act, but adoring, loving, and magnifying him in the heart: a disposition indispensably necessary to salvation, but exceedingly rare among professors.

Verse 7. Brotherly kindness] Love of the brotherhood—the strongest attachment to Christ's flock; feeling each as a member of your own body.

Charity] Love to the whole human race, even to your persecutors: love to God and the brethren they had; love to all mankind they must also have.

Verse 8. For if these things be in you, and abound] The common translation is here very unhappy: barren and unfruitful certainly convey the same idea; but idle or inactive, which is the proper sense, takes away this tautology, and restores the sense.

Verse 9. But he that lacketh these things] He, whether 11 For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

12 Wherefore ¹ I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, ² though ye know them, and be established in the present truth.

13 Yea, I think it meet, as ³ long as I am in this tabernacle, ⁴ to stir you up by putting you in remembrance;

14 ⁵ Knowing that shortly I must put off ⁶ this my tabernacle, even as ⁷ our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me.

15 Moreover, I will endeavour that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance.

16 For we have not followed ⁸ cunningly devised

1 John ii. 21. Jude 5.—¹1 Pet. v. 12. Ch. iii. 17.—²2 Cor. v. 1, 4.—³Ch. iii. 1.—⁴See Dent. iv. 21, 22. xxxi. 14. 2 Tim. iv. 6.—⁵John xxi. 18, 19.—⁶1 Cor. i. 17. ii. 1, 4. 2 Cor. ii. 17. iv. 2.

Jew or Gentile, who professes to have FAITH in God, and has not added to that FAITH fortitude, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and universal love, is blind; his understanding is darkened, and cannot see afar off, shutting his eyes against the light, winking, not able to look truth in the face, nor to behold that God whom he once knew was reconciled to him: and thus it appears he is wilfully blind, and having grieved the Holy Spirit by not showing forth the virtues of him who called him into his marvellous light, he has lost the testimony of his sonship; and then, darkness and hardness having taken the place of light and filial confidence, he first calls all his former experience into doubt, and questions whether he has not put enthusiasm in the place of religion.

Verse 10. Wherefore] Seeing the danger of apostasy, and the fearful end of them who obey not the gospel, and thus receive the grace of God in vain; give all diligence, hasten, be deeply careful, labour with the most intense purpose of soul.

And election] Your being chosen, in consequence of obeying the heavenly calling, to be the people and Church of God.

For if ye do these things] We find, therefore, that they who do not these things shall fall; and thus we see that there is nothing absolute and unconditional in their election.

Verse 11. For so an entrance shall be ministered] There seems to be here an allusion to the triumphs granted by the Romans to their generals who had distinguished themselves by putting an end to a war, or doing some signal military service to the State.

Verse 12. Wherefore I will not be negligent] He had already written one epistle, this is the second; and probably he meditated more should be spared.

Verse 13. As long as I am in this tabernacle] By tabernacle we are to understand his body; and hence several of the Versions have body instead of tabernacle. Peter's mode of speaking is very remarkable: as long as I AM in this tabernacle; so then the body was not Peter, but Peter dwelt in that body.

Verse 14. Knowing that shortly I must put off] St Peter plainly refers to the conversation between our Lord and himself, related John xxi. 18, 19. And it is likely that he had now a particular intimation that he was shortly to seal the truth with his blood.

Verse 15. After my decease] After my going out, i.e., of his tabernacle. The real Peter was not open to the eye, nor palpable to the touch; he was concealed in that tabernacle vulgarly supposed to be Peter.

Verse 16. Cunningly devised fables] I think, from the apostle's using eye-witnesses, or rather beholders, in the end of the verse, it is probable that he means those cunningly devised fables among the heathens, concerning the appearance of their gods on earth in human form. And to gain the greater credit to these fables, the priests and statesmen instituted what they called the mysteries of the gods, in which the fabulous appearance of the gods was represented in mystic shows. But one particular show none but the fully initiated were permitted to behold; hence they were entitled beholders. To this it was natural enough for St.

fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but ^awere eye-witnesses of his majesty.

17 For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, ^bThis is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

18 And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in ^cthe holy mount.

^a Matt. xvii. 1, 2. Mark ix. 2. John i. 14. 1 John i. 1. iv. 14. —^b Matt. iii. 17. xvii. 5. Mark i. 11. ix. 7. Luke iii. 22. ix. 35.—^c See Exod. iii. 5. Josh. v. 15. Matt. xvii. 1.—^d Ps.

Peter to allude, when speaking about the transfiguration of Christ. Here the indescribably resplendent majesty of the great God was manifested, as far as it could be, in conjunction with that human body in which the fulness of the divinity dwelt. And we, says the apostle, were beholders of his own majesty.

Verse 18. And this voice—we heard] That is, himself, James, and John heard it, and saw this glory; for these only were the beholders on the holy mount. It is worthy of remark that our blessed Lord, who came to give a new law to mankind, appeared on this holy mount with splendour and great glory, as God did when he came on the holy Mount Sinai to give the old law to Moses. And when the voice came from the excellent glory, This is my Son, the beloved One, in whom I have delighted; hear him: the authority of the old law was taken away.

Verse 19. We have also a more sure word of prophecy] We have the prophetic doctrine more firm or more confirmed; for in this sense the word is used in several places in the New Testament. This is the literal sense of the passage in question; and this sense removes that ambiguity from the text which has given rise to so many different interpretations. Taken according to the common translation, it seems to say that prophecy is a surer evidence of 19 We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto ^aa light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and ^bthe day-star arise in your hearts:

20 Knowing this first, that ^cno prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation.

21 For ^dthe prophecy came not ^ein old time by the will of man: ^fbut holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

cxix. 1st. John v. 35.—^a Rev. ii. 28. xxii. 16. See 2 Cor. iv. 4, 6. —^b Rom. xii. 6.—^c 2 Tim. iii. 16. 1 Pet. i. 11.—^d Or, at any time.—^e 2 Sam. xxii. 2. Luke i. 70. Acts i. 16. iii. 18.

divine revelation than miracles; and so it has been understood.

Verse 20. Knowing this first] Considering this as a first principle, that no prophecy of the scripture, whether that referred to above, or any other, is of any private interpretation—proceeds from the prophet's own knowledge or invention, or was the offspring of calculation or conjecture. The word signifies also impetus, impulse; and probably this is the best sense here; not by the mere private impulse of his own mind.

Verse 21. For the prophecy came not in old time] That is, in any former time, by the will of man—by a man's own searching, conjecture, or calculation; but holy men of God—persons separated from the world, and devoted to God's service, spoke, moved by the Holy Ghost. So far were they from inventing these prophetic declarations concerning Christ, or any future event, that they were carried away, out of themselves and out of the whole region, as it were, of human knowledge and conjecture, by the Holy Ghost, who without their knowing anything of the matter, dictated to them what to speak, and what to write; and so far above their knowledge were the words of the prophecy, that they did not even know the intent of those words.

CHAPTER II.

False teachers foretold, who shall bring in destructive doctrines and shall pervert many, but at last be destroyed by the judgments of God, 1-3. Instances of God's judgments in the rebellious angels, 4. In the antediluvians, 5. In the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, 6-8. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly, as well as to punish the ungodly, 9. The character of those seducing teachers and their disciples; they are unclean, presumptuous, speak evil of dignities, adulterous, covetous, and cursed, 10-14. Have forsaken the right way, copy the conduct of Balaam, speak great swelling words, and pervert those who had escaped from error, 15-19. The miserable state of those who, having escaped the corruption that is in the world, have turned back like the dog to his vomit, and the washed swine to her wallowing in the mire, 20-22.

BUT ^athere were false prophets also among the people, even as ^bthere shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even ^cdenying the Lord ^dthat bought them, ^eand bring upon themselves swift destruction.

2 And many shall follow their ^fpernicious ways;

Verse 1. As there shall be false teachers among you] At a very early period of the Christian Church many heresies sprung up; but the chief were those of the Ebionites, Cerinthians, Nicolaitans, Menandrians, and Gnostics, of whom by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

3 And ^athrough covetousness shall they with feigned words ^bmake merchandise of you: ^cwhose judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and their damnation slumbereth not.

many strange things have been spoken by the primitive Fathers, and of whose opinions it is difficult to form any satisfactory view.

Damnable heresies] Heresies of destruction; such as, if but ^a cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment;

5 And spared not the old world, but saved ^b Noah the eighth person, ^c a preacher of righteousness, ^d bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly;

6 And, ^e turning the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, condemned them with an overthrow, ^f making them an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly;

8 (^h For that righteous man dwelling among them, ⁱ in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds:)

9 ^j The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished:

^a Luke viii. 31. Rev. xx. 2, 3.—^b Gen. vii. 1, 7, 23. Heb. xi. 7. 1 Pet. iii. 20.—^c 1 Pet. iii. 19.—^d Ch. iii. 6.—^e Gen. xix. 24. Deut. xxix. 23. Jude 7.—^f Num. xxvi. 10.—^g Gen. xix. 16.—^h Wisd. xix. 17.—ⁱ 1's. cxix. 139, 138. Ezek. ix. 4.—^j 1's. xxxiv.

followed, would lead a man to perdition. And these they will bring in privately—cunningly, without making much noise, and as covertly as possible. It would be better to translate destructive heresies than damnable.

Denying the Lord that bought them] It is not certain whether God the Father be intended here, or our Lord Jesus Christ; for God is said to have purchased the Israelites, Exod. xv. 16, Deut. xxxii. 6; but it seems more natural to understand the Lord that bought them as applying to Christ than otherwise; and if so, this is another proof, among many, 1. That none can be saved but by Jesus Christ. 2. That through their own wickedness some may perish for whom Christ died.

Verse 2. Many shall follow] WILL follow, because determined to gratify their sinful propensities.

Pernicious ways] The word lasciviousnesses is the true reading, and this points out what the nature of the heresies was: it was a sort of Antinomianism; they pampered and indulged the lusts of the flesh; and, if the Nicolaitans are meant, it is very applicable to them, for they taught the community of wives, &c. Griesbach has received this reading into the text.

By reason of whom] These were persons who professed Christianity; and because they were called Christians, and followed such abominable practices, the way of truth—the Christian religion, was blasphemed. Had they called themselves by any name but that of Christ, his religion would not have suffered.

Verse 3. And through covetousness] That they might get money to spend upon their lusts, with feigned words, with counterfeit tales, false narrators of pretended facts, lying miracles, fabulous legends.

Whose judgment now of a long time] From the beginning God has condemned sin, and inflicted suitable punishments on transgressors; and has promised in his word, from the earliest ages, to pour out his indignation on the wicked. The punishment, therefore, so long ago predicted, shall fall on these impure and incorrigible sinners; and the condemnation which is denounced against them slumbers not—it is alert, it is on its way, it is hurrying on, and must soon overtake them.

Verse 4. For if God spared not the angels] The angels were originally placed in a state of probation; some having fallen and some having stood proves this. How long that probation was to last to them, and what was the particular test of their fidelity, we know not; nor indeed do we know what was their sin; nor when nor how they fell. The tradition of their fall is in all countries and in all religions, but the accounts given are various and contradictory; and no wonder, for we have no direct revelation on the subject. They kept not their first estate, and they sinned, is the sum of what we know on the subject; and here curiosity and conjecture are useless.

But cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness] But with chains of darkness confining them in Tartarus, delivered them over to be kept to judgment. Chains of darkness is a highly poetic expression. Darkness binds them on all hands; and so dense and strong is this darkness that it cannot be broken through; they cannot deliver themselves, nor be delivered by others.

Tartarus is found nowhere else in the New Testament, nor does it appear in the Septuagint. [But there can be no doubt that it is used as equivalent to Gehenna, or Hell.]

Verse 5. Spared not the old world] The apostle's argument is this: If God spared not the rebellious angels, nor the sinful antediluvians, nor the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, he will not spare those wicked teachers who corrupt the pure doctrines of Christianity.

Saved Noah the eighth] Some think that the words should be translated, Noah the eighth preacher of righteousness; but it seems most evident, from 1 Pet. iii. 20, that eight persons are here meant, which were the whole that were saved in the ark, viz., Shem, Ham, Japhet, and their three wives, six; Noah's wife, seven; and Noah himself the eighth.

World of the ungodly] A whole race without God—without any pure worship or rational religion.

Verse 6. The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah] See the notes on Gen. xix. for an account of the sin and punishment of these cities.

Verse 7. Vexed with the filthy conversation] Being exceedingly pained with the unclean conduct of those lawless persons. What this was, see in the history, Gen. xix., and the notes there.

Verse 8. That righteous man dwelling among them] Lot, after his departure from Abraham, A.M. 2086, lived at Sodom till A.M. 2107, a space of about twenty years; and, as he had a righteous soul, he must have been tormented with the abominations of that people from day to day.

Verse 9. The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly] The preservation and deliverance of Lot gave the apostle occasion to remark, that God knew as well how to save as to destroy; and that his goodness led him as forcibly to save righteous Lot, as his justice did to destroy the rebellious in the instances already adduced. And the design of the apostle, in producing these examples, is to show to the people to whom he was writing, that, although God would destroy those false teachers, yet he would powerfully save his faithful servants from their contagion and from their destruction. We should carefully observe, 1. That the godly man is not to be preserved from temptation. 2. That he will be preserved in temptation. 3. That he will be delivered out of it.

Verse 10. But chiefly them that walk] That is, God will in the most signal manner punish them that walk after the flesh.

Presumptuous are they] They are bold and daring, headstrong, regardless of fear.

Self-willed] Self-sufficient; presuming on themselves; following their own opinions, which no authority can induce them to relinquish.

Are not afraid to speak evil of dignities] They are lawless and disobedient, spurn all human authority, and speak contemptuously of all legal and civil jurisdiction.

17 ^b These are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempest; to whom the mist of darkness is reserved for ever.

Verse 11. Whereas angels, &c.] This is a difficult verse, but the meaning seems to be this: The holy angels, who are represented as bringing an account of the actions of the fallen angels before the Lord in judgment, simply state the facts without exaggeration, and without permitting anything of a bitter, reviling, or railing spirit, to enter into their accusations. See Zech. iii. 1, and Jude 9; to the former of which St. Peter evidently alludes. But these persons not only speak of the actions of men which they conceive to be wrong, but do it with untrue colourings and the greatest malevolence. Michael, the archangel, treated a damned spirit with courtesy; he only said, The Lord rebuke thee, Satan! but these treat the rulers of God's appointment with disrespect and calumny.

Verse 12. But these, as natural brute beasts] As those natural animals void of reason, following only the gross instinct of nature, being governed neither by reason nor religion.

Made to be taken and destroyed] Intended to be taken with nets and gins, and then destroyed, because of their fierce and destructive nature; so these false teachers and insurgents must be treated; first incarcerated, and then brought to judgment, that they may have the reward of their doings.

Verse 13. They that count it pleasure to riot in the day time.] Most sinners, in order to practise their abominable pleasures, seek the secrecy of the night; but these, bidding defiance to all decorum, decency, and shame, take the open day, and thus proclaim their impurities to the sun. [The expression may refer to the ephemeral nature of their pleasure.]

Spots—and blemishes] They are a disgrace to the Christian name.

Sporting themselves] Forming opinions which give license to sin, and then acting on those opinions; and thus rioting in their own deceits.

With their own deceivings] In your love feasts, is probably the true reading.

While they feast with you] It appears they held a kind of communion with the church, and attended sacred festivals, which they decorated with their own unhallowed opinions and conduct.

Verse 14. Having eyes full of adultery] Of an adulteress; being ever bent on the gratification of their sensual desires, so that they are represented as having an adulteress constantly before their eyes, and that their eyes can take in no other object but her.

Cannot cease from sin] Which cease not from sin; they might cease from sin, but they do not; they love to practise it.

Beguiling unstable souls] The metaphor is taken from adulterers seducing unwary, inexperienced, and light, trifling women; so do those false teachers seduce those who are not established in righteousness.

Exercised with covetous practices] The metaphor is taken from the Agonists in the Grecian games, who exercised themselves in those feats, such as wrestling, boxing, running, &c., in which they proposed to contend in the public games.

selves are ^a the servants of corruption: for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.

20 For ^b if after they ^c have escaped the pollutions of the world, ^d through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning.

21 For ^e it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.

22 But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, ^f The dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire.

Cursed children] Such not only live under God's curse here, but they are heirs to it hereafter.

Verse 15. Which have forsaken the right way] As Balaam did, who, although God showed him the right way, took one contrary to it, preferring the reward offered him by Balak to the approbation and blessing of God.

The way of Balaam] Is the counsel of Balaam. He counselled the Moabites to give their most beautiful young women to the Israelitish youth, that they might be enticed by them to commit idolatry. See the notes on Num. xxii. 5, &c., and xxiii. 1, &c.

Verse 17. These are wells without water] Persons who, by their profession, should furnish the water of life to souls thirst for salvation; but they have not this water; they are teachers without ability to instruct; they are sowers, and they have no seed in their basket.

Clouds that are carried with a tempest] These false teachers were equally as unprofitable as the empty well, or the light, dissipated cloud.

To whom the mist of darkness is reserved] That is, an eternal separation from the presence of God, and the glory of his power. They shall be thrust into outer darkness, Matt. viii. 12; into the utmost degrees of misery and despair.

Verse 18. They speak great swelling words of vanity] The word signifies things of great magnitude, grand, superb, sublime; it sometimes signifies inflated, tumid, bombastic. These false teachers spoke of great and high things, and no doubt promised their disciples the greatest privileges, as they themselves pretended to a high degree of illumination; but they were all false and vain, though they tickled the fancy and excited the desires of the flesh; and indeed this appears to have been their object. And hence some think that the impure sect of the Nicolaitans is meant.

Those that were clean escaped] Those who, through hearing the doctrines of the gospel, had been converted, were perverted by those false teachers.

Verse 19. While they promise them liberty] Either to live in the highest degrees of spiritual good, or a freedom from the Roman yoke; or from the yoke of the law, or what they might term needless restraints. Their own conduct showed the falsity of their system; for they were slaves to every disgraceful lust.

For of whom a man is overcome] The ancient law was, that a man might either kill him whom he overcame in battle, or keep him for a slave. These were called servi, slaves, from the verb servare, to keep or preserve. Thus the person who is overcome by his lusts is represented as being the slave of those lusts.

Verse 20. The pollutions of the world] Sin in general, and particularly superstition, idolatry, and lasciviousness.

Verse 21. For it had been better for them not to have known] Because they have sinned against more mercy, are capable of more sin, and are liable to greater punishment.

Verse 22. According to the true proverb] This seems to be a reference to Prov. xxvi. 11: as the dog returneth to his vomit, so a fool repeateth his folly. This is a called a true proverb: for it is a fact that a dog will eat up his own vomit; and a swine, howsoever carefully washed, will again wallow in the mire. As applied here it is very expressive:

the poor sinner, having heard the gospel of Christ, was led to loathe and reject his sin; and, on his application to God for mercy, was washed from his unrighteousness. But he is here represented as taking up again what he had before rejected, and defiling himself in that from which he had been cleansed.

Here is a sad proof of the possibility of falling from grace, and from very high degrees of it too. These had escaped from the contagion that was in the world; they had had true repentance, and cast up "their sour-sweet morsel of sin;" they had been washed from all their filthiness, and this must have been through the blood of the Lamb; yet, after all, they went back, got entangled with their old sins, swallowed down their formerly rejected lusts, and re-swallowed in the mire of corruption. It is no wonder that God should say, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning: reason and nature say it must be so; and divine justice says it ought to be so; and the person himself must confess that it is right that it should be so.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle shows his design in writing this and the preceding epistle, 1, 2. Describes the nature of the heresies which should take place in the last times, 3-8. A thousand years with the Lord are but as a day, 9. He will come and judge the world as he has promised, and the heavens and the earth shall be burnt up, 10. How those should live who expect these things, 11, 12. Of the new heavens and the new earth, and the necessity of being prepared for this great change, 13, 14. Concerning some difficult things in St. Paul's epistles, 15, 16. We must watch against the error of the wicked, grow in grace, and give all glory to God, 17, 18.

THIS second epistle, beloved, I now write unto you; in both which "I stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance:

2 That ye may be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of us the apostles of the Lord and Saviour:

3 "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts,

4 And saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation.

* Ch. i. 13.—^b Jude 17.—^c 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 1. Jude 18.—^d Ch. ii. 10.—^e Isa. v. 19. Jer. xvii. 15. Ezek. xii. 22, 27. Matt. xxiv. 48. Luke xii. 45.—^f Gen. i. 6, 9. Ps. xxxiii. 6. Heb. xi. 3.—

Verse 1. This second epistle] In order to guard them against the seductions of false teachers, he calls to their remembrance the doctrine of the ancient prophets, and the commands or instructions of the apostles, all founded on the same basis.

He possibly refers to the prophecies of Enoch, as mentioned by Jude, ver. 14, 15; of David, Ps. i. 1, &c.; and of Daniel, xii. 2, relative to the coming of our Lord to judgment: and he brings in the instructions of the apostles of Christ, by which they were directed how to prepare to meet their God.

Verse 3. Knowing this first] Considering this in an especial manner, that those prophets predicted the coming of false teachers.

There shall come—scoffers] Persons who shall endeavour to turn all religion into ridicule, as this is the most likely way to depreciate truth in the sight of the giddy multitude.

Walking after their own lusts] Here is the true source of all infidelity. The gospel of Jesus is pure and holy, and requires a holy heart and holy life. They wish to follow their own lusts, and consequently cannot brook the restraints of the gospel: therefore they labour to prove that it is not true, that they may get rid of its injunctions, and at last succeed in persuading themselves that it is a forgery: and then throw the reins on the neck of their evil propensities. Thus their opposition to revealed truth began and ended in their own lusts.

There is a remarkable addition here in almost every MS. and Version of note: There shall come in the last days, IN MOCKERY, scoffers walking after their own lusts. They have

5 For this they willingly are ignorant of, that "by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water:

6 "Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished:

7 But; the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men.

8 But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and "a thousand years as one day.

9 "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, no desire to find out truth; they take up the Bible merely with the design of turning it into ridicule.

The last days] Probably refer to the conclusion of the Jewish polity, which was then at hand.

Verse 4. Where is the promise of his coming?] Perhaps the false teachers here referred to were such as believed in the eternity of the world: the prophets and the apostles had foretold its destruction, and they took it for granted, if this were true, that the terrestrial machine would have begun long ago to have shown some symptoms of decay; but they found that since the patriarchs died, all things remained as they were from the foundation of the world. As, therefore, they saw none of the changes which were predicted, they presumed that there would be none, and they intimated that there never had been any.

Verse 5. For this they willingly are ignorant of] They shut their eyes against the light, and refuse all evidence; what does not answer their purpose they will not know.

By the word of God the heavens were of old] However we take the words, they seem to refer to the origin of the earth. It was the opinion of the remotest antiquity that the earth was formed out of water, or a primitive moisture which they termed hulê, a first matter or nutriment for all things; but Thales pointedly taught that all things derive their existence from water, and this very nearly expresses the sentiment of Peter, and nearly in his own terms too. But is this doctrine true? It must be owned that it appears to be the doctrine of Moses: In the beginning, says he, God, made the heavens and the earth; and the earth was without as some men count slackness; but ^a is long-suffering to us-ward, ^b not willing that any should perish, but ^c that all should come to repentance.

10 But ^a the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which ^a the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up.

11 Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be ^a in all holy conversation and godliness, 12 ^a Looking for and ^b hastening unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens, being on fire, shall ^b be dissolved, and the elements shall ^b melt with fervent heat?

^a Isa. xxx. 18. 1 Pet. iii. 20. Ver. 15.—^b Ezek. xviii. 23, 33. xxxiii. 11.—^c Rom. ii. 4.—1 Tim. ii. 4.—^d Matt. xxiv. 43. Luke xii. 39. 1 Thess. v. 2. Rev. iii. 3. xvi. 15.—^e Ps. cii. 26. form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Now, these heavens and earth which God made in the beginning, and which he says were at first formless and empty, and which he calls the deep, are in the very next verse called waters; from which it is evident that Moses teaches that the earth was made out of some fluid substance, to which the name of water is properly given.

Now, considering the earth to be thus formed of water, we have to consider what the apostle means by the next expression, variously translated by, out of, by means of, and between, the water.

Standing out of the water gives no sense, and should be abandoned. If we translate between the waters, it will bear some resemblance to Gen. i. 6, 7; then it may refer to the whole of the atmosphere, with which the earth is everywhere surrounded, and which contains all the vapours which belong to our globe, and without which we could neither have animal nor vegetable life. Thus then the earth, or terraqueous globe, which was originally formed out of water, subsists by water; and by means of that very water, the water compacted with the earth—the fountains of the great deep, and the waters in the atmosphere—the windows of heaven, Gen. vii. 11, the antediluvian earth was destroyed, as St. Peter states in the next verse: the terraqueous globe, which was formed originally of water or a fluid substance, the chaos or first matter, and which was suspended in the heavens—the atmosphere, enveloped with water, by means of which water it was preserved; yet, because of the wickedness of its inhabitants, was destroyed by those very same waters out of which it was originally made, and by which it subsisted.

Verse 7. But the heavens and the earth which are now] The present earth and its atmosphere, which are liable to the same destruction, because the same means still exist (for there is still water enough to drown the earth, and there is iniquity enough to induce God to destroy it and its inhabitants), are nevertheless kept in store, treasured up, kept in God's storehouse, to be destroyed, not by water, but by fire at the day of judgment.

Verse 8. Be not ignorant] Though they are wilfully ignorant, neglect not ye the means of instruction.

One day is with the Lord as a thousand years] That is: All time is as nothing before him, because, in the presence as in the nature of God, all is eternity; therefore nothing is long, nothing short, before him; no lapse of ages impairs his purposes, nor need he wait to find convenience to execute those purposes. And when the longest period of time has passed by, it is but as a moment or indivisible point in comparison of eternity.

Verse 9. But is long-suffering] It is not slackness, remissness, nor want of due displacement at sin, that induced God to prolong the respite of ungodly men; but his long-suffering, his unwillingness that any should perish; and therefore he spared them, that they might have additional offers of grace, and be led to repentance—to deplore their sins, implore God's mercy, and find redemption through the blood of the Lamb.

Verse 10. The day of the Lord will come] See Matt. xxiv. 43, to which the apostle seems to allude.

The heavens shall pass away with a great noise] As the 13 Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for ^a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

14 Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent ^a that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless:

15 And account that ^a the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also, according to the wisdom given unto him, hath written unto you;

16 As also in all his epistles, ^a speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction.

ing the coming.—^a Pa. i. 3. Isa. xxxiv. 4.—^b Mic. i. 4. Ver. 1.—^c 1-a. lxxv. 17. lxxvi. 22. Rev. xxi. 1.—^d 1 Cor. i. 8. xv. 58. Phil. i. 10. 1 Thess. iii. 13. v. 23.—^e Rom. ii. 4. 1 Pet. iii. 20. Ver. 9.—^f Rom. viii. 19. 1 Cor. xv. 24. 1 Thess. iv. 15.

heavens moan here, and in the passages above, the whole atmosphere, in which all the terrestrial vapours are lodged; and as water itself is composed of two gases, eighty-five parts in weight of oxygen, and fifteen of hydrogen, or two parts in volume of the latter, and one of the former; and as the electric or ethereal fire is that which, in all likelihood, God will use in the general conflagration; the noise occasioned by the application of this fire to such an immense congeries of aqueous particles as float in the atmosphere, must be terrible in the extreme.

The elements shall melt with fervent heat] When the fire has conquered and decomposed the water, the elements, the hydrogen and oxygen airs or gases will occupy distinct regions of the atmosphere, the hydrogen, by its very great levity, ascending to the top, while the oxygen, from its superior specific gravity, will keep upon or near the surface of the earth; and thus, if different substances be once ignited, the fire, which is supported in this case, not only by the oxygen which is one of the constituents of atmospheric air, but also by a great additional quantity of oxygen obtained from the decomposition of all aqueous vapours, will rapidly seize on all other substances, on all terrestrial particles, and the whole frame of nature will be necessarily torn in pieces, and thus the earth and its works be burnt up.

Verse 11. All these things shall be dissolved] They will all be separated, all decomposed; but none of them destroyed. And as they are the original matter out of which God formed the terraqueous globe, consequently they may enter again into the composition of a new system; and therefore the apostle says, ver. 13: We look for new heavens and a new earth—the others being decomposed, a new system is to be formed out of their materials. There is a wonderful philosophic propriety in the words of the apostle in describing this most awful event.

What manner of persons ought ye to be] Only those who walk in holiness, who live a godly and useful life, can contemplate this most awful time with joy.

The word which we translate hastening unto, should be rendered earnestly desiring, or wishing for; which is a frequent meaning of the word in the best Greek writers.

Verse 12. The heavens, being on fire] See on ver. 10. It was an ancient opinion among the heathens that the earth should be burnt up with fire.

Verse 13. We, according to his promise, look for new heavens] The promise to which it is supposed the apostle alludes, is found in Isa. lxxv. 17, lxxvi. 22.

It does appear, from these promises, what the apostle says here, and what is said, Rev. xxi. 27, xxii. 14, 15, that the present earth, though destined to be burnt up, will not be destroyed, but be renewed and refined, purged from all moral and natural imperfection, and made the endless abode of blessed spirits. But this state is certainly to be expected after the day of judgment; for on this the apostle is very express, who says the conflagration and renovation are to take place at the judgment of the great day. See ver. 7, 8, 10, 12.

Verse 15. And account that the long-suffering of our Lord] Conclude that God's long-suffering with the world is a proof that he designs men to be saved.

Even as our beloved brother Paul] "The persons to whom

II. PETER.

17 Ye therefore, beloved, *seeing ye know these things before, ^bbeware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own stedfastness.

* Mark xiii. 23. Ch. i. 12.—^b Eph. iv. 14. Ch. i. 10, 11. ff. 18.

Peter's epistles were sent were, for the most part, Paul's converts."

According to the wisdom given unto him] That is, according to the measure of the divine inspiration, by which he was qualified for the divine work, and by which he was so capable of entering into the deep things of God. It is worthy of remark that Paul's epistles are ranked among the scriptures; a term applied to those writings which are divinely inspired, and to those only.

Verse 16. As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things] Paul, in all his epistles, has spoken of the things written by Peter in this letter. For example, he has spoken of Christ's coming to judgment, 1. Thess. iii. 13, iv. 14-18; 2 Thess. i. 7-10; Titus ii. 13. And of the resurrection of the dead, 1 Cor. xv. 22; Phil. iii. 20, 21. And of the burning of the earth, 2 Thess. i. 8. And of the heavenly country, 2 Cor. v. 1-10. And of the introduction of the righteous into that country, 1 Thess. iv. 17; Heb. iv. 9, xii. 14, 18, 24. And of the judgment of all mankind by Christ, Rom. xiv. 10.

In which are some things hard to be understood] That is, if we retain the common reading, in or among which things, viz., what he says of the day of judgment, the resurrection of the body, &c. &c., there are some things difficult to be comprehended, and from which a wrong or false meaning may be taken. But if we take the reading of some important MSS. and Versions, it would intimate that there were difficulties in all the Epistles of St. Paul; and indeed in what ancient writings are there not difficulties? But the Papists say that the decision of all matters relative to the faith is not to be expected from the scriptures on this very account, but must be received from the church, i.e., the Popish or Romish Church. But what evidence have we that that church can infallibly solve any of those difficulties? We have none. And till we have an express, unequivocal revelation from heaven that an unerring spirit is given to that church, we are not to receive its pretensions.

Verse 17. Seeing ye know—before] Seeing that by prophets and apostles you have been thus forewarned, beware, keep watch, be on your guard; cleave to God and the word of his grace, lest ye be led away from the truth delivered by the prophets and apostles, by the error of the wicked, of the lawless—those who wrest the scriptures to make them countenance their lusts, exorbitant exactions, and lawless practices.

18 'But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. ^aTo him be glory both now and for ever. Amen.

^a Eph. iv. 15. 1 Pet. ii. 2.—^d 2 Tim. iv. 18. Rev. i. 6.

Fall from your own stedfastness.] From that faith in Christ which has put you in possession of that grace which establishes the heart.

Verse 18. But grow in grace] Increase in the image and favour of God; every grace and divine influence which ye have received is a seed, a heavenly seed, which, if it be watered with the dew of heaven from above, will endlessly increase and multiply itself. The life of a Christian is a growth; he is at first born of God, and is a little child; becomes a young man, and a father in Christ. Every father was once an infant; and had he not grown, he would have never been a man. Those who content themselves with the grace they received when converted to God, are, at best, in a continual state of infancy; but we find, in the order of nature, that the infant that does not grow, and grow daily too, is sickly and soon dies; so, in the order of grace, those who do not grow up into Jesus Christ are sickly, and will soon die, die to all sense and influence of heavenly things.

To him] The Lord Jesus, be glory—all honour and excellency attributed, both now—in this present state, and for ever, to the day of eternity—that in which death, and misery, and trial, and darkness, and change, and time itself, are to the righteous for ever at an end: it is eternity; and this eternity is one unalterable, interminable, unclouded, and unchangeable DAY!

Amen.] So let it be! and so it shall be!

We have now passed over all the canonical writings of Peter that are extant; and it is worthy of remark that, in no place of the two epistles already examined, nor in any of this apostle's sayings in any other parts of the sacred writings, do we find any of the peculiar tenets of the Romish Church: not one word of his or the Pope's supremacy; not one word of those who affect to be his successors; nothing of the infallibility claimed by those pretended successors; nothing of purgatory, penances, pilgrimages, auricular confession, power of the keys, indulgences, extreme unction, masses, and prayers for the dead; and not one word on the most essential doctrine of the Romish Church, transubstantiation. Now, as all these things have been considered by themselves most essential to the being of that church; is it not strange that he, from whom they profess to derive all their power, authority, and influence, in spiritual and secular matters, should have said nothing of these most necessary things?

AS the author of this epistle is the same who wrote the gospel, I need not detain the reader with any particulars of his life, having taken up the subject much at large in my preface to his gospel, to which I must refer for that species of information.

On the term epistle, as applied to this work of St. John, it may be necessary to make a few remarks. There is properly nothing of the epistolary style in this work; it is addressed neither to any particular person, nor to any church.

The writer does not mention himself either in the beginning or ending; and, although this can be no objection against its authenticity, yet it is some proof that the work was never intended to be considered in the light of an epistle.

1. Is it a tract or dissertation upon the more sublime parts of Christianity? 2. Is it a polemical discourse against heretics, particularly the Gnostics, or some of their teachers, who were disturbing the churches where John dwelt? 3. Is it a sermon, the subject of which is God's love to man in the mission of Jesus Christ; from which our obligations to love and serve him are particularly inferred? 4. Or is it a collection of Christian aphorisms, made by John himself; and put together as they occurred to his mind, without any intended order or method? Much might be said on all these heads of inquiry; and the issue would be, that the idea of its being an epistle of any kind must be relinquished: and yet epistle is its general denomination through all antiquity.

It is a matter, however, of little importance what its title may be, or to what literary composition it belongs; while we know that it is the genuine work of St. John; of the holiest man who ever breathed; of one who was most intimately acquainted with the doctrine and mind of his Lord; of one who was admitted to the closest fellowship with his Saviour; and who has treated of the deepest things that can be experienced or comprehended in the Christian life.

As to distinct heads of discourse, it does not appear to me that any were intended by the apostle; he wrote just as the subjects occurred to his mind, or rather as the Holy Spirit gave him utterance; and, although technical order is not here to be expected, yet nothing like disorder or confusion can be found in the whole work.

OF

CHAPTER I.

The testimony of the apostle concerning the reality of the person and doctrine of Christ; and the end for which he bears this testimony, 1-4. God is light, and none can have fellowship with him who do not walk in the light; those who walk in the light are cleansed from all unrighteousness by the blood of Christ, 5-7. No man can say that he has not sinned; but God is faithful and just to cleanse from all unrighteousness them who confess their sins, 8-10.

THAT ^a which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, ^b which we have looked upon, and ^c our hands have handled, of the Word of life;

2 (For ^d the Life ^e was manifested, and we have seen it, ^f and bear witness, ^g and shew unto you that eternal Life, ^h which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us,)

^a John i. 1. Ch. ii. 13.—^b John i. 14. 2 Pet. i. 16. Ch. iv. 14.—^c Luke xxiv. 39. John xx. 27.—^d John i. 4. xi. 25. xiv. 6.—^e Rom. xvi. 26. 1 Tim. iii. 16. Ch. iii. 5.—^f John xxi. 24. Acts ii. 32.—

Verse 1. That which was from the beginning] That glorious personage, JESUS CHRIST the LORD, who was from eternity; him, being manifested in the flesh, we have heard proclaim the doctrine of eternal life; with our own eyes have we seen him, not transiently, for we have looked upon him frequently; and our hands have handled—frequently touched his person; and we have had every proof of the identity and reality of this glorious being that our senses of hearing, seeing, and feeling could possibly require.

Verse 2. For the Life was manifested] The Lord Jesus, who is the creator of all things, and the fountain of life to all sentient and intellectual beings, and from whom eternal life and happiness come, was manifested in the flesh.

Verse 3. That which we have seen and heard] We deliver nothing by hearsay, nothing by tradition, nothing from conjecture.

That ye also may have fellowship with us] That ye may be preserved from all false doctrine, and have a real participation with us apostles of the grace, peace, love, and life of God.

Verse 4. That your joy may be full] Ye have already tasted that the Lord is good; but I am now going to show you the height of your Christian calling, that your happiness may be complete, being thoroughly cleansed from all sin, and filled with the fulness of God.

3 ¹ That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly ¹ our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ.

4 And these things write we unto you, ² that your joy may be full.

5 ¹ This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that ² God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.

^a Ch. v. 20.—^b John i. 1, 2.—^c Acts iv. 20.—^d John xvii. 11. 1 Cor. i. 9. Ch. ii. 24.—^e John xv. 11. xvi. 24. 2 John 12.—Ch. iii. 11.—^f John i. 9. viii. 12. ix. 5. xii. 35, 36.

Verse 5. This then is the message] This is the grand principle on which all depends, which we have heard of FROM him, for neither Moses nor the prophets ever gave that full instruction concerning God and communion with him which Jesus Christ has given, for the only-begotten Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, has alone declared the fulness of the truth, and the extent of the blessings which believers on him are to receive.

God is light] This is the grand message of the gospel, the principle on which the happiness of man depends. LIGHT implies every essential excellence, especially wisdom, holiness, and happiness. DARKNESS implies all imperfection, and principally ignorance, sinfulness, and misery. LIGHT is the purest, the most subtle, the most useful, and the most diffusive of all God's creatures; it is, therefore, a very proper emblem of the purity, perfection, and goodness of the divine nature. God is to human souls what the light is to the world; without the latter all would be dismal and uncomfortable, and terror and death would universally prevail; and without an indwelling God, what is religion? Without his all-penetrating and diffusive light, what is the soul of man? Religion would be an empty science, a dead letter, a system unauthoritative and uninfluencing; and the soul a trackless wilderness, a howling waste, full of evil, of terror and dismay, and ever racked with realising anticipations of future,

6 * If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth:

7 But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and ^b the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.

*2 Cor. vi. 14. Ch. ii. 4.—^b1 Cor. vi. 11. Eph. i. 7. Heb. ix. 14. 1 Pet. i. 19. Ch. ii. 2. Rev. i. 5.—^c1 Kings viii. 46. 2 Chron. vi. 36. Job ix. 2. xv. 14. xxv. 4. Prov. xx. 9. Eccles. vii. 20. James successive, permanent, substantial, and endless misery. Verse 6. If we say that we have fellowship] Having fellowship, communion with God, necessarily implies a partaking of the divine nature. Now, if a man profess to have such communion, and walk in darkness—live an irreligious and sinful life, he lies in the profession which he makes, and does not the truth—does not walk according to the directions of the gospel, on the grace of which he holds his relation to God, and his communion with him.

Verse 7. But if we walk in the light] If, having received the principle of holiness from him, we live a holy and righteous life, deriving continual light, power, and life from him, then we have fellowship one with another; that is, we have communion with God, and God condescends to hold communion with us. What John says is no figure; God and a holy heart are in continual correspondence.

The blood of Jesus Christ] The meritorious efficacy of his passion and death has purged our conscience from dead works, and cleanseth us, continues to cleanse us, i.e., to keep clean what it has made clean (for it requires the same merit and energy to preserve holiness in the soul of man, as to produce it), or, as several MSS. and some Versions read, will cleanse; speaking of those who are already justified, and are expecting full redemption in his blood.

And being cleansed from all sin is what every believer should look for, what he has a right to expect, and what he must have in this life, in order to be prepared to meet his 8 * If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, ^d and the truth is not in us.

9 * If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to 'cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

10 If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us.

iii. 2.—^dCh. ii. 4.—*Ps. xxxii. 5. Prov. xxviii. 13.—^eVer. 7. Ps. ii. 2.

God. Christ is not a partial Saviour; he saves to the uttermost, and he cleanses from ALL sin.

Verse 8. If we say that we have no sin] It is very likely that the heretics, against whose evil doctrines the apostle writes, denied that they had any sin, or needed any Saviour. Indeed, the Gnostics even denied that Christ suffered; the Æon or Divine Being that dwelt in the man Christ Jesus, according to them, left him when he was taken by the Jews; and he, being but a common man, his sufferings and death had neither merit nor efficacy.

We deceive ourselves] The most dreadful of all deceptions, as it leaves the soul under all the guilt and pollution of sin, exposed to hell, and utterly unfit for heaven.

The truth is not in us.] We have no knowledge of the gospel of Jesus, the whole of which is founded on the most awful truth—all have sinned, all are guilty, all are unholy; and none can redeem himself.

Verse 9. If we confess our sins] If, from a deep sense of our guilt, impurity, and helplessness, we humble ourselves before God, acknowledging our iniquity, his holiness, and our own utter helplessness, and implore mercy for his sake who has died for us; he is faithful, because to such he has promised mercy, Ps. xxxii. 5; Prov. xxviii. 13; and just, for Christ has died for us, and thus made an atonement to the divine justice; so that God can now be just, and yet the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus.

And to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.] Not only to forgive the sin, but to purify the heart.

CHAPTER II.

He exhorts them not to sin; yet encourages those who have fallen, by the hope of mercy through Christ, who is a propitiation for the sins of the whole world, 1, 2. He who knows God keeps his commandments; and he who professes to abide in Christ ought to walk as Christ walked, 3-6. The old and new commandment, that we should walk in the light, and love the brethren, 7-11. The apostle's description of the different states in the family of God; little children, young men, and fathers; and directions to each, 12-15. A statement of what prevails in the world, 16-17. Cautions against antichrists, 18-23. Exhortations to persevere in what they had received, and to continue to follow that anointing of the divine Spirit, by which they could discern all men, and know all things necessary to their salvation, and proper to prepare them for eternal glory, 24-29.

MY little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, * we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous:

2 And ^b he is the propitiation for our sins: and

*Rom. viii. 34. 1 Tim. ii. 5. Heb. vii. 25. ix. 24.—^bRom. iii. 25. 2 Cor. v. 18. Ch. i. 7. iv. 10.

Verse 1. My little children] My beloved children; the address of an affectionate father to children whom he tenderly loves. The term also refers to the apostle's authority as their spiritual father, and their obligation to obey as his spiritual children.

That ye sin not.] This is the language of the whole scripture; of every dispensation, ordinance, institution, doctrine, and word of God.

3 And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.

4 He ^d that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his

ture; of every dispensation, ordinance, institution, doctrine, and word of God.

And if any man sin] If, through ignorance, inexperience, the violence of temptation, unwatchfulness, &c., ye have fallen into sin, and grieved the Spirit of God, do not continue in the sin, nor under the guilt; do not despair of being again commandments, *is a liar, and the truth is not in him.

5 But ^bwhoso keepeth his word, ^cin him verily is the love of God perfected: ^dhereby know we that we are in him.

6 *He that saith he abideth in him ^eought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

7 Brethren, *I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment ^bwhich ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning.

8 Again, ^aa new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: ¹because the darkness is past, and ²the true light now shineth.

9 ¹He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now.

10 ^aHe that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and ^athere is none ^coccasion of stumbling in him.

11 But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and ^bwalketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

12 I write unto you, little children, because ^ayour sins are forgiven you for his name's sake.

13 I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him ^athat is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father.

14 I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him ^athat is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ^aye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

15 ^aLove not the world, neither the things ^athat are in the world. ^aIf any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.

16 For all that ^ais in the world, the lust of the flesh, ^aand the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world.

17 And ^athe world passeth away, and the lust restored to the favour of God; your case, it is true, is deeply deplorable, but not desperate; there is still hope, for—

We have an advocate with the Father] We still have him before the throne who died for our offences, and rose again for our justification; and there he makes intercession for us. He is the righteous; he who suffered, the JUST for the unjust, that he might bring us to God.

Verse 2. And he is the propitiation] The atonement sacrifice for our sins. This is the proper sense of the word as used in the Septuagint, where it often occurs; and is the translation of asham, an oblation for sin, Amos viii. 14; chattath, a sacrifice for sin, Ezek. xlv. 27; kippur, an atonement, Num. v. 8. The word is used only here and in chap. iv. 10.

And not for ours only] The apostle does not say that he died for any select part of the inhabitants of the earth, or for some out of every nation, tribe, or kindred; but for ALL MANKIND; and the attempt to limit this is a violent outrage against God and his word.

Verse 3. And hereby we do know that we know him] If we keep the commandments of God, loving him with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves, we have the fullest proof that we have the true saving knowledge of God and his Christ.

Verse 4. He that saith, I know him] This is a severe blow against the Gnostics, and against all pretenders to religious knowledge who live under the power of their sins; and against all Antinomians, and false boasters in the righteousness of Christ as a covering for their personal unholiness.

Verse 5. But whoso keepeth his word] Conscientiously observes his doctrine, the spirit and letter of the religion of Christ.

Is the love of God perfected] The design of God's love in sending Jesus Christ into the world to die for the sin of man is accomplished, in that man who receives the doctrine and applies for the salvation provided for him.

That we are in him] That we have entered into his spirit and views, received his salvation, have been enabled to walk in the light, and have communion with him by the Holy Spirit.

Verse 6. Abideth in him] To be in Christ, ver. 5, is to be converted to the Christian faith, and to have received the remission of sins. To abide in Christ, ver. 6, is to continue in that state of salvation, growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 7. Brethren, I write no new commandment] There seems a contradiction between this and the next verse. But the apostle appears to speak, not so much of any difference in the essence of the precept itself, as in reference to the degrees of light and grace belonging to the Mosaic and Christian dispensations. It was ever the command of God that men should receive his light, walk by that light, and love him and one another. But this commandment was renewed by Christ with much latitude and spirituality of meaning; and also with much additional light to see its extent, and grace to observe it.

* Gr. scandal.—^aJohn xii. 35.—^bLuke xxiv. 47. Acts iv. 12. x. 43. xiii. 38. Ch. i. 7.—^cCh. i. 7.—^dEph. vi. 10.—^eRom. xii. 2.—^fMatt. vi. 24. Gal. i. 10. James iv. 4.—^gEccles. v. 11.—^h1 Cor. vii. 31. James i. 10. iv. 14. 1 Pet. i. 24.

Instead of brethren, the best MSS, Versions, and Fathers have beloved. This is without doubt the true reading.

Verse 8. Which thing is true in him and in you] It is true that Christ loved the world so well as to lay down his life for it; and it was true in them, in all his faithful followers at that time, who were ready to lay down their lives for the testimony of Jesus.

The darkness is past] The total thick darkness of the heathen world, and the comparative darkness of the Mosaic dispensation, are now passing away; and the pure and superior light of Christianity is now diffusing its beams everywhere. He does not say that the darkness was all gone by, but it is passing away; he does not say that the fullness of the light had appeared, but it is now shining, and will shine more and more to the perfect day; for the darkness passes away in proportion as the light shines and increases.

Verse 9. He that saith he is in the light] He that professes to be a convert to Christianity, even in the lowest degree; and hateth his brother—not only does not love him, but wills and does him evil, as the Jews did the Gentiles; is in darkness—has received no saving knowledge of the truth.

Verse 10. He that loveth his brother] That is, his neighbour, his fellow-creature, whether Jew or Gentile, so as to bear him continual good will, and to be ready to do him every kind office; abideth in the light—not only gives proof that he has received Christ Jesus the Lord, but that he walks in him, that he retains the grace of his justification, and grows therein.

And there is none occasion of stumbling in him] And there is no stumbling-block in him; he neither gives nor receives offence: love prevents him from giving any to his neighbour; and love prevents him from receiving any from his neighbour, because it leads him to put the best construction on everything.

Verse 11. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness] He is still in his heathen or unconverted state, and walketh in darkness, his conduct being a proof of that state; and knoweth not whither he goeth—having no proper knowledge of God or eternal things; and cannot tell whether he is going to heaven or hell, because that darkness has blinded his eyes—darkened his whole soul, mind, and heart.

Verse 12. I write unto you, little children] Beloved children; those who were probably the apostle's own converts, and members of the church over which he presided. But it may be applied to young converts in general.

Verse 13. I write unto you, fathers] By father it is very likely that the apostle means persons who had embraced thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever.

18 * Little children, ^b it is the last time: and as ye have heard that ^c antichrist shall come, ^d even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know ^e that it is the last time.

19 ^f They went out from us, but they were not of us; for ^g if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, ^h that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us.

20 But ⁱ ye have an unction ^j from the Holy One, and ^k ye know all things.

21 I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth.

Christianity on its first promulgation in Judea and in the Lesser Asia, some of whom had probably seen Christ in the flesh; for this appears to be what is meant by, Ye have known him from the beginning. But the expression, him who is from the beginning, may mean Jesus Christ in the eternity of his nature, see John i. 1, 2; but the sense is the same.

I write unto you, young men] These were persons in the prime of life, and in the zenith of their faith and love.

I write unto you, little children] A very different term from that used in the 12th verse, which means beloved children, as we have already seen. This is another class, and their state is differently described: Ye have known the Father. These were disciples of Christ, not of very long standing in the Church, nor of much experience.

Verse 14. The word of God abideth in you] Ye have not only thoroughly known and digested the divine doctrine, but your hearts are moulded into it; ye know it to be the truth of God from the power and happiness with which it inspires you, and from the constant abiding testimony of the Spirit of that truth which lives and witnesses wherever that truth lives and predominates.

Verse 15. Love not the world] Covetousness is the predominant vice of old age: Ye fathers love not the world. The things which are in the world, its profits, pleasures, and honours, have the strongest allurements for youth; therefore, ye young men, little children, and babes, love not the things of this world.

The love of the Father is not in him] The love of God and the love of earthly things are incompatible.

Verse 16. For all that is in the world] All that it can boast of, all that it can promise, is only sensual, transient gratification, and even this promise it cannot fulfil; so that its warmest votaries can complain loudest of their disappointment.

The lust of the flesh] Sensual and impure desires, which seek their gratification in women, strong drink, delicious viands, and the like.

Lust of the eyes] Inordinate desires after finery of every kind, gaudy dress, splendid houses, superb furniture, expensive equipage, trappings, and decorations of all sorts.

Pride of life] Hunting after honours, titles, and pedigrees: boasting of ancestry, family connexions, great offices, honourable acquaintance, and the like.

Is not of the Father] Nothing of these inordinate attachments either comes from or leads to God. They are of this world; here they begin, flourish, and end.

Verse 17. The world passeth away] All these things are continually fading and perishing; and the very state in which they are possessed is changing perpetually; and the earth and its works will be shortly burnt up.

And the lust thereof] The men of this world, their vain pursuits and delusive pleasures are passing away in their successive generations, and their very memory perishes; but he that doeth the will of God—that seeks the pleasure, profit, and honour that comes from above, shall abide for ever, always happy through time and eternity, because God, the unchangeable source of felicity, is his portion.

Verse 18. Little children, it is the last time] This phrase

22 ¹ Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.

23 ² Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father: [but] ³ he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also.

24 Let that therefore abide in you ⁴ which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ⁵ ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father.

25 ⁶ And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life.

26 These things have I written unto you ⁷ concerning them that seduce you.

27 But ⁸ the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ⁹ ye need not that any man is variously understood. This is the last dispensation of grace and mercy to mankind; the present age is the conclusion of the Jewish state, as the temple and holy city are shortly to be destroyed. But as there are many who suppose that this epistle was written after the destruction of Jerusalem, consequently the words cannot, on that supposition, refer to this. Others think that the original should be translated, a most difficult, perilous, and wretched time; a time in which all kinds of vices, heresies, and pollutions shall have their full reign; that time which our Lord predicted, Matt. vii. 15, when he said, Beware of false prophets. Now the apostle may allude to this prediction of our Lord; but it refers to a time antecedent to the destruction of Jerusalem. I am therefore inclined to think, whatever may be the precise meaning of the last time, that the epistle before us was written while Jerusalem yet stood.

Antichrist shall come] Who is this Antichrist? Is he the Emperor Domitian, the Gnostics, Nicolaitans, Nazareans, Cerinthians, Romish Pontiffs, &c. &c.? Ans. Any person, thing, doctrine, system of religion, polity, &c., which is opposed to Christ, and to the spirit and spread of his gospel, is Antichrist. We need not look for this imaginary being in any of the above exclusively. Even Protestantism may have its antichrist as well as Papery. Every man who opposes the spirit of the gospel, and every teacher and writer who endeavours to lower the gospel standard to the spirit and taste of the world, is a genuine antichrist, no matter where or among whom he is found.

Many antichrists] Many false prophets, false Messiahs, heretics, and corrupters of the truth.

Whereby we know that it is the last time] That time which our Lord has predicted, and of which he has warned us.

Verse 19. They went out from us] These heretics had belonged to our Christian assemblies, they professed Christianity, and do so still; but we apostles did not commission them to preach to you, for they have disgraced the divine doctrine with the most pernicious opinions; they have given up or explained away its most essential principles; they have mingled the rest with heathenish rites and Jewish glosses.

They were not of us] For if they had been of us, they would not have departed from us to form a sect of themselves.

That they were not all of us] These false teachers probably drew many sincere souls away with them; and to this it is probable the apostle alludes when he says, they were not all of us. Some were; others were not.

Verse 20. But ye have an unction] The word signifies not an unction, but an ointment, the very thing itself by which anointing is effected; and so it was properly rendered in our former translations. As oil was used among the Asiatics for the inauguration of persons into important offices, and this oil was acknowledged to be an emblem of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, without which the duties of those offices could not be discharged; so it is put here for the Spirit himself, who presided in the Church, and from which all gifts and graces flowed. The chrism or ointment here mentioned is also an allusion to the holy anointing ointment prescribed by God himself, Exod. xxx. 23-25, teach you: but as the same anointing * teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in ^b him.

28 And now, little children, abide in him; that, ^c when he shall appear, we may have confidence, which was composed of fine myrrh, sweet cinnamon, sweet calamus, cassia lignea, and olive oil. This was an emblem of the gifts and graces of the divine Spirit.

Ye know all things.] Every truth of God necessary to your salvation, and the salvation of man in general, and have no need of that knowledge of which the Gnostics boast.

But although the above is the sense in which this verse is generally understood, yet there is reason to doubt its accuracy. The adjective which we translate all things, is most probably the accusative case singular, having man, or some such substantive, understood. The verse therefore should be translated: Ye have an ointment from the Holy One, and ye know or discern EVERY MAN. It is plain, from the whole tenor of the epistle, that St. John is guarding the Christians against seducers and deceivers who were even then disturbing and striving to corrupt the Church. The anointing here mentioned seems to mean the spirit of illumination, or great knowledge and discernment in spiritual things. By this they could readily distinguish the false apostles from the true. [This interpretation is open to question.]

Verse 22. Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? There were certain persons who, while they acknowledged him to be a divine teacher, denied him to be the Christ, i.e., the MESSIAH.

He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son.] He is antichrist who denies the supernatural and miraculous birth of Jesus Christ, who denies Jesus to be the Son of God, and who denies God to be the Father of the Lord Jesus; thus he denies the Father and the Son.

Verse 23. Whosoever denieth the Son] He who denies Jesus to be the Son of God, and consequently the Christ or Messiah, he hath not the Father—he can have no birth from above, he cannot be enrolled among the children of God, because none can be a child of God but by faith in Christ Jesus.

He that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also.] This clause is printed by our translators in italics to show it to be of doubtful authority, as it was probably wanting in the chief MSS. which they consulted. But that the clause is genuine, and should be restored to the text without any mark of spuriousness, is evident from the authorities by which it is supported.

Verse 24. Let that therefore abide in you] Continue in the doctrines concerning the incarnation, passion, death, resurrection, ascension, and intercession of the Lord Jesus, which you have heard preached from the beginning by us his apostles.

Ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father.] Ye who are preachers shall not only be acknowledged as ministers of the Church of Christ, but be genuine children of God, by faith in the Son of his love; and ye all, thus

^a and not be ashamed before him at his coming. 29 * If ye know that he is righteous, ^f ye know that * every one that doeth righteousness is born of him.

^a Ch. iv. 17.—^e Acts xxii. 14.—^f Or, know ye —^g Ch. iii. 7, 10.

continuing, shall have fellowship with the Father and with the Son.

Verse 25. This is the promise] God has promised eternal life to all who believe on Christ Jesus. So they who receive his doctrine, and continue in communion with the Father and the Son, shall have this eternal life.

Verse 26. These things have I written] Either meaning the whole epistle, or what is contained in the preceding verses, from the beginning of the 18th to the end of the 25th.

Them that seduce you.] That is, the deceivers that were among them, and who were labouring to pervert the followers of Christ.

Verse 27. But the anointing which ye have received] That ointment, the gifts of the Holy Spirit, mentioned in ver. 20, where see the note.

Ye need not that any man teach you] St. John does not say that those who had once received the teaching of the divine Spirit had no farther need of the ministry of the gospel; no, but he says they had no need of such teaching as their false teachers proposed to them; nor of any other teaching that was different from that anointing, i.e., the teaching of the Spirit of God. No man, howsoever holy, wise, or pure, can ever be in such a state as to have no need of the gospel ministry; they who think so give the highest proof that they have never yet learned of Christ or his Spirit.

And is truth] Because it is the Spirit of truth, John xvi. 13.

And is no lie] It has nothing like the fables of the Gnostics. It can neither deceive, nor be deceived.

Verse 28. And now, little children] Beloved children, abide in him—in Christ Jesus. Let his word and Spirit continually abide in you, and have communion with the Father and the Son.

That, when he shall appear] To judge the world, we may have confidence, freedom of speech, liberty of access, boldness, from a conviction that our cause is good, and that we have had proper ground for exultation; and not be ashamed—confounded, when it appears that those who were brought to Christ Jesus have apostatized, and are no longer found in the congregation of the saints, and consequently are not our crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus. Abide in him, that this may not be the case.

Verse 29. If ye know that he is righteous] That God is a holy God, ye know also that every one who doeth righteousness—who lives a holy life, following the commandments of God, is born of him, begotten of him—is made a partaker of the divine nature, without which he could neither have a holy heart, nor live a holy life.

This verse properly belongs to the following chapter, and should not be separated from it. The subject is the same, and does not stand in any strict relation to that with which the 28th verse concludes.

CHAPTER III.

The extraordinary love of God towards mankind, and the effects of it, 1-3. Sin is the transgression of the law, and Christ was manifested to take away our sins, 4-6. The children of God are known by the holiness of their lives, the children of the devil by the sinfulness of theirs, 7-10. We should love one another, for he that hateth his brother is a murderer; as Christ laid down his life for us, so we should lay down our lives for the brethren, 11-16. Charity is a fruit of brotherly love; our love should be active, not professional merely, 17, 18. How we may know that we are of the truth, 19-21. They whose ways please God, have an answer to all their prayers, 22. The necessity of keeping the commandment of Christ, that he may dwell in us and we in him by his Spirit, 23-24.

BEHOLD, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that ^a we should be called the sons of God! therefore the world knoweth us not, ^b because it knew him not.

2 Beloved, ^c now are we the sons of God, and ^d it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, ^e we shall be like him; for ^f we shall see him as he is.

3 ^g And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

4 Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for ^h sin is the transgression of the law.

5 And ye know ⁱ that he was manifested ^j to take away our sins; and ^k in him is no sin.

6 Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: ^l whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him.

Verse 1. Behold, what manner of love] Whole volumes might be written upon this and the two following verses, without exhausting the extraordinary subject contained in them, viz., the love of God to man. The apostle himself, though evidently filled with God, and walking in the fulness of his light, does not attempt to describe it; he calls on the world and the church to behold it, to look upon it, to contemplate it, and wonder at it.

What manner of love—What great love, both as to quantity and quality; for these ideas are included in the original term. The length, the breadth, the depth, the height, he does not attempt to describe.

The Father hath bestowed] For we had neither claim nor merit that we should be called, that is, constituted or made the sons of God, who were before children of the wicked one, animal, earthly, devilish; therefore, the love which brought us from such a depth of misery and degradation must appear the more extraordinary and impressive.

Therefore the world] The Jews, and all who know not God, and are seeking their portion in this life, knoweth us not—do not acknowledge, respect, love, or approve of us. The world knew well enough that there were such persons, but they did not approve of them.

Because it knew him not.] The Jews did not acknowledge Jesus; they neither approved of him, his doctrine, nor his manner of life.

Verse 2. Now are we the sons of God] He speaks of those who are begotten of God, and who work righteousness.

And it doth not yet appear what we shall be] It is not yet manifest; though we know that we are the children of God, we do not know that state of glorious excellence to which, as such, we shall be raised.

When he shall appear] When he shall be manifested, i.e., when he comes the second time, and shall be manifested in his glorified human nature to judge the world.

We shall be like him] For our vile bodies shall be made like unto his glorious body; we shall see him as he is, in all the glory and majesty both of the divine and human nature. See Phil. iii. 21, and John xvii. 24.

Verse 3. And every man that hath this hope in him] All who have the hope of seeing Christ as he is; that is, of enjoying him in his own glory; purifieth himself—abstains from all evil, and keeps himself from all that is in the world, viz., the lusts of the flesh, of the eye, and the pride of life.

The apostle does not here speak of any man purifying his own heart, because this is impossible; but of his persevering in the state of purity into which the Lord hath brought him.

As he is pure.] Till he is as completely saved from his sins as Christ was free from sin. Many tell us that "this never can be done, for no man can be saved from sin in this life." Will these persons permit us to ask, How much sin may we be saved from in this life? Now, as Christ was manifested to take away our sins, ver. 5, to destroy the works of the devil, ver. 8; and as his blood cleanseth from all sin and unrighteousness, chap. i. 7, 9; is it not evident

7 Little children, ^m let no man deceive you: ⁿ he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous.

8 ^o He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, ^p that he might destroy the works of the devil.

9 ^q Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for ^r his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God.

10 In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: ^s whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, ^t neither he that loveth not his brother.

11 For ^u this is the ^v message that ye heard from the beginning, ^w that we should love one another.

12 Not as ^x Cain, who was of that wicked one, that God means that believers in Christ shall be saved from all sin? For if his blood cleanses from all sin, if he destroys the works of the devil (and sin is the work of the devil), and if he who is born of God does not commit sin, ver. 9, then he must be cleansed from all sin; and while he continues in that state he lives without sinning against God, for the seed of God remaineth in him, and he cannot sin because he is born, or begotten of God, ver. 9.

Verse 4. Sin is the transgression of the law.] The spirit of the law as well as of the gospel is, that "we should love God with all our powers, and our neighbour as ourselves." All disobedience is contrary to love; therefore sin is the transgression of the law, whether the act refers immediately to God or to our neighbour.

Verse 5. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins] He came into the world to destroy the power, pardon the guilt, and cleanse from the pollution of sin. This was the very design of his manifestation in the flesh. He was born, suffered, and died for this very purpose; and can it be supposed that he either cannot or will not accomplish the object of his own coming?

In him is no sin.] And therefore he is properly qualified to be the atoning sacrifice for the sins of men.

Verse 6. Whosoever abideth in him] By faith, love, and obedience.

Sinneth not] Because his heart is purified by faith, and he is a worker together with God, and consequently does not receive the grace of God in vain.

Hath not seen him] It is very likely that here the apostle puts, after the manner of the Hebrew, the preterite for the present: He who sins against God doth not see him, neither doth he know him—the eye of his faith is darkened, so that he cannot see him as he formerly did; and he has no longer the experimental knowledge of God as his father and portion.

Verse 7. Let no man deceive you] Either by asserting that "you cannot be saved from sin in this life," or ^u that sin will do you no harm and cannot alter your state, if you are adopted into the family of God; for sin cannot annul this adoption." Hear God, ye deceivers! He that doeth righteousness is righteous, according to his state, nature, and the extent of his moral powers.

Even as he is righteous] Allowing for the disparity that must necessarily exist between that which is bounded, and that which is without limits. As God, in the infinitude of his nature, is righteous; so they, being filled with him, are in their limited nature righteous.

Verse 8. He that committeth sin is of the devil] Is a child of the devil, and shows that he has still the nature of the devil in him; for the devil sinneth from the beginning—he was the father of sin, brought sin into the world, and maintains sin in the world by living in the hearts of his own children, and thus leading them to transgression; and persuading others that they cannot be saved from their sins in this life, that he may secure a continual residence in their heart.

and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous.

13 Marvel not, my brethren, if ^athe world hate you.

14 ^bWe know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. ^cHe that loveth not his brother abideth in death.

15 ^dWhosoever hateth his brother is a murderer: and ye know that ^eno murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

16 ^fHereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.

17 But ^gwhoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, ^hhow dwelleth the love of God in him?

18 My little children, ⁱlet us not love in word,

For this purpose] For this very end—with this very design, was Jesus manifested in the flesh, that he might destroy, that he might loose the bonds of sin, and dissolve the power, influence, and connexion of sin.

Verso 9. Whosoever is born of God] Begotten of God, doth not commit sin: "that is," say some, "as he used to do; he does not sin habitually as he formerly did." This is bringing the influence and privileges of the heavenly birth very low indeed.

Verso 10. In this the children of God are manifest] Here is a fearful text. Who is a child of the devil? He that committeth sin. Who is the child of God? He that works righteousness. By this text we shall stand or fall before God, whatever our particular creed may say to the contrary.

Neither he that loveth not his brother.] No man is of God who is not ready on all emergencies to do any act of kindness for the comfort, relief, and support of any human being.

Verso 11. For this is the message] See chap. i. 5. From the beginning God hath taught men that they should love one another. How essentially necessary this is to the comfort and wellbeing of man in this state of trial and difficulty, every sensible man must see. All are dependent upon all; all upon each, and each upon all.

Verso 12. Not as Cain] But who was Cain? He was of the devil. And who are they who, through pride, lust of power, ambition, gain, &c., murder each other in wars and political contentions? They are of the devil. To attempt to justify the principle, and excuse the instigators, authors, abettors, &c., of such wars, is as vain as it is wicked. They are opposed to the nature of God, and to that message which he has sent to man from the beginning: Love one another. Love your enemies.

And wherefore slew he him?] Why, his brother was righteous, and he was wicked; and the seed of the wicked one which was in him induced him to destroy his brother, because the seed of God—the divine nature, was found in him.

Verso 13. Marvel not—if the world hate you.] This was a lesson to the church preparatory to martyrdom. Expect neither justice nor mercy from the men who are enemies of God.

Verso 14. We know that we have passed from death unto life] Death and life are represented here as two distinct territories, states, or kingdoms, to either of which the inhabitants of either may be removed. We know, says the apostle, that we are passed over from the territory of death to the kingdom of life, because we love the brethren, which those who continue in the old kingdom—under the old covenant—can never do; for he that loveth not his brother abideth in death. He has never changed his original residence. He is still an unconverted, unrenewed sinner.

Verso 15. Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer] neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth.

19 And hereby we know ¹that we are of the truth, and shall ²assure our hearts before him.

20 ³For if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, and knoweth all things.

21 ⁴Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, ⁵then have we confidence toward God.

22 And ⁶whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, ⁷and do those things that are pleasing in his sight.

23 ⁸And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, ⁹and love one another, ¹⁰as he gave us commandment.

24 And ¹¹he that keepeth his commandments ¹²dwelleth in him, and he in him. And ¹³hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.

He has the same principle in him which was in Cain, and it may lead to the same consequences.

No murderer hath eternal life] Eternal life springs from an indwelling God; and God cannot dwell in the heart where hatred and malice dwell. This text has been quoted to prove that no murderer can be saved. This is not said in the text; and there have been many instances of persons who have been guilty of murder having had deep and genuine repentance, and who doubtless found mercy from his hands who prayed for his murderers. It is, however, an awful text for the consideration of those who shed human blood on frivolous pretences, or in those wars which have their origin in the worst passions of the human heart.

Verso 16. Hereby perceive we the love of God] A higher proof than this of his love Christ could not have possibly given to the children of men.

We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren.] We should risk our life to save the lives of others; and we should be ready to lay down our lives to redeem their souls when this may appear to be a means of leading them to God.

Verso 17. But whoso hath this world's good] Here is a test of this love; if we do not divide our bread with the hungry, we certainly would not lay down our life for him. Whatever love we may pretend to mankind, if we are not charitable and benevolent, we give the lie to our profession.

This world's good.—The life of this world, i. e., the means of life; for so the word is often used. See Mark xii. 44; Luke viii. 43. xv. 12, 30. xxi. 4, and other places.

How dwelleth the love of God in him?] That is, It cannot possibly dwell in such a person. Hardheartedness and God's love never meet together, much less can they be associated.

Verso 18. My little children] My beloved children, let us not love in word—in merely allowing the general doctrine of love to God and man to be just and right;

Neither in tongue] In making professions of love, and of a charitable and humane disposition, and resting there; but in deed—by humane and merciful acts;

And in truth.] Feeling the disposition of which we speak.

Verso 19. Hereby we know that we are of the truth] That we have the true religion of the Lord Jesus, and shall assure our hearts—be persuaded in our consciences, that we have the truth as it is in Jesus; as no man can impose upon himself by imagining he loves when he does not: he may make empty professions to others, but if he loves either God or man, he knows it because he feels it; and love unfelt is not love, it is word or tongue.

Verso 20. If our heart condemn us] If we be conscious that our love is feigned, we shall feel inwardly condemned in professing to have what we have not. And if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart, for he knows every hypocritical winding and turning of the soul, he searches the heart, and tries the reins, and sees all the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the heart which we cannot see, and, if we could see them, could not comprehend them; and as he is the just Judge, he will condemn us more strictly and extensively than we can be by our own conscience.

Verse 21. If our heart condemn us not] If we be conscious to ourselves of our own sincerity, that we practise not deceit, and use no mask, then have we confidence toward God—we can appeal to him for our sincerity, and we can come with boldness to the throne of grace, to obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.

Verse 22. Whatsoever we ask] In such a spirit we receive of him, for he delights to bless the humble, upright, and sincere soul.

Because we keep his commandments] Viz., by loving him and loving our neighbour.

The word heart is used in the preceding verses for conscience; and so the Greek Fathers interpret it, particularly Origen, Nicephorus, and Oecumenius; but this is not an unfrequent meaning of the word in the sacred writings.

Verse 24. Dwelleth in him] i.e., In God; and he—God, in him—the believer.

And hereby we know] It was not by conjecture or inference that Christians of old knew they were in the favour of God, it was by the testimony of God's own Spirit in their hearts; and this testimony was not given in a transient manner, but was constant and abiding while they continued under the influence of that faith that worketh by love. Every good man is a temple of the Holy Ghost, and wherever he is, he is both light and power. By his power he works; by his light he makes both himself and his work known. Peace of conscience and joy in the Holy Ghost must proceed from the indwelling of that Holy Spirit; and those who have these blessings must know that they have them, for we cannot have heavenly peace and heavenly joy without knowing that we have them. But this Spirit in the soul of a believer is not only manifest by its effects, but it bears its own witness to its own indwelling. So that a man not only knows that he has this Spirit from the fruits of the Spirit, but he knows that he has it from its own direct witness.

CHAPTER IV.

We must not believe every teacher who professes to have a divine commission to preach, but try such, whether they be of God; and the more so, because many false prophets have gone out into the world. 1. Those who deny that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh have the spirit of antichrist, 2, 3. The followers of God have been enabled to discern and overcome them, 4-6. The necessity of love to God and one another shown, from God's love to us, 7-11. Though no man has seen God, yet every genuine Christian knows him by the spirit which God has given him, 12, 13. The apostles testified that God sent his Son to be the Saviour of the world; and God dwell in those who confessed this truth, 14, 15. God is love, 16. The nature and properties of perfect love, 17, 18. We love him because he first loved us, 19. The wickedness of pretending to love God while we hate one another, 20, 21.

BELOVED, ^abelieve not every spirit, but ^btry the spirits whether they are of God; because ^cmany false prophets are gone out into the world.

2 ^{Hereby} know ye the Spirit of God: ^dEvery spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God:

3 And ^eevery spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist, whereof ye have heard that it should come; and ^feven now already is it in the world.

4 ^gYe are of God, little children, and have overcome them: because greater is he that is in you, than ^hhe that is in the world.

5 ⁱThey are of the world: therefore speak they of the world, and ^jthe world heareth them.

Verse 1. Beloved, believe not every spirit] Do not be forward to believe every teacher to be a man sent of God. As in those early times every teacher professed to be inspired by the Spirit of God, because all the prophets had come thus accredited, the term spirit was used to express the man who pretended to be and teach under the Spirit's influence.

Try the spirits] Put these teachers to the proof. Try them by that testimony which is known to have come from the Spirit of God, the word of revelation already given.

Many false prophets] Teachers not inspired by the Spirit of God, are gone out into the world—among the Jewish people particularly, and among them who are carnal and have not the Spirit.

Verse 2. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God] We know that the man who teaches that Jesus Christ is the promised Messiah, and that he is come in the flesh, is of God—is inspired by the divine Spirit; for no man can call Jesus Lord but by the Holy Ghost.

Verse 3. Every spirit] Every teacher that confesseth not Jesus, is not of God—has not been inspired by God. The words, is come in the flesh, are wanting in the best MSS.

Spirit of antichrist] All the opponents of Christ's incarnation, and consequently of his passion, death, and resurrection, and the benefits to be derived from them.

Ye have heard that it should come] See 2 Thess. ii. 7.

Even now already is it in the world.] Is working powerfully both among the Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 4. Ye are of God] Ye are under the influence of the divine Spirit, and have overcome them—your testimony, proceeding from the Spirit of Christ, has invalidated theirs which has proceeded from the influence of Satan; for greater is the Holy Spirit which is in you, than the spirit which is in the world.

us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we ^a the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error.

7 ^b Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God.

8 He that loveth not ^c knoweth not God; for ^d God is love.

9 ^e In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only-begotten Son into the world, ^f that we might live through him.

10 Herein is love, ^g not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son ^h to be the propitiation for our sins.

11 Beloved, ⁱ if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another.

12 ^j No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and ^k his love is perfected in us.

13 ^l Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.

Verse 5. They are of the world] Their conversation is worldly, and worldly men hear them in preference to all others. They have their partisans.

Verse 6. We are of God] We, apostles, have the Spirit of God, and speak and teach by that Spirit. He that knoweth God—who has a truly spiritual discernment, heareth us—acknowledges that our doctrine is from God; that it is spiritual, and leads from earth to heaven.

Verse 7. For love is of God] And ever acts like him; he loves man, and daily loads him with his benefits. He that loveth most has most of God in him; and he that loveth God and his neighbour, as before described and commanded, is begotten of God—is a true child of his heavenly Father, for he is made a partaker of the divine nature; and thus his love to God and man proves.

Verse 8. He that loveth not] As already described, knoweth not God—has no experimental knowledge of him.

God is love] An infinite fountain of benevolence and beneficence to every human being. He hates nothing that he has made. He cannot hate, because he is love. He causes his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends his rain on the just and the unjust. He has made no human being for perdition, nor ever rendered it impossible, by any necessitating decree, for any fallen soul to find mercy. He has given the fullest proof of his love to the whole human race by the incarnation of his Son, who tasted death for every man. How can a decree of absolute, unconditional reprobation, of the greater part or any part of the human race, stand in the presence of such a text as this? It has been well observed that, although God is holy, just, righteous, &c., he is never called holiness, justice, &c., in the abstract, as he is here called LOVE. This seems to be the essence of the divine nature, and all other attributes to be only modifications of this.

Verse 9. In this was manifested the love of God] The mission of Jesus Christ was the fullest proof that God could give, or that man could receive, of his infinite love to the world.

That we might live through him] The whole world was sentenced to death because of sin; and every individual was dead in trespasses and sins; and Jesus came to die in the stead of the world, and to quicken every believer, that all might live to him who died for them and rose again.

Verse 10. Not that we loved God] And that he was thereby induced to give his Son to be a propitiation for our sins. No: we were enemies to God, and yet Christ died for our ungodly souls.

Verse 11. If God so loved us] Without any reason or consideration on our part, and without any desert in us; we ought also, in like manner, to love one another; and not suspend our love to a fellow-creature, either on his moral worth or his love to us.

14 And ^m we have seen and do testify that ⁿ the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.

15 ^o Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God.

16 And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. ^p God is love; and ^q he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.

17 Herein is ^r our love made perfect, that ^s we may have boldness in the day of judgment: ^t because as he is, so are we in this world.

18 There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is ^u not made perfect in love.

19 We love him, because he first loved us.

20 ^v If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God ^w whom he hath not seen?

21 And ^x this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.

^a John xiv. 20. Ch. iii. 24.—^b John i. 14. Ch. i. 1, 2.—^c John iii. 17.—^d Rom. x. 9. Ch. v. 1, 5.—^e Ver. 8.—^f Ver. 12. Ch. iii. 24.—^g Gr. love with us.—^h James ii. 13. Ch. ii. 28. iii. 19, 21.—ⁱ Ch. iii. 3.—^j Ver. 12.—^k Ch. ii. 4. iii. 17.—^l Ver. 12.—^m Matt. xxii. 37, 39. John xiii. 34. xv. 12. Ch. iii. 23.

Verse 12. No man hath seen God at any time] We may feel him, though we cannot see him; and if we love one another he dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us—it has then its full accomplishment, having moulded us according to its own nature.

Verse 14. And we have seen] We have had the fullest proof of this from his doctrine and miracles, which we heard and saw during the whole time that he sojourned among men.

Verse 15. Whosoever shall confess] Much stress is laid on this confession, because the false teachers denied the reality of the incarnation; but this confession implied also such a belief in Christ as put them in possession of his pardoning mercy and indwelling Spirit.

Verse 16. God is love] He that dwelleth in love—he who is full of love to God and man is full of God, for God is love; and where such love is, there is God, for he is the fountain and maintainer of it.

Verse 17. Herein is our love made perfect] By God dwelling in us, and we in him; having cast out all the carnal mind that was enmity against himself, and filled the whole heart with the spirit of love and purity. Thus the love is made perfect; when it thus fills the heart it has all its degrees; it is all in all; and all in every power, passion, and faculty of the soul.

May have boldness in the day of judgment] Freedom of speech, and liberty of access; seeing, in the person of our Judge, him who has died for us, regenerated our hearts, and who himself fills them.

As he is] Pure, holy, and loving; so are we in this world; being saved from our sins, and made like to himself in righteousness and true holiness.

Verse 18. There is no fear in love] The man who feels that he loves God with all his heart can never dread him as his Judge. As he is now made a partaker of his Spirit, and carries a sense of the divine approbation in his conscience, he has nothing of that fear that produces terror or brings torment. The perfect love—that fulness of love, which he has received, casteth out fear—removes all terror relative to this day of judgment, for it is of this that the apostle particularly speaks.

He that feareth] He who is still uncertain concerning his interest in Christ; who, although he has many heavenly drawings, and often sits with Christ some moments on a throne of love, yet feels from the evils of his heart a dread of the day of judgment; is not made perfect in love—has not yet received the abiding witness of the Spirit that he is begotten of God; nor that fulness of love to God and man which excludes the enmity of the carnal mind, and which it is his privilege to receive. But is the case of such a man desperate? No: it is neither desperate nor deplorable; he is in the way of salvation, and not far from the kingdom of heaven.

Verse 19. We love him because he first loved us.] This is the foundation of our love to God. It is the seed whence our love springs. The verse might be rendered, Let us therefore love him, because he first loved us: thus the Syriac and Vulgate.

Verse 20. If a man say I love God, and hateth his brother] This, as well as many other parts of this epistle, seems levelled against the Jews, who pretended much love to God while they hated the Gentiles; and even some of them who were brought into the Christian Church brought this leaven with them.

Whom he hath not seen?] If he love not his brother, it is a proof that the love of God is not in him; and if he have not the love of God, he cannot love God, for God can be loved only through the influence of his own love.

CHAPTER V.

He that believeth is born of God; loves God and his children; and keeps his commandments, which are not grievous, 1-3. Faith in Christ overcomes the world, 4, 5. The three earthly and heavenly witnesses, 6-9. He that believeth hath the witness in himself, 10. God has given unto us eternal life in his Son, 11, 12. The end for which St John writes these things, 13-15. The sin unto death, and the sin not unto death, 16, 17. He that is born of God sinneth not, 18. The whole world lieth in the wicked one, 19. Jesus is come to give us an understanding, that we may know the true God, 20. All idolatry to be avoided, 21.

WHOSOEVER ^a believeth that ^b Jesus is the Christ, is ^c born of God: ^d and every one that loveth him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of him.

2 By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments.

3 ^e For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and ^f his commandments are not grievous.

^a John i. 12.—^b Ch. ii. 22, 23. iv. 7, 15.—^c John i. 13.—^d John xv. 23.—^e John xiv. 15, 21, 23. xv. 10. 2 John 6.—^f Mic. vi. 8. Matt. xi. 30.—^g John xvi. 33. Ch. iii. 9. iv. 4.—^h 1 Cor. xv. 67.

Verse 1. Whosoever believeth, &c.] Expressions of this kind are to be taken in connexion with the subjects necessarily implied in them. He that believeth that Jesus is the Messiah, and confides in him for the remission of sins, is begotten of God; and they who are pardoned and begotten of God love him in return for his love, and love all those who are his children.

Verse 2. By this we know that we love the children of God.] Our love of God's followers is a proof that we love God.

Verse 3. For this is the love of God] This the love of God necessarily produces.

His commandments] To love him with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves, are not grievous—are not burdensome; for no man is burdened with the duties which his own love imposes. The old proverb explains the meaning of the apostle's words, Love feels no loads.

Verse 4. Whatsoever is born of God] Whatsoever (the neuter for the masculine) is begotten of God overcometh the world. If we understand by the world the evil principles and practices which are among men, and in the human heart, then the influence of God in the soul may be properly said to overcome this; and by faith in the Son of God a man is able to overcome all that is in the world, viz., the desire of the flesh, the desire of the eye, and the pride of life.

Verse 5. He that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?] That he is the promised Messiah; that he came by a supernatural generation; and, although truly man, came not by man, but by the power of the Holy Ghost in the womb of the Virgin Mary. The person who believes this has the privilege of applying to the Lord for the benefits of the incarnation and passion of Jesus Christ, and receives the blessings which the Jews cannot have, because they believe not the divine mission of Christ.

4 For ^g whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.

5 Who is he that overcometh the world, but ^h he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?

6 This is he that came ⁱ by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. ^j And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth.

7 For there are three that bear record in heaven,

Ch. iv. 15.—^k John. xix. 34.—^l John xiv. 17. xv. 26. xvi. 13. 1 Tim. iii. 16.

Verse 6. This is he that came by water and blood] Jesus was attested to be the Son of God and promised Messiah by water, i.e., his baptism, when the Spirit of God came down from heaven upon him, and the voice from heaven said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Jesus Christ came also by blood. He shed his blood for the sins of the world; and this was in accordance with all that the Jewish prophets had written concerning him. As, therefore, the Spirit of God witnessed his being the Son of God at his baptism, and as the same spirit in the prophets had witnessed that he should die a cruel, yet a sacrificial, death; he is said here to bear witness, because he is the Spirit of truth.

It may be said, also, that the Spirit bears witness of Jesus by his testimony in the souls of genuine Christians, and by the spiritual gifts and miraculous powers with which he endowed the apostles and primitive believers. This is agreeable to what St. John says in his gospel, chap. xv. 26, 27.

Verse 7. There are three that bear record] The FATHER, who bears testimony to his Son; the WORD or Logos, who bears testimony to the Father; and the HOLY GHOST, which bears testimony to the Father and the Son. And these three are one in essence, and agree in the one testimony, that Jesus came to die for, and give life to, the world.

But it is likely this verse is not genuine. It is wanting in every MS. of this epistle written before the invention of printing, one excepted, the Codex Montfortii, in Trinity College, Dublin: the others which omit this verse amount to one hundred and twelve.

To make the whole more clear, that every reader may see what has been added, I shall set down these verses with the inserted words in brackets.

"6. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth. 7. For there are three that bear record [in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these the Father, ^athe Word, and the Holy Ghost: ^band these three are one.

8 And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and these three agree in one.

9 If we receive ^cthe witness of men, the witness of God is greater: ^dfor this is the witness of God, which he hath testified of his Son.

10 He that believeth on the Son of God ^ehath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God, ^fhath made him a liar; because he believed not the record that God gave of his Son.

11 ^gAnd this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and ^hthis life is in his Son.

12 ⁱHe that hath the Son hath life; ^jand he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

13 ^kThese things have I written unto you that

^a John i. 1. Rev. xix. 13.—^b John x. 30.—^c John viii. 17, 18.—^d Matt. iii. 16, 17. xvii. 5.—^e Rom. viii. 16. Gal. iv. 6.—^f John iii. 33. v. 38.—^g Ch. ii. 25.—^h John i. 4. Ch. iv. 9.—ⁱ John iii. 36. v. 24.—^j John xx. 31.—^k Ch. i. 1, 2.—^l Or, concerning him.—^m Ch.

three are one. 8. And there are three that bear witness in earth, [the Spirit, and the water, and the blood, and these three agree in one. 9. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater, &c.] Any man may see, on examining the words, that if those included in brackets, which are wanting in the MSS. and Versions, be omitted, there is no want of connexion; and as to the sense, it is complete and perfect without them; and, indeed, much more so than with them.

Verse 8. The Spirit, and the water, and the blood] This verse is supposed to mean "the Spirit—in the word confirmed by miracles; the water—in baptism, wherein we are dedicated to the Son (with the Father and the Holy Spirit), typifying his spotless purity, and the inward purifying of our nature; and the blood—represented in the Lord's supper, applied to the consciences of believers: and all these harmoniously agree in the same testimony, that Jesus Christ is the divine, the complete, the only Saviour of the world."—Mr. Wesley's notes.

Verse 9. If we receive the witness of men] Which all are obliged to do, and which is deemed a sufficient testimony to truth in numberless cases; the witness of God is greater—he can neither be deceived nor deceive, but man may deceive and be deceived.

Verse 10. He that believeth on the Son of God] This is God's witness to a truth, the most important and interesting to mankind. God has witnessed that whosoever believeth on his Son shall be saved, and have everlasting life; and shall have the witness of it in himself, the Spirit bearing witness with his spirit that he is a child of God. To know, to feel his sin forgiven, to have the testimony of this in the heart from the Holy Spirit himself, is the privilege of every true believer in Christ.

Verse 11. This is the record] The great truth to which the Spirit, the water, and the blood bear testimony. God hath given us eternal life—a right to endless glory, and a meanness for it. And this life is in his Son; it comes by and through him; he is its author and its purchaser; it is only in and through him.

Verse 12. He that hath the Son] As the eternal life is given in the Son of God, it follows that it cannot be enjoyed without him. It is in vain to expect eternal glory, if we have not Christ in our heart. The indwelling Christ gives both a title to it, and a meanness for it. This is God's record. An indwelling Christ and GLORY; no indwelling Christ, no glory.

Verse 13. Ye may know that ye have eternal life] I write to show your privileges—to lead you into the holy of holies—to show what believing on the Son of God is, by the glorious effects it produces: it is not a blind reliance for, but an actual enjoyment of, salvation; Christ living, working, and reigning in the heart.

And that ye may believe] That is, continue to believe; for Christ dwells in the heart only by FAITH, and faith lives only by LOVE, and love continues only by OBEDIENCE; he who BELIEVES loves, and he who LOVES obeys. He who obeys loves; he who loves believes; he who believes has the witness in himself: he who has this witness has Christ in believe on the name of the Son of God; ^kthat ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God.

14 And this is the confidence that we have ^lin him, that, ^mif we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us:

15 And if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him.

16 If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and ⁿhe shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. ^oThere is a sin unto death: ^pI do not say that he shall pray for it.

17 ^qAll unrighteousness is sin: and there is a sin not unto death.

18 We know that ^rwhosoever is born of God

iii. 22.—^a Job xlii. 8. James v. 14, 15.—^b Matt. xii. 31, 32. Mark iii. 29. Luke xii. 10. Heb. vi. 4, 6. x. 26.—^c Jer. vii. 16. xiv. 11. John xvii. 9.—^d Ch. iii. 4.—^e 1 Pet. i. 23. Ch. iii. 9.

his heart, the hope of glory; and he who believes, loves, and obeys, has Christ in his heart, and is a man of prayer.

Verse 14. This is the confidence] The liberty of access and speech, that if we ask anything according to his will, that is, which he has promised in his word. His word is a revelation of his will in the things which concern the salvation of man. All that God has promised we are justified in expecting; and what he has promised, and we expect we should pray for. Prayer is the language of the children of God. He who is begotten of God speaks this language. He calls God Abba Father, in the true spirit of supplication. Prayer is the language of dependance on God; where the soul is dumb, there is neither life, love, nor faith. Faith and prayer are not boldly to advance claims upon God; we must take heed that what we ask and believe for is agreeable to the revealed will of God. What we find promised, that we may plead.

Verse 15. And if we know that he hear us] Seeing we are satisfied that he hears the prayer of faith, requesting the things which himself has promised, we know, consequently, that we have the petitions—the answer to the petitions, that we desired of him; for he cannot deny himself; and we may consider them as sure as if we had them; and we shall have them as soon as we plead for and need them. We are not to ask to-day for mercy that we now need, and not receive it till to-morrow, or some future time. God gives it to him who prays when it is needful.

Verse 16. A sin which is not unto death] This is an extremely difficult passage, and has been variously interpreted.

I shall note three of the chief opinions on this subject.

1. It is supposed that there is here an allusion to a distinction in the Jewish law, where there was chattaah lo lemithah, "a sin not unto death;" that is, 1. A sin, or transgression, to which the law had assigned the punishment of death; such as idolatry, incest, blasphemy, breach of the sabbath, and the like. And 2. A sin not unto death, i.e., transgressions of ignorance, inadvertence, &c., and such as, in their own nature, appear to be comparatively light and trivial.

2. By the sin not unto death, for which intercession might be made, and unto death, for which prayer might not be made, we are to understand transgressions of the civil law of a particular place, some of which must be punished with death, according to the statutes, the crime admitting of no pardon; others might be punished with death, but the magistrate had the power of commuting the punishments, i.e., of changing death into banishment, &c., for reasons that might appear to him satisfactory, or at the intercession of powerful friends. To intercede in the former case would be useless, because the law would not relax, therefore they need not pray for it; but intercession in the latter case might be prevalent, therefore they might pray; and if they did not, the person might suffer the punishment of death.

3. The sin unto death means a case of transgression, particularly of grievous backsliding from the life and power of godliness, which God determines to punish with temporal death, while at the same time he extends mercy to the penitent soul. The disobedient prophet, 1 Kings xiii. 1-82, is, on this interpretation, a case in point: many others occur in the history of the Church, and of every religious community. The sin not unto death is any sin which God does not choose thus to punish. This view of the subject is that taken by the late Reverend J. Wesley, in a sermon entitled, A call to backsliders.

I do not think the passage has anything to do with what is termed the sin against the Holy Ghost; much less with the popish doctrine of purgatory; nor with sins committed before and after baptism, the former pardonable, the latter unpardonable, according to some of the Fathers. Either of the last opinions (viz., 2 and 3) make a good sense; and the first (1) is not unlikely: the apostle may allude to some maxim or custom in the Jewish Church which is not now distinctly known. However, this we know, that any penitent may find mercy through Christ Jesus; for through him every kind of sin may be forgiven to man, except the sin against the Holy Ghost; which I have proved no man can now commit. (Dr. Clarke's interpretation of this difficult passage is far from adequate. The discussion to which the text has given rise cannot be condensed in a foot note. But much of the difficulty is removed by the consideration that the word translated pray in the last clause of the 16th verse is not identical in meaning with that which is rendered ask in the former clause.)

Verse 17. All unrighteousness is sin] Every act contrary to justice is sin—is a transgression of the law which condemns all injustice.

Verse 18. Whosoever is born of God sinneth not] This is spoken of adult Christians; they are cleansed from all unrighteousness, consequently from all sin, chap. i. 7-9.

Keepeth himself] That is, in the love of God, Jude 21, by building up himself on his most holy faith, and praying in the Holy Ghost; and that wicked one—the devil toucheth him not—finds nothing of his own nature in him on which he can work, Christ dwelling in his heart by faith.

Verse 19. We know that we are of God] Have the fullest proof of the truth of Christianity, and of our own reconciliation to God through the death of his Son.

The whole world lieth in wickedness] Lieth in the wicked one—is embraced in the arms of the devil, where it lies fast asleep and carnally secure, deriving its heat and power from its infernal fosterer. What a truly awful state!

Verse 20. We know that the Son of God is come] In the flesh, and has made his soul an offering for sin; and hath given us an understanding—a more eminent degree of light than we ever enjoyed before; that we may know him who is true, even the TRUE GOD, and get eternal life from him through his Son, in whom we are by faith, as the branches in the vine, deriving all our knowledge, light, life, love, and fruitfulness from him. And it is through this revelation of Jesus that we know the ever-blessed and glorious Trinity, and the Trinity, Father, Word, and Holy Ghost, in the eternal, undivided unity of the ineffable Godhead.

Verse 21. Keep yourselves from idols] Avoid the idolatry of the heathens; not only have no false gods, but have the true God. Have no idols in your houses, none in your churches, none in your hearts.

That is a man's idol or god from which he seeks his happiness; no matter whether it be Jupiter, Juno, Apollo, Minerva, Venus, or Diana; or pleasure, wealth, fame, a fine house, superb furniture, splendid equipage, medals, curiosities, books, titles, human friendships, or any earthly or heavenly thing, God the supreme good, only excepted. That is a man's idol which prevents him from seeking and finding his ALL in God.

THE authority of the first Epistle of John being established, little need be said concerning either the second or third, if we regard the language and the sentiment only, for these so fully accord with the first, that there can be no doubt that he who wrote one, wrote all the three. But it must not be concealed that there were doubts entertained in the Primitive Church as to the two latter being canonical. And so late as the days of Eusebius, who lived in the fourth century, they were ranked among those writings which were not received by all, or contradicted, because not believed to be the genuine productions of the apostle John.

It is very likely that, being letters to private persons, they had for a considerable time been kept in the possession of the families to which they were originally sent; and only came to light perhaps long after the death of the apostle, and the death of the Elect Lady or Kyria, and Gaius or Caius, to whom they were addressed. When first discovered, all the immediate vouchers were gone; and the Church of Christ, that was always on its guard against imposture, and especially in relation to writings professing to be the work of apostles, hesitated to receive them into the number of canonical scriptures, till it was fully satisfied that they were divinely inspired. This extreme caution was of the utmost consequence to the Christian faith; for had it been otherwise, had any measure of what is called credulity prevailed, the Church would have been inundated with spurious writings, and the genuine faith greatly corrupted, if not totally destroyed.

The suspicion of forgery, in reference to the second Epistle of Peter, second and third of John, Jude, and the Apocalypse, was so strong, that in the third century, when the Peshito Syriac Version was made, these books were omitted, and have not been received into that Version which is the Version still used in the Syrian Churches to the present day. But the later Syriac Version, which was made A.D. 508, and is called the Philoxenian, from Philoxenus, Bishop of Hierapolis, under whose direction it was formed from the Greek by his rural Bishop Polycarp, and was afterwards corrected and published by Thomas of Charkel, in 616, contains these, as well as all the other canonical books of the New Testament.

From the time that the language, sentiments, and doctrines of these two epistles were critically examined, no doubts were entertained of their authenticity; and at present they are received by the whole Christian Church throughout the world: for although they are not in the ancient Syriac Version, they are in the Philoxenian; and concerning their authenticity I believe the Syrian Churches have at present no doubts.

As to the time in which this epistle was written, it is very uncertain. It is generally supposed to have been written at Ephesus between A.D. 80 and 90, but of this there is no proof; nor are there any data in the epistle itself to lead to any probable conjecture relative to this point. I have placed it at A.D. 85, but would not wish to pledge myself to the correctness of that date.

THE SECOND EPISTLE

OF

JOHN.

CHAPTER I.

The apostle's address to a Christian matron and her children, 1-3. He rejoices to find that certain of her family had received, and continued to adorn, the truth; and he exhorts them to continue to love one another according to the commandment of Christ, 4-6. And particularly cautions them against deceivers, and to be watchful that they might not lose the benefit of what they had received, 7, 8. The necessity of abiding in the doctrine of Christ, 9. He cautions them against receiving, or in any way forwarding, those who did not bring the true doctrine of Christ, 10, 11. Excuses himself from writing more largely, and purposes to pay her and family a visit shortly, 12, 13.

THE elder unto the elect lady and her children, ^awhom I love in the truth; and not I only, but also all they that have known ^bthe truth;

2 For the truth's sake which dwelleth in us, and shall be with us for ever.

3 ^cGrace ^dbe with you, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father, ^ein truth and love.

Verse 1. The elder] John the apostle, who was now a very old man, generally supposed to be about ninety, and therefore he uses the term presbyter or elder, not as the name of an office, but as designating his advanced age. He is allowed to have been the oldest of all the apostles, and to have been the only one who died a natural death.

The elect lady] Many have considered this the proper name of a woman, Kyria; and that this is a very ancient opinion is evident from the Peshito Syriac, the oldest Version we have, which uses it as a proper name, as does also the Arabic.

Others think that a particular church is intended, which some suppose to be the Church at Jerusalem, and that the elect sister, ver. 13, means the Church at Ephesus; but these are conjectures which appear to me to have no good ground. I am satisfied that no metaphor is here intended; that the epistle was sent to some eminent Christian matron, who was probably deaconess of the church, who, it is likely, had a church at her house, or at whose house the apostles and travelling evangelists frequently preached, and were entertained.

Whom I love in the truth] Whom I love as the Christian religion requires us to love one another.

And not I only] She was well known in the churches: many had witnessed or heard of her fidelity, and partook of her hospitality; so that she had a good report of all Christians in that quarter.

Verse 2. For the truth's sake] On account of the gospel. Which dwelleth in us] By the grace which it has procured.

And shall be with us] For God will preserve not only the Christian religion but its truth, all its essential doctrines for ever. And they that abide in the truth shall go whither that truth leads, i.e., to glory.

4 I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children ^awalking in truth, as we have received a commandment from the Father.

5 And now I beseech thee, lady, ^bnot as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, ^cthat we love one another.

6 And ^dthis is love, that we walk after his commandments. This is the commandment, That, ^eas ye Verse 3. Grace be with you] This is addressed to her, her household, and probably that part of the church which was more immediately under her care.

The Son of the Father] The apostle still keeps in view the miraculous conception of Christ; a thing which the Gnostics absolutely denied; a doctrine which is at the ground-work of our salvation.

Verse 4. That I found of thy children walking in truth] The children mentioned here may either be her own children, or those members of the church which were under her care, or some of both. The apostle was glad to find, probably by an epistle sent from herself to him, or from the information of some of the itinerant evangelists, that the work of God was prospering in the place where she lived, and also in her own household. He does not say that all were walking in the truth, but, as the original means, some of her children; there was a growing and spreading work, and there were many adversaries who strove to pervert them who had already believed, and perhaps were successful in drawing several away from their simplicity.

Verse 5. That which we had from the beginning] The commandment to love one another was what they had heard from the first publication of Christianity, and what he wishes this excellent woman to inculcate on all those under her care.

Verse 6. And this is love] That is, our love is shown and proved by our walking according to the commandments of God; for love is the principle of obedience.

Verse 7. For many deceivers, &c.] And these appear to have been Gnostics, for they denied that Jesus was come in the flesh. And this doctrine, so essential to salvation, none could deny but a deceiver and an antichrist.

Verse 8. Look to yourselves] Be on your guard against these seducers; watch, pray, love God and each other, and walk in newness of life.

have heard from the beginning, ye should walk in it.

7 For ^a many deceivers are entered into the world, ^b who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. ^c This is a deceiver and an antichrist.

8 ^d Look to yourselves, ^e that we lose not those things which we have ^f wrought, but that we receive a full reward.

9 ^g Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

That we lose not those things which we have wrought] That we apostles, who have been the means of your conversion, may not be deprived of you as our crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Many MSS., Versions, and Fathers, read the whole clause in the second person plural, ye lose, &c. This reading is more consistent and likely, and is supported by at least as good evidence as the other.

Verse 9. Whosoever transgresseth] He who passes over the sacred enclosure, or goes beyond the prescribed limits; and abideth not in the doctrine—does not remain within these holy limits, but indulges himself either in excesses of action or passion; hath not God for his Father, nor the love of God in his heart.

Hath both the Father and the Son.] He who abideth in the doctrine of Christ, his body is a temple of the Holy Trinity, and he has communion with the Father as his Father, and with the Son as his Saviour and Redeemer.

Verse 10. If there come any unto you] Under the character of an apostle or evangelist, to preach in your house; and bring not this doctrine, that Jesus is come in the flesh, and has died for the redemption of the world;

Receive him not into your house] Give him no entertainment as an evangelical teacher. Let him not preach under your roof.

Neither bid him God speed] And do not say, Health to him—do not salute him with Peace be to thee! The usual salutation among friends and those of the same religion in 10 If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, ^b neither bid him God speed:

12 ^c Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink; but I trust to come unto you, and speak ^d face to face, ^e that ^f our joy may be full.

the East is, "Peace be to you;" which those of the same religion will use among themselves, but never to strangers, except in very rare cases. The words mean, according to the eastern use of them, "Have no religious connexion with him, nor act towards him so as to induce others to believe you acknowledge him as a brother."

Verse 11. Is partaker of his evil deeds.] He that acts towards him as if he considered him a Christian brother, and sound in the faith, puts it in his power to deceive others, by thus apparently accrediting his ministry. No sound Christian should countenance any man as a gospel minister, who holds and preaches erroneous doctrines; especially concerning the Lord Jesus. Nor can any Christian attend the ministry of such teachers without being criminal in the sight of God. He who attends their ministry is, in effect, bidding them God speed; no matter whether such belong to an established church, or to any congregation of dissenters from it. But what St. John says here does not mean that we should deny such the common offices of humanity, charity, and mercy.

Verse 12. Having many things to write] There is more comfort in mutual interviews among friends than in epistolary correspondence.

Verse 13. The children of thy elect sister] Probably her own sister, who lived at Ephesus; and, being acquainted with the apostle's writing, desired to be thus remembered to her. Elect, both in this and the first verse, signifies excellent, eminent, or honourable.

THE THIRD EPISTLE

OF

JOHN.

CHAPTER I.

The apostle's address to Caius, and his good wishes for his prosperity in body and soul, 1, 2. He commends him for his steadiness in the truth, and his general hospitality, especially to the itinerant evangelists, 3-8. Speaks of the bad conduct of Diotrephes; his abuse of his power in the Church; and his slander of the apostles, 9, 10. Exhorts Caius to avoid his example, and to follow what is good, 11. Commends Demetrius, 12. Excuses himself from writing more fully, and proposes to pay him a visit shortly, 13, 14.

THE elder unto the well-beloved Gaius, * whom I love ^b in the truth.

2 Beloved, I ^c wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

3 For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as ^d thou walkest in the truth.

4 I have no greater joy than to hear that ^e my children walk in truth.

5 Beloved, thou doest faithfully whatsoever thou doest to the brethren and to strangers;

6 Which have borne witness of thy charity before the church: whom if thou bring forward on their journey ^f after a godly sort, thou shalt do well;

7 Because that for his name's sake they went forth, ^g taking nothing of the Gentiles.

8 We therefore ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth.

9 I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not.

10 Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, ^h prating against us with malicious ^h Prov. x. 8, 10.

Verse 1. The elder] See on the first verse of the preceding epistle, and also the preface.

The well-beloved Gaius] Gaius is the Greek mode of writing the Roman name Caius; and thus it should be rendered in European languages.

Several persons of the name of Caius occur in the New Testament, Romans, xvi. 23; 1 Cor. i. 14 (probably the same with the above); Acts xix. 29, xx. 4.

The Caius who is mentioned here was probably the Caius who lived at Corinth, and who is styled by St. Paul the host of the whole church; for hospitality to his Christian brethren was the leading feature in the character of this Caius to whom St. John wrote, and it is on this very account that he is commended by the apostle. Besides, St. John's friend lived in a place where this apostle had in Diotrephes a very ambitious and tyrannical adversary; and that there were men of this description at Corinth is evident enough from the two epistles to the Corinthians, though St. Paul has not mentioned their names. [Caius was a very common name.]

Verse 2. I wish above all things] Above all things I pray that thou mayest prosper, and be in health; to which one MS. adds, in the truth. The prayer of St. John for Caius includes three particulars: 1. Health of body; 2. Health of soul; and 3. Prosperity in secular affairs. That thou mayest prosper, and be in health, as thy soul prospereth. These three things, so necessary to the comfort of life, every Christian is authorised to pray for; and we should have more of all three if we devoutly prayed for them.

Verse 3. When the brethren came] Probably the same of whom he speaks in the fifth and following verses, and who appear to have been itinerant evangelists.

The truth that is in thee] The soundness of thy faith and the depth of thy religion.

Verse 4. To hear that my children] From this it has been inferred that Caius was one of St. John's converts, and consequently not the Corinthian Caius, who was converted, most probably, by St. Paul. But the apostle might use the term children here as implying those who were immediately under his pastoral care, and, being an old man, he had a right to use such terms in addressing his juniors both in age and grace.

Verse 5. Thou doest faithfully] Thou hast acted as the faith—the Christian religion required thee to act, in all that thou hast done, both to the brethren at home, and to the strangers—the itinerant evangelists, who, in the course of their travels have called at thy house.

Verse 6. Which have borne witness of thy charity] Of thy love and benevolence.

Before the church] The believers at Ephesus; for to this church the apostle seems to refer.

Whom if thou bring forward] If thou continue to assist such, as thou hast done, thou shalt do well.

words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth them out of the church.

11 Beloved, * follow not that which is evil, but that which is good. ^b He that doeth good is of God: but he that doeth evil hath not seen God.

12 Demetrius ^c hath good report of all men, and

* Ps. xxxvii. 27. Isa. i. 16, 17. 1 Pet. iii. 11.—
^b 1 John ii. 29. iii. 8, 9.

The brethren of whom St. John speaks might have been apostles; the strangers, assistants to these apostles, as John Mark was to Barnabas. Both were itinerant evangelists.

After a godly sort] Worthy of God; and in such a way as he can approve. Let all churches, all congregations of Christians, from whom their ministers and preachers can claim nothing by law, and for whom the state makes no provision, lay this to heart; let them ask themselves, Do we deal with these in a manner worthy of God, and worthy of the profession we make? Do we suffer them to lack the bread that perisheth, while they minister to us with no sparing hand the bread of life?

Verse 7. For his name's sake they went forth] For the sake of preaching the gospel of the grace of God, and making known JESUS to the heathen.

Taking nothing of the Gentiles.] Sometimes, and on some special occasions, this may be necessary; but the labourer is worthy of his hire is the maxim of the author of Christianity. And those congregations of Christians are ever found to prize the gospel most, and profit most by it, who bear all expenses incident to it, and vice versa.

Verse 8. We therefore ought to receive such] Those who are persecuted, for righteousness' sake, and have professed the truth at the hazard of their lives, and the loss of all their worldly substance.

Fellow-helpers to the truth.] And thus encourage the persecuted, and contribute to the spread and maintenance of the gospel.

Verse 9. I wrote unto the church] The church where Caius was; but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence, who loves the presidency or chief place in the church. He was doubtless an officer in the church, at least a deacon, probably a bishop; and, being one, he magnified himself in his office; he loved such eminence, and behaved himself haughtily in it.

of the truth itself: yea, and we also bear record; ^d and ye know that our record is true.

13 ^e I had many things to write, but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee:

14 But I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face. Peace be to thee. Our friends salute thee. Greet the friends by name.

^e 1 Tim. iii. 7.—^d John xxi. 24.—^e 2 John 12.—
^f Gr. mouth to mouth.

Receiveth us not.] Does not acknowledge the apostolical authority.

Verse 10. If I come, I will remember] I will show him the authority which, as an apostle of Jesus Christ, I possess.

Prating against us] This haughty and unfeeling man would give no countenance to the converted Gentiles; so far from it, that he would not receive any of them himself, forbade others to do it, and excommunicated those who had been received into the church by the apostles.

Verse 11. Follow not that which is evil] Do not imitate that wicked man, i.e., the conduct of Diotrephes; be merciful, loving, and kind. For whatever profession any man may make, it will ever appear that he who doeth good is of God—he alone is the person who uses rightly the grace received from God, and he alone shall enjoy the divine approbation.

But he that doeth evil] He who is unfeeling, unmerciful, unkind, hath not seen God—has no proper knowledge of that God whose NAME is mercy, and whose NATURE is love.

Verse 12. Demetrius hath good report] Perhaps another member of the church where Caius was; or he might have been one of those whom the apostle recommends to Caius; or, possibly, the bearer of this letter from John to Caius. He seems to have been an excellent person: all testified of his righteousness; the truth—Christianity—itself bore testimony to him; and the apostles themselves added theirs also.

Verse 13. I had many things to write] That is, I have many things that I might write; but, having the hope of seeing thee shortly, I will not commit them to paper. Ink and pen are here mentioned; paper and ink in the preceding epistle.

Verse 14. Peace be to thee.] Mayest thou possess every requisite good, both of a spiritual and temporal kind.

Our friends salute thee.] Desire to be affectionately remembered to thee. Greet the friends by name—remember me to all those with whom I am acquainted, as if I had specified them by name.

OF

CHAPTER I.

The address and apostolical benediction, 1, 2. The reasons which induced Jude to write this epistle, to excite the Christians to contend for the true faith, and to beware of false teachers, lest, falling from their steadfastness, they should be destroyed after the example of backsliding Israel, the apostate angels, and the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha, 3-7. Of the false teachers, 8. Of Michael disputing about the body of Moses, 9. The false teachers particularly described: they are like brute beasts, going the way of Cain, run after the error of Balaam, and shall perish, as did Korah in his gainsaying, 10, 11. Are impure, unsteady, fierce, shameless, &c., 12, 13. How Enoch prophesied of such, 14, 15. They are further described as murmurers and complainers, 16. We should remember the cautions given unto us by the apostles who foretold of these men, 17-19. We should build up ourselves on our most holy faith, 20, 21. How the Church of Christ should treat such, 22, 23. The apostle's farewell, and his doxology to God, 24, 25.

[Dr. Clarke's Introduction to this Epistle is taken from Michaelis, and is therefore omitted from this Edition. Of the author little is known; but he is generally supposed to have been one of the "brethren of our Lord," and brother of James the Bishop of Jerusalem. Doubts were entertained as to the authenticity of the Epistle in early times. But there is no adequate reason for its rejection from the Canon; and later critics have generally received it as authentic.]

Verse 1. Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ] Probably Jude the apostle, who was surnamed Thaddeus and Lebbeus, was son to Alpheus, and brother to James the less, Joseph, and Simon. See Matt. x. 3, and collate with Luke vi. 16, Matt. xiii. 55.

To them that are sanctified by God] Instead of the sanctified, it is better to read on the authority of several MSS., Versions, and Fathers to them that are beloved.

¹ faith; also, that none can be preserved in the faith that do not continue in union with Christ, by whose grace alone they can be preserved and called. This should be read consecutively with other epithets, and should be rather, in a translation, read first than last, to the saints in God the Father, called and preserved by Christ Jesus. Saints is the same as Christians; to become such they were called to believe in Christ by the preaching of the gospel, and having believed, were preserved by the grace of Christ in the life and practice of piety.

Verse 2. Mercy unto you] For even the best have no merit, and must receive every blessing and grace in the way of mercy.

Peace] With God and your consciences, love both to God and man be multiplied—be unboundedly increased.

Verse 3. When I gave all diligence] This phrase is a Grecism for being exceedingly intent upon a subject, taking it up seriously with determination to bring it to good effect.

Some think that St. Jude intimates that he had at first purposed to write to the Church at large, on the nature and served in everlasting chains, under darkness, * unto the judgment of the great day.

7 Even as ^b Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after ^c strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire.

8 ^d Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and ^e speak evil of dignities.

9 Yet ^f Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil he disputed about the body of Moses, ^g durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, ^h the Lord rebuke thee.

10 ⁱ But these speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves.

design of the gospel; but seeing the dangers to which the churches were exposed, because of the false teachers, he changed his mind, and wrote pointedly against those false doctrines, exhorting them strenuously to contend for the faith.

The common salvation] The Christian religion, and the salvation which it brings; called common because it equally belongs to Jews and Gentiles; it equally offers to every human being that redemption which provides for the whole world.

Verse 4. For there are certain men crept in unawares] They have got into the Church under specious pretences; and, when in, began to sow their bad seed.

Before of old ordained] Such as were long ago proscribed, and condemned in the most public manner; this is the import of the word in this place, and there are many examples of this use of it in the Greek writers.

To this condemnation] To a similar punishment to that immediately about to be mentioned.

In the sacred writings all such persons, false doctrines, and impure practices, have been most openly proscribed and condemned; and the apostle immediately produces several examples, viz., the disobedient Israelites, the unfaithful angels, and the impure inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha.

Turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness] Making the grace and mercy of God a covering for crimes; insinuating that men might sin safely who believe the gospel, because in that gospel grace abounds.

The only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ] These words may be translated, Denying the only Sovereign God, even our Lord Jesus Christ. But God is omitted by the best MSS. Versions, and by many of the Fathers. It is very likely that it was originally inserted as a gloss, to ascertain to whom the title of the only Sovereign belonged; and thus make two persons where only one seems to be intended. The passage, I believe, belongs solely to Jesus Christ, and may be read thus: Denying the only Sovereign Ruler, even our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 5. I will therefore put you in remembrance] That is, how such persons were proscribed and condemned to bear the punishment due to such crimes.

Though ye once knew this] The word here translated once, has greatly puzzled many interpreters. It has two meanings in the sacred writings, and indeed in the Greek writers also. 1. It signifies once, one time, as opposed to twice or several times. 2. Altogether, entirely, perfectly. This appears to be the sense of the word in Heb. vi. 4; those who were FULLY enlightened. Heb. x. 2: THOROUGHLY cleansed. See also ver. 3 of this epistle. Ps. lxxii. 11. God spoke FULLY, completely, on the subject. St. Jude is to be understood as saying, I will therefore put you in remem-

13 ^f Raging waves of the sea, ^g foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, ^h to which is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

14 And Enoch also, ⁱ the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, ^j the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, 15 To execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their ^k hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him.

brance, though ye are THOROUGHLY instructed in this. Saved the people] Delivered them from the Egyptian bondage.

Afterward destroyed them] Because they neither believed his word, nor were obedient to his commands. This is the first example of what was mentioned, ver. 4.

Verse 6. The angels which kept not their first estate] Their own principality. The words may be understood of their having invaded the office or dignity of some others, or of their having by some means forfeited their own. This is spoken of those generally termed the fallen angels; but from what they fell, or from what cause, or for what crime, we know not. It is generally thought to have been pride; but this is mere conjecture. One thing is certain; the angels who fell must have been in a state of probation, capable of either standing or falling, as Adam was in Paradise. They did not continue faithful, though they knew the law on which they stood; they are therefore produced as the second example.

But left their own habitation] This seems to intimate that they had invaded the office and prerogatives of others, and attempted to seize on their place of residence and felicity.

He hath reserved in everlasting chains] That is, in a state of confinement from which they cannot escape.

Under darkness] Alluding probably to those dungeons or dark cells in prisons where the most flagitious culprits were confined.

The judgment of the great day] The final judgment, when both angels and men shall receive their eternal doom. See on 2 Pet. ii. 4.

Verse 7. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha] What their sin and punishment were may be seen in Gen. xix., and the notes there.

Are set forth for an example] Both of what God will do to such transgressors, and of the position laid down in ver. 4, that God has in the most open and positive manner declared that such and such sinners shall meet with the punishment due to their crimes.

Suffering the vengeance of eternal fire] Subjected to such a punishment as an endless fire can inflict. Some apply this to the utter subversion of these cities, so that by the action of that fire which descended from heaven they were totally and eternally destroyed; for as to their being rebuilt, that is impossible, seeing the very ground on which they stood is burnt up, and the whole plain is now the immense lake Asphaltites.

The first sense applies to the inhabitants of those wicked cities; the second, to the cities themselves: in either case the word signifies an eternally destructive fire; it has no end in the punishment of the wicked Sodomites, &c.; it has no end in the destruction of the cities; they were totally burnt

17 *But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ;

18 How that they told you ^bthere should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts.

up, and never were and never can be rebuilt. In either of these senses the word eternal has its grammatical and proper meaning.

Verse 8. Likewise also these filthy dreamers] He means to say that these false teachers and their followers were as unbelieving and disobedient as the Israelites in the wilderness, as rebellious against the authority of God as the fallen angels, and as impure and unholly as the Sodomites; and that, consequently, they must expect similar punishment.

Despise dominion] They set all government at nought—they will come under no restraints; they despise all law, and wish to live as they list.

Speak evil of dignities.] They blaspheme or speak injuriously of supreme authority. (See 2 Pet. ii. 10, 11.) They treat governors and government with contempt, and calumniate and misrepresent all divine and civil institutions.

Verse 9. Yet Michael the archangel] The word archangel is never found in the plural number in the sacred writings. There can be properly only one archangel, one chief or head of all the angelic host. Nor is the word devil, as applied to the great enemy of mankind, ever found in the plural; there can be but one monarch of all fallen spirits. Michael is this archangel, and head of all angelic orders; the devil, great dragon, or Satan, is head of all the diabolic orders. When these two hosts are opposed to each other they are said to act under these two chiefs as leaders; hence in Rev. xii. 7, it is said: MICHAEL and his angels fought against the DRAGON and his angels. The word Michael seems to be compounded of mi, who, ke, like, and el, God; he who is like God; hence by this personage, in the Apocalypse, many understand the Lord Jesus.

Disputed about the body of Moses] What this means I cannot tell; or from what source St. Jude drew it, unless from some tradition among his countrymen.

The contention mentioned by Jude is not about the sacrifice of Isaac, nor the soul of Moses, but about the body of Moses; but why or wherefore we know not. Some think the devil wished to show the Israelites where Moses was buried, knowing that they would then adore his body; and that Michael was sent to resist this discovery.

Durst not bring against him a railing accusation] It was a Jewish maxim, that "It is not lawful for man to prefer ignominious reproaches, even against wicked spirits."

Verse 10. Speak evil of those things which they know not] They do not understand the origin and utility of civil government; they revile that which ever protects their own persons and their property. This is true in most insurrections and seditions.

But what they know naturally] They are destitute of reflection; their minds are uncultivated; they follow mere natural instinct, and are slaves to their animal propensities.

As brute beasts] Like the irrational animals; but, in the indulgence of their animal propensities, they corrupt themselves beyond the example of the brute beasts.

Verse 11. They have gone in the way of Cain] They are haters of their brethren, and they that are such are murderers; and by their false doctrine they corrupt and destroy the souls of the people.

The error of Balaam] For the sake of gain they corrupt the word of God and refine away its meaning, and let it down so as to suit the passions of the profligate.

Gainsaying of Core] See Num. xxii. It appears that these persons opposed the authority of the apostles of our Lord, as Korah and his associates did that of Moses and Aaron; and St. Jude predicts them a similar punishment. In this verse he accuses them of murder, covetousness, and rebellion against the authority of God.

Verse 12. Spots in your feasts of charity] It appears that these persons, unholly and impure as they were, still continued to have outward fellowship with the church!

The feasts of charity, the love feasts, of which the apostle speaks, were in use in the primitive church till the middle of

x. 25.—^d1 Cor. ii. 14. James iii. 15.—^eCol. ii. 7. 1 Tim. i. 4.—^fRom. viii. 26. Eph. vi. 18.—^gTit. ii. 13. 2 Pet. iii. 12.

the fourth century, when, by the council of Laodicea, they were prohibited to be held in the churches; and, having been abused, fell into disuse. In later days they have been revived, in all the purity and simplicity of the primitive institution, among the Moravians or Unitas Fratrum, and the people called Methodists.

Among the ancients, the richer members of the church made an occasional general feast, at which all the members attended, and the poor and the rich ate together. The fatherless, the widows, and the strangers were invited to these feasts, and their eating together was a proof of their love to each other; whence such entertainments were called love-feasts. The love-feasts were at first celebrated before the Lord's Supper, in process of time they appear to have been celebrated after it. But they were never considered as the Lord's Supper, nor any substitute for it.

Feeding themselves without fear] Eating, not to suffice nature, but to pamper appetite. It was this which brought the love-feasts into disrepute in the church, and was the means of their being at last wholly laid aside.

Clouds—without water] The doctrine of God is compared to the rain, Deut. xxxii. 2, and clouds are the instruments by which the rain is distilled upon the earth. In arid or parched countries the very appearance of a cloud is delightful, because it is a token of refreshing showers; but when sudden winds arise, and disperse these clouds, the hope of the husbandman and shepherd is cut off. These false teachers are represented as clouds; they have the form and office of the teachers of righteousness, and from such appearances pure doctrine may be naturally expected: but these are clouds without water—they distil no refreshing showers, because they have none; they are carried away and about by their passions, as those light fleecy clouds are carried by the winds.

Trees whose fruit withereth] Called or diseased trees; for although there are blossoms, and the fruit shapes or is set, the galls in the trees prevent the proper circulation of the sap, and therefore the fruit never comes to perfection. Hence the apostle immediately adds, without fruit, i.e., the fruit never comes to maturity. This metaphor expresses the same thing as the preceding. They have the appearance of ministers of the gospel, but they have no fruit.

Twice dead] First, naturally and practically dead in sin, from which they had been revived by the preaching and grace of the gospel. Secondly, dead by backsliding or apostasy from the true faith, by which they lost the grace they had before received; and now likely to continue in that death, because plucked up from the roots, their roots of faith and love being no longer fixed in Christ Jesus. Perhaps the arist is taken here for the future: They SHALL BE plucked up from the roots—God will exterminate them from the earth.

Verse 13. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame] Like the sea in a storm, where the swells are like mountains; the breakers lash the shore, and sound like thunder; and the great deep, stirred up from its very bottom, rolls its muddy, putrid sediment, and deposits it upon the beach.

Wandering stars] Not what we call planets; for although these differ from what are called the fixed stars, which never change their place, while the planets have their revolution round the sun; yet, properly speaking, there is no irregularity in their motions. But these are uncertain, anomalous meteors, ignes fatui, dancing about in the darkness which themselves have formed, and leading simple souls astray who have ceased to walk in the light, and have no other guides but those oscillating and devious meteors, which, if you run after them, will flee before you, and if you run from them, will follow you.

The blackness of darkness] They are such as are going headlong into that outer darkness where there is wailing, and weeping, and gnashing of teeth.

Verse 14. Enoch also, the seventh from Adam] He was the seventh patriarch, and is distinguished thus from Enoch, son of Cain, who was but the third from Adam; this appears plainly from the genealogy, 1 Chron. i. 1: Adam, Seth, Enosh, Kenan, Mahalaleel, Jered, Henoch, or Enoch, &c. [Ten thousand of his saints] This seems to be taken from Dan. vii. 10.

Verse 15. To execute judgment] This was originally spoken to the antediluvians; and the coming of the Lord to destroy that world was the thing spoken of in this prophecy or declaration. But as God had threatened this, it required no direct inspiration to foretell it. To execute judgment, &c. This is a very strange verse as to its composition, and is loaded with various readings; the MSS. and Versions being at little agreement among themselves on its phraseology.

Verse 16. These are murmurers] Grudging and grumbling at all men, and at all things; complainers of their fate or destiny—finding fault with God and all his providential dispensations, making and governing worlds in their own way; persons whom neither God nor man can please.

Walking after their own lusts] Taking their wild, disorderly, and impure passions for the rule of their conduct, and not the writings of the prophets and apostles.

Having men's persons in admiration] Time-servers and flatterers; persons who pretend to be astonished at the greatness, goodness, sagacity, learning, wisdom, &c., of rich and great men, hoping thereby to acquire money, influence, power, friends, and the like.

Because of advantage.] For the sake of lucre. All the flatterers of the rich are of this kind; and especially those who profess to be ministers of the gospel, and who, for the sake of a more advantageous settlement or living, will soothe the rich even in their sins.

Verse 17. Remember—the words] Instead of following those teachers and their corrupt doctrine, remember what Christ and his apostles have said; for they foretold the coming of such false teachers and impostors.

Verse 18. Mockers in the last time] See the notes on 1 Tim. iv. 1; 2 Tim. iii. 1, &c.; and particularly 2 Pet. iii. 2, 3, &c., to which Jude seems to refer.

The last time.—The conclusion of the Jewish polity.

Verse 19. Who separate themselves] From the true church, which they leave from an affectation of superior wisdom.

Sensual] Animal—living as brute beasts, guided simply by their own lusts and passions, their Bible being the manifold devices and covetousness of their own hearts; for they have not the Spirit—they are not spiritually minded, and have no Holy Ghost, no inspiration from God.

Verse 20. Building up yourselves] Having the most holy faith—the gospel of our Lord Jesus, and the writings of his apostles, for your foundation.

Praying in the Holy Ghost] The prayer that is not sent up through the influence of the Holy Ghost is never likely to reach heaven.

Verse 21. Keep yourselves in the love of God] By building up yourselves on your most holy faith, and praying in the Holy Ghost; for without this we shall soon lose the love of God.

Looking for the mercy of our Lord] After all their dili-falling, and ^a to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, gence, earnestness, self-denial, watching, obedience, &c., they must look for the MERCY of the Lord Jesus Christ, to bring them to ETERNAL LIFE.

Verse 22. And of some have compassion, making a difference] The general meaning of this exhortation is supposed to be, "Ye are not to deal alike with all those who have been seduced by false teachers; ye are to make a difference between those who have been led away by weakness and imprudence, and those who, in the pride and arrogance of their hearts, and their unwillingness to submit to wholesome discipline, have separated themselves from the church, and become its inveterate enemies."

Verse 23. And others save with fear] Mr. Wesley's note has probably hit the sense: "Meantime watch over others as well as yourselves; and give them such help as their various needs require. For instance, 1. Some that are wavering in judgment, staggered by others' or by their own evil reasoning, endeavour more deeply to convince of the truth as it is in Jesus. 2. Some snatch with a swift and strong hand out of the fire of sin and temptation. 3. On others show compassion, in a milder and gentler way; though still with a jealous fear, lest you yourselves be infected with the disease you endeavour to cure. See therefore that, while ye love the sinners, ye retain the utmost abhorrence of their sins, and of any, the least degree of or approach to them."

Hating even the garment spotted by the flesh.] Fleeing from all appearance of evil.

Verse 24. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling] Who alone can preserve you from the contagion of sin, and preserve you from falling into any kind of error that might be prejudicial to the interests of your souls; and thus to present you faultless, or, as many others read, without spot, alluding to the spotted garment mentioned above.

Before the presence of his glory] Where nothing can stand that does not resemble himself, with exceeding great joy, in finding yourselves eternally out of the reach of the possibility of falling, and for having now arrived at an eternity of happiness.

Verse 25. To the only wise God] Who alone can teach, who alone has declared the truth; that truth in which ye now stand.

Our Saviour] Who has by his blood washed us from our sins, and made us kings and priests unto God the Father.

Be glory] Be ascribed all light, excellence, and splendour.

Majesty] All power, authority, and pre-eminence.

Dominion] All rule and government in the world and in the church, in earth and in heaven.

And power] All energy and operation to everything that is wise, great, good, holy, and excellent.

Both now] In the present state of life and things.

And ever.] To the end of all states, places, dispensations, and worlds; and to a state which knows no termination, being that ETERNITY in which this glory, majesty, dominion, and power ineffably and incomprehensibly dwell.

Amen.] So let it be, so ought it to be, and so it shall be.

AMONG the interpreters of the Apocalypse, both in ancient and modern times, we find a vast diversity of opinions, but they may be all reduced to four principal hypotheses, or modes of interpretation :

1. The Apocalypse contains a prophetical description of the destruction of Jerusalem, of the Jewish war, and the civil wars of the Romans. 2. It contains predictions of the persecutions of the Christians under the Heathen Emperors of Rome, and of the happy days of the Church under the Christian Emperors, from Constantine downwards. 3. It contains prophecies concerning the tyrannical and oppressive conduct of the Roman Pontiffs, the true Antichrist; and foretels the final destruction of Popery. 4. It is a prophetic declaration of the schism and heresies of Martin Luther, those called Reformers, and their successors; and the final destruction of the Protestant Religion.

The first opinion has been defended by Professor Wetstein, and other learned men on the continent.

The second is the opinion of the Fathers in general, both Greek and Latin.

The third was first broached by the Abbe Joachim, who flourished in the thirteenth century, was espoused by most of the Franciscans, and has been, and still is, the general opinion of the Protestants.

The fourth seems to have been invented by popish writers, merely by way of retaliation.

Who the writer of the Apocalypse was learned men are not agreed. This was a question, as well in ancient as in modern times. Many have attributed it to the apostle John; others, to a person called John the presbyter, who they say was an Ephesian, and totally different from John the apostle. And lastly, some have attributed it to Cerintus, a contemporary of John the apostle. This hypothesis, however, seems utterly unsupportable; as there is no probability that the Christian Church would have so generally received a work which came from the hands of a man at all times reputed a very dangerous heretic; nor can the doctrines it contains ever comport with a Cerinthian Creed.

Whether it was written by John the apostle, John the presbyter, or some other person, is of little importance, if the question of its inspiration be fully established. If written by an apostle, it is canonical; and should be received, without hesitation, as a work divinely inspired. Every apostle acted under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. John was an apostle, and consequently inspired; therefore, whatever he wrote was written by divine inspiration. If, therefore, the authenticity of the work be established, i.e., that it was written by John the apostle, all the rest necessarily follows.

PREFACE TO THE REVELATION OF ST. JOHN.

My readers will naturally expect that I should either give a decided preference to some one of the opinions stated above, or produce one of my own; I can do neither, nor can I pretend to explain the book: I do not understand it; and in the things which concern so sublime and awful a subject, I dare not, as my predecessors, indulge in conjectures. I have read elaborate works on the subject, and each seemed right till another was examined. I am satisfied that no certain mode of interpreting the prophecies of this book has yet been found out, and I will not add another monument to the littleness or folly of the human mind, by endeavouring to strike out a new course.

A conjecture concerning the design of the book may be safely indulged; thus then it has struck me, that the Book of the Apocalypse may be considered as a PROPHET continued in the Church of God, uttering predictions relative to all times, which have their successive fulfilment as ages roll on; and thus it stands in the Christian Church in the place of the SUCCESSION of PROPHETS in the Jewish Church; and by this especial economy PROPHECY is STILL CONTINUED, is ALWAYS SPEAKING; and yet a succession of prophets rendered unnecessary. If this be so, we cannot too much admire the wisdom of the contrivance which still continues the voice and testimony of prophecy, by means of a very short book, without the assistance of any extraordinary messenger, or any succession of such messengers, whose testimony would at all times be liable to suspicion, and be the subject of infidel and malevolent criticism, howsoever unexceptionable to ingenuous minds the credentials of such might appear.

On this ground it is reasonable to suppose that several prophecies contained in this book have been already fulfilled, and that therefore it is the business of the commentator to point such out. It may be so; but as it is impossible for me to prove that my conjecture is right, I dare not enter into proceedings upon it, and must refer to such writers as have made this their particular study.

After having lived in one of the most eventful eras of the world; after having seen a number of able pens employed in the illustration of this and other prophecies; after having carefully attended to those facts which were supposed to be the incontestable proofs of the fulfilment of such and such visions, seals, trumpets, thunders, and vials of the Apocalypse; after seeing the issue of that most terrible struggle which the French nation, the French republic, the French consulate, and the French empire have made to regain and preserve their liberties, which, like arguing in a circle, have terminated where they began, without one political or religious advantage to them or to mankind; and after viewing how the prophecies of this book were supposed to apply almost exclusively to these events, the writers and explainers of these prophecies keeping pace in their publications with the rapid succession of military operations, and confidently promising the most glorious issue, in the final destruction of superstition, despotism, arbitrary power, and tyranny of all kinds, nothing of which has been realised; I say, viewing all those things, I feel myself at perfect liberty to state that, to my apprehension, all these prophecies have been misapplied and misapprehended; and that the KEY to them is not yet intrusted to the sons of men. My readers will therefore excuse me from any exposure of my ignorance or folly, by attempting to do what many, with much more wisdom and learning, have attempted, and what every man to the present day has failed in, who has preceded me in expositions of this book. I have no other mountain to heap on those already piled up; and if I had, I have not strength to lift it: those who have courage may again make the trial; already we have had a sufficiency of vain efforts.

I had resolved, for a considerable time, not to meddle with this book, because I foresaw that I could produce nothing satisfactory on it: but when I reflected that the literal sense and phraseology might be made much plainer by the addition of philological and critical notes; and that, as the diction appeared in many places to be purely rabbinical (a circumstance to which few of its expositors have attended), it might be rendered plainer by example from the ancient Jewish writers; and that several parts of it spoke directly of the work of God in the soul of man, and of the conflicts and consolations of the followers of Christ, particularly in the beginning of the book, I changed my resolution, and have added short notes, principally philological, where I thought I understood the meaning.

THE REVELATION

OF

ST. JOHN THE DIVINE.

CHAPTER I.

The preface to this Book, and the promise to them who read it, 1-3. John's address to the seven Churches of Asia, whose high calling he particularly mentions; and shows the speedy coming of Christ, 4-8. Mentions his exile to Patmos, and the appearance of the Lord Jesus to him, 9-11. Of whom he gives a most glorious description, 12-18. The command to write what he saw, and the explanation of the seven stars and the seven golden candlesticks, 19, 20.

THE Revelation of Jesus Christ, ^a which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which ^b must shortly come to pass; and ^c he sent and signified it by his angel unto his Servant John.

2 ^d Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things ^e that he saw.

3 ^f Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein; for ^g the time is at hand.

^a John iii. 22. viii. 26. xii. 49.—^b Ch. iv. 1. Ver. 3.—^c Ch. xxii. 16.—^d 1 Cor. i. 6. Ch. vi. 9. xii. 17. Ver. 9.—^e 1 John i. 1.—^f Luke xi. 28. Ch. xxii. 7.—^g Rom. xiii. 11. James v. 8. 1 Pet. iv. 7. Ch. xxii. 10.—^h Exod. iii. 14. Ver. 8.—ⁱ John i. 1.—^j Zech.

Verse 1. The Revelation of Jesus Christ] The word from which we have our word Apocalypse signifies literally a revelation, or discovery of what was concealed or hidden. It is here said that this revelation, or discovery of hidden things, was given by God to Jesus Christ; that Christ gave it to his angel; that this angel showed it to JOHN; and that John sent it to the CHURCHES. It is properly, therefore, the Revelation of God, sent by these various agents to his servants at large; and this is the proper title of the book.

Things which must shortly come to pass] If this book were written before the destruction of Jerusalem, and the prophecies in it relate to that destruction, and the civil wars among the Romans, which lasted but three or four years, then it might be said the Revelation is of things which must shortly come to pass. But if we consider the book as referring to the state of the Church in all ages, the words here, and those in ver. 3, must be understood of the commencement of the events predicted; as if he had said: In a short time the train of these visions will be put in motion.

Verse 2. Who bare record of the word of God] Is there a reference here to the first chapter of John's Gospel? Or, does the writer mean the fidelity with which he noted and related the word—doctrines or prophecies which he received at this time by revelation from God? This seems more consistent with the latter part of the verse.

Verse 3. Blessed is he that readeth] This is to be under-

4 JOHN to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him ^a which is, and ^b which was, and which is to come; ^c and from the seven Spirits which are before this throne;

5 And from Jesus Christ, ^d who is the faithful witness, and the ^e first begotten of the dead, and ^f the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him ^g that loved us, ^h and washed us from our sins in his own blood,

6 And hath ⁱ made us kings and priests unto God stood of the happiness or security of the persons who, reading and hearing the prophecies of those things which were to come to pass shortly, took proper measures to escape from the impending evils.

The time is at hand] Either in which they shall be all fulfilled, or begin to be fulfilled.

Verse 4. John to the seven churches] The apostle begins this much in the manner of the Jewish prophets. They often name themselves in the messages which they receive from God to deliver to the people.

The Asia here mentioned was what is called Asia Minor, or the Lydian or Proconsular Asia; the Seven Churches were those of Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea. We are not to suppose that they were the only Christian Churches then in Asia Minor; there were several others then in Phrygia, Pamphylia, Galatia, Pontus, Cappadocia, &c. &c. But these seven were those which lay nearest to the apostle, and were more particularly under his care; though the message was sent to the Churches in general, and perhaps it concerns the whole Christian world. But the number seven may be used here as the number of perfection.

Grace be unto you] This form of apostolical benediction we have often seen in the preceding epistles.

From him which is, and which was, and which is to come] This phraseology is purely Jewish, and probably taken from and his Father; * to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

7 ^b Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and * they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

8 ^a I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, * which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

9 I John, who also am your brother, and, * companion in tribulation, and * in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, ^b for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10 ^c I was in the Spirit on ^d the Lord's day, and heard behind me ^e a great voice, as of a trumpet,

* 1 Tim. vi. 16. Heb. xiii. 21. 1 Pet. iv. 11. v. 11.—^b Dan. vii. 13. Matt. xxiv. 30. xxvi. 64. Acts i. 11.—^c Zech. xii. 10. John xix. 37.—^d Isa. xli. 4. lxiv. 6. xlviii. 12. Ver. 17. Ch. ii. 8. xxi. 6. xxii. 13. Ver. 11.—^e Ver. 4. Ch. iv. 8. xi. 17. xvi. 5.—^f Phil. i. 7. xv. 14. 2 Tim. i. 8.—^g Rom. viii. 17. 2 Tim. ii. 12.—^h Ch. vi. 9. Ver. 2.—ⁱ Acts x. 10. 2 Cor. xii. 2. Ch. iv. 2. xviii. 3. xxi. 10.—

the Tetragrammaton, YEHOWAH; which is supposed to include in itself all time, past, present, and future. But they often use the phrase of which the original is a literal translation.

This phraseology strongly expresses the eternity of God; for we have no other idea of time than as past, or now existing, or yet to exist; nor have we any idea of eternity but as that duration called by some eternitas a parte ante, the eternity that was before time, and eternitas a parte post, the endless duration that shall be when time is no more. That which was, is the eternity before time; that which is, is time itself; and that which is TO COME, is the eternity which shall be when time is no more.

The seven Spirits—before the throne] The ancient Jews, who represented the throne of God as the throne of an eastern monarch, supposed that there were seven ministering angels before this throne, as there were seven ministers attendant on the throne of a Persian monarch.

That seven ANGELS are here meant, and not the Holy Spirit, is most evident from the place, the number, and the tradition. See chap. iii. 1, iv. 5, and v. 6. Those who imagine the Holy Ghost to be intended, suppose the number seven is used to denote his manifold gifts and graces. [There can be little doubt that the reference is to the Holy Ghost. Grace, such as is involved in this benediction, could not come from angels.]

Verse 5. The faithful witness] The true teacher, whose testimony is infallible, and whose sayings must all come to pass.

The prince of the kings] The chief or head of all earthly potentates; who has them all under his dominion and control, and can dispose of them as he will.

Unto him that loved us] This should begin a new verse, as it is the commencement of a new subject.

Washed us from our sins] The redemption of the soul, with the remission of sins, and purification from unrighteousness, is here, as in all the New Testament, attributed to the blood of Christ shed on the cross for man.

Verse 6. Kings and priests] See on 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9. The most reputable MSS., Versions, and Fathers have a kingdom and priests, i.e., a kingdom of priests, or a royal priesthood. The regal and sacerdotal dignities are the two highest than can possibly exist among men; and these two are here mentioned to show the glorious prerogatives and state of the children of God.

To him be glory] That is, to Christ; for it is of him that the prophet speaks, and of none other.

For ever and ever] To ages of ages; or rather, through all indefinite periods; through all time, and through eternity.

Amen] A word of affirmation and approbation; so it shall be, and so it ought to be.

Verse 7. Behold, he cometh with clouds] This relates to his coming to execute judgment on the enemies of his religion; perhaps to his coming to destroy Jerusalem, as he was to be particularly manifested to them that pierced him, which must mean the incredulous and rebellious Jews.

And all kindreds of the earth] All the tribes of the land. By this the Jewish people are most evidently intended, and 11 Saying, 'I am Alpha and Omega,' the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

12 And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, ^a I saw seven golden candlesticks;

13 ^b And in the midst of the seven candlesticks ^c one like unto the Son of man, ^d clothed with a garment down to the foot, and ^e girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

14 His head and ^f his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; ^g and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

1 John xx. 26. Acts xx. 7. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.—^a Ch. iv. 1. x. 8.—^b Ver. 8.—^c Ver. 17.—^d Ver. 20. Exod. xxv. 37. Zech. iv. 2.—^e Ch. ii. 1.—^f Ezek. i. 26. Dan. vii. 13. x. 16. Ch. xiv. 14.—^g Dan. x. 5.—^h Ch. xv. 6.—ⁱ Dan. vii. 9.—^j Dan. x. 6. Ch. ii. 18.—xix. 12.

therefore the whole verse may be understood as predicting the destruction of the Jews; and is a presumptive proof that the Apocalypse was written before the final overthrow of the Jewish state.

Verse 8. I am Alpha and Omega] I am from eternity to eternity. This mode of speech is borrowed from the Jews, who express the whole compass of things by the first and last letters of the Hebrew alphabet; but as St. John was writing in Greek, he accommodates the whole to the Greek alphabet, of which alpha and omega are the first and last letters.

The beginning and the ending] That is, as alpha is the beginning of the alphabet, so am I the author and cause of all things: as omega is the end or last letter of the alphabet, so am I the end of all things, the destroyer as well as the establisher of all things. This clause is wanting in almost every MSS. and Version of importance.

Verse 9. Your brother] A Christian, begotten of God, and incorporated in the heavenly family.

Companion in tribulation] Suffering under the persecution in which you also suffer.

In the kingdom] For we are a kingdom of priests unto God.

And patience of Jesus] Meekly bearing all indignities, privations, and sufferings, for the sake and after the example of our Lord and Master.

The isle that is called Patmos] This island is one of the Sporades, and lies in the Ægean Sea, between the island of Icaria, and the promontory of Miletus. It is now called Pactino, Patmol, or Palmosa. It has derived all its celebrity from being the place to which St. John was banished by one of the Roman Emperors; whether Domitian, Claudius, or Nero, is not agreed on, but it was most probably the latter. The whole island is about thirty miles in circumference.

For the testimony of Jesus Christ] For preaching Christianity, and converting heathens to the Lord Jesus.

Verse 10. I was in the Spirit] That is, I received the Spirit of prophecy, and was under its influence when the first vision was exhibited.

The Lord's day] The first day of the week, observed as the Christian sabbath, because on it Jesus Christ rose from the dead; therefore it was called the Lord's day, and has taken the place of the Jewish sabbath throughout the Christian world.

And heard behind me a great voice] This voice came unexpectedly and suddenly. He felt himself under the divine affatus; but did not know what scenes were to be represented.

As of a trumpet] This was calculated to call in every wandering thought, to fix his attention, and solemnize his whole frame. See Exod. xix. 16, 19, &c.

Verse 11. Saying—What thou seest, write in a book] John had the visions from heaven; but he described them in his own language and manner.

Ephesus] This was a city of Ionis, in Asia Minor, situated at the mouth of the river Cayster, on the shore of the Ægean Sea, about fifty miles south of Smyrna.

Smyrna] Now called also Ismir, is the largest and richest city of Asia Minor. It is situated about one hundred and eighty-three miles west by south of Constantinople, on the shore of the Ægean Sea; and is supposed to contain about one hundred and forty thousand inhabitants. It is a beautiful city, but often ravaged by the plague, and seldom two years together free from earthquakes.

Pergamos] A town of Mysia, situated on the river Caicus. It was anciently famous for its library, which contained, according to Plutarch, two hundred thousand volumes. Pergamos was the birth-place of Galen; and in it P. Scipio died. It is now called Pargamo and Bergamo.

Thyatira] Now called Akissat and Ak-kissar, a city of Natolia, in Asia Minor, seated on the river Hermus, in a plain eighteen miles broad, and is about fifty miles from Pergamos. Many remarkable ancient inscriptions have been discovered in this place.

Sardis] Now called Sardo and Sart, a town of Asia, in Natolia, about forty miles east from Smyrna. It is seated on the side of mount Tmolus, and was once the capital of the Lydian Kings, and here Cræsus reigned. It is now a poor, inconsiderable village.

Philadelphia] A city of Natolia, seated at the foot of mount Tmolus, by the river Cogamus. It was founded by Attalus Philadelphus, brother of Eumenes, from whom it derived its name. It is now called Alah-sheker, and is about forty miles ESE. of Smyrna.

Laodicea.] A town of Phrygia, on the river Lycus; first called Diospolis, or the city of Jupiter. It was built by Antiochus Theos, and named after his consort Laodice.

Verse 12. And I turned] For he had heard the voice behind him. To see the voice, i.e., the person from whom the voice came.

Seven golden candlesticks] Seven golden lamps. These seven lamps represented the seven churches, in which the light of God was continually shining, and the love of God continually burning. And they are here represented as golden, to show how precious they were in the sight of God. This is a reference to the temple at Jerusalem, where there was a candlestick or chandelier of seven branches, or rather six branches, three springing out on either side, and one in the centre. See Exod. xxxvii. 17-23. This reference to the temple seems to intimate that the temple of Jerusalem was a type of the whole Christian Church.

Verse 13. Like unto the Son of man] This seems a reference to Dan. vii. 13. This was our blessed Lord himself, ver. 18.

Clothed with a garment down to the foot] This is a description of the high-priest in his sacerdotal robes. See these described at large in the notes on Exod. xxviii. 4, &c., Jesus is our high-priest, even in heaven. He is still discharging the sacerdotal functions before the throne of God.

Golden girdle.] The emblem both of regal and sacerdotal dignity.

Verse 14. His head and his hairs were white like wool] This was not only an emblem of his antiquity, but it was the evidence of his glory; for the whiteness or splendour of his head and hair doubtless proceeded from the rays of light and glory which encircled his head, and darted from it in all directions. The splendour around the head was termed by the Romans nimbus, and by us a glory; and was represented round the heads of gods, deified persons, and saints. It is used in the same way through almost all the nations of the earth.

His eyes were as a flame of fire] To denote his omniscience, and the all-penetrating nature of the divine knowledge.

Verse 15. His feet like unto fine brass] An emblem of his stability and permanence, brass being considered the most durable of all metallic substances or compounds.

The original word means the famous aurichalcum, or factitious metal, which seems to have been a composition of gold, silver, and brass, and the same with the Corinthian brass, so highly famed and valued; for when Lucius Mummius took and burnt the city of Corinth, many statues of these three metals, being melted, had run together, and formed the composition already mentioned, and which was held in as high estimation as gold. [No adequate explanation of the original has yet been found.]

His voice as the sound of many waters.] The same description we find in Ezek. xliii. 2

Verse 16. In his right hand seven stars] The stars are afterwards interpreted as representing the seven angels, messengers, or bishops of the seven churches. Their being in the right hand of Christ shows that they are under his special care and most powerful protection.

Out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword] This is no doubt intended to point out the judgments about to be pronounced by Christ against the rebellious Jews and persecuting Romans; God's judgments were just now going to fall upon both. The sharp two-edged sword may represent the word of God in general, according to that saying of the apostle, Heb. iv. 12. See also Eph. vi. 17.

And his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength] His face was like the disk of the sun in the brightest summer's day, when there are no clouds to abate the splendour of his rays.

Verse 17. I fell at his feet as dead.] The terrible splendour of such majesty was more than the apostle could bear, and he fell down deprived of his senses, but was soon enabled to behold the vision by a communication of strength from our Lord's right hand. See also Ezek. i. 28, and Dan. viii. 17.

Verse 18. I am he that liveth, and was dead] I am Jesus the Saviour, who, though the fountain of life, have died for mankind; and being raised from the dead I shall die no more, the great sacrifice being consummated. And have the keys of death and the grave, so that I can destroy the living and raise the dead. The key here signifies the power and authority over life, death, and the grave. This is a rabbinical form of speech.

From many examples, it is evident that we should understand hades here, not as hell, nor the place of separate spirits, but merely as the grave; and the key we find to be merely the emblem of power and authority. Christ can both save and destroy, can kill and make alive. Death is still under his dominion, and he can recall the dead whenever he pleases.

Verse 19. Write the things which thou hast seen] These visions and prophecies are for general instruction, and therefore every circumstance must be faithfully recorded.

Verse 20. The mystery] That is, the allegorical explanation of the seven stars is the seven angels or ministers of the churches; and the allegorical meaning of the seven golden lamps is the seven churches themselves.

CHAPTER II.

The Epistle to the Church of Ephesus, commending their labour and patience, 1-3. And, reprehending their having left their first love, exhorting them to repent, with the promise of the tree of life, 4-7. The Epistle to the Church of Smyrna, commending their piety, and promising them support in their tribulation, 8-11. The Epistle to the Church of Pergamos, commending their steadfastness in the heavenly doctrine, 12, 13. And reprehending their laxity in ecclesiastical discipline, in tolerating heretical teachers in the Church, 14, 15. The apostle exhorts them to repent, with the promise of the white stone and a new name, 16, 17. The Epistle to the Church of Thyatira, with a commendation of their charity, faith, and patience, 18, 19. Reprehending their toleration of Jezebel, the false prophetess, who is threatened with grievous punishment, 20-23. Particular exhortations and promises to this Church, 24-29.

UNTO the angel of the church of Ephesus write: These things saith ^ahe that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, ^bwho walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks;

2 ^cI know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and ^dthou hast tried them ^ewhich say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast ^f'not fainted.'

4 Nevertheless I have somehow against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

^a Ch. i. 10, 20.—^b Ch. i. 13.—^c Ps. i. 6. Ver. 9, 13, 19. Ch. iii. 1, 8, 15.—^d John iv. 1.—^e 2 Cor. xi. 13. 2 Pet. ii. 1.—^f Gal. vi. 9. Heb. xii. 3, 5.—^g Matt. xxi. 41, 43.—^h Ver. 15.—ⁱ Matt. xi. 15. xlii.

I must here advertise my readers, 1. That I do not perceive any metaphorical or allegorical meaning in the epistles to these churches. 2 I consider the churches as real; and that their spiritual state is here really and literally pointed out; and that they have no reference to the state of the Church of Christ in all ages of the world, as has been imagined; and that the notion of what has been termed the Ephesian State, the Smyrnan State, the Pergamene State, the Thyatiran State, &c. &c., is unfounded, absurd, and dangerous; and such expositions should not be entertained by any who wish to arrive at a sober and rational knowledge of the holy scriptures. 3. I consider the angel of the Church as signifying the messenger, the pastor sent by Christ and his apostles to teach and edify that Church. 4. I consider what is spoken to this angel as spoken to the whole Church; and that it is not his particular state that is described, but the state of the people in general under his care.

Verse 1. Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus] Angel of the church here answers exactly to that officer of the synagogue among the Jews called sheliach tsibbur, the messenger of the church, whose business it was to read, pray, and teach in the synagogue. The Church at Ephesus is first addressed, as being the place where John chiefly resided; and the city itself was the metropolis of that part of Asia.

Holdeth the seven stars] Who particularly preserves, and guides, and upholds, not only the ministers of those seven churches, but all the genuine ministers of his gospel, in all ages and places.

Walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks] Is the supreme Bishop and Head, not only of those churches, but of all the churches and congregations of his people throughout the world.

Verse 2. I know thy works] It is worthy of remark, that whatsoever is praiseworthy in any of these churches is first mentioned; thereby intimating that God is more intent on finding out the good than the evil in any person or church; and that those who wish to reform such as have fallen, or are not making sufficient advances in the divine life, should take occasion, from the good which yet remains, to encourage them to set out afresh for the kingdom of heaven. Ministers continually harping on Ye are dead, ye are dead; there is little or no Christianity among you, &c. &c., are a contagion in a church, and spread desolation and death wheresoever they go. Exhortations and encouragements

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen; and repent, and do the first works; ^gor else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of ^hthe Nicolaitanes, which I also hate.

7 ⁱHe that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give ^jto eat of ^kthe tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write: These things saith ^lthe first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;

9 ^mI know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty,

9, 43. Ver. xi. 17, 29. Ch. iii. 6, 13, 22. xlii. 9.—ⁿ Ch. xlii. 2, 14.—^o Gen. ii. 9.—^p Ch. i. 8, 17, 18.—^q Ver. 2.

are sure to produce the most blessed effects; and under such the work of God infallibly revives.

Verse 3. And hast borne] The same things mentioned in the preceding verse, but in an inverted order, the particular reason of which does not appear; perhaps it was intended to show more forcibly to this church that there was no good which they had done, nor evil which they had suffered, that was forgotten before God.

And hast not fainted] They must therefore have had a considerable portion of this love remaining, else they could not have thus acted.

Verse 4. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee] The clause should be read: But I have against thee that thou hast left thy first love. They did not retain that strong and ardent affection for God and sacred things which they had when first brought to the knowledge of the truth, and justified by faith in Christ.

Verse 5. Remember! Consider the state of grace in which you once stood; the happiness, love, and joy which you felt when ye received remission of sins; the zeal ye had for God's glory and the salvation of mankind; your willing, obedient spirit, your cheerful self-denial, your fervour in private prayer, your detachment from the world, and your heavenly-mindedness. Remember—consider all these.

Whence thou art fallen] Or, remember what a loss you have sustained; for so the original is frequently used by the best Greek writers.

Repent! Be deeply humbled before God for having so carelessly guarded the divine treasure.

Do the first works] Resume your former zeal and diligence; watch, fast, pray, reprove sin, carefully attend all the ordinances of God, walk as in his sight, and rest not till you have recovered all your lost ground, and got back the evidence of your acceptance with your Maker.

I will come unto thee quickly] In the way of judgment.

I will remove thy candlestick] Take away my ordinances, remove your ministers, and send you a famine of the word. An allusion to the candlestick in the tabernacle and temple, which could not be removed without suspending the whole Levitical service.

Verse 6. The deeds of the Nicolaitanes] These were, as is commonly supposed, a sect of the Gnostics, who taught the most impure doctrines, and followed the most impure practices. They are also supposed to have derived their origin from Nicolas, one of the seven deacons mentioned Acts vi. 5.

Verse 7. He that hath an ear] Let every intelligent person, and every Christian man, attend carefully to what the Holy Spirit, in this and the following epistles, says to the churches.

To him that overcometh] As he who conquered his enemies had, generally, not only great honour, but also a reward; so here a great reward is promised to the conqueror: and as in the Grecian Games, to which there may be an allusion, the conqueror was crowned with the leaves of some tree; here it is promised that they should eat of the fruit of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God; that is, that they should have a happy and glorious immortality. There is also here an allusion to Gen. ii. 9, where it is said, God made the tree of life to grow out of the midst of the garden; and it is very likely that by eating the fruit of this tree the immortality of Adam was secured, and on this it was made dependant. The tree of life is frequently spoken of by the rabbins; and by it they generally mean the immortality of the soul, and a final state of blessedness. They talk also of a celestial and terrestrial paradise.

These things saith the first and the last] He who is eternal; from whom all things come, and to whom all things must return. Which was dead, for the redemption of the world; and is alive, to die no more for ever, his glorified humanity being enthroned at the Father's right hand.

Verse 9. I know thy works] The tribulation here mentioned must mean persecution, either from the Jews, the heathens, or from the heretics, who, because of their flesh-pampering doctrine, might have had many partisans at Smyrna.

And poverty] Stripped probably of their temporal possessions, because of their attachment to the gospel.

But thou art rich] Rich in faith, and heir of the kingdom of Christ.

The blasphemy of them which say they are Jews] There were persons there who professed Judaism, and had a synagogue in the place, and professed to worship the true God; but they had no genuine religion, and they served the devil rather than God.

Verse 10. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer] This may be addressed particularly to Polycarp, if he was at that time the bishop of this church. He had much to suffer; and was at last burnt alive at Smyrna, about the year of our Lord 166.

Ten days] As the days in this book are what is commonly called prophetic days, each answering to a year, the ten years of tribulation may denote ten years of persecution; and this was precisely the duration of the persecution under Diocletian, during which all the Asiatic Churches were grievously afflicted. Others understand the expression as implying frequency and abundance, as it does in other parts of scripture. Gen. xxxi. 7, 41; Numb. xiv. 22; Neh. iv. 12; Job. xix. 8; Dan. i. 20.

Be thou faithful unto death] Be firm, hold fast the faith, confess Christ to the last, and at all hazards, and thou shalt have a crown of life—thou shalt be crowned with life, have an eternal happy existence, though thou suffer a temporal death.

my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth.

14 But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of ^a Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumbling-block before the children of Israel, ^b to eat things sacrificed unto idols, ^c and to commit fornication.

15 So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine ^d of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate.

16 Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, ^e and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.

17 ^f He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and Verse 11. He that overcometh] The conqueror who has stood firm in every trial, and vanquished all his adversaries. Shall not be hurt of the second death] This is another rabbinical mode of speech in very frequent use, and by it they understand the punishment of hell in a future life.

Verse 12. Which hath the sharp sword] The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, cuts every way; it convicts of sin, righteousness, and judgment; pierces between the joints and the marrow, divides between the soul and spirit, dissects the whole mind, and exhibits a regular anatomy of the soul. Jesus has the sword with the two edges, because he is the Saviour of sinners, and the Judge of quick and dead.

Verse 13. Where Satan's seat is] Where Satan has his throne—where he reigns as king, and is universally obeyed. It was a maxim among the Jews, that where the law of God was not studied, there Satan dwelt; but he was obliged to leave the place where a synagogue or academy was established.

Thou holdest fast my name] Notwithstanding that the profession of Christianity exposed this church to the bitterest persecution, they held fast the name of Christian, which they had received from Jesus Christ, and did not deny his faith; for when brought to the trial they openly professed themselves disciples and followers of their Lord and master.

Antipas was my faithful martyr] Who this Antipas was we cannot tell. We only know that he was a Christian, and probably bore some office in the church, and became illustrious by his martyrdom in the cause of Christ.

Verse 14. I have a few things against thee] Their good deeds are first carefully sought out and commended; what was wrong in them is touched with a gentle but effectual hand.

What the doctrine of Balaam was, see the notes on Num. xxiv. xxv., and xxxi. It appears that there were some then in the Church at Pergamos who held eating things offered to idols in honour of those idols, and fornication, indifferent things.

Verse 16. Will fight against them with the sword of my mouth] He now speaks for their edification and salvation; but if they do not repent, he will shortly declare those judgments which shall unavoidably fall upon them.

Verse 17. The hidden manna] It was a constant tradition of the Jews that the ark of the covenant, the tables of stone, Aaron's rod, the holy anointing oil, and the pot of manna, were hidden by king Josiah when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldeans; and that these shall all be restored in the days of the Messiah. This manna was hidden, but Christ promises to give it to him that is conqueror. Jesus is the ark, the oil, the rod, the testimony, and the manna. He who is partaker of his grace has all those things in their spiritual meaning and perfection. [The reference is not to any Jewish tradition, but to the pot of manna laid up in the ark, Ex. xvi. 33; and to that spiritual life which is hidden with Christ in God.]

And will give him a white stone] It is supposed that by the white stone is meant pardon or acquittance, and the evidence of it; and that there is an allusion here to the custom observed by judges in ancient times, who were ac-will give him a white stone, and in the stone * a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write: These things saith the Son of God, ^b who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;

19 ^c I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first.

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman ^d Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants ^e to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

21 And I gave her space ^f to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.

22 Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that ^g I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts; and ^h I will give unto every one of you according to your works.

24 But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; ⁱ I will put upon you none other burden.

25 But ^j that which ye have already, hold fast till I come.

26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth ^k my works unto the end, ^l to him will I give power over the nations:

27 ^m And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.

customed to give their suffrages by white and black pebbles; those who gave the former were for absolving the culprit, those who gave the latter were for his condemnation. Others suppose there is an allusion here to conquerors in the public games, who were not only conducted with great pomp into the city to which they belonged, but had a white stone given to them, with their name inscribed on it; which badge entitled them, during their whole life, to be maintained at the public expense. These stones were called tessera among the Romans, and of these there were several kinds. 1. Tessera conviviales, which answered exactly to our cards of invitation, or tickets of admission to a public feast or banquet; when the person invited produced his tessera he was admitted. 2. There were tessera inscribed with different kinds of things, such as provisions, garments, gold or silver vessels, horses, mares, slaves, &c. These were sometimes thrown by the Roman Emperors among the crowd in the theatres, and he that could snatch one; and on producing it he received that, the name of which was inscribed on it. 3. Tessera frumentaria, or tickets to receive grain in the public distributions of corn; the name of the person who was to receive, and the quantity of grain, being both inscribed on this badge or ticket. 4. But the most remarkable of these instruments were the tessera hospitales, which were given as badges of friendship and alliance, and on which some device was engraved, as a testimony that a contract of friendship had been made between the parties.

In the language of Christ the words seem to mean, 1. That the person to whom the white stone is given is taken into an intimate state of friendship with him. 2. That this contract is witnessed to the party by some especial token, sign, or seal, to which he may have recourse to support his claim, and identify his person. This is probably what is elsewhere called the earnest of the Spirit, Eph. i. 14. He then who has received and retains the witness of the Spirit that he is adopted into the heavenly family, may humbly claim, in virtue of it, his support of the bread and water of life; the hidden manna—every grace of the Spirit of God; and the tree of life—immortality, or the final glorification of his body and soul throughout eternity. 3. By this state of grace into which he is brought he acquires a new name, the name of Child of God; the earnest of the Spirit, the tessera which he has received, shows him this new name. 4. And this name of child of God no man can know or understand, but he who has received the tessera or divine witness. 5. As his Friend and Redeemer may be found everywhere, because he fills the heavens and the earth, everywhere he may, on retaining this tessera, claim direction, succour, support, grace, and glory; and therefore the privileges of him who overcometh are the greatest and most glorious that can be imagined.

Verse 19. I know thy works] And of these he first sets forth their charity, their love to God and each other; and particularly to the poor and distressed: and hence followed their faith, their fidelity to the grace they had received; and service, or ministration; properly, pious and benevolent service to widows, orphans, and the poor in general.

And thy patience] Thy perseverance under afflictions and persecutions, and thy continuance in well doing. I put faith before service according to the general consent of the best MSS. and Versions.

Thy works] Thy continued labour of love, and thorough obedience.

The last to be more than the first.] This is a rare thing in most Christian Churches: they generally lose the power of religion, and rest in the forms of worship; and it requires a powerful revival to bring them to such a state that their last works shall be more than their first.

Verse 20 That woman Jezebel] We do not know who this Jezebel was, yet from the allusion we may take it for granted she was a woman of power and influence in Thyatira, who corrupted the true religion, and harassed the followers of God in that city, as Jezebel did in Israel. Instead of that woman Jezebel, many excellent MSS. and almost all the ancient Versions, read THY WIFE JEZEBEL; which intimates, indeed asserts, that this bad woman was the wife of the bishop of the church, and his criminality in suffering her was therefore the greater. She called herself a prophetess, i.e., set up for a teacher; taught the Christians that fornication and eating things offered to idols were matters of indifference, and thus they were seduced from the truth. But it is probable that by fornication here is meant idolatry merely, which is often its meaning in the scriptures. It is too gross to suppose that the wife of the bishop of this church could teach fornication literally. The messenger or bishop of this church, probably her husband, suffered this: he had power to have cast her and her party out of the church, or, as his wife, to have restrained her; but he did not do it, and thus she had every opportunity of seducing the faithful. This is what Christ had against the messenger of this church.

Verse 21. I gave her space to repent] According to the Mosaic law, the punishment of idolatrous seducers was not to be delayed at all, but God sometimes showed mercy; and now much more under the Christian dispensation, though that mercy is often abused, and thus produces the contrary effect, as in the case of this Jezebel.

Verse 22. Behold, I will cast her into a bed] The sacred writer here threatens the Gnostic Jezebel to make that wherein she delighteth, as adulterers in the bed of lust, to be the very place, occasion, and instrument of her greatest torment. So in Isaiah, the bed is made a symbol of tribulation and anguish of body and mind. See Isa. xxviii. 20; Job xxxiii. 19.

Verse 23. I am he which searcheth the reins and the hearts] These heretics lurked about, and sowed their pernicious doctrines secretly. But our Saviour tells them that it was in vain, for he had power to bring their deeds to light, having that divine power of searching into the wills and affections of men; and hereby he would show both them and us that he is, according to his title, The Son of God; and hath such eyes to pry into their actions, that, like a fire they will search into everything, and burn up the chaff which cannot stand his trial; so that the depths of Satan, mentioned in the next verse, to which this alludes (Christ assuming here this title purposely), shall avail nothing to those who think by their secret craft to undermine the Christian religion; he will not only bring to light, but baffle all their evil intentions.

Verse 24. I will put upon you none other burden.] This is a commendation of the sound part of the church, that they have no need of any new exhortation or charge to be given them, no new advice, but to persevere as usual. See Rom. xv. 14, 15. The expression of burden is taken from the history of Ahab, 2 Kings ix. 25.

Verse 25. That which ye have] That is, the pure doctrine of the gospel, hold fast till I come—till I come to execute the judgments which I have threatened.

Verse 26. Power over the nations] Every witness of Christ has power to confute and confound all the false doctrines and maxims of the nations of the world, for Christianity shall at last rule over all; the kingdom of Christ will come, and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ.

Verse 27. He shall rule them with a rod of iron] He shall restrain vice by the strictest administration of justice; and those who finally despise the word and rebel shall be broken and destroyed, so as never more to be able to make head against the truth.

Verse 28. And I will give him the morning star.] He shall have the brightest and most glorious empire, next to that of Christ himself. It is well known that sun, moon, and stars are emblems, in prophetic language, of empires, kingdoms, and states. And as the morning star is that which immediately precedes the rising of the sun, it probably here intends an empire which should usher in the universal sway of the kingdom of Christ.

Ever since the time of Constantine the Great the light of true religion has been increasingly diffused, and is shining more and more unto the perfect day. [No entirely satisfactory interpretation has yet been given to this phrase. That of Dr. Clarke is not probable. Such passages as Prov. iv. 18, Dan. xii. 3, and Matt. xiii. 43, perhaps shed some light upon the question.]

The Epistle to the Church of Sardis, 1-6. The Epistle to the Church of Philadelphia, 7-13. The Epistle to the Church of Laodicea, 14-22.

AND unto the angel of the church in Sardis write: These things saith he^a that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars;

^bI know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, ^cand art dead.

2 Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

3 ^dRemember therefore how thou hast received and heard; and hold fast, and ^erepent. ^fIf therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

Verse 1. Thou hast a name that thou livest] Ye have the reputation of Christians, and consequently of being alive to God, through the quickening influence of the divine Spirit; but ye are dead—ye have not the life of God in your souls, ye have not walked consistently and steadily before God, and his spirit has been grieved with you, and he has withdrawn much of his light and power.

Verse 2. Be watchful] Ye have lost ground by carelessness and inattention. Awake, and keep awake!

Strengthen the things which remain] The convictions and good desires, with any measure of the fear of God and of a tender conscience, which, although still subsisting, are about to perish, because the Holy Spirit, who is the author of them, being repeatedly grieved, is about finally to depart.

Thy works perfect] Filled up. They performed duties of all kinds, but no duty completely. They were constantly beginning, but never brought anything to a proper end.

Verse 3. Remember] Enter into a serious consideration of your state.

How thou hast received] With what joy, zeal, and gladness ye heard the gospel of Christ when first preached to you.

Hold fast] Those good desires and heavenly influences which still remain.

And repent] Be humbled before God, because ye have not been workers together with him, but have received much of his grace in vain.

I will come on thee as a thief] The thief comes when he is not expected.

Verse 4. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis] A few persons, names being put for those who bore them.

Have not defiled their garments] Their souls. The Hebrews considered holiness as the garb of the soul, and evil actions as stains or spots on this garb.

They shall walk with me in white] They shall be raised to a state of eternal glory, and shall be for ever with their Lord.

Verse 5. I will not blot out his name] This may be an allusion to the custom of registering the names of those who were admitted into the church in a book kept for that purpose. These are properly books of life, as there those who were born unto God were registered. Or there may be allusions to the white raiment worn by the priests, and the 8 *I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee ^a an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

9 Behold, I will make ¹ them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I ² will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

erring of the name of any priest out of the sacerdotal list who had either sinned, or was found not to be of the seed of Aaron.

I will confess his name] I will acknowledge that this person is my true disciple, and a member of my mystical body. In all this there may also be allusion to the custom of registering citizens. Their names were entered into books, according to their condition, tribes, family, &c.; and when they were dead, or had, by unconstitutional acts, forfeited their right of citizenship, the name was blotted out, or erased from the registers.

Verse 7. He that is holy] In whom holiness essentially dwells, and from whom all holiness is derived.

He that is true] He who is the fountain of truth; who cannot lie nor be imposed on; from whom all truth proceeds; and whose veracity in his Revelation is unimpeachable.

He that hath the key of David] Key is the emblem of authority and knowledge; the key of David is the royal right or authority of David. David could shut or open the kingdom of Israel to whom he pleased. He could choose whom he pleased to succeed him. The kingdom of the gospel and the kingdom of heaven, are at the disposal of Christ. He can shut against whom he will; he can open to whom he pleases. If he shuts, no man can open; if he opens, no man can shut.

Verse 8. I have set before thee an open door] I have opened to thee a door to proclaim and diffuse my word; and, notwithstanding there are many adversaries to the spread of my gospel, yet none of them shall be able to prevent it.

Thou hast a little strength] The little strength may refer either to the smallness of the numbers, or to the littleness of their grace.

Verse 9. I will make them] Show them to be of the synagogue of Satan, who say they are Jews, pretending thereby to be of the synagogue of God, and consequently his true and peculiar children.

I will make them to come and worship] I will so dispose of matters in the course of my providence, that the Jews shall be obliged to seek unto the Christians for toleration, support, and protection, which they shall be obliged to sue for in the most humble and abject manner.

To know that I have loved thee] That the love which was formerly fixed on the Jews is now removed, and transferred to the Gentiles.

Verse 10. The word of my patience] The doctrine which has exposed you to so much trouble and persecution, and required so much patience and magnanimity to bear up under its attendant trials.

The hour of temptation] Many understand by the hour of temptation the persecution under Trajan, which was greater and more extensive than the preceding ones under Nero and Domitian.

11 Behold, *I come quickly: *hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take ^a thy crown.

12 Him that overcometh will I make ^a a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and *I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is ^a new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: *and I will write upon him my new name.

13 *He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

14 And unto the angel of the church *of the Laodiceans write: *These things saith the Amen, *the faithful and true witness, *the beginning of the creation of God:

15 *I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot.

16 So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.

To try them] That is, such persecutions will be the means of trying and proving those who profess Christianity, and showing who were sound and thorough Christians and who were not.

Verse 11. Behold I come quickly] These things will shortly take place; and I am coming with consolations and rewards to my faithful followers, and with judgments to my adversaries.

Take thy crown] God has provided mansions for you; let none through your fall occupy those seats of blessedness.

Verse 12. A pillar in the temple] The church is the temple; CHRIST is the foundation on which it is built; and his ministers are the PILLARS by which, under him, it is adorned and supported. Gal. ii. 9.

I will write upon him the name of my God] That is, I will make him a priest unto myself. The priest had written on his forehead, "Holiness to the Lord."

And the name of the city of my God] As the high-priest had on his breast-plate the names of the twelve tribes engraved, and these constituted the city or church of God; Christ here promises that in place of them the twelve apostles, representing the Christian Church, shall be written, which is called the New Jerusalem, and which God has adopted in place of the twelve Jewish tribes.

My new name] The Saviour of ALL; the light that lightens the GENTILES; the CHRIST, the Anointed One; the only GOVERNOR of his Church; and the Redeemer of ALL mankind.

There is here an intimation that the Christian Church is to endure for ever; and the Christian Ministry to last as long as time endures: He shall go no more out for ever.

Verse 14. These things saith the Amen] That is, He who is true or faithful; from aman, he was true; immediately interpreted, The faithful and true witness.

The beginning of the creation of God] That is, the head and governor of all creatures; the king of the creation. See on Col. i. 15. By his titles here, he prepares them for the humiliating and awful truths which he was about to declare, and the authority on which the declaration was founded.

Verse 15. Thou art neither cold nor hot] Ye are neither heathens nor Christians—neither good nor evil—neither led away by false doctrine, nor thoroughly addicted to that which is true.

I would thou wert cold or hot] That is, ye should be decided; adopt some part or other, and be in earnest in your attachment to it.

Verse 16. Because thou art lukewarm] Irresolute and undecided.

I will spue thee out of my mouth] He alludes here to the known effect of tepid water upon the stomach; it generally produces a nausea. I will cast thee off. Thou shalt have no interest in me.

Verse 17. I am rich] Thou supposest thyself to be in a safe state, perfectly sure of final salvation, because thou

17 Because thou sayest, * I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked:

18 I counsel thee ^b to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and ^c white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-salve, that thou mayest see.

* Hos. xii. 8. 1 Cor. iv. 8.—^b Isa. lv. 1. Matt. xiii. 44. xiv. 9.—^c 2 Cor. v. 3. Ch. vii. 13. xvi. 15. xix. 8.—^d Job v. 17. Prov. iii. 11. 12. Heb. xii. 5, 6. James i. 12.—^e Cant. v. 2.—(Luke xii. 37.

hast begun well, and laid the right foundation. It was this most deceitful conviction that cut the nerves of their spiritual diligence; they rested in what they had already received, and seemed to think that once in grace must be still in grace.

Thou art wretched] Most wretched. "The word signifies," according to Minteri, "being worn out and fatigued with grievous labours, as they who labour in a stone quarry, or are condemned to the mines."

And miserable] Most deplorable, to be pitied by all men.

And poor] Having no spiritual riches, no holiness of heart.

And blind] The eyes of thy understanding being darkened, so that thou dost not see thy state.

And naked] Without the image of God, not clothed with holiness and purity.

Verse 18. I counsel thee] O fallen and deceived soul, hear Jesus! Thy case is not hopeless. Buy of me.

Gold tried in the fire] Come and receive from me, without money and without price, faith that shall stand in every trial: so gold tried in the fire is here understood. But it may mean pure and undefiled religion, or that grace or divine influence which produces it, which is more valuable to the soul than the purest gold to the body. They had before imaginary riches; this alone can make them truly rich.

White raiment] Holiness of heart and life.

Anoint thine eyes] Pray for, that ye may receive, the enlightening influences of my Spirit, that ye may be convinced of your true state, and see where your help lies.

Verse 19. As many as I love] So it was the love he still had to them that induced him thus to reprehend and thus to counsel them.

19 ^a As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.

20 Behold, ^e I stand at the door, and knock: ^f if any man hear my voice, and open the door, ^g I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

21 To him that overcometh ^h will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

22 ⁱ He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

—^a John xiv. 23.—^b Matt. xix. 28. Luke xxii. 30. 1 Cor. vi. 2. 2 Tim. ii. 12. Ch. ii. 28, 27.—^c Ch. ii. 7.

Be zealous] Be in earnest, to get your souls saved. They had no zeal; this was their bane. He now stirs them up to diligence in the use of the means of grace, and repentance for their past sins and remissness.

Verse 20. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock] Christ stands—waits long at the door of the sinner's heart; he knocks—uses judgments, mercies, reproofs, exhortations, &c., to induce sinners to repent and turn to him; he lifts up his voice—calls loudly by his word, ministers, and Spirit.

If any man hear] If the sinner will seriously consider his state, and attend to the voice of his Lord.

And open the door] This must be his own act, receiving power for this purpose from his offended Lord, who will not break open the door; he will make no forcible entry.

I will come in to him] I will manifest myself to him, heal all his backslidings, pardon all his iniquities, and love him freely.

Will sup with him] Hold communion with him, feed him with the bread of life.

And he with me] I will bring him at last to dwell with me in everlasting glory.

Verse 21. To sit with me in my throne] Here is a most remarkable expression: Jesus has conquered, and is set down with the FATHER upon the Father's throne; he who conquers through Christ sits down with Christ upon his throne: but Christ's throne and the throne of the Father is the same; and it is on this same throne that those who are faithful unto death are finally to sit! How astonishing is this state of exaltation!

This is the worst of the seven churches, and yet the most eminent of all the promises are made to it, showing that the worst may repent, finally conquer, and attain even to the highest state of glory.

CHAPTER IV.

John sees the throne of God in heaven surrounded by twenty-four elders; and four living creatures, full of eyes; which all join in giving glory to the Almighty, 1-11.

AFTER this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and ^a the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, ^b Come up-hither, ^c and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter.

* Ch. i. 10.—^b Ch. xi. 12.—^c Ch. i. 19. xxii. 8.—^d Ch. i. 10. xvii. 3. xxi. 10.

Verse 1. A door was opened in heaven] This appears to have been a visible aperture in the sky over his head.

Verse 2. I was in the Spirit] Rapt up in an ecstasy.

Verse 3. And he that sat] There is here no description of the Divine Being, so as to point out any similitude, shape, or dimensions. The description rather aims to point out the

2 And immediately ^a I was in the Spirit: and, behold, ^e a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne.

3 And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: ^f and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

surrounding glory and effulgence, than the person of the Almighty King. See Num. xxiv. 10, &c.

Verse 4. Four and twenty elders] Perhaps this is in reference to the smaller Sanhedrin at Jerusalem, which was composed of twenty-three elders; or to the princes of the twenty-four courses of the Jewish priests which ministered at the tabernacle and the temple, at first appointed by David.

6 And before the throne there was ^g a sea of glass, like unto crystal: ^h and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts, full of eyes before ⁱ and behind.

Clothed in white raiment] The garments of the priests.
On their heads crowns of gold.] An emblem of their dignity.

Verse 5. Seven lamps of fire] Seven angels, the attendants and ministers of the Supreme King.

Verse 6. Four beasts] Four living creatures or four animals. The word beast is very improperly used here and elsewhere in this description.

Verse 7. The first beast was like a lion] It is supposed that there is a reference here to the four standards or ensigns of the four divisions of the Israelitish camp, as they are described by Jewish writers.

Christian tradition has given these creatures as emblems of the four evangelists. To John is attributed the EAGLE, to Luke the OX, to Mark the LION, and to Matthew the MAN, or angel in human form. As the former represented the whole Jewish Church or Congregation, so the latter is intended to represent the whole Christian Church.

Verse 8. The four beasts had each of them six wings] These creatures may be considered the representatives of the whole creation.

Verse 10. Cast their crowns before the throne] Acknowledge the infinite supremacy of God, and that they have derived their being and their blessings from him alone. This is an allusion to the custom of prostrations in the east, and to the homage of petty kings acknowledging the supremacy of the emperor.

Verse 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive] Thus all creation acknowledges the supremacy of God; and we learn from this song that he made all things for his pleasure; and through the same motive he preserves. Hence it is most evident that he hateth nothing that he has made, and could have made no intelligent creature with the design to make it eternally miserable.

CHAPTER V.

The book sealed with seven seals, which no being in heaven or earth could open, 1-3. Is at last opened by the Lion of the tribe of Judah, 4-8. He receives the praises of the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders, 9, 10. And afterwards of an innumerable multitude, who acknowledge that they were redeemed to God by his blood, 11, 12. And then, of the whole creation, who ascribe blessing, honour, glory, and power, to God and the Lamb for ever, 13, 14.

AND I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a ^a book written within and on the back side, ^b sealed with seven seals.

2 And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

^cEzek. ii. 9, 10.—^dIsa.

Verse 1. A book written within and on the back side] That is, the book was full of solemn contents within, but it was sealed; and on the back side was a superscription indicating its contents. It was a labelled book, or one written on each side of the skin, which was not usual.

Sealed with seven seals.] As seven is a number of perfection, it may mean that the book was so sealed that the seals

3 And no man ^e in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

4 And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

could neither be counterfeited nor broken, i.e., the matter of the book was so obscure and enigmatical, and the work it enjoined, and the facts it predicted, so difficult and stupendous, that they could neither be known nor performed by human wisdom or power.

Verse 2. A strong angel] One of the chief of the angelic host.

5 And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, ^athe Lion of the tribe of Juda, ^bthe Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and ^cto loose the seven seals thereof.

6 And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood ^aa Lamb, as it had been slain, having seven horns and ^bseven eyes, which are ^cthe seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand ^aof him that sat upon the throne.

8 And when he had taken the book, ^bthe four beasts and four and twenty elders, fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them ^charpes, and golden vials full of ^dodours, ^ewhich are the prayers of saints.

9 And ^athey sung a new song, saying, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: ^bfor thou wast slain, and ^chast redeemed us to God by thy blood ^dout of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

Proclaiming.] As the herald of God.

To open the book, and to loose the seals.] To loose the seals that he may open the book.

Verse 3. And no man.] No person or being.

In heaven.] Among all the angels of God.

Nor in the earth.] No human being.

Neither under the earth.] No disembodied spirit, nor any demon. Neither angels, men, nor devils, can fathom the decrees of God.

Neither to look thereon.] None can look into it unless it be opened, and none can open it unless the seals be unloosed.

Verse 4. I wept much.] Because the world and the Church were likely to be deprived of the knowledge of the contents of the book.

Verse 5. The Lion of the tribe of Juda.] Jesus Christ, who sprang from this tribe, as his genealogy proves. See on Matt. i. and Luke iii. There is an allusion here to Gen. xlix. 9. Judah is a lion's whelp; the lion was the emblem of this tribe, and was supposed to have been embroidered on its ensigns.

The Root of David.] See Isa. xi. 1. Christ was the root of David as to his divine nature, he was a branch out of the stem of Jesse as to his human nature.

Hath prevailed.] By the merit of his incarnation, passion, and death.

To open the book.] To explain and execute all the purposes and decrees of God, in relation to the government of the world and the Church.

Verse 6. Stood a Lamb.] Christ, so called because he was a sacrificial offering.

As it had been slain.] As if now in the act of being offered. This is very remarkable; so important is the sacrificial offering of Christ in the sight of God that he is still represented as being in the act of pouring out his blood for the offences of man. Thus all succeeding generations find they have the continual sacrifice ready, and the newly-shed blood to offer.

Seven horns.] As horns is the emblem of power, and seven the number of perfection, the seven horns may denote the all-prevailing and infinite might of Jesus Christ. He can support all his friends; he can destroy all his enemies; and he can save to the uttermost all that come unto God through him.

Seven eyes.] To denote his infinite knowledge and wisdom: but as these seven eyes are said to be the seven Spirits of God, they seem to denote rather his providence, in which he often employs the ministry of angels; therefore, these are said to be sent forth into all the earth.

Verse 7. He came and took the book.] This verse may be properly explained by John i. 18. With Jesus alone are all the counsels and mysteries of God.

Verse 8. The four beasts—fell down before the Lamb.]

10 ^aAnd hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels ^around about the throne and the beasts and the elders; and the number of them was ^bten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

12 Saying with a loud voice, ^aWorthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

13 And ^aevery creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, ^bBlessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him ^cthat sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

14 ^aAnd the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him ^bthat liveth for ever and ever.

The whole Church of God, and all his children in heaven and earth, acknowledge that Jesus Christ is alone worthy and able to unfold and execute all the mysteries and counsels of God.

Having every one of them harps.] There were harps and vials; and each of the elders and living creatures had one.

Odours, which are the prayers of saints.] These odours represent the prayers of the saints. See Ps. cxli. 2.

Verse 9. A new song.] Composed on the matters and blessings of the gospel, which was just now opened on earth. But new song may signify a most excellent song; and by this the gospel and its blessings are probably signified.

Thou—hast redeemed us to God—out of every—nation.] It appears, therefore, that the living creatures and the elders represent the aggregate of the followers of God; or the Christian Church in all nations, and among all kinds of people, and perhaps through the whole compass of time; and all these are said to be redeemed by Christ's blood, plainly showing that his life was a sacrificial offering for the sins of mankind.

Verse 10. Kings and priests.] See Exod. xix. 6, 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9, and the notes there.

Verse 11. The voice of many angels.] These also are represented as joining in the chorus with redeemed mortals.

Ten thousand times times ten thousand.] "Myriads of myriads and chiliads of chiliads;" that is an infinite or innumerable multitude.

Verse 12. To receive power.] That is, Jesus Christ is worthy to take, to have ascribed to him, power—omnipotence; riches—beneficence; wisdom—omniscience; strength—power in prevalent exercise; honour—the highest reputation for what he has done; glory—the praise due to such actions; and blessing—the thankful acknowledgments of the whole creation.

Verse 13. Every creature.] All parts of the creation, animate and inanimate, are represented here as giving praise to the Lord Jesus, because by him all things were created. We find the whole creation gives precisely the same praise, and in the same terms, to Jesus Christ, who is undoubtedly meant here by the Lamb just slain, as they give to God who sits upon the throne. Now if Jesus Christ were not properly God this would be idolatry, as it would be giving to the creature what belongs to the Creator.

Verse 14. The four beasts said, Amen.] Acknowledged that what was attributed to Christ was his due.

Fell down and worshipped.] Fell down on their knees, and then prostrated themselves before the throne. This is the Eastern method of adoration: first, the person worshipping fell down on his knees; and then, bowing down, touched the earth with his forehead. This latter act was prostration.

REVELATION.

CHAPTER VI.

What followed on the opening of the seven seals. The opening of the first seal—the white horse, 1, 2. The opening of the second seal—the red horse, 3, 4. The opening of the third seal—the black horse and the famine, 5, 6. The opening of the fourth seal—the pale horse, 7, 8. The opening of the fifth seal—the souls of men under the altar, 9-11. The opening of the sixth seal—the earthquake, the darkening of the sun and moon, and falling of the stars, 12-14. The terrible consternation of the kings and great men of the earth, 15-17.

AND ^aI saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals; and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder, ^bone of the four beasts saying, Come and see.

Verse 1. When the Lamb opened one of the seals] It is worthy of remark that the opening of the seals is not merely a declaration of what God will do, but is the exhibition of a purpose then accomplished; for whenever the seal is opened, the sentence appears to be executed. It is supposed that, from chap. vi. to xi. inclusive, the calamities which should fall on the enemies of Christianity, and particularly the Jews, are pointed out under various images; as well as the preservation of the Christians under those calamities.

One of the four beasts] Probably that with the face of a lion.

Come and see.] Attend to what is about to be exhibited. It is very likely that all was exhibited before his eyes as in a scene; and he saw every act represented which was to take place, and all the persons and things which were to be the chief actors.

Verse 2. A white horse] Supposed to represent the gospel system, and pointing out its excellence, swiftness, and purity.

He that sat on him] Supposed to represent Jesus Christ.

A bow] The preaching of the gospel, darting conviction into the hearts of sinners.

A crown] The emblem of the kingdom which Christ was to establish on earth.

Conquering, and to conquer.] Overcoming and confounding the Jews first, and then the Gentiles; spreading more and more the doctrine and influence of the cross over the face of the earth.

Verse 3. The second beast] That which had the face of an ox.

Verse 4. Another horse—red] The emblem of war; perhaps also of severe persecution, and the martyrdom of the saints.

Him that sat thereon] Some say Christ; others, Vespasian; others, the Roman armies; others, Artabanus, king of the Parthians, &c. &c.

Take peace from the earth] To deprive Judea of all tranquillity.

They should kill one another] This was literally the case with the Jews while besieged by the Romans.

A great sword] Great influence and success, producing terrible carnage.

Verse 5. The third beast] That which had the face of a man.

A black horse] The emblem of famine. Some think that which took place under Claudius. See Matt. xxiv. 7; the same which was predicted by Agabus, Acts xi. 28.

A pair of balances] To show that the scarcity would be such, that every person must be put under an allowance.

Verse 6. A measure of wheat for a penny] A penny, the Roman denarius, was the ordinary pay of a labourer. So it appears that in this scarcity each might be able to obtain a bare subsistence by his daily labour; but a man could not, in such cases, provide for a family.

Three measures of barley] This seems to have been the proportion of value between the wheat and the barley. Barley was allowed to afford a poor aliment, and was given to the Roman soldiers, instead of wheat, by way of punishment.

Hurt not the oil and the wine.] Be sparing of these: use them not as delicacies, but for necessity; because neither the vines nor the olives will be productive.

Verse 7. The fourth beast] That which had the face of an eagle.

Verse 8. A pale horse] The symbol of death.

And Hell followed with him.] The grave, or state of the dead, received the slain. This is a very elegant personification.

Over the fourth part of the earth] One fourth of mankind was to feel the desolating effects of this seal.

To kill with sword] WAR; with hunger—FAMINE; with death—PESTILENCE; and with the beasts of the earth—lions, tigers, hyænas, &c., which would multiply in consequence of the devastations occasioned by war, famine, and pestilence.

Verse 9. The fifth seal] There is no animal nor any other being to introduce this seal, nor does there appear to be any new event predicted; but the whole is intended to comfort the followers of God under their persecutions, and to encourage them to bear up under their distresses.

I saw under the altar] A symbolical vision was exhibited in which he saw an altar; and under it the souls of those who had been slain for the word of God—martyred for their attachment to Christianity—are represented as being newly slain as victims to idolatry and superstition. The altar is upon earth, not in heaven.

Verse 10. And they cried with a loud voice] That is, their blood, like that of Abel, cried for vengeance; for we are not to suppose that there was anything like a vindictive spirit in those happy and holy souls who had shed their blood for the testimony of Jesus.

O Lord.] Sovereign Lord, Supreme Ruler; one having and exercising unlimited and uncontrolled authority.

On them that dwell on the earth.] Probably meaning sword, and with hunger, * and with death, * and with the beasts of the earth.

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under * the altar * the souls of them that were slain * for the word of God, and for * the testimony which they held:

10 And they cried with a loud voice, saying, * How long, O Lord, * holy and true, * dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

11 And * white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, * that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

the persecuting Jews; they dwelt upon that land, a form of speech by which Judea is often signified in the New Testament. Verse 11. White robes] The emblems of purity, innocence, and triumph.

They should rest—a little season] This is a declaration that, when the cup of the iniquity of the Jews should be full, they should then be punished in a mass. If this book was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, as is most likely, then this destruction is that which was to fall upon the Jews; and the little time or season was that which elapsed between their martyrdom, or the date of this book, and the final destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, under Vespasian and his son Titus, about A.D. 70. What follows may refer to the destruction of the heathen Roman Empire.

Verse 12. The sixth seal] This seal also is opened and introduced by Jesus Christ alone.

A great earthquake] A most stupendous change in the civil and religious constitution of the world. If it refer to Constantine the Great, the change that was made by his conversion to Christianity might be very properly represented under the emblem of an earthquake, and the other symbols mentioned in this and the following verses.

The sun—the ancient pagan government of the Roman empire, was totally darkened; and, like a black hair sackcloth, was degraded and humbled to the dust.

The moon—the ecclesiastical state of the same empire became as blood—was totally ruined, their sacred rites abrogated, their priests and religious institutions desecrated, their altars cast down, their temples destroyed or turned into places for Christian worship.

Verse 13. The stars of heaven] The gods and goddesses, demi-gods, and deified heroes of their poetical and mythological heaven, were prostrated indiscriminately, and lay as useless as the figs or fruit of a tree shaken down before ripe by a tempestuous wind.

* the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

13 * And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her * untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

14 * And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and * every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every freeman, * hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains;

16 * And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:

17 * For the great day of his wrath is come; * and who shall be able to stand?

—^a Or, green figs.—^b Ps. cii. 26. Isa. xxxiv. 4. Heb. i. 12, 18. ^c Jer. iii. 23. iv. 24. Ch. xvi. 20.—^d Isa. ii. 19.—^e Hos. x. 8. Luke xxiii. 30. Ch. ix. 6.—^f Isa. xlii. 6, &c. Zeph. i. 14, &c. Ch. xvi. 14.—^g Ps. lxxvi. 7.

Verse 14. And the heaven departed as a scroll] The whole system of pagan and idolatrous worship, with all its spiritual, secular, and superstitious influence, was blasted, shrivelled up, and rendered null and void, as a parchment scroll when exposed to the action of a strong fire.

Verse 15. The kings of the earth, &c.] All the secular powers who had endeavoured to support the pagan worship by authority, influence, riches, political wisdom, and military skill; with every bondman—all slaves, who were in life and limb addicted to their masters or owners.

And every freeman] Those who had been manumitted, commonly called freedmen, and who were attached, through gratitude, to the families of their liberators. All hid themselves—were astonished at the total overthrow of the heathen empire, and the revolution which had then taken place.

Verse 16. Said to the mountains and rocks] Expressions which denote the strongest perturbation and alarm.

From the face of him that sitteth on the throne] They now saw that all these terrible judgments came from the Almighty; and that Christ, the author of Christianity, was now judging, condemning, and destroying them for their cruel persecutions of his followers.

Verse 17. For the great day of his wrath] The decisive and manifest time in which he will execute judgment on the oppressors of his people.

Who shall be able to stand?] All these things may literally apply to the final destruction of Jerusalem, and to the revolution which took place in the Roman Empire under Constantine the Great. Some apply them to the day of judgment; but they do not seem to have that awful event in view. These two events were the greatest that have ever taken place in the world, from the flood to the eighteenth century of the Christian era; and may well justify the strong figurative language used above.

CHAPTER VII.

The four angels holding the four winds of heaven, 1. The angel with the seal of the living God, and sealing the servants of God out of the twelve tribes, whose number amounted to one hundred and forty-four thousand, 2-8. Besides these, there was an innumerable multitude from all nations, who gave glory to God and the Lamb, 9-12. One of the elders shows who these are, and describes their most happy state, 13-17.

AND after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,

3 Saying, "Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

4 "And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

5 Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6 Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephthalim were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

9 After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude,

Verse 1. And after these things] Immediately after the preceding vision.

I saw four angels] Instruments which God employs in the dispensation of his providence; we know not what.

On the four corners of the earth] On the extreme parts of the land of Judea, called the land or earth, by way of eminence.

Holding the four winds] Preventing evil from every quarter. Earth—sea, nor on any tree; keeping the whole of the land free from evil, till the Church of Christ should wax strong, and each of his followers have time to prepare for his flight from Jerusalem, previously to its total destruction by the Romans.

Verse 2. The seal of the living God] This angel is represented as the chancellor of the supreme King, and as ascending from the east, from the rising of the sun. Some understand this of Christ, who is called the east, Luke i. 78.

Four angels, to whom it was given to hurt] Particular agents employed by divine providence in the management of the affairs of the earth; but whether spiritual or material we know not.

Verse 3. Till we have sealed the servants of our God] There is manifestly an allusion to Ezek. ix. 4 here. By sealing we are to understand consecrating the persons in a more especial manner to God, and showing, by this mark of God upon them, that they were under his more immediate protection, and that nothing should hurt them.

Verse 4. I heard the number of them which were sealed] In the number of 144,000 are included all the Jews converted to Christianity; 12,000 out of each of the twelve tribes; but this must be only a certain for an uncertain number; for it is not to be supposed that just 12,000 were converted out of each of the twelve tribes.

Verse 5-8. Of the tribe of Juda, &c.] Ephraim and Dan, being the principal promoters of idolatry, are left out in this enumeration.

Verse 9. A great multitude] This appears to mean the Church of Christ among the Gentiles, for it was different from that collected from the twelve tribes; and it is here said to be of all nations, kindreds, people, and tongues.

which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, "Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

11 "And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, 12 "Saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?

14 And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

15 Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.

16 "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more: neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.

17 For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

Clothed with white robes] As emblems of innocence and purity. With palms in their hands, in token of victory gained over the world, the devil, and the flesh.

Verse 10. Salvation to our God] That is God alone is the author of the salvation of man: and this salvation is procured for and given to them through the Lamb, as their propitiatory sacrifice.

Verse 11. All the angels, &c.] As there is joy in the presence of God among these holy spirits when one sinner repents, no wonder that they take such an interest in the gathering together of such innumerable multitudes who are fully saved from their sins.

Verse 12. Saying, Amen] Giving their most cordial and grateful assent to the praises attributed to God and the Lamb.

Blessing, and glory, &c.] There are here seven different species of praise attributed to God, as in chap. v. 12.

Verse 13. One of the elders answered] A Hebraism for spoke. The question is here asked, that the proposer may have the opportunity of answering it.

Verse 14. Sir, thou knowest] That is, I do not know, but thou canst inform me.

Came out of great tribulation] Persecutions of every kind. And have washed their robes] Have obtained their pardon and purity, through the blood of the Lamb.

Their white robes cannot mean the righteousness of Christ, for this cannot be washed and made white in his own blood. This white linen is said to be the righteousness of the saints, chap. xix. 8, and this is the righteousness in which they stand before the throne; therefore it is not Christ's righteousness, but it is a righteousness wrought in them by the merit of his blood, and the power of his spirit.

Verse 15. Therefore] Because they are washed in the blood of the Lamb, are they before the throne—admitted to the immediate presence of God.

And serve him day and night] Without ceasing; being filled with the spirit of prayer, faith, love, and obedience.

Shall dwell among them] He lives in his own church, and in the heart of every true believer.

Verse 16. They shall hunger no more] They shall no longer be deprived of their religious ordinances, and the blessings attendant on them, as they were when in a state of persecution.

Neither shall the sun light on them] Their secular rulers, being converted to God, became nursing fathers to the Church.

Nor any heat.] Neither persecution nor affliction of any kind. These the Hebrews express by the term heat, scorching, &c.

Verse 17. The Lamb] The Lord Jesus, enthroned with his Father in ineffable glory.

Shall feed them] Shall communicate to them everything calculated to secure, continue, and increase their happiness.

Living fountains of waters] A spring in the Hebrew phraseology is termed living water, because constantly boiling up and running on. By these perpetual fountains we are to understand endless sources of comfort and happiness, which Jesus Christ will open out of his own infinite plenitude to all glorified souls.

God shall wipe away] In the most affectionate and fatherly manner, all tears from their eyes—all causes of distress and grief. They shall have pure, unmixed

CHAPTER VIII.

The opening of the seventh seal, 1. The seven angels, with the seven trumpets, 2-6. The first sounds, and there is a shower of hail, fire, and blood, 7. The second sounds, and the burning mountain is cast into the sea, 8, 9. The third sounds, and the great star Wormwood falls from heaven, 10, 11. The fourth sounds, and the sun, moon, and stars are smitten; and a threefold woe is denounced against the inhabitants of the earth, because of the three angels who are yet to sound, 12, 13.

AND ^awhen he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.

2 ^bAnd I saw the seven angels which stood before God; ^cand to them were given seven trumpets.

3 And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should ^doffer it with ^ethe prayers of all saints upon ^fthe golden altar which was before the throne.

Verse 1. The seventh seal] This is ushered in and opened only by the Lamb.

Silence in heaven] This must be a mere metaphor, silence being put here for the deep and solemn expectation of the stupendous things about to take place, which the opening of this seal has produced.

Half an hour.] As heaven may signify the place in which all those representations were made to St. John, the half hour may be considered as the time during which no representation was made to him; the time in which God was preparing the august exhibition which follows.

Verse 2. The seven angels which stood before God] Probably the same as those called the seven Spirits which are before his throne, chap. i. 4.

Verse 3. Another angel] About to perform the office of priest.

Much incense, that he should offer it] Judgments of God are now about to be executed; the saints—the genuine Christians, pray much to God for protection. The angelic priest comes with much incense, standing between the living and those consigned to death, and offers his incense to God with the prayers of the saints.

Verse 4. The smoke of the incense—with the prayers] Though incense itself be an emblem of the prayers of the saints, Psa. cxli. 2; yet here they are said to ascend before God, as well as the incense. It is not said that the angel presents these prayers. He presents the incense, and the prayers ascend with it. The ascending of the incense shows that the prayers and offering were accepted.

Verse 5. Cast it into the earth] That is, upon the land of Judaea; intimating the judgments and desolations which were 4 And ^athe smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand.

5 And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it ^binto the earth: and ^cthere were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, ^dand an earthquake.

6 And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

7 The first angel sounded, ^eand there followed now coming upon it, and which appear to be farther opened in the sounding of the seven trumpets.

There were voices] All these seem to point out the confusion, commotions, distresses, and miseries which were coming upon these people in the wars which were at hand.

Verse 6. Prepared themselves to sound.] Each took up his trumpet, and stood prepared to blow his blast. Wars are here indicated; the trumpet was the emblem of war.

Verse 7. Hail and fire mingled with blood] This was something like the ninth plague of Egypt.

They were cast upon the earth] Into that land, viz., Judaea, thus often designated.

And the third part of trees] The land was wasted; the trees—the chiefs of the nation, were destroyed; and the grass—the common people, slain, or carried into captivity. High and low, rich and poor, were overwhelmed with one general destruction.

Verse 8. A great mountain burning with fire] Mountain, in prophetic language, signifies a kingdom, Jer. li. 25, 27, 30, 58. Great disorders, especially when kingdoms are moved by hostile invasions, are represented by mountains being cast into the midst of the sea, Psa. xli. 2. Seas and collections of waters mean peoples, as is shown in this book, chap. xvii. 15. Therefore, great commotions in kingdoms and among their inhabitants may be here intimated, but to whom, where, and when these happened, or are to happen, we know not.

The third part of the sea became blood] Another allusion to the Egyptian plagues, Exod. vii. 20, 21. Third part is a rabbinism, expressing a considerable number.

Verse 9. The third part of the ships were destroyed.] These hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast ^a upon the earth: and the third part ^b of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.

8 And the second angel sounded, ^c and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: ^d and the third part of the sea ^e became blood;

9 ^f And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.

10 And the third angel sounded, ^g and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, ^h and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters; judgments seem to be poured out on some maritime nation, destroying much of its population, and much of its traffic.

Verse 10. There fell a great star from heaven] This has given rise to various conjectures. Some say the star means Attila and his Huns; others, Genserich with his Vandals falling on the city of Rome; others, Eleazer, the son of Annas, spurning the emperor's victims, and exciting the fury of the zealots; others, Arius, infecting the pure Christian doctrine with his heresy, &c. &c. It certainly cannot mean all these; and probably none of them.

Verse 11. The star is called Wormwood] So called from the bitter or distressing effects produced by its influence.

Verse 12. The third part of the sun—moon—stars, was 11 ⁱ And the name of the star is called Wormwood: ^j and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

12 ^k And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

13 And I beheld, ^l and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, ^m Woe, woe, woe to the inhabitants of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

smitten] Supposed to mean Rome, with her senates, consuls, &c., eclipsed by Odoacer, king of the Heruli, and Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths, in the fifth century. But all this is uncertain.

Verse 13. I—heard an angel flying] Instead of an angel flying, almost every MS. and Version of note has an eagle flying. The eagle was the symbol of the Romans, and was always on their ensigns. The three woes which are here expressed were probably to be executed by this people, and upon the Jews and their commonwealth. Taken in this sense the symbols appear consistent and appropriate; and the reading eagle instead of angel is undoubtedly genuine.

CHAPTER IX.

The fifth angel sounds, and a star falls from heaven to earth, 1. The bottomless pit is opened, and locusts come out upon the earth, 2, 3. Their commission, 4-6. Their form, 7-10. Their government, 11, 12. The sixth angel sounds, and the four angels bound in the Euphrates are loosed, 13-15. The army of horsemen, and their description, 16-19. Though much evil is inflicted upon men for their idolatry, &c., they do not repent, 20, 21.

AND the fifth angel sounded, ^a and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of ^b the bottomless pit.

2 And he opened the bottomless pit; ^c and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

Verse 1. A star fall from heaven] An angel encompassed with light suddenly descended, and seemed like a star falling from heaven.

The key of the bottomless pit] Power to inundate the earth with a flood of temporal calamities and moral evils.

Verse 2. He opened the bottomless pit] The pit of the bottomless deep. Some think the angel means Satan, and the bottomless pit hell. Some suppose Mohammed is meant, and Pastorini professes to believe that Luther is intended!

There arose a smoke] False doctrine, obscuring the true light of heaven.

As the scorpions of the earth have power] Namely, to hurt men by stinging them. Scorpions may signify archers; and hence the description has been applied to Cestius Gallus, the Roman general, who had many archers in his army.

Verse 4. They should not hurt the grass] Neither the common people, the men of middling condition, nor the nobles. However, this appears rather to refer to the prudent counsels of a military chief, not to destroy the crops and herbage of which they might have need in their campaigns.

Which have not the seal of God] All false, hypocritical, and heterodox Christians.

kill them, * but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man.

6 And in those days ^b shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.

7 And ^c the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; ^d and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, ^e and their faces were as the faces of men.

Verse 5. To them it was given] That is, they were permitted.

That they should be tormented five months] Some take these months literally, and apply them to the conduct of the zealots who, from May to September, in the year of the siege, produced dreadful contests among the people; or to the afflictions brought upon the Jews by Cestius Gallus, when he came against Jerusalem, before which he lay one whole summer, or nearly five months. Others consider the months as being prophetic months, each day being reckoned for a year; therefore this period must amount to one hundred and fifty years, counting thirty days to each month, as was the general custom of the Asiatics.

Verse 6. In those days shall men seek death] So distressing shall be their sufferings and torment that they shall long for death in any form, to be rescued from the evils of life.

Verse 7. The locusts were like unto horses] The whole of this symbolical description of an overwhelming military force agrees very well with the troops of Mohammed. The Arabs are the most expert horsemen in the world; they live so much on horseback that the horse and his rider seem to make but one animal. The Romans also were eminent for their cavalry.

Crowns like gold] Not only alluding to their costly tiaras or turbans, but to the extent of their conquests and the multitude of powers which they subdued.

Their faces were as the faces of men.] That is, though locusts symbolically, they are really men.

Verse 8. Hair as the hair of women.] No razor passes upon their flesh. Their hair long, and their beards unshaven.

Their teeth were as the teeth of lions] They are ferocious and cruel.

Verse 9. They had breast-plates—of iron] They seemed to be invulnerable, for no force availed against them.

The sound of their wings] Their hanging weapons and military trappings, with the clang of their shields and swords when they make their fierce onsets. This simile is borrowed from Joel ii. 5-7.

Verse 10. They had tails like unto scorpions] This may refer to the consequences of their victories. They infected the conquered with their pernicious doctrines.

Their power was to hurt men five months.] The locusts make their principal ravages during the five summer months.

15 And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared ⁿ for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.

16 And ^o the number of the army ^p of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: ^q and I heard the number of them.

17 And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breast-plates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: ^r and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone.

18 By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: ^s for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

20 And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues ^t yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship ^u devils, ^v and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:

21 Neither repented they of their murders, ^w nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornications, nor of their thefts.

But probably these may be prophetic months, as above, in ver. 5—150 years.

Verse 11. A king over them] A supreme head; some think Mohammed, some think Vespasian.

The angel of the bottomless pit] The chief envoy of Satan.

Abaddon] From abad, he destroyed.

Apollyon.] The meaning is the same both in the Hebrew and Greek.

Verse 12. One woe is past] That is, the woe or desolation by the symbolical scorpions.

There come two woes more] In the trumpets of the sixth and seventh angels.

Verse 13. The four horns of the golden altar] This is another not very obscure indication that the Jewish temple was yet standing.

Verse 14. Loose the four angels] These four angels bound—hitherto restrained in the Euphrates, are by some supposed to be the Arabs, the Saracens, the Tartars, or the Turks; by others, Vespasian's four generals, one in Arabia, one in Africa, one in Alexandria, and one in Palestine.

Verse 15. For an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year] Probably no more is meant than that these four angels were at all times prepared and permitted to inflict evil on the people against whom they had received their commission. There are some who understand these divisions of time as prophetic periods, and to these I must refer, not professing to discuss such uncertainties.

Verse 16. Two hundred thousand thousand] Two myriads of myriads; that is, two hundred millions; an army that was never yet got together from the foundation of the world, and could not find forage in any part of the earth. Perhaps it only means vast numbers, multitudes without number.

Verse 17. Breast-plates of fire—jacinth and brimstone] That is, red, blue, and yellow; the first is the colour of fire, the second of jacinth, and the third of sulphur.

And the heads of the horses] Is this an allegorical description of great ordnance? Cannons, on the mouths of which horses' heads were formed, or the mouth of the cannon cast in that form? Fire, smoke, and brimstone is a good allegorical representation of gunpowder.

Verse 18. By these three were the third part of men killed] That is, By these was great carnage made.

REVELATION.

Their power is in their mouth] From these the destructive balls are projected; and in their tails, the breech where the charge of gunpowder is lodged.

Their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads] If cannons are intended, the description, though allegorical, is plain enough; for brass ordnance especially are frequently thus ornamented, both at their muzzles and at their breech.

Verse 20. Yet repented not] These things are supposed to refer to the desolation brought upon the Greek Church by the Ottomans, who entirely ruined that Church and the Greek Empire. The Church which was then remaining was the Latin or Western Church, which was not at all corrected by the judgments which fell upon the Eastern Church but continued its senseless adoration of angels, saints, relics, &c., and does so to the present day. If, therefore, God's wrath be kindled against such, this church has much to fear.

Verse 21. Neither repented they of their murders] Their cruelties towards the genuine followers of God, the Albigenses, and Waldenses, and others, against whom they published crusades, and hunted them down, and butchered them in the most shocking manner. The innumerable murders by the horrible inquisition need not be mentioned.

Their sorceries] Those who apply this also to the Romish Church understand by it the various tricks, sleights of hand or legerdemain, by which they impose on the common people in causing images of Christ to bleed, and the various pretended miracles wrought at the tombs, &c., of pretended saints, holy wells, and such like.

Fornication] Giving that honour to various creatures which is due only to the Creator.

Their thefts.] Their exactions and impositions on men for indulgences, pardons, &c. These things may be intended, but it is going too far to say that this is the true interpretation.

CHAPTER X.

The description of a mighty angel with a little book in his hand, 1, 2. The seven thunders, 3, 4. The angel swears that there shall be time no longer, 5-7. John is commanded to take the little book and eat it; he does so, and receives a commission to prophesy to many peoples, 8-11.

AND I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud; ^aand a rainbow was upon his head, and ^bhis face was as it were the sun, and ^chis feet as pillars of fire:

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: ^dand he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth,

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, ^eseven thunders uttered their voices.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, ^fSeal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.

5 And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth ^glifted up his hand to heaven,

6 And swore by him that liveth for ever and ever, ^hwho created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are,

Verse 1. Another mighty angel] Either Christ or his representative; clothed with a cloud; a symbol of the divine majesty.

A rainbow was upon his head] The token of God's merciful covenant with mankind.

His face was as it were the sun] So intensely glorious that it could not be looked on.

His feet as pillars of fire] To denote the rapidity and energy of his motions, and the stability of his counsels.

Verse 2. A little book open] Meaning probably some design of God long concealed, but now about to be made manifest. But who knows what it means?

His right foot upon the sea, and his left—on the earth.] To show that he had the command of each, and that his power was universal, all things being under his feet.

Verse 3. Seven thunders] Seven being a number of per-and the sea, and the things which are therein, ⁱthat there should be time no longer:

7 But ^jin the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

8 And ^kthe voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth.

9 And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, ^lTake it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey.

10 And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; ^mand it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, ⁿmy belly was bitter.

11 And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

fection, it may here mean many, great, loud, and strong peals of thunder, accompanied with distinct voices; but what was said St. John was not permitted to reveal, ver. 4.

Verse 5. Lifted up his hand to heaven] As one making an appeal to the Supreme Being.

Verse 6. By him that liveth for ever and ever] The eternal, self-existent Jehovah, the Maker of all things.

That there should be time no longer] That the great counsels relative to the events already predicted should be immediately fulfilled, and that there should be no longer delay. This has no reference to the day of judgment.

Verse 7. The mystery of God should be finished] What this mystery refers to who knows? Nor have we more knowledge concerning the sounding of the seventh angel.

Declared to his servants the prophets.] It is most likely that this trumpet belongs to the Jewish state.

Verse 8. Take the little book which is open] Learn from this angel what should be published to the world.

Verse 9. Take it, and eat it up] Fully comprehend its meaning; study it thoroughly.

Verse 10. It was in my mouth sweet as honey] I read of the consolations and protection of the true worshippers of God, and did rejoice; I read of the persecutions of the Church, and was distressed.

CHAPTER XI.

The command to measure the temple, 1, 2. The two witnesses which should prophesy twelve hundred and sixty days, 3. The description, power, and influence of these witnesses, 4-6. They shall be slain by the beast which shall arise out of the bottomless pit; and shall arise again after three days and a half, and ascend to heaven, 7-12. After which shall be a great earthquake, 13. The introduction to the third woe, 14. The sounding of the seventh angel, and the four and twenty elders give glory to God, 15-19.

AND there was given me ^a a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, ^b Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein.

2 But ^c the court which is without the temple ^d leave out, and measure it not; ^e for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they ^f tread under foot ^g forty and two months.

3 And ^h I will give power unto my two ⁱ witnesses, and they shall prophesy ^k a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

4 These are the ^l two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth.

5 And if any man will hurt them, ^m fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies; ⁿ and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

6 These ^o have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and ^p have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

7 And when they ^q shall have finished their testimony, ^r the beast that ascendeth ^s out of the bottomless pit ^t shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.

8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of ^u the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, ^v where also our Lord was crucified.

9 ^w And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, ^x and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

Verse 1. And there was given me a reed] See Ezek. xl. 3, &c.

Measure the temple of God] This must refer to the Temple of Jerusalem; and this is another presumptive evidence that it was yet standing.

Verse 2. But the court—is given unto the Gentiles] The measuring of the temple probably refers to its approaching destruction, and the termination of the whole Levitical service; and this we find was to be done by the Gentiles (Romans), who were to tread it down forty-two months, i.e., just three years and a half, or twelve hundred and sixty days. This must be a symbolical period.

Verse 3. My two witnesses] This is extremely obscure; the conjectures of interpreters are as unsatisfactory as they are endless, on this point.

Verse 4. These are the two olive trees] Mentioned Zech. iv. 14, which there represent Zerubbabel and Joshua the high-priest. The whole account seems taken from Zech. iv. 1-14. Whether the prophet and the apostle mean the same things by these emblems, we know not.

Verse 5. Fire proceedeth out of their mouth] That is, They are commissioned to denounce the judgments of God against all who would attempt to prevent them from proceeding in their ministry.

Verse 6. These have power to shut heaven] As Elijah did, 1 Kings xvii. and xviii.

To turn them to blood] As Moses did, Exod. vii.

Verse 7. The beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit] This may be what is called Antichrist; some power that is opposed to genuine Christianity. But what or whence, except from the bottomless pit, i.e., under the influence and appointment of the devil, we cannot tell; nor do we know by what name this power or being should be called.

Verse 8. The great city] Some say Rome, which may be spiritually called Sodom for its abominations, Egypt for its tyrannous cruelty, and the place where our Lord was crucified, because of its persecution of the members of Christ; but Jerusalem itself may be included.

Verse 9. Shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.] Refusal of burial to the dead was allowed to be the sum of brutality and cruelty. In popish lands they will not suffer a protestant to have Christian burial, or to have a grave in a churchyard! Contemptible wretches!

Verse 10. Shall send gifts] This was a custom in days of public rejoicing. They sent gifts to each other, and gave portions to the poor. See Esther ix. 19, 22.

Verse 11. They stood upon their feet] Were restored to their primitive state.

Verse 12. They ascended up to heaven] Enjoyed a state of great peace and happiness.

Verse 13. A great earthquake] Violent commotions among the persecutors, and revolutions of states.

Slain of men seven thousand] Many perished in those popular commotions.

Gave glory] Received the pure doctrines of the gospel, and glorified God for his judgments and their conversion.

Verse 14. The second woe is past] That which took place under the sixth trumpet, and has been already described.

The third woe cometh] Is about to be described under the seventh trumpet, which the angel is now prepared to sound.

These woes are supposed by many learned men to refer to the destruction of Jerusalem. The first woe—the seditions among the Jews themselves. The second woe—the besieging of the city by the Romans. The third woe—the taking and sacking of the city, and burning the temple. This was the greatest of all the woes, as in it the city and temple were destroyed, and nearly a million of men lost their lives.

Verse 15. There were great voices in heaven] All the heavenly host—angels and redeemed human spirits, joined together to magnify God, that he had utterly discomfited his enemies, and rendered his friends glorious. This will be truly the case when the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of God and of his Christ. But when shall this be?

Verse 16. The four and twenty elders] The representatives of the Universal Church of Christ. See on chap. v. 8-10.

Verse 17. O Lord God Almighty, which art] This gives a proper view of God in his eternity; all times are here comprehended, the present, the past, and the future. This is the infinitude of God.

and of his Christ; ^o and he shall reign for ever and ever.

16 And ^p the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, 17 Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, ^q which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, ^r and hast reigned.

18 ^s And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, ^t and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, ^u small and great; ^v and shouldest destroy them which ^w destroy the earth.

Verse 18. The nations were angry] Were enraged against thy gospel, and determined to destroy it.

Thy wrath is come] The time to avenge thy servants and to destroy all thy enemies.

The time of the dead, that they should be judged] The word to judge is often used in the sense of to avenge. The dead, here, may mean those who were slain for the testimony of Jesus, and the judging is the avenging of their blood.

Give reward unto thy servants] Who have been faithful unto death.

The prophets] The faithful teachers in the Church; the saints—the Christians.

And them that fear thy name] All thy sincere followers. Destroy them which destroy the earth.] All the authors, fomentors, and encouragers of bloody wars.

Verse 19. The temple of God was opened in heaven] The true worship of God was established and performed in the Christian Church; this is the true temple, that at Jerusalem being destroyed.

And there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail] These great commotions were intended to introduce the following vision; for the 12th chapter is properly a continuation of the 11th, and should be read in strict connexion with it.

He, however, leaves "the learned author responsible for his own particular views of the subject."]

Verse 1. There appeared a great wonder in heaven: a woman clothed with the sun. That the woman here represents the true Church of Christ most commentators are agreed. See chap. xix, ver. 7. and chap. xxi. 9. This will appear also from her being clothed with the sun, a striking emblem of Jesus Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, the light and glory of the church.

The moon under her feet. Bishop Newton understands this of the Jewish typical worship, and indeed the Mosiac system of rites and ceremonies could not have been better represented, for it was the shadow of good things to come.

A crown of twelve stars. A very significant representation of the twelve apostles, who were the first founders of the Christian Church, and by whom the gospel was preached in a great part of the Roman Empire with astonishing success. Dan. xii. 8.

Verse 2. And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, &c. The woman is represented as BEING with child, to show that the time would speedily arrive when God's patient forbearance with the heathen would be terminated, and that a deliverer should arise in the Christian world who would execute the divine vengeance upon paganism.

Verse 3. There appeared another wonder—a great red dragon. A huge fabulous beast is shown to St. John, by which some GREAT PAGAN power is symbolically represented; and the RED dragon is selected from among the numerous imaginary animals which the fancies of mankind have created, to show that this great pagan power is the heathen Roman Empire. The dragon was the principal standard of the Romans next to the eagle, in the first centuries of the Christian era. From ancient writers we find that the dragon standards of the Romans were painted red.

Having seven heads. As the dragon is an emblem of the heathen Roman power, its heads must denote heathen forms of government. These were exactly seven: 1. The Royal power; 2. The Consulate; 3. The Dictatorship; 4. The Decemvirate; 5. The Consular power of the Military Tribunes; 6. The Triumvirate; and 7. The Imperial Government.

And ten horns. That these ten horns signify as many kingdoms, is evident from the seventh chapter of Daniel, where the angel, speaking of the fourth beast, says that "the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise;" and in this view of the passage many commentators are agreed, who also admit that the ten kingdoms are to be met with "amid the broken pieces of the Roman Empire." And it is evident that nothing less than the dismemberment of the Roman Empire, and its division into ten independent kingdoms, can be intended by the angel's interpretation just quoted. If, therefore, the ten horns of Daniel's fourth beast point out as many kingdoms, for the very same reason must the horns of the dragon have a similar meaning. When the heathen barbarous nations divided the Roman Empire among themselves, they might very properly be denominated horns

5 And she brought forth a man child, ^lwho was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up into God, and to his throne.

6 And ^mthe woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there ⁿa thousand two hundred and threescore days.

7 And there was war in heaven: ^oMichael and his angels fought ^pagainst the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

8 And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

9 And ^qthe great dragon was cast out, ^rthat old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, ^swhich deceiveth the whole world: ^the was cast out into the of the dragon, as it was by means of their incursions that the imperial power, FOUNDED by the heathen Cæsars, was abolished. Machiavel and Bishop Lloyd enumerate the horns of the dragon thus: 1. The kingdom of the Huns; 2. The kingdom of the Ostrogoths; 3. The kingdom of the Visigoths; 4. The kingdom of the Franks; 5. The kingdom of the Vandals; 6. The kingdom of the Sueves and Alans; 7. The kingdom of the Burgundians; 8. The kingdom of the Heruli, Rugii, Seyrii, and other tribes which composed the Italian kingdom of Odoacer; 9. The kingdom of the Saxons; and 10. The kingdom of the Lombards.

And seven crowns upon his heads. In the seven Roman forms of government already enumerated, heathenism has been the crowning or dominant religion.

Verse 4. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven. The tail of the dragon is the heathen Roman power in its seventh or last form of government, viz., the imperial power. This heathen imperial power is said to draw the third part of the stars of heaven, by which has generally been understood that the Roman Empire subjected the third part of the princes and potentates of the earth. But that this is not a correct statement of the fact is evident from the testimony of ancient history. The Roman Empire was always considered and called the empire of the world by ancient writers. The whole mystery of this passage consists in the misapprehension of its symbolical language. In order therefore to understand it, the symbols here used must be examined. By heaven is meant the most eminent or ruling part of any nation. The meaning of heaven being thus ascertained, it cannot be difficult to comprehend the meaning of earth, this being evidently its opposite, that is, everything in subjection to the heaven or ruling part. Stars have already been shown to denote ministers of religion; and this is more fully evident from chap. i. of this book, where the seven stars, which the Son of God holds in his right hand, are explained to signify the seven angels [or messengers] of the seven churches, by whom must be meant the seven pastors or ministers of these churches. The stars therefore which the dragon draws with his tail must represent the whole body of pagan priests who were the stars or lights of the heathen world. The religious world in the time of St. John was divided into three grand branches, viz., the Christian world, the Jewish world, and the heathen and pagan world: consequently, as a dragon, a fabulous animal, is an emblem of a civil power supporting a religion founded in faith; it necessarily follows that the stars or ministers of the Jews and Christians cannot be numbered among those which he draws with his tail, as they were not the advocates of his idolatry, but were ministers of a religion founded by the God of heaven, and consequently formed no part of the pagan world, though they were in subjection in secular matters to the pagan Roman Empire. The tail of the dragon therefore draweth after him the whole heathen world.

And did cast them to the earth. That is, reduced all the pagan priests under the Roman yoke.

Verse 5. And she brought forth a man child. The Christian Church, when her full time came, obtained a deliverer, who, in the course of the divine providence, was destined To rule all nations]. The heathen Roman Empire.

great restraint that should be put upon paganism, so that it should not be able longer to persecute the Christian Church.

And her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.] A succession of Christian Emperors was raised up in the Church; for the Roman throne, as Bishop Newton observes, is here called the throne of God, because there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God.

Verse 6. And the woman fled into the wilderness] The account of the woman's flying into the wilderness immediately follows that of her child being caught up to the throne of God, to denote the great and rapid increase of heresies in the Christian Church after the time that Christianity was made the religion of the empire.

Verse 7. And there was war in heaven] As heaven means here the throne of the Roman Empire, the war in heaven consequently alludes to the breaking out of civil commotions among the governors of this empire.

Michael and his angels fought against the dragon] Michael was the man child which the woman brought forth, as is evident from the context, and therefore signifies, as has been shown already, the dynasty of Christian Roman Emperors.

Verse 8. And prevailed not] Against the cause of Christianity.

Neither was their place found any more in heaven.] The wonderful success of Constantine over all his enemies, and his final triumph over Licinius, correspond exactly to the symbolical language in this verse.

Verse 9. And the great dragon was cast out, &c.] The appellations, old serpent, devil, and Satan, must be understood figuratively. The heathen power is called that old serpent which deceiveth the whole world, from its subtlety against the Christians, and its causing the whole Roman world, as far as it was in its power, to embrace the absurdities of paganism. It is called the devil, from its continual false accusations and slanders against the true worshippers of God, for the devil is a liar from the beginning; and it is also called Satan, which is a Hebrew word signifying an adversary, from its frequent persecutions of the Christian Church. The dragon and his angels are said to be cast out, which is more than was said in the preceding verse. This great event was not the work of a reign; it took up many years, for it had to contend with the deep-rooted prejudices of the heathen, who to the very last endeavoured to uphold their declining superstition. Paganism received several mortal strokes in the time of Constantine and his sons Constans and Constantius. It was farther reduced by the great zeal of Jovian, Valentinian, and Valens; and was finally suppressed by the edicts of Gratian, Theodosius I., and his successors. It was not till A.D. 388 that Rome itself, the residence of the emperor, was generally reformed from the absurdities of Paganism; but the total suppression of paganism soon followed the conversion of the metropolitan city, and about A.D. 395 the dragon may be considered, in an eminent sense, to have been cast into the earth, that is, into a state of utter subjection to the ruling dynasty of Christian Emperors.

Verse 10. And I heard a loud voice, saying,—Now is come salvation, &c.] This is a song of triumph of the Christian Church over the heathen idolatry, and is very expressive of the great joy of the Christians upon this most stupendous event. The loud voice of triumph is said to be heard in heaven, to show that the Christian religion was now exalted to the heaven or throne of the Roman Empire.

Verse 11. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb] and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, ^a because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

13 And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted ^b the woman which brought forth the man child.

14 ^c And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, ^d that she might fly ^e into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished ^f for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

—^a Exod. xix. 4. 1 Mac. ii. 29, 30, 31.—^b Ver. 6.—^c Ch. xvii. 3.—^d Dan. vii. 25. xii. 7.

Here is given the reason why the followers of Christ prevailed at this time against all their adversaries. It was because they fought against the dragon in the armour of God. They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb—by proclaiming salvation to sinners through Christ crucified, and by their continual intercession at the throne of grace for the conversion of the heathen world.

And by the word of their testimony] By constantly testifying against the errors and follies of mankind.

And they loved not their lives unto the death.] They regarded not their present temporal estate, but even gladly delivered up their lives to the fury of their persecutors, and thus sealed the truth of what they spake with their blood.

Verse 12. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them.] Let the Christians, who are now partakers of the present temporal prosperity, and advanced to places of trust in the empire, praise and magnify the Lord who has thus so signally interfered in their behalf.

Woe to the inhabitants of the earth, and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you.] By the inhabitants of the earth are meant the people in subjection to the Roman Empire; and by the sea, those parts of the Roman dominions appear to be intended that were reduced to a state of anarchy by the incursions of the barbarous nations.

Having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.] The Christian religion, the pagan party see with great regret, is rapidly gaining ground everywhere; and, if not timely checked, must soon brave all opposition.

Verse 13. And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth] When the heathen party saw that they were no longer supported by the civil power.

He persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child.] The heathens persecuted the Christian Church in the behalf of which Divine Providence had raised up a dynasty of Christian Roman Emperors.

Verse 14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle] Of the great eagle. The great eagle here mentioned is an emblem of the Roman Empire in general, and therefore differs from the dragon, which is a symbol of the HEATHEN ROMAN empire in particular. The two wings of the great eagle refer to the two grand independent divisions of the Roman Empire, which took place January 17, A.D. 395, and were given to the woman, Christianity being the established religion of both empires.

That she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, &c.] The meaning, when taken in connexion with the context, is that the woman began to make rapid strides towards the desert almost immediately after her elevation to the heaven or throne of the Roman Empire, and in the course of her flight was furnished with the wings of the great eagle that she might fly into that place prepared of God, where she should be fed a thousand two hundred and threescore days. The wilderness into which the woman flies is the Greek and Latin worlds, for she is conveyed into her place by means of the two wings of the great eagle. We must not understand the phrase flying into her place, of her removing from one part of the habitable world into another, but of her speedy declension from a state of great prosperity to a forlorn and desolate condition. The woman is nourished for one thousand two hundred and threescore years from the face of the serpent. The empires in the East and West were destined, in the course of the divine providence, to support the Christian religion, at least nominally, while the rest of the world should remain in pagan idolatry or under the influence of the dragon, here called the serpent, because he deceiveth the whole world. The words of the prophecy are very remark-

15 And the serpent ^a cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the able. The Christian Church is said to be supported by the eastern and western empires, two mighty dominations; and at the same time situated in the wilderness, strongly denoting that, though many professed Christianity, there were but very few who "kept the commandments of God, and had the testimony of Jesus Christ."

Verse 15. And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood] This water must be an inundation of heathen, barbarous nations upon the Roman Empire; and the purpose which the dragon has in view by the inundation is, that he might cause the woman, or Christian Church,

To be carried away of the flood.] Entirely swept away from the face of the earth. But the subtle design which the serpent or dragon had in view, was most providentially frustrated; for Verse 16. The earth helped the woman] "Nothing, indeed," as Bishop Newton excellently observes, "was more likely to produce the ruin and utter subversion of the Christian Church than the irruptions of so many barbarous nations into the Roman Empire. But the event proved contrary to flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

17 And the dragon was wroth with the woman, ^b and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, ^c which keep the commandments of God, and have ^d the testimony of Jesus Christ.

^d 1 Cor. ii. 1. 1 John v. 10. Ch. i. 2. 9. vi. 9. xx. 4.

human appearance and expectation: the earth swallowed up the flood; the barbarians were rather swallowed up by the Romans, than the Romans by the barbarians; the heathen conquerors, instead of imposing their own, submitted to the religion of the conquered Christians; and they not only embraced the religion, but affected even the laws, the manners, the customs, the language, and the very name of Romans, so that the victors were in a manner absorbed and lost among the vanquished."

Verse 17. And the dragon was wroth with the woman] The heathen party, foiled in their subtle attempt to destroy Christianity, were greatly enraged, and endeavoured to excite the hatred of the multitude against the religion of Jesus.

Went to make war with the remnant of her seed] The dragon departed, i.e., into the wilderness, whither the woman had fled; and in another form commenced a new species of persecution, directed only against the remnant of her seed who keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

Verse 1. And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea] The term beast is the prophetic symbol for a kingdom. See Dan. vii.

As to the nature of the kingdom which is represented by the term beast, we shall obtain no inconsiderable light in examining the most proper meaning of the original word chaiyah. This Hebrew word, and the Greek translation of it in the Septuagint, signifies what we term a wild beast; and the latter is the one used by St. John in the Apocalypse. Taking up the Greek word in this sense, it is fully evident, if a power be represented in the prophetic writings under the notion of a wild beast, that the power so represented must partake of the nature of a wild beast. Hence an earthly belligerent power is evidently designed. The kingdom of God is never likened to a beast, because it is not raised up by the sword as all other secular powers are, but sanctifies the persons under its subjection; in which last particular it essentially differs from all other dominations.

This beast is said to rise up out of the sea, in which particular it corresponds with the four beasts of Daniel; the sea is therefore the symbol of a great multitude of nations, as has already been proved; and the meaning is, that every mighty empire is raised upon the ruins of a great number of nations, which it has successfully contended against and incorporated with its dominions. The kingdom or empire here represented by the beast, is that which sprang up out of the ruins of the WESTERN Roman Empire.

Having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns] The beast here described is the Latin Empire, which supported the Romish or Latin Church; for it has upon his horns ten crowns, i.e., is an empire composed of ten distinct monarchies in the interest of the Latin Church.

6 And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, *and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

7 And it was given unto him^b to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: *and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.

And upon his heads the name of blasphemy.] A name of blasphemy. To determine what this name is, the meaning of the seven heads in this place must be ascertained. If the reader refer to the notes on chap. xvii. 9, 10, 11, he will find that the heads are explained to have a double meaning, viz., that they signify the seven electorates of the German Empire, and also seven forms of Latin government. As this is the first place in which the heads of the beast are mentioned with any description, it is reasonable to expect that that signification of the heads which is first in order in the angel's interpretation, chap. xvii. 9, must be what is here intended. That is, "the seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth;" the name of blasphemy will consequently be found upon the seven electorates of Germany. This, therefore, can be no other than that which was common, not only to the electorates, but also to the whole Empire of Germany, or that well known one of SACRUM Imperium Romanum, "The SACRED (or HOLY) Roman Empire." Here is a sacred appellation blasphemed by its application to the principal power of the beast. No kingdom can properly be called holy but that of Jesus; therefore it would be blasphemy to unite this epithet with any other power. But it must be horribly blasphemous to apply it to the German Empire, the grand supporter of antichrist from his very rise to temporal authority.

Verse 2. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard] This similitude of the beast to a leopard appears to be an allusion to the third beast of Daniel, which is well known to represent the Empire of the Greeks. But the beast of St. John, though in its general appearance it resembles a leopard, yet differs from it in having feet like those of a bear. The second beast of Daniel was likened to a bear, and there can be no doubt that the kingdom of the Medes and Persians was intended; and it is very properly likened to this animal because it was one of the most inhuman governments that ever existed, and a bear is the well known scripture emblem of cruelty. Is not cruelty a striking characteristic of the Papal Latin Empire? Have not the subjects of this empire literally trampled to death all those in their power who would not obey their idolatrous requisitions? Another particular in which the beast differed from a leopard was, in having a mouth like a lion. "It is," says Dr. More, "like the Babylonish kingdom (the first beast of Daniel, which is likened to a lion) in its cruel decrees against such as will not obey their idolatrous edicts, nor worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar had set up. Their stubbornness must be punished by a hot fiery furnace; fire and faggot must be prepared for them that will not submit to this new Roman idolatry."

And the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.] The dragon here cannot be the heathen Roman Empire, as this was abolished previously to the rising up of the beast. It must then allude to the restoration of one of the DRACONIC heads of the beast, as will be seen in the explanation of the following verse, and more fully in the notes on chap. xvii.

Verse 3. And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death] The head that was wounded to death can be no other than the seventh draconic head, which was the sixth head of the beast, viz., the imperial power; for "this head," as Bishop Newton observes, "was, as it were, wounded to death when the Roman Empire was overturned by the northern nations, and an end was put to the very name of emperor in Momyllus Augustulus." It was so wounded that it was wholly improbable that it could ever rise again to considerable power, for the western empire came into the possession of several barbarous nations of independent interests.

And his deadly wound was healed] This was effected by Charlemagne, who, with his successors, assumed all the marks of the ancient emperors of the west, with the titles of Sonper Augustus, Sacred Majesty, First Prince of the Christian world, Temporal Chief of the Christian people, and Rector or Temporal Chief of the Faithful in Germany.

And all the world wondered after the beast.] All the earth. As the original word signifies earth, and not world, as in our translation, the Latin world, which is the earth of the beast, is here intended; and the meaning of the passage consequently is, that the whole body of the Roman Catholics were affected with great astonishment at the mighty sway of the Latin Empire, considering it as a great and holy power.

Verse 4. And they worshipped the dragon] Worshipping the dragon here evidently means the voluntary religious subjection of the members of the Latin Church to the revived western empire, because of the eminent part it has taken in the support of their faith.

And they worshipped the beast] Not only the dragon or revived western empire was worshipped; the beast, the whole Latin Empire, is a partaker in the adoration.

Verse 5. And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things] That is, There was given to the rulers of the Latin Empire, who are the mouth of the beast (and particularly the Roman Emperors of Germany), power to assume great and pompous titles, indicative of their mighty sway over many subjugated countries, and also to utter against their opponents the most terrible edicts.

And blasphemies] The system of worship supported by the beast is a system of blasphemy, as there will be occasion to show presently.

And power was given unto him to continue forty and two months.] As these forty-two months are prophetic, they must mean so many years as there are days contained in them, viz., 1260, each month containing 30 days. The beast, therefore, will continue in existence at least 1260 years; but when the termination of this period will take place is difficult to say, as the beginning cannot be at present indubitably ascertained.

Verse 6. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name] This has been most notoriously the case with the different Popish Princes, who continually blaspheme the sacred names of God by using them in their idolatrous worship.

And his tabernacle] The beast's blasphemy of the tabernacle of God is his impious doctrine of transubstantiation, in which it is most blasphemously asserted that the substance of the bread and wine in the sacrament is literally converted, by the consecration of the priest, into the very body and blood of Jesus Christ!

And them that dwell in heaven.] By heaven is here meant the throne of God, and not the throne of the beast, because it is against God the beast blasphemes. This must therefore allude to his impious adoration of the saints and angels, whose residence is in heaven. He blasphemes against God, by paying that adoration to the celestial inhabitants which belongs to God alone.

Verse 7. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them] In the war with the Albigenses and Waldenses, there perished of these poor creatures in France alone one million. From the first institution of the Jesuits to the year 1580, that is, in little more than thirty years, nine hundred thousand orthodox Christians were slain, and these all by the common executioner. In the space of scarce thirty years the inquisition destroyed, by various kinds of torture, a hundred and fifty thousand Christians.

And power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.] As the book of the Revelation is a prophecy of all that should come upon the Christian world till the end of time, all kindreds, and tongues, and nations, must imply the whole Christian world. That the Latin Empire in the course of its reign has had the extensive power here spoken of, is evident from history.

Verse 8. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb.] The earth here is the Latin world, as has been observed before in similar cases. The meaning therefore is, that all the corrupt part of mankind who are inhabitants of the Latin world shall submit to the religion of the empire, except, as Bishop Newton expresses it, "those faithful few whose names, as citizens of heaven, were enrolled in the registers of life."

Slain from the foundation of the world.] That is, of the Christian world; for this has been shown to be the meaning of all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. The year of the crucifixion is properly the commencement of Christianity, as the apostles then first began to promulgate the religion of Christ with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. But as Jesus Christ was in the divine purpose appointed from the foundation of the world to redeem man by his blood, he therefore is, in a very eminent sense, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, i.e., from the creation.

Verse 10. He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity.] The Latin Empire here spoken of must go into captivity, because it has led into captivity, by not only propagating among the various nations its abominable antichristian system, but also in compelling them to embrace it under the penalty of forfeiting the protection of the empire.

He that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword.] The Latin Empire must be also broken to pieces by the sword, because it has killed the saints of God. This prophecy will not receive its full accomplishment till the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.

Verse 11. And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth.] This beast is the spiritual Latin Empire, or, in other words, the Romish hierarchy; for with no other power can the prophetic description yet to be examined be shown to accord. In the time of Charlemagne the ecclesiastical power was in subjection to the civil, and it continued to be so for a long time after his death; therefore the beast, whose deadly wound was healed, ruled over the whole Latin world, both clergy and laity; these, consequently, constituted but one beast or empire. But in the subsequent centuries the power of the Romish hierarchy ascended even above that of the emperors, and led into captivity the kings of the whole Latin world. It was at length entirely exempted from the civil power, and constituted another beast, as it became entirely independent of the secular Latin Empire. And this beast came up out of the earth; that is, the Latin clergy, which composed a part of the earth or Latin world, raised their authority against that of the secular powers, and in process of time wrested the superintendence of ecclesiastical affairs from the secular princes.

And he had two horns.] These can be no other, as Bishop Newton and Faber properly observe, than the two grand independent branches of the Romish hierarchy, viz., the Latin clergy, REGULAR and SECULAR.

Like a lamb.] The two horns of the beast, or the regular and secular clergy, profess to be the ministers of Christ, to be like him in meekness and humility, and to teach nothing that is contrary to godliness. The spiritual Latin empire has in reality the name, and in the eyes of the Latin world an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, ^c and did live.

the appearance, of a CHRISTIAN power. But he is only so in appearance, and that alone among his deluded votaries; for when he spake,

He spake as a dragon.] The doctrines of the Romish hierarchy are very similar to those contained in the old heathen worship; for he has introduced "a new species of idolatry, nominally different, but essentially the same, the worship of angels and saints instead of the gods and demigods of antiquity."

Verse 12. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him.] That the Romish hierarchy has had the extensive power here spoken of, is evident from history; for the civil power was in subjection to the ecclesiastical.

The earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.] That is, he causes the whole Latin world to submit to the authority of the Latin Empire, with the revived western empire at its head, persuading them that such submission is beneficial to their spiritual interests, and absolutely necessary for their salvation.

Verse 13. And he doeth great wonders.] In order to establish the Latin church upon a foundation that can never fail, the false prophet doeth great wonders—he attempts the most wonderful and prodigious exploits, and is crowned with incredible success. He has the art to persuade his followers that the clergy of the Church of Rome are the only true ministers of Christ; that they have such great influence in the court of heaven as to be able, not only to forgive sins, but also to grant indulgences in sin, by paying certain stipulated sums. He persuades them too that they can do works of supererogation. He pretends that an incredible number of miracles have been wrought and are still working by the Almighty, as so many evidences of the great sanctity of the Latin Church; and the false prophet has such an astonishing influence over his flock, as to cause them to believe all his fabulous legends and lying wonders. He pretends also (and is believed!) that his power is not confined to this world; that he is able by his prayers to deliver the souls of the deceased from what he calls purgatory, a place which he has fabled to exist for the purification of sinful souls after their departure from this world. His wonderful exploits, in being able to induce men possessed of reasonable faculties to believe his monstrous absurdities, do not end here; he even Maketh fire come down from heaven—in the sight of man.] Fire in scripture, when it signifies wrath, represents that species of indignation which is attended with the destruction of whatever is the cause of it. Thus the wrath of God is likened to fire, Ps. xviii. 7, 8; Jer. iv. 4. Therefore the fire which the false prophet bringeth down from heaven upon the earth is the fiery indignation which he causes to come down from the heaven or throne of the Latin Empire upon all those of the earth or Latin world who rebel against his authority. All this has been fulfilled in the Romish hierarchy; the Latin clergy have denominated all those that oppose their authority heretics, they have instituted tribunals to try the cause of heresy, and all those that would not submit to their idolatry they have condemned to various kinds of tortures and deaths.

Verse 14. Saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.] The image of the beast must be the supreme ruler of the Latin Empire; and as it is through the influence of the false prophet that this image is made for the first beast, this great chief must be an ecclesiastic.

Verse 15. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.] This image and representative of the beast is the pope. He is properly the idol of the church. He represents in himself the whole power of the beast, and is the head of all authority, temporal as well as spiritual. He is nothing more than a private person, without power and without authority, till the two-horned beast or corrupted clergy, by choosing him pope, give life unto him, and enable him to speak and utter his decrees, and to persecute even to death as many as refuse to submit to him and to worship him. As soon as he is chosen pope he is clothed with the pontifical robes, and crowned and placed upon the altar, and the cardinals come and kiss his feet, which ceremony is called adoration.

Verse 16. And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark] The name of the beast is the Latin Empire; the mark of his name must therefore be his LATIN worship: for the LATIN worship is the universal badge of distinction of the LATIN church, from all other churches on the face of the earth; and is therefore the only infallible MARK by which a genuine papist can be distinguished from the rest of mankind.

In their right hand, or in their foreheads] Right hand in scripture language, when used figuratively, represents the physical power of the person of whom it is spoken; and when applied to God designates a signal manifestation of divine power against his enemies, and in behalf of his people. See Ps. xvii. 7, xx. 6, xxi. 8, xlv. 3, 4, &c. The reception of the mark in the right hand must therefore mean, that all so receiving it devote the whole powers of their mind and body to the propagation of the Latin worship, and to the eradication of all they denominate heresies out of their church. But some receive the mark in their foreheads. By any thing being impressed upon the forehead, is meant the public profession of whatever is inscribed or marked upon it. See chap. ix. 4, xiv. 1, xxii. 4, &c. The mark of the beast being received on the forehead, therefore, means that all so marked make a public profession of the Latin worship; whereby it is evident to all that they form a part of the Latin Church.

Verse 17. And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark] "If any," observes Bishop Newton, "dissent from the stated and authorised forms, they are condemned and excommunicated as heretics; and in consequence of that they are no longer suffered to buy or sell; they are interdicted from traffic and commerce, and all the benefits of civil society."

Verse 18. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and 18 * Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: * for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.

sin.] Before the invention of figures by the Arabs, in the tenth century, letters of the alphabet were used for numbers. The Greeks in the time of Homer, or soon after, are thought by some to have assigned to their letters a numerical value corresponding to their order in the alphabet: thus alpha was 1, because the first letter; and omega 24, being the last.

This method of representing numbers by letters of the alphabet gave rise to a practice among the ancients of representing names also by numbers. Examples of this kind abound in the writings of heathens, Jews, and Christians. When the practice of counting the number in names or phrases began first to be used, cannot be ascertained; it can be shown to have been in existence in the apostolic age. What is intended by 666 here is, that the Greek name of the beast (for it was in this language that the Revelation was communicated to St. John), contains this number.

We have already observed that the beast is the Latin kingdom or empire; therefore, if this observation be correct, the Greek words signifying The Latin kingdom must have this number.

According to the ancient system of computation, the Greek words which signify the Latin Kingdom have this number exactly. No other kingdom on earth can be found to contain 666. This is then the wisdom or demonstration. A beast is the symbol of a kingdom; the beast has been proved, in the preceding part of this chapter, to be the LATIN kingdom; and this, in Greek words, being shown to contain exclusively the number 666, is the demonstration.

But both beasts are called by this name; which, therefore, is the one that is numbered? It is said the number of the beast is the number of a man; consequently, the numbered beast must be a MAN, that is, it must be represented elsewhere in the Revelation under this emblem, for in no other sense can an empire be denominated a man, therefore it is not the ten-horned beast, for this is uniformly styled The Beast in every part of the Apocalypse where there has been occasion to mention this power. It can therefore be no other than the two-horned beast, or Romish hierarchy; which, on account of its preaching to the world its most anti-christian system of doctrines, and calling it Christianity, is likewise named in chap. xvi. 13, xix. 20, and xx. 10, THE FALSE PROPHET.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Lamb on Mount Sion, and his company, and their character, 1-5. The angel flying in the midst of heaven, with the everlasting gospel, 6, 7. Another angel proclaims the fall of Babylon, 8. A third angel denounces God's judgments against those who worship the beast or his image, 9-11. The patience of the saints, and the blessedness of them who die in the Lord, 12, 13. The man on the white cloud, with a sickle, reaping the earth, 14-16. The angel with the sickle commanded by another angel, who had power over fire, to gather the clusters of the vines of the earth, 17, 18. They are gathered and thrown into the great winepress of God's wrath, which is trodden without the city, and the blood comes out 1600 furlongs, 19, 20.

AND I looked, and lo, ^aa Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him ^ban hundred forty and four thousand, ^chaving his Father's name written in their foreheads.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, ^das the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of ^eharpers harping with their harps:

3 And ^fthey sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song ^gbut the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

4 These are they which were not defiled with women; ^hfor they are virgins. These are they ⁱwhich follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These ^jwere ^kredeemed from among men, ^lbeing the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb.

5 And ^min their mouth was found no guile: for ⁿthey are without fault before the throne of God.

6 And I saw another angel ^ofly in the midst of heaven, ^phaving the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, ^qand to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

7 Saying with a loud voice, ^rFear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: ^sand worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

8 And there followed another angel, saying, ^t'Babylon is fallen, is fallen,' that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

9 And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, ^u'If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive ^vhis mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

10 The same ^wshall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is ^xpoured out without mixture into ^ythe cup of his indignation; and ^zhe shall be tormented with ^{aa}fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

11 And ^{bb}the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image,

Verse 1. A Lamb stood on the Mount Sion] This represents Jesus Christ in his sacrificial office; Mount Sion was a type of the Christian Church.

And with him an hundred forty and four thousand] Representing those who were converted to Christianity from among the Jews.

His Father's name written in their foreheads.] They were professedly, openly, and practically, the children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus. Different sects of idolaters have the peculiar mark of their god on their foreheads. This is practised in the East to the present day, and the mark is called the sectarial mark. Between eighty and ninety different figures are found on the foreheads of different Hindoo deities and their followers.

Almost every MS. of importance, as well as most of the Versions and many of the Fathers, read this clause thus: Having his NAME and his Father's name written upon their foreheads. This is undoubtedly the true reading.

Verse 2. The voice of many waters] That is, of multitudes of various nations.

The voice of harpers] Though the sounds were many and apparently confused, yet both harmony and melody were preserved.

Verse 3. No man could learn that song] As none but genuine Christians can worship God acceptably, because they approach him through the only Mediator, so none can understand the deep things of God but such; nor can others know the cause why true believers exult so much in God through Christ, because they know not the communion which such hold with the Father and the Son through the Holy Ghost.

Verse 4. These are they which were not defiled with women] They are pure from idolatry, and are presented as unspotted virgins to their Lord and Saviour Christ. See 2 Cor. xi. 2.

Follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth.] They go through good and through evil report, bear his reproach, and love not their lives even to the death.

The first-fruits unto God] The reference appears to be to those Jews who were the first converts to Christianity.

Verse 5. In their mouth was found no guile] When brought before kings and rulers they did not dissemble, but boldly confessed the Lord Jesus.

Verse 6. Another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel] Whether this angel mean any more than a particular dispensation of providence and grace, by which the gospel shall be rapidly sent throughout the whole world; or whether it mean any special messenger, order of preachers, people, or society of Christians, whose professed object it is to send the gospel of the kingdom throughout the earth, we know not.

Verse 7. Fear God, and give glory to him] This is the general language of the writings. Worship the true God, the creator and governor of all things; and give him glory, for to him alone, not to idols or men, all glory and honour belong.

Verse 8. Babylon is fallen, is fallen] This is generally understood to be a prediction concerning Rome; and it is certain that Rome, in the rabbinical writings, is termed Babylon. But which Rome is meant? Pagan or Papal Rome? Some parts of the description apply best to the former.

The wine of the wrath of her fornication] There is an allusion here to a custom of impure women, who give philtres or love potions to those whom they wish to seduce and blind to their will; and these potions are generally of an intoxicating nature, greatly inflaming the blood, and disturbing the intellect.

Verse 9. And the third angel followed] Bishop Bale considers these three angels as three descriptions of preachers, who should bear their testimony against the corruptions of the Papal Church.

The beast and his image] See the notes on chap. xiii. Mark in his forehead] Such as the sectarial marks of the idolatrous Hindoos, as has been observed before.

Verse 10. The wine of the wrath of God] As they have drunk the intoxicating wine of idolatry or spiritual fornication they shall now drink the wine of God's wrath, which is poured out into the cup of his indignation. This is an allusion to the poisoned cup, which certain criminals were obliged to drink, on which ensued speedy death. See on Heb. ii. 9.

Shall be tormented with fire and brimstone] An allusion to the punishment of Sodom and Gomorrhah for their unnatural crimes.

Presence of the holy angels, and—of the Lamb] These being the instruments employed in their destruction; the Lamb—the Lord Jesus Christ acting as judge.

Verse 11. The smoke of their torment] Still an allusion to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrhah.

Verse 12. Here is the patience of the saints] Here the faith of the true Christians shall be proved; they will follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, they keep the commandments of God, and are steadfast in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Sometimes patience or perseverance, is taken for the reward of these virtues; the text therefore may be thus understood: Here is the reward of the perseverance of the and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

12 * Here is the patience of the saints: ^b here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, ^c Blessed are the dead ^d which die in the Lord ^e from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, ^f that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them.

14 And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat ^g like unto the Son of man, ^h having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.

15 And another angel ⁱ came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, ^j Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest ^k of the earth is ^l ripe.

true Christians; for although they die for the testimony of Jesus, yet they shall be unutterably blessed.

Verse 13. I heard a voice from heaven] As the information now to be given was of the utmost importance, it is solemnly communicated by a voice from heaven; and the apostle is commanded to write or record what is said.

Blessed are the dead] Happy are they. They are happy in two respects: 1. They do not see the evil that shall come upon the world, and are exempted from any further sufferings. 2. They actually and conscientiously enjoy happiness in a state of blessedness.

Which die in the Lord] These are the only glorious dead. They die, not in the field of battle, in either what are called lawful or unlawful wars against their fellow-men; but they die in the cause of God, they die under the smile and approbation of God, and they die to live and reign with God for ever and ever.

From henceforth] From this time; now; immediately. This word is joined to the following by many MSS. and some Versions. It was a maxim among the Jews, that as soon as the souls of the just departed from this life, they ascended immediately to heaven.

Yea, saith the Spirit] The Holy Spirit confirms the declaration from heaven, and assigns the reasons of it.

That they may rest from their labours] Have no more tribulation and distress.

And their works do follow them.] And their works follow with them. They are in company. Here is an elegant propoëia or personification; their good works, sufferings, &c., are represented as so many companions escorting them on their way to the kingdom of God.

16 And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

17 And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, ^m which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, ⁿ Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

19 And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into ^o the great wine-press of the wrath of God.

20 And ^p the wine-press was trodden ^q without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, ^r even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

Verse 14. A white cloud] It is supposed that, from this verse to the end of the chapter, the destruction of Rome is represented under the symbols of harvest and vintage; images very frequent among the ancient prophets, by which they represented the destruction and excision of nations.

A golden crown] In token of victory and regal power.

Verse 15. Thrust in thy sickle] Execute the judgments which God has decreed.

For the harvest of the earth is ripe.] The cup of the people's iniquity is full.

Verse 16. The earth was reaped.] The judgments were executed. But where, or on whom, who can tell?

Verse 18. Power over fire] Probably meaning the same angel which is mentioned, chap. viii. 3, ix. 13, who stood by the altar of burnt offering, having authority over its fire to offer that incense to God which represents the prayers of the saints.

Verse 19. The great wine-press of the wrath of God.] The place or kingdom where God executes his judgments on the workers of iniquity, whether Pagans or persecuting Christians; Pagan Rome or Papal Rome.

Verse 20. Even unto the horse bridles] A hyperbolic expression to denote a great effusion of blood.

The space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.] It is said that the state of the church, or St. Peter's patrimony, extends from Rome to the Po, two hundred Italian miles, which make exactly one thousand six hundred furlongs! If this be really so, the coincidence is certainly surprising, and worthy of deep regard.

CHAPTER XV.

The seven angels with the seven last plagues, 1. The sea of glass, and those who had a victory over the beast, 2. The song of Moses and the Lamb, 3-4. The temple in heaven opened, 5. Seven angels come out of the temple, who receive from one of the four living creatures seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, 6-8.

AND 'I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, ⁶ seven angels having the seven last plagues: ^c for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

2 And I saw as it were ^d a sea of glass ^e mingled with fire; and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, ^f and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, ^g having the harps of God.

3 And they sing ^h the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, 'Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; ⁱ just and true are thy ways, thou King of ^k saints.

Verse 1. Seven angels having the seven last plagues] Under the emblems of harvest and vintage God's judgments on the enemies of his church have already been pointed out; but these are farther signified by the seven vials, which are called the seven last plagues of God. The seven last plagues appear to fall under the seventh and last trumpet. As the seventh seal contained the seven trumpets, so the seventh trumpet contains the seven vials. And as seven angels sounded the seven trumpets, so seven angels are appointed to pour out the seven vials, angels being always the ministers of Providence. This chapter contains the opening vision which is preparatory to the pouring out of the vials.

Verse 2. A sea of glass] A spacious lucid plain around the throne, from which fiery coruscations were continually emitted, or the reflection of the light upon this lucid plain produced the prismatic colours of the most vivid rainbow.

Verse 3. They sing the song of Moses] That which Moses sang, Exod. xv. 1, when he and the Israelites, by the miraculous power of God, had got safely through the Red Sea, and saw their enemies all destroyed.

And the song of the Lamb] The same song adapted to the state of the suffering, but now delivered Christians.

Great and marvellous are thy works] God's works are descriptive of his infinite power and wisdom.

shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest.

5 And after that I looked, and, behold, ⁿ the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened:

6 ^o And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, ^p clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.

7 ^q And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, ^r who liveth for ever and ever.

8 And ^s the temple was filled with smoke ^t from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

Lord God Almighty] Nearly the same as Jehovah, God of hosts.

Just and true are thy ways] Every step God takes in grace or providence is according to justice, and he carefully accomplishes all his threatenings and all his promises; to this he is bound by his truth.

Verse 4. Who shall not fear thee] That is, All should fear and worship this true God, because he is just, and true, and holy; and his saints should love and obey him, because he is their king; and they and all men should acknowledge his judgments, because they are made manifest.

Verse 5. The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony] The temple which succeeded the tabernacle, in which was the testimony, viz. the two tables, Aaron's rod, pot of manna, holy anointing oil, &c. All bearing testimony to the truth of God, and his miraculous interposition in their behalf.

Verse 6. The seven angels came out of the temple] To show that they were sent from God himself.

Clothed in pure and white linen] Habited as priests.

Verse 8. The temple was filled with smoke] So was the tabernacle when consecrated by Moses, Exod. xl. 34, 35, and the temple when consecrated by Solomon, 1 Kings viii. 10, 11; 2 Chron. v. 14. See Isa. vi. 4.

CHAPTER XVI.

The angels are commanded to pour out their vials upon the earth, 1. The first pours out his vial on the earth, by which a grievous sore is produced, 2. The second angel pours out his vial on the sea, and it is turned into blood, 3. The third angel pours out his vial on the rivers and fountains, and they are turned also into blood, 4-7. The fourth angel pours out his vial on the sun, and men are scorched with fire, 8, 9. The fifth angel pours out his vial on the throne of the beast, 10, 11. The sixth angel pours out his vial on the river Euphrates, 12. Three unclean spirits come out of the mouth of the beast, dragon, and false prophet; and go forth to gather all the kings of the world to battle, in the place called Armageddon, 13-16. The seventh angel pours out his vial on the air, on which followed thunders, lightnings, earthquakes, and extraordinary hail, 17-21.

AND I heard a great voice out of the temple saying "to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

2 And the first went and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.

3 And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.

4 And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

5 And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus.

6 For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments.

8 And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire.

9 And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory.

Verse 1. Go your ways, and pour out] These ministers of the divine justice were ready to execute vengeance upon transgressors, having full power; but could do nothing in this way till they received especial commission.

Verse 2. A noisome and grievous sore] This is a reference to the sixth Egyptian plague, boils and blains, Exod. ix. 8, &c.

Verse 3. As the blood of a dead man] Either meaning blood in a state of putrescence, or an effusion of blood in naval conflicts; even the sea was tinged with the blood of those who were slain in these wars. This is most probably the meaning of this vial.

Verse 4. Upon the rivers and fountains of waters] This is an allusion to the first Egyptian plague, Exod. vii. 20; and to those plagues in general there are allusions throughout this chapter.

Verse 5. The angel of the waters] The rabbins attribute authority, not only to the four elements so called, but to almost everything besides.

Verse 6. Thou hast given them blood to drink] They thirsted after blood, and massacred the saints of God; and now they have got blood to drink!

Verse 10. Full of darkness] Confusion, dismay, and distress.

Verse 11. Blasphemed the God of heaven] Neither did they repent; therefore other judgments must follow. Some think that the sun was Vitellius, the Roman Emperor, and that his throne means Rome; and the darkening refers to the injuries she sustained in her political consequence by the civil wars which then took place, from which she never entirely recovered. Others apply it all to Papal Rome, and in this respect make out a very clear case!

Verse 12. Upon the great river Euphrates] Probably meaning the people in the vicinity of this river; though some think that the Tiber is intended.

The water thereof was dried up] The people discomfited and all impediments removed.

The kings of the east] There seems to be an allusion here to the ruin of Babylon by Cyrus, predicted by the prophet Jeremiah, chap. i. and li. But what city or people is 10 And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain, 11 And blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

12 And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

13 And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.

14 For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

15 Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

16 And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

17 And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, it is done.

18 And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.

Verse 13. Three unclean spirits] Perhaps false teachers, called afterwards spirits of devils, which persuade the kings of the earth, by lying miracles, to come forth to the place of general slaughter, ver. 14, 16.

Some good critics apply this to Vespasian and his pretended miracles.

Verse 15. Behold, I come as a thief] Here is a sudden but timely warning to put every man on his guard, when this sudden and generally unexpected tribulation should take place.

Keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked] Here is a plain allusion to the office of him who was called the prefect or overseer of the mountain of the temple. His custom was to go his rounds during the watches of the night; and if he found any of the Levites sleeping on his watch, he had authority to beat him with a stick and burn his vestments.

Verse 16. Armageddon] The original of this word has been variously formed, and variously translated. It is harmegiddon, "the mount of the assembly;" or cormah gedehon, "the destruction of their army;" or it is har-megiddo, "Mount Megiddo," the valley of which was remarkable for two great slaughters: one of the Israelites, 2 Kings xxiii. 29, the other of the Canaanites, Judg. iv. 16, v. 19. But Mount Megiddo, that is Carmel, is the place, according to some, where these armies should be collected.

But what is the Battle of Armageddon? How ridiculous have been the conjectures of men relative to this point! Within the last twenty years this battle has been fought at various places, according to our purblind seers and self-inspired prophets! At one time it was Austerlitz, at another Moscow, at another Leipsic, at another Waterloo! And thus they have gone on, and will go on, confounding and being confounded.

CHAPTER XVII.

The judgment of the great whore, which sits on many waters, 1, 2. Her description, name, and conduct, 3-6. The angel explains the mystery of the woman, of the beast, &c., 7-18.

AND there came ^a one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither, ^b I will shew unto thee the judgment of ^c the great whore ^d that sitteth upon many waters:

The same author who has written so largely on the twelfth and thirteenth chapters, has also obliged me with his interpretation of this chapter. Not pretending to explain these things myself, I insert this as the most elaborate and learned exposition I have yet seen, leaving my readers at perfect liberty to reject it, and adopt any other mode of interpretation which they please. [These notes by J. E. Clarke are considerably abridged.]

Verse 1. I will shew unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters] That idolatrous worship is frequently represented in scripture under the character of a whore or whoredom, is evident from numerous passages. See 1 Chron. v. 25; Ezek. xvi., xxiii., &c. The woman mentioned here is called a great whore, to denote her excessive depravity, and the awful nature of her idolatry. She is also represented as sitting upon many waters, to show the vast extent of her influence. See on ver. 13.

Verse 2. With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication] What an awful picture this is of the state of the religion of the world in subjection to this whore!

Verse 3. So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness] This wilderness into which the apostle was carried is the desolate state of the true Church of Christ, in one of the wings of the once mighty Roman Empire.

A woman sit upon a scarlet-coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.] This is a representation of the Latin Church in her highest state of antichristian prosperity, for she sits upon the scarlet-coloured beast, a striking emblem of her complete domination over the secular Latin Empire. The beast is full of names of blasphemy; and it is well known that the nations, in support of the Latin or Romish Church, have abounded in blasphemous appellations, and have not blushed to attribute to themselves and to their church the most sacred titles, not only blaspheming by the improper use of sacred names, but even by applying to its bishop those names which alone belong to God.

Verse 4. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour] This strikingly represents the most pompous and costly manner in which the Latin Church has held and ^a shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and ^b go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth ^c shall wonder, ^d whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they beheld the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.

forth to the nations the rites and ceremonies of its idolatrous and corrupt worship.

Verse 5. And upon her forehead was a name written] This inscription being written upon her forehead is intended to show that she is not ashamed of her doctrines, but publicly professes and glories in them before the nations; she has indeed a whore's forehead, and has refused to be ashamed. The inscription upon her forehead is exactly the portraiture of the Latin Church.

Verse 6. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints] How exactly the cruelties exercised by the Latin Church against all it has denominated heretics correspond with this description, the reader need not be informed.

Verse 8. The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition] The beast is the Latin kingdom; consequently the beast was, that is, was in existence previously to the time of St. John (for Latinus was the first king of the Latins, and Numitor the last); is not now, because the Latin nation has ceased long ago to be an independent power, and is now under the dominion of the Romans; but shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, that is, the Latin kingdom, the antichristian power, or that which ascendeth out of the abyss or bottomless pit is yet in futurity.

And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they beheld the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.] By the earth is here meant the Latin world; therefore the meaning is, that all who dwell in the Latin world shall adhere to the idolatrous and blasphemous religion of the Latin Church, which is supported by the Latin Empire, except those who abide by the sacred scriptures, receiving them as the only rule of faith and practice. These believe in the true Sacrifice, and keep themselves unspotted from the corruption that is in the world. But the inhabitants of the Latin world, under the dominion of the Romish religion, shall wonder when they behold the beast, or Latin Empire; that is, as Lord Napier remarks, "shall have in great admiration, reverence, and estimation, this great monarchie."

Verse 9. Here is the mind which hath wisdom.] It was said before, chap. xiii. 18, Here is wisdom, Let him that hath a MIND, or understanding, count the number of the beast. Wisdom, therefore, here means a correct view of what is intended by the number 666; consequently the parallel passage, Here is the MIND which hath wisdom, is a declaration that the number of the beast must first be understood, before the angel's interpretation of the vision concerning the whore and the beast can admit of a satisfactory explanation.

The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.] This verse has been almost universally considered to allude to the seven hills upon which Rome originally stood. But it has been objected that modern Rome is not thus situated, and that, consequently, pagan Rome is intended in the prophecy. This is certainly a very formidable objection against the generally received opinion among protestants, that papal Rome is the city meant by the woman sitting upon seven mountains. In order to understand this scripture aright, the word mountains must be taken in a figurative, and not a literal sense, as in chap. vi. 14, and xvi. 20. See also Isa. ii. 2, 14; Jer. li. 25; Dan. ii. 35, &c.; in which it is unequivocally the emblem of great and mighty power. The mountains upon which the woman sitteth must be, therefore, seven great powers; and as the mountains are heads of the beast, they must be the seven GREATEST eminences of the Latin world. As no other power was acknowledged at the head of the Latin Empire but that of Germany, how can it be said that the beast has seven heads? This and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.

11 And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the ^a seven, ^b and goeth into perdition.

12 And ^c the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.

13 These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

14 ^d These shall make war with the Lamb, and

^a Ver. 10. — ^b Ver. 8. — ^c Dan. vii. 20. Zech. i. 18, 19, 21. Ch. xiii. 1. — ^d Ch. xvi. 14. ix. 19.

question can only be solved by the feudal constitution of the late Germanic league. The reference can be to no other than the SEVEN ELECTORATES of the German Empire. These were, indeed, mountains of vast eminence; for in their sovereigns was vested the sole power of electing the head of the empire. The woman sits upon the seven mountains, or the German Empire in its elective aristocratical state; she is said to sit upon them, to denote that she has the whole German Empire under her direction and authority, and also that it is her chief support and strength.

Verse 10. And there are seven kings] They are also seven kings. Before it was said, they are seven mountains; here, they are also seven kings, which is a demonstration that kingdoms are not here meant by mountains; and this is a farther argument that the seven electorates are represented by seven mountains, for though the sovereigns of these states ranked with kings, they were not kings; that is to say, they were not absolute and sole lords of the territories they possessed, independently of the emperor, for their states formed a part of the Germanic body. But the seven heads of the beast are also seven kings, that is to say, the Latin Empire has had seven supreme forms of government; for king is used in the prophetic writings for any supreme governor of a state or people, as is evident from Deut. xxxiii. 5, where Moses is called a king. Of these seven kings, or supreme forms of Latin government, the angel informs St. John—

Five are fallen, and one is] Before the subjugation of the Latins by the Romans, four of the Roman or draconic forms of government had fallen, the regal power, the dictatorship, the decemvirate, and the consular power of the military tribunes, the last of which was abolished about 366 years before the commencement of the Christian era; none of these, therefore, ruled over the WHOLE Latin nation. But as the Latins were finally subdued about 336 B.C. the consular government of the Romans, which was then the supreme power in the state, must be the fourth head of the beast. This form of government continued, with very little interruption, till the rising up of the triumvirate, the fifth head of the beast, B.C. 43. The sixth head of the beast, or that which existed in the time of St. John, was consequently, as we have already proved, the imperial power of the heathen Cæsars, or the seventh draconic form of government.

And the other is not yet come] Bishop Newton considers the Roman duchy, under the eastern emperor's lieutenant, the exarch of Ravenna, the seventh head of the beast. But this cannot be the form of government signified by the seventh head, for a head of the beast, as we have already shown, is a supreme independent form of Latin government; consequently, the Roman duchy cannot be the seventh head, as it was dependent upon the exarchate of Ravenna; and the exarchate cannot be the head, as it was itself in subjection to the Greek Empire. The Rev. G. Faber has ascertained the truth exactly in denominating the Carlovingian patriate the seventh head of the beast. That this was a supreme, independent form of government, is evident from history. The seven heads of the beast are therefore the following: The regal power, the dictatorship, the power of the prators, the consulate, the triumvirate, the imperial power, and the patriate.

And when he cometh, he must continue a short space.] The seventh form of government was only to remain a short time, which was actually the case; for, from its first rise to independent power to its utter extinction, there passed only about forty-five years, a short time in comparison to the duration of several of the preceding forms of government; for the primitive regal government continued at least four hundred and twenty-eight years, the dictatorship was in power about eighty-eight years, the power of the prætors was in being for upwards of three hundred years, the consulate lasted about two hundred and eighty years, and the imperial power continued upwards of five hundred years.

Verse 11. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition. That is to say, the Latin kingdom that has already been, but is now no longer nominally in existence, shall immediately follow the dissolution of the seventh form of Latin government; and this dominion is called an eighth, because it succeeds to the seventh. Yet it is not an eighth head of the beast, because the beast has only seven heads; for to constitute a new head of the beast, the form of government must not only differ in nature, but also in name. This head of the beast is, therefore, ONE of the seven. Consequently the form of government represented by this head is the restoration of one of the preceding seven. The restored head can be therefore no other than the regal state of the Latins, or in other words the Latin kingdom which followed the patriarchate or seventh head of Latin government. But the beast in his eighth state, or under his first head restored, goeth into perdition. No other form of Latin government shall succeed; but the beast in his last or antichristian condition shall be taken, together with the false prophet that wrought miracles in his sight, "and cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

Verse 12. And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings. Though the Latin Empire be now in existence, the ten horns refer to ten Latin kingdoms yet in futurity, and consequently they have received no dominion as YET; for that part of the Latin domination now in power is the sixth head, or imperial government of the heathen Cæsars. But the ten states of the Latins receive dominion as monarchies one time (as it may be properly translated), i.e., at the same time with the beast, or that which ascendeth out of the bottomless pit; consequently, the Latin Empire here intended is the one which was in futurity in the apostolic age.

Verse 13. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. That is to say, this Empire is to be composed of the dominions of ten monarchs independent of each other in every other sense except in their implicit obedience to the Latin Church. The beast in this and the preceding verse is distinguished from its horns, as the WHOLE Latin Empire is distinguished in history from its constituent powers.

Verse 14. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them. The ten powers of the beast must compose the secular kingdom of antichrist, for they make war with the Lamb, who is Christ Jesus. This is perfectly true of all popish states, for they have constantly opposed, as long as they have had any secular power, the progress of pure Christianity. They make war with the Lamb by persecuting his followers; but the Lamb shall overcome them, for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings—all lords have their authority from him, and no king can reign without him; therefore the ten Latin kings are God's ministers to execute his vengeance upon the idolatrous nations. But when these antichristian monarchies have executed the divine purpose, those that are with the Lamb—the called, the chosen, and the faithful, those who have kept THE TRUTH in the love of it shall prevail against all their adversaries, because their battles are fought by the Lamb, who is their God and Deliverer.

Verse 15. And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. "So many words," Bishop Newton observes, "in the plural number, fitly denote the great extensiveness of her power and jurisdiction. She herself glories in the title of the Catholic Church, and exalts in the number of her votaries as a certain proof of the true religion."

make her desolate 'and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and ^e burn her with fire.

17 ^b For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, ^c until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

18 And the woman which thou sawest ^d is that great city, ^e which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

xvi. 12.—^f Ezek. xvi. 37-44. Ch. xviii. 16.—^g Ch. xviii. 8.—^h 2 Thess. ii. 11.—ⁱ Ch. x. 7.—^j Ch. xvi. 19.—^k Ch. xii. 4.

Verse 16. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, &c. Here is a clue to lead us to the right interpretation of the horns of the beast. It is said the TEN horns shall hate the whore; by which is evidently meant, when connected with what follows, that the whole of the ten kingdoms in the interest of the Latin Church shall finally despise her doctrines, be reformed from Popery, assist in depriving her of all influence and in exposing her follies, and in the end consign her to utter destruction. From this it follows that no Roman Catholic power which did not exist so late as the Reformation can be numbered among the horns of the beast; the horns must, therefore, be found among the great states of Europe at the commencement of the Reformation. These were exactly ten, viz.: France, Spain, England, Scotland, The Empire, Sweden, Denmark, Poland, Hungary, and Portugal. In these were comprehended most of the minor states not styled monarchies, and which, from their first rise to the period of the Reformation, had been subdued by one or more of the ten grand Roman Catholic powers already named. Consequently, these ten constituted the power and strength of the beast; and each minor state is considered a part of that monarchy under the authority of which it was finally reduced previously to the Reformation.

Verse 17. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled. It is said of the kings in communion with the Church of Rome, that God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will. How is this divine will accomplished? In the most awful and afflictive manner! In causing ten Latin kings to unite their dominions into one mighty empire for the defence of the Latin Church. Here is a dreadful dispensation of Jehovah; but it is such as the nations have most righteously deserved, because when they had the truth they lived not according to its most holy requisitions, but loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. But this deplorable state of the world is not perpetual, it can only continue till every word of God is fulfilled upon his enemies; and when this time arrives (which will be that of Christ's second advent), then shall the Son of God slay that wicked "with the spirit of his mouth, and shall consume him with the brightness of HIS COMING."

Verse 18. And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth. It has already been shown that the woman sitting upon the seven-headed beast is a representation of the Latin Church; here we have the greatest assurance that it is so, because the woman is called a city, which is a much plainer emblem of a church, as the word is used unequivocally in this sense in so many parts of scripture that we cannot well mistake its meaning. See chap. iii. 12, xi. 2, xxi. 10, xxii. 19; and also Ps. xlvii. 4, lxxxviii. 3; Heb. xii. 22, &c. The woman therefore must be the Latin Church; and as the apostle saw her sitting upon the beast, this must signify that she hath A KINGDOM over the kings of the earth, i.e., over the kings of the Latin world, for that this is the meaning of earth has been shown before in numerous instances. That KINGDOM which the woman has over the kings of the Latin world, or secular Latin Empire, or in other words THE KINGDOM of the Latin Church, is the numbered Latin kingdom or Romish hierarchy. See on chap. xiii. 18 The woman is also called a GREAT city, to denote the very great extent of her jurisdiction; for she has comprehended within her walls the subjects of the mighty dominations of France, Spain, England, Scotland, The Empire, Sweden, Denmark, Poland, Hungary, and Portugal. What an extensive city was this! Surely such as to justify the prophetic denomination, that GREAT city.

8 Therefore shall her plagues come ^q in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and ^r she shall be utterly burned with fire; ^s for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

9 And ^t the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, ^u shall bewail her, and lament for her, ^v when they shall see the smoke of her burning,

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, ^w Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! ^x for in one hour is thy judgment come.

11 ^y And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more:

not been thus treated; but this is true of Jerusalem, and yet Jerusalem is not generally thought to be intended.

Verse 9. The kings of the earth] Those who copied her superstitious and adopted her idolatries.

Verse 10. Standing afar off] Beholding her desolations with wonder and astonishment, utterly unable to afford her any kind of assistance.

Verse 11. The merchants of the earth] These are represented as mourning over her, because their traffic with her was at an end.

Verse 12. Thyine wood] The Thyne or Thyin is said to be a tree whose boughs, leaves, stalks, and fruit resemble the cypress. How much the different articles mentioned in the 12th and 13th verses were in request among the ancients, and how highly valued, every scholar knows.

Verse 13. And cinnamon] Several of the most reputable MSS., Versions, and some of the Fathers, after cinnamon, add and animum. What this shrub was it is not easy to say, though mentioned, and partially described by Pliny and Dioscorides. Some think it was a species of geranium; others, the rose of Jericho. It was an odoriferous plant, supposed to be a native of Assyria.

Slaves] The bodies of men; probably distinguished here from souls of men, to express bondmen and freemen.

Verse 14. Delicious and goodly] Delicacies for the table. What is splendid and costly in apparel.

Verse 16. Clothed in fine linen, and purple, &c.] The verb which we here translate clothed, signifies often to abound, be enriched, laden with, and is so used by the Greek writers. These articles are not to be considered here as personal ornaments, but as articles of trade or merchandise, in which this city trafficked.

Verse 17. Every shipmaster] Captains of vessels; some think pilots are meant, and this is most likely to be the meaning of the original word. This description appears to be at least partly taken from Ezek. xxvii. 26-28.

And all the company in ships] The crowd or passengers precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all ^athyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, 13 And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and ^bslaves, and ^csouls of men.

14 And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.

15 ^aThe merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing,

16 And saying, Alas, alas, that great city, ^athat was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!

17 ^aFor in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And ^aevery shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off, 18 ^aAnd cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, ^aWhat city is like unto this great city!

aboard. But the best MSS. and Versions have those who sail from place to place, or such as stop at particular places on the coast, without performing the whole voyage. This sufficiently marks the traffic on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea. Some might debark (in sailing from Rome) at the island of Sicily, others at different ports in Greece; some at Corinth, others at Crete, or the various islands of the Ægean Sea; some at Rhodes, Pamphylia, &c. &c.; as in those times, in which the compass was unknown, every voyage was performed coastwise, always keeping, if possible, within sight of land.

Verse 18. What city is like unto this great city! Viz., in magnitude, power, and luxury.

Verse 19. They cast dust on their heads They showed every sign of the sincerest grief.

Verse 20. Rejoice over her, thou heaven This is grand and sublime; the fall of this bad city was cause of grief to bad men. But as this city was a persecutor of the godly, and an enemy to the works of God, angels, apostles, and prophets are called to rejoice over her fall.

Verse 21. Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down This action is finely and forcibly expressed by the original words. The millstone will, in falling, have not only an accelerated force from the law of gravitation, but that force will be greatly increased by the projectile force impressed upon it by the power of the destroying angel.

Shall be found no more at all. In her government, consequence, or influence. This is true of ancient Babylon;

19 And ^athey cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! ^afor in one hour is she made desolate.

20 ^aRejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for ^aGod hath avenged you on her.

21 And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, ^aThus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and ^ashall be found no more at all.

22 ^aAnd the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee;

23 ^aAnd the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; ^aand the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for ^athy merchants were the great men of the earth; ^afor by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.

24 And ^ain her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that ^awere slain upon the earth.

we are not certain even of the place where it stood. It is also true of Jerusalem; her government, consequence, and influence are gone. It is not true of Rome Pagan; nor, as yet, of Rome Papal; the latter still exists, and the former is most intimately blended with it, for in her religious service Rome Papal has retained her language, and many of her heathen temples she has dedicated to saints, real or reputed, and incorporated many of her superstitions and absurdities in a professedly Christian service. It is true also that many idols are now restored under the names of Christian saints!

Verse 22. The voice of harpers, &c. This seems to indicate not only a total destruction of influence, &c., but also of being. It seems as if this city was to be swallowed up by an earthquake, or burnt up by fire from heaven.

Verse 23. By thy sorceries Political arts, state tricks, counterfeit miracles, and deceptive manoeuvres of every kind. This may be spoken of many great cities of the world which still continue to flourish!

Verse 24. In her was found the blood of prophets, &c. She was the persecutor and murderer of prophets and of righteous men.

And of all that were slain upon the earth. This refers to her counsels and influence, exciting other nations and people to persecute and destroy the real followers of God. There is no city to which all these things are yet applicable, therefore we may presume that the prophecy remains yet to be fulfilled.

CHAPTER XIX.

The whole heavenly host give glory to God, because he has judged the great whore, and avenged the blood of his saints, 1-6. The marriage of the Lamb and his bride, 7-9. John offers to worship the angel, but is prevented, 10. Heaven is opened, and Jesus, the Word of God, appears on a white horse; He and his armies described, 11-16. An angel in the sun invites all the fowls of heaven to come to the supper of the great God, 17, 18. The beast, the false prophet, and the kings of the earth gather together to make war with him who sits on the white horse; but they are all discomfited and utterly destroyed, 19-21.

AND after these things ^a I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; ^b Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

2 For ^c true and righteous are his judgments; for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and ^d hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.

3 And again they said, Alleluia. And ^e her smoke rose up for ever and ever.

4 And ^f the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, ^g Amen; Alleluia.

5 And a voice came out of the throne, saying, ^h Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, ⁱ both small and great.

6 ^j And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for ^k the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

7 Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for ^l the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

8 And ^m to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and ⁿ white: ^o for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

9 And he saith unto me, Write, ^p Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, ^q These are the true sayings of God.

10 And ^r I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, ^s See thou do it not: I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren ^t that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

11 ^u And I saw heaven opened, and behold ^v a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called ^w Faithful and True, and ^x in righteousness he doth judge and make war.

12 ^y His eyes were as a flame of fire, ^z and on his head were many crowns; ^{aa} and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself.

Verse 10. I fell at his feet to worship him.] Great as this angel was, St. John could not mistake him either for Jesus Christ, or for God the Father; nor was his prostration intended as an act of religious worship. It was merely an act of that sort of reverence which any Asiatic would pay to a superior. His mistake was, the considering that he was under obligation to the angel for the information which he had now received. This mistake the angel very properly corrects, showing him that it was from God alone this intelligence came, and that to him alone the praise was due.

I am thy fellow-servant.] No higher in dignity than thyself; employed by the same God, on the same errand, and with the same testimony; and therefore not entitled to thy prostration: worship God—prostrate thyself to him, and to him give thanks.

The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.] As this is a reason given by the angel why he should not worship him, the meaning must be this: I, who have received this spirit of prophecy, am not superior to thee who hast received the testimony of Christ, to preach him among the Gentiles; for the commission containing such a testimony is equal to the gift of the spirit of prophecy. Or, the spirit of prophecy is a general testimony concerning Jesus, for he is the scope and design of the whole scripture; to him gave all the prophets witness. Take Jesus, his grace, Spirit, and religion out of the Bible, and it has neither scope, design, object, nor end.

Verse 11. A white horse.] This is an exhibition of the triumph of Christ after the destruction of his enemies. The white horse is the emblem of this, and FAITHFUL and TRUE are characters of Christ.

In righteousness he doth judge and make war.] The wars which he wages are from no principle of ambition, lust of power, or extension of conquest and dominion; they are righteous in their principle and in their object. And this is perhaps what no earthly potentate could ever say.

Verse 12. His eyes were as a flame of fire.] To denote the piercing and all-penetrating nature of his wisdom.

On his head were many crowns.] To denote the multitude of his conquests, and the extent of his dominion.

A name written, that no man knew.] This is a reference to what the rabbins call the shem hammephorash or tetra-

Verse 1. I heard a great voice of much people in heaven.] The idolatrous city being destroyed, and the blood of the martyred saints being avenged, there is a universal joy among the redeemed of the Lord, which they commence with the word Hallelu-Yah, praise ye Jah or Jehovah; which the Septuagint, and St. John from them, put into Greek letters Salvation. He is the sole author of deliverance from sin; the glory of this belongs to him, the honour should be ascribed to him, and his power is that alone by which it is effected.

Verse 2. For true and righteous.] His judgments displayed in supporting his followers, and punishing his enemies, are true—according to his predictions; and righteous, being all according to infinite justice and equity.

Verse 3. Her smoke rose up.] There was, and shall be, a continual evidence of God's judgments executed on this great whore or idolatrous city; nor shall it ever be restored.

Verse 4. The four and twenty elders.] The true Church of the Lord Jesus converted from among the Jews.

Verse 5. Praise our God, &c.] Let all, whether redeemed from among Jews or Gentiles, give glory to God.

Verse 6. The voice of a great multitude.] This is the Catholic or Universal Church of God, gathered from among the Gentiles.

The Lord God omnipotent reigneth.] Many excellent MSS., most of the Versions, with two most ancient commentators on this book, add our; and according to this the text reads emphatically thus: OUR Lord God, the Almighty, reigneth. What consolation to every genuine Christian that HIS Lord and God is the Almighty, and that this Almighty never trusts the reins of the government of the universe out of his hands! What therefore has his Church to fear?

Verse 7. The marriage of the Lamb is come.] The meaning of these figurative expressions appears to be this: After this overthrow of idolatry and superstition, and the discomfiture of Antichrist, there will be a more glorious state of Christianity than ever was before.

Verse 8. Arrayed in fine linen.] A prediction that the Church should become more pure in her doctrines, more pious in her experience, and more righteous in her conduct, than she had ever been from her formation.

The fine linen here spoken of is not the righteousness of Christ imputed to believers, for it is here called the righteousness of the saints—that which the grace and Spirit of Christ has wrought in them.

Verse 9. Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper.] This is an evident allusion to the marriage that with it he should smite the nations : and ^a he shall rule them with a rod of iron : and ^b he treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

16 And ^c he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, ^d KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

17 And I saw an angel standing in the sun ; and he cried with a loud voice, saying ^e to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, ^f Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God :

grammaton, YHWH ; or what we call Jehovah. This name the Jews never attempt to pronounce ; when they meet with it in the Bible, they read Adonai for it ; but, to a man, they all declare that no man can pronounce it ; and that the true pronunciation has been lost, at least since the Babylonish captivity, and that God alone knows its true interpretation and pronunciation. This, therefore, is the name which no man knew but he himself.

Verse 13. He was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood] To show that he was just come from recent slaughter.

The Word of God.] See the notes on John i. 1, &c.

Verse 14. The armies which were in heaven] Angels and saints over whom Jesus Christ is Captain.

Clothed in fine linen] All holy, pure, and righteous.

Verse 15. Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword] See on chap. i. 16. This appears to mean the word of the gospel by which his enemies are confounded, and his friends supported and comforted.

With a rod of iron] He shall execute the severest judgment on the opposers of his truth.

He treadeth the wine-press] As the grapes are trodden to express the juice, so his enemies shall be bruised and beaten so that their life's blood shall be poured out.

Verse 16. On his vesture and on his thigh a name written] As inscriptions on the thigh, the garments, and different parts of the body were in use among different nations to express and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

19 ^h And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.

20 ⁱ And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and ^j them that worshipped his image. ^k These both were cast alive into a lake of fire ^l burning with brimstone.

21 And the remnant ^m were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth : ⁿ and all the fowls ^o were filled with their flesh.

character, conduct, qualities, and conquests, we may rest assured that to them St. John alludes when he represents our Sovereign Lord with an inscription upon his vesture and upon his thigh ; had we not found it a custom among other nations, we should have been at a loss to account for its introduction and meaning here.

Verse 17. An angel standing in the sun] Exceedingly luminous ; every part of him emitting rays of light.

All the fowls that fly] The carcasses of God's enemies shall be food for all the fowls of heaven.

Verse 18. That ye may eat the flesh of kings] There shall be a universal destruction ; the kings, generals, captains, and all their host, shall be slain.

Verse 19. I saw the beast] See the notes on chapters xii., xiii., and xvii.

Verse 20. And the beast was taken, and—the false prophet] See the notes on chap. xvii. 8, &c.

That worshipped his image.] The beast has been represented as the Latin Empire ; the image of the beast, the Popes of Rome ; and the false prophet, the Papal Clergy.

Were cast alive into a lake of fire] Were discomfited when alive—in the zenith of their power, and destroyed with an utter destruction.

Verse 21. With the sword of him that sat upon the horse] He who sat on the white horse is Christ ; and his sword is his word—the unadulterated gospel.

CHAPTER XX.

An angel binds Satan a thousand years, and shuts him up in the bottomless pit, 1-3. They who were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, who have part in the first resurrection, and shall reign with Christ a thousand years, 4-6. When the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, shall go forth and deceive the nations, and shall gather Gog and Magog from the four corners of the earth, 7, 8. These shall besiege the holy city ; but fire shall come down from heaven and consume them, and they and the devil be cast into a lake of fire, 9, 10. The great white throne, and the dead, small and great standing before God, and all judged according to their works, 11, 12. The sea, death, and hades, give up their dead, and are destroyed ; and all not found in the book of life are cast into the lake of fire, 13-15.

AND I saw an angel come down from heaven, ^ahaving the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand.

2 And he laid hold on ^bthe dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, ^cand bound him a thousand years,

3 And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and ^dset a seal upon him, ^ethat he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season.

4 And I saw ^fthrones, and they that sat upon them, and ^gjudgment was given unto them: and I saw ^hthe souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and ⁱwhich had not worshipped the beast, ^jneither his image, neither had received ^khis mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and ^lreigned with Christ a thousand years.

5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This ^mis the first resurrection.

Verse 1. An angel come down from heaven] One of the executors of the divine justice, who receives criminals, and keeps them in prison, and delivers them up only to be tried and executed.

The key of the prison and the chain show who he is; and as the chain was great, it shows that the culprit was impeached of no ordinary crimes.

Verse 2. The dragon] See the notes on chap. xii. 9. That old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan] He who is called the old serpent is the DEVIL—the calumniator, and SATAN—the opposer.

A thousand years] This, and what is said, ver. 3, 4, and 5, no doubt refers to a time in which the influence of Satan will be greatly restrained, and the true Church of God enjoy great prosperity, which shall endure for a long time. But it is not likely that the number, a thousand years, is to be taken literally here, and year symbolically and figuratively in all the book beside. The doctrine of the Millennium, or of the saints reigning on earth a thousand years, with Christ for their head, has been illustrated and defended by many Christian writers, both among the ancients and moderns. It has long been the idle expectation of many persons that the Millennium, in their sense, was at hand; and its commencement has been expected in every century since the Christian era. Yet there is no doubt that the earth is in a state of progressive moral improvement; and that the light of true religion is shining more copiously everywhere, and will shine more and more to the perfect day. But when the religion of Christ will be at its meridian of light and heat, we know not. In each believer it may speedily take place; but probably no such time shall ever appear, in which evil shall be wholly banished from the earth, till after the day of judgment, when the earth having been burnt up, a new heaven and a new earth shall be produced out of the ruins of the old, by the mighty power of God: righteousness alone shall dwell in them.

Verse 3. He should deceive the nations no more] Be unable to blind men with superstition and idolatry as he had formerly done.

Verse 4. I saw thrones] Christianity established in the earth, the kings and governors being all Christians.

Reigned with Christ a thousand years.] I am satisfied that this period should not be taken literally. It may signify that there shall be a long and undisturbed state of Christianity; and so universally shall the gospel spirit prevail, that it will appear as if Christ reigned upon earth; which will in effect be the case, because his Spirit shall rule in the hearts of men; and in this time the martyrs are no power, but they shall be ^apriests of God and of Christ, ^band shall reign with him a thousand years.

7 And when the thousand years are expired, ^cSatan shall be loosed out of his prison,

8 And shall go out ^dto deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, ^eGog and Magog, ^fto gather them together to battle: the number of whom ^gis as the sand of the sea.

9 ^hAnd they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

10 ⁱAnd the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, ^jwhere the beast and the false prophet ^kare, and ^lshall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face ^mthe earth and the heaven fled away; ⁿand there was found no place for them.

12 And I saw the dead, ^osmall and great, stand before God; ^pand the books were opened. and another ^qbook was opened, which is ^rthe book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, ^saccording to their works.

presented as living again; their testimony being revived, and the truth for which they died, and which was confirmed by their blood, being now everywhere prevalent. As to the term thousand years, it is a mystic number among the Jews.

Verse 5. The rest of the dead lived not again] It is generally supposed from these passages that all who have been martyred for the truth of God shall be raised a thousand years before the other dead, and reign on earth with Christ during that time, after which the dead in general shall be raised; but this also is very doubtful.

Verse 6. Blessed] Happy. And holy; he was holy, and therefore he suffered for the testimony of Jesus in the time when nothing but holiness was called to such a trial.

The first resurrection] Supposed to be that of the martyrs mentioned above.

The second death] Punishment in the eternal world; such is the acceptance of the phrase among the ancient Jews.

Hath no power] Hath no authority—no dominion over him. This is also a rabbinical mode of speech.

Verse 7. Satan shall be loosed] How can this bear any kind of literal interpretation? Satan is bound a thousand years, and the earth is in peace; righteousness flourishes, and Jesus Christ alone reigns. This state of things may continue for ever if the imprisonment of Satan be continued. Satan, however, is loosed at the end of the thousand years, and goes out and deceives the nations, and peace is banished from the face of the earth, and a most dreadful war takes place, &c., &c. These can be only symbolical representations, utterly incapable of the sense generally put upon them.

Verse 8. Gog and Magog] This seems to be almost literally taken from the Jerusalem Targum, and that of Jonathan ben Uzziel, on Numb. xi. 26.

But how St. John intended it to be applied is a question too difficult to be solved by the skill of man; yet both the account in the rabbins and in St. John is founded on Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix. The rabbinical writings are full of accounts concerning Gog and Magog. Under these names the enemies of God's truth are generally intended.

Verse 9. The beloved city] Primarily, Jerusalem; typically, the Christian Church.

Verse 10. And the devil—was cast into the lake] Before Satan was bound, that is, his power was curtailed and restrained; now he is cast into the lake of fire, his power being totally taken away.

Verse 11. A great white throne] Refulgent with glorious majesty.

Him that sat on it] The indescribable Jehovah.

13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and ^adeath and ^bhell delivered up the dead which were in them; ^cand they were judged every man according to their works.

^aCh. vi. 8.—^bOr, the grave.—^cVer. 12.—^d1 Cor. xv. 26, 54, 55.

From whose face the earth and the heaven fled away] Even the brightness of his countenance dissolved the universe, and annihilated the laws by which it was governed. This is a very majestic figure, and finely expressed.

There was found no place for them.] The glorious majesty of God filling all things, and being all in all.

Verse 12. The dead, small and great] All ranks, degrees, and conditions of men. This description seems to refer to Dan. vii. 9, 10.

And the books were opened] The books mentioned here were the books of the living and the dead, or the book of life and the book of death; that is, the account of the good and evil actions of men; the former leading to life, the latter to death. The expressions are figurative.

According to their works.] And according to their faith also, for their works would be the proof whether their faith were true or false; but faith exclusively could be no rule in such a procedure.

Verse 13. The sea gave up the dead.] Those who had been drowned in it; and those millions slain in naval contests, who had no other grave.

And death] All who died by any kind of disease. Death is here personified, and represented as a keeper of defunct human beings; probably no more than earth or the grave is meant, as properly belonging to the empire of death.

And hell] Hades, the place of separate spirits. The sea and death have the bodies of all human beings; hades has their spirits. That they may be judged, and punished or rewarded according to their works, their bodies and souls must be reunited; hades therefore gives up the spirits; and the sea and the earth give up the bodies.

Verse 14. And death and hell were cast into the lake] Death himself is now abolished, and the place for separate spirits is no longer needful.

This is the second death.] The first death consisted in the separation of the soul from the body for a season; the second death in the separation of body and soul from God for ever. The first death is that from which there may be a resurrection; the second death is that from which there can be no recovery. By the first the body is destroyed during time; by the second, body and soul are destroyed through eternity.

Verse 15. Written in the book of life] Only those who had continued faithful unto death were taken to heaven. All whose names were not found in the public registers, who either were not citizens, or whose names had been erased from those registers because of crimes against the state, could claim none of those emolument or privileges which belong to the citizens; so those who either did not belong to the new and spiritual Jerusalem, or who had forfeited their rights and privileges by sin, and had died in that state, were cast into the lake of fire.

CHAPTER XXI.

The new heaven and the new earth, 1. The new Jerusalem, 2. God dwells with men; the happy state of his followers, 3-7. The wretched state of the ungodly, 8. An angel shows John the holy city, the New Jerusalem, 9, 10. Her light, wall, gates, and foundations, described, 11-21. God and the Lamb are the temple and light of it, 22, 23. The nations and kings of the earth bring their glory and honour to it; the gates shall never be shut, nor shall any defilement enter into it, 24-27.

AND ^aI saw a new heaven and a new earth: ^bfor the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

2 And I John saw ^cthe holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared ^das a bride adorned for her husband.

Verse 1. A new heaven and a new earth] The ancient Jews believed that God would renew the heavens and the earth at the end of seven thousand years.

There was no more sea.] The sea no more appeared than did the first heaven and earth. All was made new; and probably the new sea occupied a different position, and was differently distributed, from the old sea.

Verse 2. And I John] The writer of this book; whether the evangelist and apostle, or John the Ephesian presbyter, has been long doubted in the Church.

New Jerusalem] See the notes on Gal. iv. 24-27. This doubtless means the Christian Church in a state of great prosperity and purity; but some think eternal blessedness is intended.

Jews that both the tabernacle, and the temple, and Jerusalem itself, come down from heaven.

Verse 3. The tabernacle of God is with men] God, in the most especial manner, dwells among his followers, diffusing his light and life everywhere.

Verse 4. There shall be no more death] Because there shall be a general resurrection. And this is the inference which St. Paul makes from his doctrine of a general resurrection, 1 Cor. xv. 26, where he says, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." But death cannot be destroyed simply no farther death; death can only be destroyed and annihilated by a general resurrection; if there be no general resurrection, it is most evident that death will still retain his empire. Therefore, the fact that there shall be no more death assumes the fact that there sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

5 And he that sat upon the throne said, ^b Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write; for ^c these words are true and faithful.

6 And he said unto me, ^d It is done. ^e I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. ^f I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

7 He that overcometh shall inherit ^g all things; and ^h I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

8 ⁱ But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in ^j the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

9 And there came unto me one of ^k the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee ^l the bride, the Lamb's wife.

shall be a general resurrection; and this also is a proof that, after the resurrection, there shall be no more death.

Verse 5. Behold, I make all things new. As the creation of the world at the beginning was the work of God alone, so this new creation.

These words are true and faithful. Truth refers to the promise of these changes; faithfulness to the fulfilment of these promises.

Verse 6. It is done. All is determined, and shall be fulfilled in due time. The great drama is finished, and what was intended is now completed; referring to the period alluded to by the angel.

Verse 7. Inherit all things Here he had no inheritance; there he shall inherit the kingdom of heaven, and be with God and Christ, and have every possible degree of blessedness.

Verse 8. But the fearful Those who for fear of losing life or their property, either refused to receive the Christian religion, though convinced of its truth and importance; or, having received it, in times of persecution fell away, not being willing to risk their lives.

And unbelieving Those who resist against full evidence. And sinners is added here by about thirty excellent MSS., and is found in the Syriac, Arabic, some of the Slavonic, and in Andreas and Arethas.

The abominable Those who are polluted with unnatural lusts.

And murderers Those who take away the life of man for any cause but the murder of another, and those who hate a brother in their heart.

And whoremongers Adulterers, fornicators, whores, prostitutes, and rakes of every description.

Sorcerers Persons who, by drugs, philtres, fumigations, &c., pretend to produce supernatural effects, chiefly by spiritual agency.

Idolaters Those who offer any kind of worship or religious reverence to any thing but God. All image worshippers are idolaters in every sense of the word.

And all liars Every one who speaks contrary to the truth when he knows the truth, and even he who speaks the truth with the intention to deceive, i.e., to persuade a person that a thing is different from what it really is, by telling only a part of the truth, or suppressing some circumstance which would have led the hearer to a different and to the true conclusion. All these shall have their portion, their share, what belongs to them, their right, in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone. This is the second death, from which there is no recovery.

Verse 9. The bride, the Lamb's wife. The pure and holy Christian Church.

10 And he carried me away ^a in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me ^b that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, 11 ^c Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal.

12 And had a wall great and high, and had ^d twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel.

13 ^e On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and ^f in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

15 And he that talked with me ^g had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

Verse 11. Having the glory of God Instead of the sun and moon, it has the splendour of God to enlighten it.

Unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal. Among precious stones there are some even of the same species more valuable than others; for their value is in proportion to their being free from flaws, and of a good water, i.e., a uniform and brilliant transparency. A crystal is perfectly clear, the oriental jasper is a beautiful sea-green. The stone that is here described is represented as a perfectly transparent jasper, being as unclouded as the brightest crystal, and consequently the most precious of its species. Nothing can be finer than this description: the light of this city is ever intense, equal, and splendid, but it is tinged with this green hue, in order to make it agreeable to the sight. Nothing is so friendly to the eye as blue or green; all other colours fatigue, and, if very intense, injure the eye. These are the colours of the earth and sky, on which the eye of man is to be constantly fixed. To these colours the structure of the eye is adapted; and the general appearance of the earth and the sky is adapted to this structure.

Verse 12. Had a wall great and high An almighty defence.

Twelve gates A gate for every tribe of Israel, in the vicinity of which gate that tribe dwelt; so that in coming in and going out they did not mix with each other. This description of the city is partly taken from Ezek. xlviii. 30-35.

Verse 13. On the east three gates The city is here represented as standing to the four cardinal points of heaven, and presenting one side to each of these points.

Verse 14. The wall—had twelve foundations Probably twelve stones, one of which served for a foundation or threshold to each gate; and on these were inscribed the names of the twelve apostles, to intimate that it was by the doctrine of the apostles that souls enter into the church, and thence into the New Jerusalem.

Verse 15. Had a golden reed Several excellent MSS. add a measure; he had a measuring rod made of gold. This account of measuring the city seems to be copied, with variations, from Ezek. xl. 3, &c.

Verse 16. The city lieth foursquare Each side was equal, consequently the length and breadth were equal; and its height is here said to be equal to its length. It is hard to say how this should be understood. It cannot mean the height of the buildings, nor of the walls, for neither houses nor walls could be twelve thousand furlongs in height; some think this means the distance from the plain country to the place where the city stood. But what need is there of attempting to determine such measures in such a visionary representation? The quadrangular form intimates its per-

16 And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal.

17 And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.

18 And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

20 The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolyte; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate was of one pearl; and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

22 And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

23 And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine on it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24 And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it.

25 And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.

26 And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.

27 And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

fection and stability, for the square figure was a figure of perfection among the Greeks; the square or cubical man, was, with them, a man of unsullied integrity, perfect in all things.

Verse 17. The wall—an hundred and forty and four cubits] This is twelve, the number of the disciples, multiplied by itself; for twelve times twelve make one hundred and forty-four.

The measure of a man, that is, of the angel.] The cubit, so called from cubitus, the elbow, is the measure from the tip of the elbow to the tip of the middle finger, and is generally reckoned at one foot and a half, or eighteen inches; though it appears, from some measurements at the pyramids of Egypt, that the cubit was, at least in some cases, twenty-one inches.

Verse 18. The building of the wall of it was of jasper] The oriental jasper is exceedingly hard, and almost indestructible. Pillars made of this stone have lasted some thousands of years, and appear to have suffered scarcely anything from the tooth of time.

Pure gold, like unto clear glass.] Does not this imply that the walls were made of some beautifully bright yellow stone, very highly polished? This description has been most judiciously applied to heaven; and in some public discourses, for the comfort and edification of the pious, we hear of heaven with its golden walls, golden pavements, gates of pearl, &c. &c., not considering that nothing of this description was ever intended to be literally understood; and that gold and jewels can have no place in the spiritual and eternal world. But do not such descriptions as these tend to keep up a fondness for gold and ornaments? In symbols they are proper; but construed into realities, they are very improper.

Verse 19. The foundations of the wall] Does not this mean the foundations or thresholds of the gates? The gates represented the twelve tribes, ver. 12; and these foundations or thresholds, the twelve apostles, ver. 14. There was no entrance into the city but through those gates, and none through the gates but over these thresholds. The whole of the Mosaic dispensation was the preparation of the gospel system: without it the gospel would have no original; without the gospel, it would have no reference nor proper object. Every part of the gospel necessarily supposes the law and the prophets. They are the gates, it is the threshold; without the gospel no person could enter through those gates. The doctrine of Christ crucified, preached by the apostles, gives a solid foundation to stand on; and we have an entrance into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, Heb. x. 19, &c. And in reference to this we are said to be built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, Eph. ii. 20.

The first foundation was jasper] A stone very hard, some species of which are of a sea-green colour; but it is generally a bright reddish brown.

The second, sapphire] This is a stone of a fine blue colour, next in hardness to the diamond.

The third, a chalcedony] A genus of the semi-pellucid gems, of which there are four species.

The fourth, an emerald] This is of a bright green colour without any mixture, and is one of the most beautiful of all the gems. The true oriental emerald is very scarce, and said to be found only in the kingdom of Cambay.

Verse 20. The fifth, sardonyx] The onyx is an accidental variety of the agate kind; it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red. When on one or both sides of the white there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish colour, the jewellers call the stone a sardonyx.

The sixth, sardius] The sardius, sardel, or sardine stone, is a precious stone of a blood red colour.

The seventh, chrysolite] The gold stone. It is of a dusky green with a cast of yellow. It is a species of the topaz.

The eighth, beryl] This is a pellucid gem of a bluish green colour.

The ninth, a topaz] A pale dead green, with a mixture of yellow. It is considered by the mineralogists as a variety of the sapphire.

The tenth, a chrysoprasus] A variety of the chrysolite, called by some the yellowish green and cloudy topaz. It differs from the chrysolite only in having a bluish hue.

The eleventh, a jacinth] A precious stone of a dead red colour, with a mixture of yellow. It is the same as the hyacinth or cinnamon stone.

The twelfth, an amethyst] A gem generally of a purple or violet colour, composed of a strong blue and deep red.

These stones are nearly the same with those on the breast-plate of the high-priest, Exod. xxviii. 17, &c., and probably were intended to express the meaning of the Hebrew words there used. See the notes on the above passages, where these gems are particularly explained.

Verse 21. The twelve gates were twelve pearls] This must be merely figurative, for it is out of all the order of nature to produce a pearl large enough to make a gate to such an immense city.

Verse 22. I saw no temple] There was no need of a temple where God and the Lamb were manifestly present.

Verse 23. No need of the sun] God's light shines in this city, and in the Lamb that light is concentrated, and from him everywhere diffused.

Verse 24. The nations of them which are saved] This is an allusion to the promise that the Gentiles should bring their riches, glory, and excellence to the temple at Jerusalem after it should be rebuilt. See ver. 26.

Verse 25. The gates of it shall not be shut at all] The Christian Church shall ever stand open to receive sinners of all sorts, degrees, and nations.

There shall be no night there.] No more idolatry, no intellectual darkness; the scriptures shall be everywhere read, the pure word everywhere preached, and the Spirit of God shall shine and work in every heart.

Verse 26. The glory and honour of the nations into it.] Still alluding to the declarations of the prophets (see the passages in the margin, ver. 24, &c.), that the Gentiles would be led to contribute to the riches and glory of the temple by their gifts, &c.

Verse 27. There shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth] See Isa. xxxv. 8, lii. 1. Neither an impure person—he who turns the grace of God into lasciviousness, nor a liar—he that holds and propagates false doctrines.

But they which are written] The acknowledged persevering members of the true Church of Christ shall enter into heaven, and only those who are saved from their sins shall have a place in the church militant.

CHAPTER XXII

The river of the water of life, 1. The tree of life, 2. - There is no curse nor darkness in the city of God, 3-5. The angel assures John of the truth of what he has heard, and states that the time of the fulfilment is at hand, 6, 7. He forbids John to worship him, 8, 9. Again he states that the time of the fulfilment of the prophecies of this book is at hand, 10-12. Christ is Alpha and Omega, 13. The blessedness of those who keep his commandments; they enter through the gates into the city, 14. All the unholy are excluded, 15. Christ sent his angel to testify of those things in the churches, 16. The invitation of the Spirit and the bride, 17. A curse denounced against those who shall either add to or take away from the prophecies of this book, 18, 19. Christ cometh quickly, 20. The apostolical benediction, 21.

AND he shewed me ^a a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

2 ^b In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there ^c the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were ^d for the healing of the nations.

3 And ^e there shall be no more curse: ^f but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him:

Verse 1. Pure river of water of life] This is evidently a reference to the garden of Paradise, and the river by which it was watered; and there is also a reference to the account, Ezek. xlvii. 7-12. Water of life, as we have seen before, generally signifies spring or running water; here it may signify incessant communications of happiness proceeding from God.

Verse 2. In the midst of the street of it] That is, of the city which was described in the preceding chapter.

The tree of life] An allusion to Gen. ii. 9. As this tree of life is stated to be in the streets of the city, and on each side of the river, tree must here be an enallage of the singular for the plural number, trees of life, or trees which yielded fruit by which life was preserved.

Twelve manner of fruits] Twelve fruits; that is, fruit twelve times in the year, as is immediately explained, yielded her fruit every month.

Verse 3. No more curse] Instead of curse, the best MSS, Versions, &c., read curst person. As there shall be no more sinning against God, so there shall be no more curse of God upon the people; for they shall be all his servants, and serve him. Our first parents came under the curse by sinning against their Maker in Paradise; these shall never apostatize, therefore neither they nor the earth shall be curst.

belong entirely to him, for his name shall be written on their foreheads.

Verse 5. There shall be no night there] See the 23rd and 25th verses of the preceding chapter.

Verse 6. The things which must shortly be done] There are many sayings in this book which, if taken literally, would intimate that the prophecies delivered in the whole of the Apocalypse were to be fulfilled in a short time after their delivery to John; and this is a strong support for the scheme of Wetstein, and those who maintain that the prophecies of this book all referred to those times in which the apostle lived, and to the disturbances which then took place not only among the Jews, but in the Roman Empire. What they all mean, and when and how they are to be fulfilled, God in heaven alone knows.

Verse 8. I fell down to worship] I prostrated myself before him as before a superior being, to express my gratitude, and give him thanks for the communications he had made.

Verse 10. Seal not the sayings] Do not lay them up for future generations; they concern the present times; they must shortly come to pass, for the time is at hand. See above, ver. 6. What concerned the Jews was certainly at hand.

Verse 11. He that is unjust, let him be unjust still] The time of fulfilment will come so suddenly that there will be but little space for repentance and amendment. What is 11 * He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

12 ^b And behold, I come quickly; and * my reward is with me, ^d to give every man according as his work shall be.

13 * I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.

14 ^e Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right ^f to the tree of life, ^h and may enter in through the gates into the city.

15 For ⁱ without are ^j dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

16 ^k I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. ^l I am the root and the offspring of David, and ^m the bright and morning star.

done must be done instantly; and let him that is holy persevere, and hold fast what he has received.

Verse 12. Behold, I come quickly] I come to establish my cause, comfort and support my followers, and punish the wicked.

Verse 13. I am Alpha and Omega] See on chap. i. 8, 18.

Verse 14. Blessed are they that do his commandments] They are happy who are obedient.

That they may have right to the tree of life] The original is much more expressive, That they may have authority over the tree of life; an authority founded on right, this right founded on obedience to the commandments of God, and that obedience produced by the grace of God working in them. Without grace, no obedience; without obedience, no authority to the tree of life; without authority, no right; without right, no enjoyment: God's grace through Christ produces the good, and then rewards it as if all had been our own.

Verse 15. Without are dogs] All those who are uncircumcised in heart. The Jews call all the uncircumcised dogs. And sorcerers] See the note on chap. xxi. 8.

Verse 16. I Jesus] The Maker, the Redeemer, and Judge of all men.

Have sent mine angel] An especial messenger from heaven.

I am the root and the offspring of David] Christ is the root of David as to his divine nature; for from that all the human race sprang, for he is the Creator of all things, and without him was nothing made which is made. And he is the offspring of David as to his human nature; for that he took of the stock of David, becoming thereby heir to the Jewish throne, and the only heir which then existed; and it is remarkable that the whole regal family terminated in Christ: as HE liveth for ever, he is the alone true David and everlasting king.

The bright and morning star.] I am splendour and glory to my kingdom; as the morning star ushers in the sun, so 17 And the Spirit and * the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. * And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

18 For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, * If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book:

19 And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, ^a God shall take away his part ^b out of the book of life, and out of ^c the holy city, and ^d from the things which are written in this book.

20 He which testifieth these things saith, ^e Surely I come quickly; ^f Amen. ^g Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

21 * The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

shall I usher in the unclouded and eternal glories of the everlasting kingdom.

Verse 17. The Spirit and the bride] All the prophets and all the apostles; the Church of God under the Old Testament, and the Church of Christ under the New.

Say, Come.] Invite men to Jesus, that by him they may be saved and prepared for this kingdom.

Let him that heareth] Let all who are privileged with reading and hearing the word of God, join in the general invitation to sinners.

Him that is athirst] He who feels his need of salvation, and is longing to drink of the living fountain.

And whosoever will] No soul is excluded: Jesus died for every man; every man may be saved; therefore let him who wills, who wishes for salvation, come and take the water of life freely—without money or price!

Verse 18. If any man shall add] Shall give any other meaning to these prophecies, or any other application of them, than God intends, he, though not originally intended, shall have the plagues threatened in this book for his portion.

Verse 19. If any man shall take away] If any man shall lessen this meaning, curtail the sense, explain away the spirit and design, of these prophecies, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, &c. Thus Jesus Christ warns all those who consider this book to beware of indulging their own conjectures concerning it.

Verse 20. Surely I come quickly] This may be truly said to every person in every age; Jesus the Judge is at the door!

Even so, come, Lord Jesus.] The wish and desire of the suffering church, and of all the followers of God, who are longing for the coming of his kingdom.

Verse 21. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ] May the favour and powerful influence of Jesus Christ be with you all; you of the Seven Churches, and the whole Church of Christ in every part of the earth, and through all the periods of time.

Amen.] So be it! and so shall it be for ever and ever.

THE END OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.
